But to return unto the Church, and Affaires thereof, for the better ordering of the same, it hath been long ago divided into four Diocesses (besides that of Hereford) for the exercise of Ecclesiastical Discipline, those Diocesses subdivided into 9 Arch-Deaconries, as before in England; all subject heretofore to their own Primate, or Archbishop, residing in the City of Iffa Silurum, the Metropolis of the Province of Britannia Secunda, called by the Welsh or Britains, Caer-Leon, or the City of the Legion, from the second Legion, fixt there for defence of the Province; and Caer-Leon upon Usk, because situate on the River so named. But this City being too much exposed to the fury of the Saxons, the Archbishop's See was translated to Meneu, standing on a Promontory in the extrem Angle of Pembroke-shire, by David then Archbishop thereof, and near of kin to Arthur, that renowned King of the Britains: from whom, in tract of time, the name of Meneu being left off, the See and City came to be called St. David's. From David unto Sampson the 26. Archbishop of the Welsh, (being above 400 years) did they hold this Dignity, but then the Pestilence extremely raging in these parts, Archbishop Sampson carried with him the Episcopal Pall, and therewith the Dignity it self to Dole in Bretagne. After which time we hear of no Archbishop in Wales, in name and Title, though the power proper therunto still remained amongst them: the Welsh Bishops acknowledging no other Primate, nor receiving Consecration from any other hands than their own Bishop of St. David's, till Bishop Barnard was compelled to submit himself to the Power and Jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, in the time of King Henry the first.

But it's time to look upon the face of the Country as it stands at the present; which we find Mountainous and Barren; not able to maintain its people but by help elsewhere. To make amends for which defect, there were some Silver Mines discovered in it not long since, by Sir Hugh Middleton, Knight and Baronet; not only to the great honour of his own Country, but to the profit and renown of the whole Island of Great Britain. Their chief Commodities are coarse Clothes, entitled commonly by the name of Welch Freeze, and Cottons; which Merchandise was heretofore brought to Offwestre (the furthest Town of Shropshire) as the common Empory; and there bought by the Merchants of Shrewsbury. But the Welch coveting to draw the Staple more into their own Country, occasioned the Merchant to hold off from buying their Commodities: till in the end the Merchant got the better of them, and enforced them to settle the whole Trade at Shrewsbury, where it still continueth.

To speak of Mountains in a Country which is wholly mountainous were a thing unnecessary: yet of most note are those of 1. Snopdon, 2. Brecbin, Rardware, and 4. Plinlimmon. Not much observable but for their vast height, and those many notable Rivers which issue from them. The principal whereof are, 1. Dee, in Latine called Devva, arising out of Rardware Hills in Merioneth-shire, and running into the Sea not far from Chester. Over this River Edgar King of England was rowed triumphantly in his Barge by eight inferior Kings, Pafals and Tributaries to him, that is to say, Kenneth King of the Scots, Malcolm King of Cumberland, Mac-cuis King of the Isles, Dufwal, Gryffith, Howel, Fago, and Indethel, Princes or Kings of Wales: using the words to such as attended on him, that then his Successors might call themselves Kings of England when they did the like. This was in the year 973, and the last of his Reign. 2. Wie, in Latine called Vaga, arising from Plinlimmon Hills, and emptying it self into the Severn at Chepstow. More in the heart of the Country (for these are but borders for the greatest part of their course.) 3. Conwey, which rising in Merioneth-shire, and dividing the Counties of Denbigh and Carmarvon, mingleth with the Sea at Abur Conwey. 4. Tyvie, which rising in Montgomery-shire, and passing between the Counties of Cardigan, Pembroke, and Carmarthen; runneth into the Sea a little below Cardigan. 5. Cheledady, which runneth quite through Pembroke-shire, emptieth it self into Milford Haven, one of the most capacious and safest Havens, not of England only, but of all the world.

The Men are of a faithful carriage towards all men, especially towards one another in a strange Country, and towards Strangers in their own. Of a temper questionless much inclining to Choler, as being subject to the Passion by Aristotle called αὐχρὸν by which men are quickly moved to Anger, and as soon appeased: of all Angers the best and noblest. Their Language (the old British) hath the least commixture of foreign words of any in Europe; and by reason of its many Consonants and guttural Letters is not so pleasing as some others in the Pronunciation. A Language not much studied by those of other Nations; in regard that such of the Inhabitants who have addicted themselves to learning, have rather chose to express themselves in the Latine or English tongues, than that of their own Native Country. The principal of which (not to say any thing of Merlin, the Tales of the Welsh or British) were 1. Gildas, for his great knowledge firnamed Sapiens. 2. Gosfry of Monmouth, and 3. Giraldus Cambrensis, the Historians; and of later times, 4. William Morgan, the Translator of the Bible into Welsh, for which performance most deservedly made Bishop of Landaff. 5. Sir John Price the Antiquary. 6. Owen the Epigrammatist, &c.

The whole Country (not taking the Counties of Shropshire and Monmouth into the reckoning) contain in it 12 Shires only: of which, seven were set cut by King Edward the first, that is to say, Clamorgan, Pembroke, Carmarthen, Cardigan, Merioneth, Anglesey, and Carmarvon: the other five, viz. the Counties of Denbigh, Flint, Montgomery, Radnor, and Brecknock, were after added cut of the the Marchlands by King Henry the 8. These 12 Shires are again contracted or subdivided into 4 Circuits, for the administration of Justice. Of which the first containeth the Counties of Montgomery, Flint and Denbigh; the second those of Carmarvon, Anglesey, and Merioneth; the third those of Carmarthen, Cardigan, and Pembroke; and the fourth those of Glamorgan, Brecknock, and Radnor.

In these 12 Shires are reckoned one Chafe, 13 Forests, 36 Parks, 230 Rivers, and an hundred Bridges. They contain also 1016 Parishes, amongst which, four Cities, 55 Market Towns, and 41 Castles of the old erection. The Cities small, poor, and inconsiderable. The Market Towns, those especially on the Marches and out-parts of the Country, very fair and strong; as being not only built for Commerce and Trade, but fortified with Walls and Castles to keep in the Welsh: and so employed till the incorporating Wales with England took away all occasion of the old hostilities. And for the Castles in the Islands, partly by the iniquity of time, which is edax rerum, but chiefly by the policy of the Kings of England, who would not suffer any places of strength to remain in a Country almost inaccessible, and amongst men apt to take the advantage offered; the very ruins of them are now brought to ruine.

But to proceed more particularly; the four Cities (or Episcopal Sees) are 1. S. David's, formerly the Metropolis of Wales, situate on the Promontory in Pembroke-shire, by the Ancients called Ostipia; in a safe place, and far enough from the Saxons, whom the Welsh most feared; but incommodious enough for all the rest of the Clergie to repair unto it: and not so safe neither unto the Inhabitants of it, in respect of sundry other Nations, who have often spoiled and defaced it. For standing near the Sea, it hath been frequently visited and spoiled by the Danes, Norwegians, and other Pyrats; inasmuch that the Bishops were enforced to remove their dwelling to Carmarthen: which brought the City (small enough before, when it was at the biggest) to the condition of a Village. 2. Llan-daff, upon the River Taffe, whence it took the name; Llan, in the Welsh or British, signifying a Church; Llan-daff, the Church upon the Taffe: the Bishops whereof derive their Lineal succession from those of Caer-Leon upon Usk, though the Primacy or Archbishop's See were removed to Meneu. A small Town now it is, God wot, nothing to rank it for a City but the Cathedral Church, and the Prebends houses. 3. S. Asaph, a small Town in Flintshire, so called from S. Asaph, the second Bishop hereof; left here by Kentigern a Scot, by whom the Cathedral Church was founded, about the year 560. Situate on the Banks of the River Elwy, thence called Llan-Elwy by the Welsh, the Bishop Elwynensis in some Latine Writers. 4. Bangor, upon the Mena, a branch of the Irish Sea, of no more beauty and renown than the other three; but only for the Cathedral founded here by the first Bishops, defaced by Owen Glendower, and afterwards re-edified by Henry Dean, Bishop hereof, An. 1496.

Towns of chief note (for these Cities have not so much in them which is worth the noting) are 1. Shrewsbury counted now in England, but heretofore the Seat of the Princes of Powys-land, who had here their Palace: which being burnt in some of their broils with England, is now converted into Gardens for the use of the Townsmen. The Town well traded and frequented by the Welsh and English, the common Empory of both; well built, and strongly situate on a rising ground, almost encompassed with the Severn; that part thereof which is not fenced with the River, being fortified with a very strong Castle, the work of Roger de Montgomery, the first Earl hereof, Anno 1067. Over the River for convenience of passage it hath two Bridges, and but two, the one towards England, and the other called the Welsh Bridge: which is towards Wales, built by Leoline or Llewellen the first, one of the Princes of North-Wales; whose they conceive to be that Statua which is there standing on the Gate. Remarkable since the times of King Henry the sixth, for giving the Title of Earl to the noble family of the Talbots: a Family of great Honour, and as great an Estate, till the parcelling of the Lands betwixt the Daughters and Co-heirs of Gilbert Talbot late Earl hereof; according to the ill Custom of England, where many times the Estate goes to the Females and the Honour (with nothing to maintain it) to the next Heir-male. 2. Banchôr, by Beda called Brancornaburg, a famous Monastery of the Britains; containing above 2000 Monks, attending their devotions at the times appointed, at other times labouring for their livelihood: most cruelly and unmercifully slaughtered by the Saxons, at the instigation of Austin the first Archbishop of Canterbury, offended that they would not yield unto his authority. 3. Carmarvon, on the Mena before mentioned, not far from Bangor, (the Monastery of Banchôr being in Flintshire) well walled, and fortified with a strong Castle by King Edward the first, after his conquest of the Country, formerly much resorted to, for the Chancery and Exchequer of the Princes of North-Wales. 4. Denbigh, well seated on the Banks of the River Istrad, which from thence runs into the Cwyd, the fairest River of all those parts. A Town well traded and frequented, especially since it was made by King Henry the 8. the head Town of a County: before which time of great resort, as being the head Town of the Baron; of Denbigh, conceived to be one of the goodliest Territories in England; having more Gentlemen holding of it than any other. 5. Matrauall, not far from Montgomery, heretofore a fair and capacious Town, honoured with the Palace, and made the chief Seat of the Princes of Powys-land, thence called Kings of Matrauall; now a poor Village. 6. Carmarthen, Mariadunum anciently, whence the modern name, the Britains adding Caer unto it: not called so from Caer-Merlin, or the City of Merlin, enchanted by the Lady of the Lake, in a deep Cave hereabouts, as old Fables and Romances tell us. A fair large Town, beautified with a Collegiate Church; to which there was a purpose in the time of King Edward the sixth, of removing the Episcopal See from S. David's. Not far off, on the top of an Hill, stands Dinevor Castle, the chief Seat of the Princes of South-Wales, thence called Kings of Dinevor; who had their Chancery and Exchequer in the Town of Carmarthen. 7. Haverford West, situated in the Chesterjense, or Demy-Island of Pembroke-shire, by the Welsh called Rose; by the English, Little England beyond Wales, by reason of the English tongue there spoken: a Town the best Traded and frequented of all South-Wales. 8. Milford, in the same County of Pembroke, famous for giving name to the most safe and capacious Haven in all the Island, consisting of sundry Creeks, Bays, and Roads for Ships, which make it capable of entertaining the greatest Navy: the landing place of Henry the 7th when he came for England. 9. Monmouth, situate at the mouth or influx of the River Munnow (where it falleth into the Wie) whence it had the name. A Town belonging anciently to the House of Lancaster, the Birth-place of King Henry the Fifth, called Henry of Monmouth. That one particular enough to renown the place, and therefore we shall add no more. 10. Ludlow, a Town of great resort, by reason of the Court and Council of the Marches, kept here for the most part ever since the incorporating of Wales with England, for the ease of the Welsh, and bordering Subjects, in their Suits at Law.

Situate

Situate on the confluence of the Tem, and Corve, and beautified with a very strong Castle: the Palace heretofore of some of the Princes of Wales of the Blood-Royal of England, at such times as they resided in this Country (of which more anon), and of late times, the ordinary Seat of the Lord President of Wales: now reckoned, as all Shropshire on that side of the Severn, as a part of England. Of Anglesey and the Towns thereof, we shall speak hereafter, now taking notice only of Aberffraw, the Royal Seat sometimes of the Princes of North-Wales, called thence King of Aberffraw.

The Story of the Britains till the time of Cadwalader their last King, we have had before. After whose retirement unto Rome, the whole name and Nation became divided into three bodies, that is to say, the Cornish Britains, the Britains of Cumberland, and the Britains of Wales. The Cornish Britains governed by their own Dukes, till the time of Egbert the first Monarch of England, by whom subdued An. 800, and made a Province of that Kingdom. The Britains of Cumberland had their own Kings also (some of whose names occur in Story) till the year 946, when conquered by Edmund King of England, the Son of Athelstan, their last King being named Dummaih, as Matthew of Westminster informs us. But the main body of them getting into the mountainous parts beyond the Severn, did there preserve the name and reputation of their Country: although their Princes were no longer called Kings of Britain, but of the Walls men or Welsh; and much ado they had to make good that title: all the plain Country beyond Severn being taken from them by Offa King of the Mercians: and themselves made Tributaries for the rest by Egbert before mentioned, by Athelstan afterwards. Which last imposed a Tribute on them of 20 pounds of Gold, 300 pounds of Silver, and 200 head of Cattel yearly; exchanged in following times for a Tribute of Wolves. But howsoever, they continued for a time the title of Kings, whose names are thus set down by Glover, in his Catalogue of Honour, published by Miles.

The Kings of Wales.

690 1 Idwallo, Son of Cadwalader.
720 2 Roderick, Son of Idwallo. 25.
755 3 Conan, Son of Roderick. 63.
818 4 Mervin, the Son in law of Conan. 25.
843 5 Roderick II. surnamed the Great, Son of Mervin, who divided his Kingdom, small enough before, amongst his Sons: giving Guinedith, or North Wales to Amarhawd his eldest Son; to Cadel, his second Son, Debenbarth or South-wales; and Powys-land to his youngest Son Mervin: conditioned that the two younger Sons and their Successors, should hold their Estates in Fee of the Kings of North-wales; and acknowledge the Sovereignty thereof, as Liege-men and Homagers. According unto which appointment, it was ordained in the Constitutions of Howel Dha, the Legislator of Wales, that as the Kings of Aberffraw were bound to pay 63 pounds in a way of Tribute to the Kings of London; so the Kings of Dynevour and Maravall, should pay in way of Tribute the like sum to the Kings of Aberffraw. But notwithstanding the reservation of the Sovereignty to the Kings of North-wales, Roderick committed a great Solacism in point of State, by this dismembering of his Kingdom, especially at a time when all the Kingdoms of the Saxons were brought into one, and that one apt enough upon all occasions to work upon the weakness of the neighbouring Welsh: which had they continued under one sole Prince, might have preserved their liberty, and themselves a Kingdom, as well as those of Scotland, for so long a time, against the power and puillance of the Kings of England.

Yet was not this the worst of the mischief neither; his Successors subdividing (by his example) their small Estates into many parcels, inasmuch that of the Eight tributary Kings which rowed King Edgar on the Dee, five of them were the Kings or Princes of Wales. But Roderick did not think of that which was to come, whom we must follow in our story, according to the division of the Country made by him into three Estates of North-wales, South-wales, and Powys-land.

1. NORTH-WALES, or Guinedith, contained the Counties of Merioneth and Carnarvan, the Isle of Anglesey, and the greatest parts of Denbigh and Flint-shires. The chief Towns whereof are Bangor, Denbigh, Carnarvan, Aberffraw, spoken of before, and some in Anglesey, whereof we shall speak more hereafter. The Country (Anglesey excepted) the most barren and unfruitful part of Wales; but withal the safest and furthest from the danger of the encroaching English; which possibly might be the reason why it was set out for the portion of the Eldest Son, in whom the Sovereignty of the Welsh was to be preserved by the Kings or #### Princes of North-Wales.

877 1 Amarawd. 36.
913 2 Idwallo, Son of Amarawd.
3 Merick, Son of Idwallo.
4 James, or Jago, Brother of Merick.
5 Conan, Son of James or Jago.
1076 6 Gryffith ap Conan.
1099 7 Owen Guinedith, Son of Gryffith.
1120 8 David ap Owen, Son of Owen Guinedith.
1178 9 Llewellen ap forwerth, the Nephew of David.
1194 10 David ap Llewellen.
1240 11 Llewellen II. Son of Gryffith, the Brother of David ap Llewellen, the last Prince of Wales of the British Race. Of whom it is said, that once consulting with a Witch, he was told by her, that it was his destiny, to be carried in triumph through London, with a Crown on his head. Hereupon making some Excursions on the English Borders, he drew upon himself the whole power of King Edward the first, which not being able to withstand, and the King as willing on the other side not to fight with Mountains, Commissioners were appointed to conclude the differences: Robert Lord Tipstaff, and some others, for the King of England; for the Welsh Prince, Grono ap Heylyn, a great man of that Country, descended from Breckvel Skythrac, one of the Princes of Powys-land, (from whom if Camden Clarencieux be of any credit, the Author of these Papers doth derive his Pedigree) under whom that Family had the Office of Hereditary Cup-bearer, and from thence their name, Heylyn, Promus, five apoculis, qua vox in proprium nomen abiit, faith the Welsh Dictionary. By those Commissioners was concluded and agreed on, that Llewellen should enjoy a part of the Country with the title of Prince, during his life: the rest in present, and the whole after his decease, to be surrendered over to the King of England. But David the Brother of Llewellen, finding himself excluded by this agreement, from the hope of succession, incensed his Brother and the Welsh to a new Revolt: the issue whereof was the taking of David, executed by the hand of Justice; and the death of Llewellen, slain in Battle near the Buith in Brecknockshire. Whose head being pitched upon a stake, and adorned with a Paper-Crown, was by a Horseman carried triumphantly through London, An. 1282. And so the Prophecy was fulfilled. In him ended the Line of the Princes of North-Wales, after they had for the space of 405 years resisted not only the private Undertakers and Adventurers of England, but the Forces of many Puissant Monarchs; whose attempts they always made frustrate, by retiring into the heart of their Country, and leaving nothing for the English to encounter with, but their Woods and Mountains. But now the fatal period of the British Liberty being come, they were constrained to yield to the stronger. What followed after this, we shall see anon.

The Arms of these Princes was quarterly Gules and Or, four Lions Passant gardant counterchanged.

2. POWYS-land contained the whole Counties of Montgomery, and Radnor, all Shropshire beyond the Severn, with the Town of Shrewsbury, and the rest of Denbigh and Flint-shires; comprehending by the estimation of those times, 15 Cantreds or hundreds of Villages: the word Cant signifying an Hundred, and Tres a Village. The principal Cities or Towns of it, were, S. Asaph, Shrewsbury, Maravall, spoken of before. A Country more pertaking of the nature and fertility of England, than the parts belonging unto Guinedith, or North-Wales; but always lying in harms way, by reason of the Neighbourhood of the more potent English: and therefore given by Roderick to Mervin, his youngest Son, partly because he was the youngest; but chiefly because he was a man of an approved valour, and so more fit to have his portion upon the Borders. In his Line it continued a long time together, but much afflicted and dismembered by the Earls of Chester and Shrewsbury, who took from them a good part of Flint, Denbigh, and Shropshire; and by the Princes of North-Wales, who cast many a greedy eye upon it. Of the Successors of Prince Mervin, find no good Constancy, more than of Brockwell Skythrac, before remembered. The last that held it at all entire was Meredith ap Blethyn, who following the ill example of Roderick Mawr, divided it betwixt Madoc, and Gryffith, his two Sons. Of which Madoc dyed at Winchester, An. 1160, in the time of King Henry the second, his part here depending after his decease, on the Fortunes of Gwynedd: and Gryffith was by Henry the first made Lord of Powys (the title of Prince left off as too high and lofty.) In his race it continued till the time of King Edward the first: to whom at a Parliament holden in Shrewsbury, Owen ap Gryffith, the son of Gryffith ap Meredith before mentioned, surrendered his place and title; and received them of the King again to be holden in Capite and free Baronage, according to the custom of England. Avis, or Hawis, Daughter and Heir of this Owen ap Gryffith, was married unto John (Charleton, Valeff (or Gentleman of the Privy Chamber) to King Edward the second, by whom, in right of his Wife, he was made Lord Powys. Edward the fifth also of this Line of the Charletons, was the last of that House; his Daughter Jane conveying the Estates and Title to the House of the Greys; and of them also five enjoyed it, the last Lord Powys of the Line or Race of Mervin, being Edward Grey, who dyed in the days of our Grand-Fathers. And so the title lay extinct, until revived again in the person of Sir William Herbert of Red-Castle, descended from the Herberts, Earls of Pembroke; created Lord Powys by King Charles the first, An. 1629.

The Arms of the Princes of Powys-land, were Or, a Lyon Rampant, Gules.

3. SOUTH-WALES, or Debenbarth, contained the Counties of Monmouth, Glamorgan, Caermarden, Cardigan, & Brecknock; the greatest & most fruitful part of all Wales, but more exposed to the invasion of Foreign Nations, English, Danes, Flemings, and Norwegians, by whom the Sea-Coasts were from time to time most grievously plagued: inasmuch that the Kings and Princes hereof were inforced to remove their Seat from Caermarthen, where it was fixt at first, unto Dynevour Castle, as a place of greater strength and safety: where it continued till the Princes of it were quite extinct, called from hence Kings of Dynevour, as before is said. The chief Towns of it, Caermarthen, Monmouth, Landaff, S. David, spoken of already. The Kings and Princes, as far as I can find upon any certainty, are these that follow.

The Princes of South-Wales.

A. Ch.
877 1 Cadel, the Son of Roderick Mawr.
2 Howel.
907 3 Howel Dha, Sovereign King of Wales.
948 4 Owen, the Son of Dha.
5 Meredith, Son of Owen.
998 6 Anneas, or Evenus, Brother of Meredith.
7 Theodore the Great.
1077 8 Rhese ap Theodore.
1093 9 Gryffith ap Rhese.
10 Rhese II. ap Gryffith.
11 Gryffith ap Rhese, the last Prince of South-Wales of the Line of Cadel, after they had with great struggling maintained their Liberty for the space of 300 years and upwards; but so, that though they still preserved the title of Princes, they lost a great part of their Country to the Norman-English. For in the Reign of William Rufus, Bernard de Newmark a Noble Norman, seized upon those parts which now make the County of Brecknock, being then a fair and goodly Lordship: and Robert Fitz-Haymon, with some other noble Adventurers, made themselves Masters of Glamorgan in which the Posterity of some of them are still remaining. Incouraged by their good success, Arnulph of Montgomery, in the time of King Henry the first, won from the Welsh a great part of Dyvet, which we now call Pembrokeshire; as the Earls of Warren, and Lord Mortimer, about the same times did prevail exceedingly in the Conquest of Cardigan and Monmouth. So that the poor Princes had no Country left, entire, but Caermarthen only, too little to maintain them in so high a title. And though this last Gryffith, in the time of the Wars in England, betwixt Maund the Empress, and King Stephen, had recovered a great part of his lost Estate; yet neither he nor his did enjoy it long, himself deceasing shortly after, and his two Sons, Cymmerick and Meredith, being taken by King Henry the second, who most cruelly put out their eyes: Yet did the Welsh, as well as possibly they could, endeavour to preserve the liberty which their Fathers left them; till the Felicity and Wisdom of King Edward the first, put an end unto the Wars of Wales, and settled them in some degree of peace and quiet.

But before we come to speak of this, we are to show another Catalogue of the Kings and Princes of Wales, different from the succession of them before laid down; and made according to the History of Wales, writ by Humphrey Lloyd: this Catalogue containing the succession of the greater and predominant Princes, whether of Gwynedd, Debenbarth, or Powys-land; such as gave law unto the rest, and had the honour to be called Kings of Wales, though Princes only of their own proper and particular Countries; as formerly we had a Catalogue of the Monarchs of the English Saxons, made out of the Predominant Princes of the Saxon Hepharchie. Only we shall find some in the following Catalogue, who were not naturally and lineally Princes of any of the three, and therefore not expressed in the former Tables: but such as by strong hand had intruded into those Estates, to the prejudice of the right heirs, overpowered by them.

- 1246 26 Llewellen Son of Gryffith, the Brother of David, the last Sovereign Prince of Wales, of the race of Cadwallader, overcome and slain in Bartel by King Edward the first, An. 1232. as before is said: by means whereof the Principality of Wales was added to the Crown of England.

When King Edward had thus fortunately effected this great business, he gave unto his English Barons and other Gentlemen of note, many fair Signiorities and Estates, as well to reward them for their service in the Conquest, as to engage so many able men, both in purse and power, for the perpetual defence and subjection of it. As for the Lordship of Flin, and the Towns and Estates lying on the Sea-Coasts: he held them in his own hands, both to keep himself strong, and to curb the Welch: and (wherein he dealt like the politic Emperor Augustus) pretending the ease of such as he had there placed; but indeed to have all the Arms, and men of employment under himself only.

This done, he divided Wales into seven Shires, viz. 1. Glamorgan; 2. Carmarthen; 3. Pembroke; 4. Cardigan; 5. Merioneth; 6. Carnarvon; and 7. Anglesey, after the manner of England. Over each of these, as he placed a particular English Lieutenant; so he was very desirous to have one general English Vicegerent, over the whole Body of the Welch. But this when they mainly withheld he sent for his Wife, then great with Child, to Carnarvon, where she was delivered of a Son. Upon the news whereof the King assembled the British Lords, and offered to name them a Governour born in Wales, which could not speak one word of English, and whose life no man could tax. Such a one when they had all sworn to obey, he named his young Son Edward; since which time our Kings Eldest Sons are called Princes of Wales. Their Investiture is performed by the imposition of a Cap of Estate, and a Coronet on his head that is invested, as a token of his Principality; by delivering into his hand a Vierge, i. e. the emblem of Government, by putting a Ring of Gold on his finger, to shew him that now he is a Husband to the Country, and a Father to her Children; and by giving him a Patent, to hold the said Principality to him and his Heirs Kings of England. By which words the separation of it from the Crown is prohibited; and the Kings keep in themselves so excellent an occasion of obliging unto them their eldest Son, when they please. In imitation of this Custom, more ex Anglia translato (saith Mariana) John the first of Castile and Leon, made his Son Henry Prince of the Asturias; which is a Country so craggy and mountainous, that it may not improperly be called the Wales of Spain. And all the Spanish Princes even to these times, are honoured with this Title of Prince of the Asturias.

Notwithstanding this provident care of Edward the first, in establishing his Empire here; and the extreme rigour of Law here used by Henry the 4th, in reducing them to obedience, after the rebellion of Owen Glendower: yet till the time of Henry the 8th, and his Father, (both being extract from the Welch blood) they seldom or never contained themselves within the bounds of true Allegiance. For whereas before they were reputed as Aliens, this Henry made them (by act of Parliament) one Nation with the English, subject to the same Laws, capable of the same preferments, and privileged with the same immunities. He added also 6 Shires to the former number, out of those Countries which were before reputed as the Borders and Marches of Wales; and enabled them to send Knights and Burgeesses unto the English Parliaments: so that the name and language only excepted, there is now no difference between the English and Welch, an happy Union.

The same King Henry established for the ease of his Welch Subjects, a Court at Ludlow, like unto the ordinary Parliaments in France: wherein the Laws are ministered according to the Fashion of the Kings Courts of Westminster. The Court consisteth of one President who is, for the most part, of the Nobility, and is generally called, the Lord President of Wales; of as many Counsellors as it shall please the King to appoint; one Attorney, one Solicitor, licitor, one Secretary; and the four Justices of the Counties of Wales. The Town it self (for this must not be omitted) adorned with a very fair Castle, which hath been the Palace of such Princes of Wales; of the English blood, as have come into this Country, to solace themselves among their people. Here was young Edward the 5th, at the death of his Father; and here dyed Prince Arthur, Eldest son of Henry the 7th: both being sent hither by their Fathers to the same end, viz. by their presence to satisfy and keep in order the unquiet Welch-men. And certainly, as the presence of the Prince was then a terror to the rebellious, so would it now be as great a comfort to this peaceable people.

What the Revenues of this Principality are, I cannot say: yet we may boldly affirm that they are not very small, by these reasons following, viz. 1. By the Composition which Llewellen, the last Prince of Wales, made with Edward the first: who being Prince of North-wales only, and dispossessed of most of that, was fain to redeem the rest, of the said King Edward, at the price of 50000 Marks (which comes to 100000 pounds of our present money) to be paid down in ready coin; and for the residue to pay 1000 l. per annum. And 2dly, by those two circumstances, in the marriage of the Lady Katharine of Spain, to the above-named Prince Arthur. For first, her Father Ferdinand being one of the warriest Princes that ever were in Europe, giving with her in Dowry 200000 Ducats; required for Joynture, the third part only of this Principality, and of the Earldom of Chester. And secondly, after the death of Prince Arthur, the Nobles of the Realm persuaded Prince Henry to take her to Wife; that so great a Treasure as the yearly Revenue of her Joynture, might not be carried out of the Kingdom.

The Arms of the Princes of Wales differ from those of England, only by the addition of a Label of three points. But the proper and peculiar device, and which we commonly, though corruptly, call the Princes Arms, is a Coronet beautified with three Ostrich Feathers, and inscribed round with ICH DIEN, that is, I serve; alluding to that of the Apostle, The Hair while he is a Child differeth not from a Servant. This Coronet was won by that valiant Prince, Edward the Black Prince, at the Bartel of Crecie, from John King of Bohemia; who did there wear it, and whom he there slew. Since which time it hath been the Cognizance of all our Princes.

I will now, (thus) my discourse of Wales, with that testimony of the people, which Henry the second used in a Letter to Emanuel Emperour of Constantinople; The Welch Nation is so adventurous, that they dare encounter naked with armed men, ready to spend their blood for their Country, and pawn their life for praise: and adding only this, That since their incorporating with the English, they have shewed themselves most loyal, hearty, and affectionate Subjects of the State: cordially devoted to their King, and zealous in defence of their Laws, Liberties and Religion, as well as any of the best of their fellow-Subjects; whereof they have given good proof in these later times.

The BORDERS.

Before we come into Scotland, we must of necessity pass through that Batable ground, lying betwixt both Kingdoms; called THE BORDERS; the Inhabitants whereof are a kind of military men, subtle, nimble; and by reason of their often skirmishes, well experienced and adventurous. Once the English Border extended as far as unto the Fryth, or Strait of Edendurgh on the East, and that of Dunbriton on the West (the first Fryth, by the Latines called Bowstria and the later Glotta;) betwixt which, where now standeth the Town of Sterling, was an ancient Bridge, built over the River which falleth into the Fryth of Edendurgh; on a Crofs standing whereupon, was writ this Passport;

I am Free-march as passengers may ken,
To Scots, to Britains, and to English-men.

But when England groaned under the burden of the Danish oppression, the Scots well husbanded that advantage; and not only enlarged their Borders to the Tweed, but also took into their hands Cumberland, Northumberland, and Westmerland. The Norman Kings again recovered these Provinces, making the Borders of both Kingdoms to be Tweed, East; the Solway, West; and the Cheviot hills in the midst. Of any great wars made on these Borders, or any particular Officers appointed for the defence of them, I find no mention till the time of Edward the first, who taking advantage of the Scots disagreements about the successor of Alexander the third, hoped to bring the Country under the obedience of England. This Quarrel betwixt the two Nations he began, but could not end: the Wars surviving the Author; so that what Pellerius saith of the Romans and Carthaginians, I may as well say of the Scots and English; for almost 300 years together, aut bellum inter eos populus, aut belli preparatio, aut infida pax fuit. In most of these conflicts the Scots had the worst. So that Daniel in his History seemeth to marvel how this Corner of the Isle could breed so many, had it bred nothing but men, as were slain in these wars. Yet in the Reign of Edward the second, the Scots (having twice defeated that unhappy Prince) became so terrible to the English Borderers, that an hundred of them would fly from three Scots. It is a custom among the Turks, not to believe a Christian or a Jew complaining against a Turk, except their accusation be confirmed by the Testimony of some Turk also; which seldom happening, is not the least cause why so little Justice is there done the Christians. In like manner, it is the Law of these Borderers, never to believe any Scots complaining against any English-man, unless some other English-man will witness for him; and so on the other side. Ex jure quodam inter limitaneos rati (saith Camden in his Eliz. ab.) nullus nisi Scotus in Scotum, nullus nisi Anglus in Anglum, testis admittitur. This custom making void in this fashion all kinds of accusations, was one of the greatest causes of the Insolencies of both sides committed. Besides, there were divers here living, which acknowledged neither King; but sometime were Scots, sometime English, as their present crimes and necessities required protection, or pardon. To keep in this people, and secure their Borders, there were in each Kingdom three Officers appointed, called the Lords Wardens of the Marches: one being placed over the East, the other over the West, the third over the middle Borders. In England, the Warden of the East Marches had his Seat at Berwick, (a Town of great strength, and which for the convenience of its situation tion, was the first thing which the English took care to defend, and the Scots to surprise of which he was also Governor. The Warden of the West Marches had his Seat in Carville, which Henry the 8. for that cause well fortified. The Warden of the middle Marches had no set place of residence, but was sometimes in one place, sometimes in another, according as occasion required; the Office being executed for the most part, by the Wardens of the Eastern or Western Marches. But Imperii medium est, terminus ante fuit, by the blessed Marriage of the Kingdoms, that being now the middle of one, which was then the bounds of two Empires; these Officers, and the cause of them, the Wars, are quite extinguished.

SCOTLAND.

SCOTLAND is the Northern part of Britain, separated from England by the River Tweed and Solway, and the Cheviot Hills, extending from the one to the other. It is in length according to Polydore Virgil 480 miles, but of no great breadth; there being no place distant from the Sea above 60 miles, and the Country ending like the sharp point of a Wedge. And for the length assigned unto it by Polydore, it must be made up by measuring the Crooks and Windings of the shores, every where thrusting out with very large Promontories, and cutting deep Indentures into the Land. For measuring in a straight Line from North to South, the length thereof from Solway Frith to the Straithy-head, amounteth but unto three hundred and ten Italian miles; and from Berwick unto Straithy-head, is a great deal shorter. So that there is no such over-estimate in the Maps of Britain, nor such necessity to correct them, as was sometimes thought.

It was once called Caledonia, from the Caledonii a chief People of it: sometimes Albania, from Albania or Braid Albin, a principal Province in the North. But the most usual name is Scotia or Scotland; though the reason of the name be not agreed on. Some fabulous Writers of their own fetch it from Scota, the Daughter of an Aegyptian Pharaoh, of whom more when we come to Ireland. Others with better reason (though that none of the best) from the Scotti, Scitti, or Scythi, a German, or Sarmatian people, of noted fame, whom they will have to flee first on some parts of Spain, from thence to transplant themselves into Ireland; and out of Ireland into the Hebrides or Western Islands, now parts and members of this Kingdom. The more probable opinion is, that they were no other than mere Irish, (whose language, habit, and the most barbarous of their customs, the Highlanders, or natural Scots do still retain) united in the name of Scot, about the declination of the Roman Empire: the word Scot signifying in their language, a body aggregated into one out of many particulars; as the word Alman in the Dutch. Scot illud dicitur, (saith Camden out of Matthew of Westminster) quod ex diversis rebus in unum acervum aggregavit. First mentioned by this name in some fragments of Porphyrie (who lived about the time of the Emperor Aurelian) as they are cited by S. Hierom: after the death of Constantine much spoken of in approved Authors, as the confederates of the Picts, in harassing the Roman Province.

The whole divided commonly into the Highlands, and the Lowlands. The Highlanders or Irish Scots inhabiting the Hebrides, and the West parts of the Continent adjoining to them, more barbarous than the Wild Irish at this day: not to be civiliz'd (as King James observed in his most excellent Basilicon Doron) but by planting Colonies of the more Inland, orderly Scots among them. The Lowlanders or English Scots (as I well may call them) inhabiting on this side the two Frys of Dunbritton and Edenburgh, and the plainer Countries along the German Ocean, are the more civil of the two, as being of the same Saxon race with the English. This is evident, first by their Language, being only a broad Northern English, a Dialect only of that tongue: 2. By the Testimony of the Highlanders themselves, who are the true Scots, and speak the old Irish language, by whom the Lowlanders and the English are called by the same name of Saxons: 3. By the general consent of all Historians, affirming that the Kingdom of the Northumbrians or English Saxons, beyond Humber, extended as far Northwards as the two Frys before mentioned; and there continued for the space of 300 years: and 4. By the confession of some ingenious Gentlemen of that Nation, who grant it for a probable Tenet, That the Saxons and the Scots invading Britain much about the same time, the Saxons might extort the Eastern shore lying next their Country, from the old Inhabitants; as well as the Scots did all the Western parts which lay next to Ireland, and the Hebrides or Western Islands, from whence they first passed into Britain.

The Country for the most part, especially beyond the limits of the Roman Province, is very barren and unfruitful, not able to afford sustenance for the Natives of it; were they not a people patient of want and hunger; temperate in diet, and not accustomed unto that riot and excess, used commonly in richer and more plentiful Countries. Fruit they have very little, and not many Trees either for Building or for Fuel: the people holding, as in France, at the Will of the Lord, and therefore not industrious to build, or plant. Their chief Commodities are coarse Cloth; Fish in great abundance, Hides, Lead, and Coal; of which two last their Mountains do afford some rich undecaying Mines.

The People have been noted by their best Writers, for some barbarous Customs entertained amongst them, One of which was, If any two were displeased, they expected no law, but bang'd it out bravely, one and his Kindred, against the other and his: and thought the King much in their common, if they granted him at a certain day to keep the Peace. This fighting they call their Feides, a word so barbarous, that were it to be exprest in Latin or French, it must be by Circumlocution. These deadly Feides, King James in his most excellent Basilicon Doron adviseth his son, to redress with all care possible; but it pleased God to give him so long a life as to see it in his own days remedied: wherein he got a greater Victory over that stubborn born people, than ever did any foreign Prince, or any of his Predecessors could do before him; and indeed truly Royal, and worthy himself. Another Custom they had of that nature, that the like was hardly ever heard of amongst the Heathen, and much less in Christendom, which took beginning, as the Scottish Historians affirm, in the Reign of Ewin the third, who is the Fifteenth King in their Catalogue, after the first Fergus. This Ewin being a Prince much addicted, or wholly rather given over unto lasciviousness, made a Law, That himself and his Successors should have the Maidenhead, or first Nights lodging with every Woman, whose Husband held Land immediately from the Crown: and the Lords and Gentlemen of all those whose husbands were their Tenants or Homagers. This was, it seems, the Knights-service which men held their Estates by; and continued till the days of Malcolm Canmor: who at the request of his Wife Margaret, (she was the Sister of Edgar Atheling) abolished this Law, and ordained, That the Tenants by way of commutation, should pay unto their Lords a mark in money; which Tribute the Historians say is still in force. It was called Marcheta mulieris: but whether from Mark, a horse in the old Gallique (implying the obscene signification of Equitare) as Mr. Seldon thinks; or from Marca, the sum of money by which it was afterwards redeemed, I cannot determine. Certain I am that this last Custom was of such a barbarous and brutish nature, that the Custom of the Indians in giving to the Bramine the first nights lodging with their Brides; and that of many Savage uncivilized Nations in prostituting their wives and Daughters to the lusts and pleasure of their Guests; have not more unchristianity in them, than this of those Scottish Christians, if I may so call them.

These Customs shew the ancient Scots to be rude and barbarous, partaking little of the civility of the neighbouring Nation: nor are they so broken of the former, but that they are observed by a modern Writer, to be still greedy of revenge where they find means to take it; as also to be a subtle and politic people, inclined to Factions and Seditions amongst themselves; which he that reads their Stories cannot choose but see. A people, as King James observeth in his Basilicon Doron, ever weary of the present State and desirous of novelties, accustomed to judge and speak rashly of their Kings and Princes; towards whom they have always carried themselves with such untractableness, that more Kings have been betrayed, murdered and deposed by the Scots, than by all the Nations in the World. But take them in themselves without these relations, and they are said to be an industrious people, capable of all Sciences which they give their minds to, and generally well versed in Grammatical Learning, of which most of their Gentry have a smattering. And of most note in point of Learning, have been 1. Marianus (surnamed Scottus), and 2. Mezor Boetius, the Historians. 3. John Major, a well-known Schoolman, for the times before the Reformation. And for the times that followed, 4. George Buchanan, an ingenious Poet, but an unsound States-man; whose History, and Dialogue De jure Regni, have wrought more mischief in the World, than all Marci works. Not to have been remembered here, but because he was Padagogue to 5. King James, of most famous memory; whose Printed works declare his large abilities in all kinds of Learning. 6. Napier, the Laird of Marchiston. 7. 8. Barklay, the Father and the Son. 9. John Skene, the best Antiquary of this Nation. 10. Doctor John Maxwell, the late learned Bishop of Ross, and my very good friend; besides some others of less note.

The Christian Religion was here planted by divers men according to their several Nations, who did here inhabit amongst the Low-Landers, or Saxon-Scots, by Aidan the first Bishop of Lindisfarne, or Holy Island; amongst the Picts, inhabiting the South-Eastern parts; by Ninias, Bishop of Candida Cassi, or Whit-berne, in Galloway; amongst the Northwestern-Picts, An. 555. and finally amongst the Scots, by Palladius a Deacon of Rome, sent to them hither for that purpose by Pope Celestine. An. 435. or thereabouts. And for the Reformation of Religion, overgrown with the rust and rubbish of the Romish Church, (degenerated from its self in the latter days) it was here made by a strong hand, according to the judgment of Knox and others: nor taking counsel with the Prelates nor staying the leisure of the Prince as they did in England; but turning Prince and Prelates, out of all authority; made by that means, more naturally subject unto alterations than it had been otherwise; or only to be made good by the same violence which first introduced it. 'Tis true, that for a while being in danger of the French, and of necessity to support themselves by the power and favour of the English; they bound themselves by a solemn Subscription, to adhere only to the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church of England, and to observe that form of Worship which was there established. Religionis cultus, & Ritus cum Anglicis communibus subscripserunt; as is affirmed by Buchanan, their own State-Historian. But no sooner was that danger over, but they found opportunity and leisure to affect their ends; and have endeavoured ever since by practices, and correspondence with that party here, and finally by force of Arms, to thrust their own Constitutions and Form of Worship in the Church of England.

As for the Government of the Church, it was originally by Bishops, (as in all parts else;) but so as they exercise their Functions and Jurisdictions in all places equally, wheresoever they come: The Kingdom not being divided into Dioceses, till the time of Malcolm the third. An. 1070, or thereabout. Nor had they any Archbishops till the year 1478. The Archbishop of Tork being accounted and obeyed before that time, as the Metropolitan of Scotland. But being once settled in an orderly and constant Hierarchy, they held the same unto the Reformation began by Knox: and when he and his associates approving the Genevean plat-form, took the advantage of the minority of King James the Sixth, to introduce the Presbyterian Discipline, and suppress the Bishops; forbidding them by their own sole authority, to intermeddle any more in matters which concerned the Church; and Cantoning the Kingdom into Presbyteries of their own assigning. And that the King might not be able to oppose their doings, they kept him under by strong hand, imprisoned him at Sterling, made him fly from Edenburgh, removed from him all his faithful Servants, and seized upon his principal Fortresses: and in a word, so baffled and affronted him upon all occasions, that he was minded many times to have left the Kingdom, and retire to Venice, which doubtless he had done, (as I have heard affirmed by some of great place and power) had not the hopes of coming at the last to the Crown of England, made him stay it out: So that his Maxim of No Bishop, no King, was not made at random, but founded on the sad experience of his own condition. And though upon the fence of those inconveniences, which that alteration brought upon him, he did afterwards with great both Policy and Prudence, restore again the Episcopal Order, and settled it both by Synodical Acts, and by Acts of Parliament: yet the same restless spirit breaking out again in the Reign of his Son, An. 1638. did violently eject the Bishops, and suppress the calling; and set up their Presbyteries throughout the Kingdom, as in former times.

The famous or miraculous things rather of this Country are, 1. The Lake of Nirron, part of whose waters do congeal geal in Winter, and part of them not. 2. That in the Lake of Lennox, being 24 miles in compass, The Fish are generally without Fins, and yet there is great abundance of them. 3. That when there is no wind stirring, the waters of the said Lake are so tempestuous, that no Mariner dares venture on it. 4. That there is a Stone called the Deaf Stone, 12 foot high, and 33 Cubits thick, of this rare quality, that a Musket shot off on the one side, cannot be heard by a man standing on the other. If it be otherwise (as he must have a strong Faith who believes these wonders) let Heitor Boetius bear the blame, out of whom I had it.

Chief Mountains of this Kingdom are the Cheviot Hills upon the Borders; and Mount Gramscup, spoken of by Tacitus, the safest shelter of the Picts, or Northern Britains against the Romans, and of the Scots against the English; now called the Hills of Albany, or the mountainous Regions of Braid-Albin. Out of these springeth the 1. Tay, or Taws, the fairest River of Scotland, falling into the Sea about Dundee, in the East side; and 2. the Clwyd, emptying it self into Dunbriston Frith, on the West side of the Kingdom. Other Rivers of most note are, the 3. Banoc, emptying it self into the Frith of Edenburgh; on the Banks whereof was fought that fatal Battle of Bannock-burn, of which more anon. 4. Spey, 5. Dee, the Oedja of Ptolemy: none of them any of long course, by reason that the Country Northward is but very narrow.

In reference to Ecclesiastical affairs, this Kingdom hath been long divided into 13 Dioceses, to which the Dioceses of Edenburgh (taken out of that of S. Andrews (hath been lately added: and in relation to the Civil, into divers Seneschalries and Sheriffdoms, which being for the most part hereditary, are no small hindrance to the due execution of Justice. So that the readiest way to redress the mischief (as King James advised) is to dispose of them as they fall or disceat to the Crown, according to the laudable custom (in that case) in England.

The greatest Friends of the Scots, were the French, to whom the Scots shewed themselves so faithful, that the French King committed the defence of his person to a selected number of Scottish Gentlemen: and so valiant, that they have much hindered the English Victories in France. And certainly the French feeling the smart of the English puissance alone, have continually heartened the Scots in their attempts against England, and hindered all means of making union betwixt them: as appeared, when they brake the match agreed on, between our Edward the sixth, and Mary, the young Queen of Scots. Their greatest enemy was the English, who overcame them in many battels, seized once upon the Kingdom, and had longer kept it, if the mountainous and inaccessible woods had not been more advantageous to the Scots, than their power: for so much King James seemeth to intimate in his speech at WVith-bell, 1607. And though, saith he, the Scots had the honour and good fortune never to be conquered, yet were they never but on't be defensible side, and may in part thank their hills and inaccessible passages, that saved them from an utter overthrow, at the hands of all them that ever pretended to conquer them. But

One only Nation now are we,
And let us so for ever be.

The chief Cities are Edenburgh (of old called Castrum Alatum) in Lothien, where is the Kings Palace, and the Courts of Justice. It consisteth chiefly of one street extending in length one mile, into which run many pretty lanes; so that the whole compass may be nigh three miles: extending from East to West on a rising ground, at the Summit or West end whereof standeth a strong and magnificent Castle, mounted upon a steep and precipitous Rock, which commandeth the Town; supposed to be the Castrum Alatum, spoken of by Ptolemy. Under the command or rather the Protection of which Castle, and through the neighbourhood of Leith, standing on the Fryth, and serving as a Port unto it, and finally by the advantage of the Courts of Justice, and the Court Royal, called Holy-Rood-House, it soon became rich, populous, well-traded, and the chief of the Kingdom: but withal factious and seditious, contesting with their Kings, or siding against them upon all occasions. No way to humble them, and keep them in obedience to their Sovereign Lords, but by incorporating Leith indulging it with the privileges of a City, and removing thither the Seat Royal, and the Courts of Judicature, which they more fear than all the Plagues that can befall them. It belonged in former times to the English Saxons, (as all the rest of the Country from the Fryth to Barwick) from whom oppressed by the tyranny of the Danes, it was taken by the Scots and Picts, Anno 800, or thereabouts. 2. Sterling, situate on the South-side of the Forth or Fryth, in the Sheriffdom to which, a strong Town, and beautified withal with a very fair Castle, the birth-place of King James the sixth, the first Monarch of Great Britain. Near to which Town, on the banks of the River Bannock, hapned the most memorable discomfiture that the Scots ever gave the English: who besides many Lords and 700 Knights and men of note, lost in this Fight (as the Scottish Writers do report) 50000 of the common Souldiers (our English Historians confess 10000, and too many of that) the King himself (Edward the 2.) being compelled to flee for his life and safety. Some of the Scottish Writers tell us, that the purer sort of Silver, which we call Sterling money did take name from hence; they might as well have told us, that all our Silver Bullion comes from Bullion in Luwyckland, or from the Port of Bullein in France; the truth being that it took that name from the Eastlings or Merchants of East-Germany, drawn into England by King John to refine our Coin. 3. Glasco, in Cluid-dale, honoured with an Archbishop's See, and a publick School (to which some give the name of a University) founded here by Archbishop Turnbul, Anno 1554. 4. S. Andrews the chief Town of Fife, an Archbishop's See, and an University; by the Latines called Fannum Regulis, which, and the English name, it took from the bones of S. Andrew the Apostle, translated first from Patras in Peloponnesus where he suffered death, unto Constantinople, and thence brought hither by a Monk called Albanus Regulus, in the year 378 (if they be not mistaken in the time, who made the Story.) Over which Relicks he is said to have built a Monastery, which after grew to be a City: called from the founder Fannum Regulis, in honor of the Saint S. Andrew. The Bishop hereof is the Metropolitan of all Scotland; the City seated on the Ocean, near the fall of the Ethan, overlooked with a strong and goodly Castle, the Archbishops seat. 5. Falkland, in the same Province or Fife, beautified with a retiring house of the Kings, resorting thither, often on recess from business, or for the commodity and pleasure of hunting, which the place affords. 6. Dundee, in Latine, Taodunum, a rich and noted Port at the mouth of the Taye, the chief Town of Angus. 7. Alber-don, at the mouth of the River Dons, whence it had the name, (the word Aber in the British signifying the mouth or influx of a River) an University, and Bishops See. 8. Perth, or St. Johns Town, seated on the Tay, but in the middle of the Kingdom; walled and replenished with an industrious people: the chief Town of the Sheriffdom of Perth. 9. Scone, on the farther farther side of the Taye, adorned heretofore with a famous Monastery, the usual place for the inauguration of the Scottish Kings: the fatal Stone, on which they did receive the Crown, (the Palladium of the Scottish Kingdom) here kept, till the removal of it unto Westminster, by King Edward the first. Upon which Stone there were of old ingraven these Verses,

Non salutat fatum, Scoti quocumque locatum Invenient lapidem, regnare tenentur ibidem.

Translated in old Meeter thus:

The Scots shall brook that Realm as natif ground,
If Weirds fail not where ere this Stone is found.

Most happily accomplished in the Succession of King James the sixth, to the Crown of England. 10. Dunbriston (Britannodunum in the Latine) seated in a grassie Plain, at the fall or influx of the River Levin into the Clwyd, upon two steep and precipitous Rocks, flanked on the West with the said two Rivers, and on the East with a miry Flat, drowned at every full Sea: the strongest hold of all the Kingdom, and thought to be impregnable but by Famine or Treason, and the chief Town of the West side of Scotland, the name hereof communicated to the Fryth adjoining.

The Ancient Inhabitants of this Country dwelling within the limits of the Roman Province, were the Gadeni, possessing Tevisdale, Tweedale, March and Lothien, whose chief City was Castrum Alatum, now Edenburgh. 2. The Damii, dwelling in Cluydsdale, Lennox, Sterling; and Menteith, whose chief City was Vandunara, now Renfrew; Lindum, now Lindithquo. 3. The Selgovae inhabited in Liddisdale, Troisdale, Esksdale, Amundale, and Niddisdale, whose chief place was Carbantorigum, now Caer-Laverock: and 4. The Novantes, containing Galloway, Carriek, Kyle and Cunningham. Principal places of which were, Lucopbia, now VVithern, and Berigonium, now Bargenie. Without the Province, amongst the Picts or barbarous Britains, divided generally into Caledonii and Meatae, the Nations of most note were, 5. The Caledonii properly so called, taking up all Strathern, Argyle, Cantire, Albanie, Lorn, Perth, Angus, and Fife. 6. The Fermiones of Mornis and Mar. 7. The Talzali of Buguban. 8. The Vacomagi of Loquhabre and Murray. 9. The Canra of Ross and Sutherland. 10. The Contini of Cathness; and 11. The Cornubii of Strathnaver, the furthest Country Northward of all the Island. Chief Towns of which were, Tamia, Banatia, Orea, Devana, and Tuesis; which we know not where to find upon any certainty.

The fortunes of this people, as they related to the Romans, hath been shewed before. On the withdrawing of whose Forces, so much hereof as formerly had belonged to that Empire, was possessed by the Saxons, the residue thereof, as formerly, by the Scots and Picts; save that the Saxons not content with that which the Romans held, made themselves masters also of the Plain Countries, lying on the German Ocean, to which the passage out of Germany was both short and easie. By which account, besides those places in the East, they were possessed of the Counties or Sheriffdoms of Tevisdale, Tweedale, March, Lothien, Liddisdale, Esksdale, Amundale, Niddisdale, Cluydsdale, Galloway, Carriek, Kyle, Cunningham, Lennox, and Sterling, being the richest and most flourishing part of the modern Scotland. The Scots for their part hath the Counties of Cantire, Argyle, Braid-Albin, (or Albanie) Lorne, Loquhabre, and Strathnaver, lying on the West and North: the other Northern moiety (excepting some parts near the Coast of the German Ocean possessed by the Saxons) containing the now Counties of Cathness, Sutherland, Ross, Murray, Buguban, Marre, Morn, Angus, Atbol, Perth, Fife, Strathern and Menteith, being only left unto the Picts. From whence the Saxons and Scots came into these parts, hath been shewn already. And for the Picts, (to omit here the refutation of those who will have them to descend from the Agathyrsi, a people of Seythia) they were no other than such of the natural Britains, as never were brought under the Roman Empire, but still preserved their Country in its former Liberty; called therefore by Tertullian, inaccessa Romanis loca, as indeed they were: and using still their ancient custom of painting their bodies, after the rest of their Country men had conformed themselves to more civil courses, were by the Romans called Picti: and by that name first mentioned in the Panegyric of Emmianus, in the time of Constantine the Great. They long possessed these parts without an Inmate, even till the year 424, when the Irish-Scots wanting room at home, and having formerly possessed themselves of the Western Isles, first set foot in Britain: with whom they had continual War, till in the end the Scots prevailing, compelled the Picts to abandon to them the Western parts, and withdraw themselves into the Eastern. Afterwards growing into better terms with the other, and willing to enlarge their Borders towards the more flourishing South, they contracted an Offensive and Defensive League against the Britains, who on all sides, they most miserably tortured, till vanquished and beaten back by the conquering Saxons, against whom they contracted a new Confederacy. Taking the advantage of the death of Ethelred King of the Northumbrians, and the invasion of the Danes on the rest of England, they got into their hands all Bernicia, or so much of the Kingdom of the Northumbrians, as lay on the North of Tweed, and Solway, reckoned from that time forwards a part of their Dominions. But this good neighbourhood held not long betwixt these two Nations. It hapned at the last, that Achaine King of the Scots, married Fergus, Sister unto Hungulf King of the Picts, and had by her a Son called Alpine, who after the death of Hungulf dying without Issue, and having none of a nearer kindred was, in the Judgment of the Scots, to succeed in that Kingdom. But the Picts, alledging a Law of not admitting Aliens to the Crown, chose one Ferret of their own Nation, to be their King: with whom Alpine contended in a long War, victorious, for the most part, in conclusion slain. The quarrel notwithstanding did remain betwixt the two unfriendly Nations, till at the last, after many bloody battels and mutual overthrows (the Scots being for the most part on the losing side) Kenneth, the second of that name, vanquished Donsken, the last King of the Picts, with so great a slaughter of his people, that he extinguished not their Kingdom only, but their very name; passing from that time forwards under that of Scots. No mention after this of the Pictish Nation, unless perhaps we will believe that some of them passed into France; and there, forsooth, subdued that Country which we now call Picardy.

As for the Catalogue of the Kings of the Scots in Britain, I shall begin the same with Fergus, the second of that name in the Account of their Historians: leaving out that rabble of 39 Kings (half of them at the least before Christ's Nativity) mentioned by Heitor Boetius, Buchanan, and others of their Clasick Authors. Neither shall I offend herein, as I conjecture, the more Judicious and understanding men of the Scottish Nation, (and for others I take little care) since I deal no more unkindly with their first Fergus and his Successors, than I have done already with our own Brutus, and his. The first Scottish King that settled himself himself in the North of Britain, is, according to the above named Heitor Boetius, one Fergus, which in the time that Cyst governed the Britains, came (forth) into these parts out of Ireland. From him, unto Eugenius, we have the names of 39 Kings in a continued succession: which Eugenius, together with his whole Nation, is said to have been expelled the Island, by a joyn't confederacy of the Romans, Britains and Picts. Twenty and seven years after the death of this Eugenius, they were reduced again into their possession here, by the valour and conduct of another Fergus, the second of that name. To this Fergus I refer the beginning of this Scottish Kingdom in Britain, holding the stories of the former 39 Kings to be vain and fabulous. Neither want I probable conjecture for this assertion, this expedition of Fergus into Britain being placed in the 424 year of C.H.R.I.S.T.; at what time the best Writers of the Roman Story, for those times, report the Scots to have first feared themselves in this Island.

The Kings of chief note in the course of the whole Succession are, 1. Achais, who died in the year 809 and in his life contracted the offensive and defensive league with Charles the Great, between the Kingdoms of France and Scotland. The Conditions whereof were, 1. Let this league between the two Kingdoms endure for ever; 2. Let the enemies unto one, be reputed and handled as the enemies of the other; 3. If the Saxons or English-men invade France, the Scots shall send thither such numbers of Souldiers as shall be desired, the French King defraying the charges; 4. If the English invade Scotland, the King of France shall at his own charges send competent assistance unto the King of Scots. Never was there any league, which was either more faithfully observed, or longer continued, than this between these two Kingdoms: the Scots on all occasions so readily assisting the French, that it grew to a proverb, or by-word, He that will France win, must with Scotland first begin. 2. Kenneth the 2d. who having utterly subdued and destroyed the Picts, extended his Dominions over all the present Scotland, deserved to be accounted the first Monarch of it: the Picts (being either rooted out, or so few in number, that they passed afterwards in the name, and account of Scots) from that time forwards never mentioned in any Author. 3. Malcolm the first, who added Westmerland and Cumberland unto his Dominions, given to him by King Edmund of England, the Son of Athelstane, to have his aid against the Danes, or to keep him neutral. After which time, those Counties were sometimes Scottish and sometimes English, till finally recovered by King Henry the second, and united to the Crown of England, never since disjointed. 4. Kenneth the third, who, by consent of the Estates of his Realm, made the Kingdom hereditary, to descend from the Father to his Eldest Son, before which time (keeping within the compass of the Royal Family) the Uncle was sometimes preferred before the Nephew; the eldest in years, though furthest off, before the younger Kinsman, though the nearer in blood. After which time (the opposition and interruption made by Constantine the third, and Donald the fourth excepted only the Eldest Sons of these Kings, or the next in birth, have succeeded ordinary in that Kingdom. This Kenneth was one of those Tributaries and Vassal Kings, which rowed King Edgar over the Dee, near Chester, in such pomp and Majesty. 5. Macbeth of whom there goeth a famous Story, which shall be told at large anon. 6. Malcolm the third, the Son of Malcolm the second, and thence during the whole time of Macbeth's Tyranny, and thence brought into Scotland at his return, not only some Civilities of the English garb; but the honourary Titles of Earls and Barons, not here before mentioned. At the persuasion of the Lady Margaret his wife, (Sister of Ed- gar, surnamed Atheling, and after his decease the right Heir of the Crown of England) he abolished the barbarous custom spoken of before. He did Homage to William the Conqueror for the Crown of Scotland, but afterwards siding against him with the English, was slain at Almwick. 7. David, the youngest Son of Malcolm the third, succeeded (his two Brothers Edgar and Alexander dying without Issue) in the Throne of his Father; and in right of his Mother the Lady Margaret, Sister and Heir of Edgar Atheling, and Daughter of Edward the Eldest Son of Edmund the second, surnamed Troisfide, King of England, had the best title to that Kingdom also: but dispossessed thereof by the Norman Conquerors, with whom by reason of the great puissance of those Kings, and the little love which the English bare unto the Scots, not able to dispute their Title by force of Arms. From Maud the Sister of this David, married to Henry the first of England descended all the Kings of England (King Stephen excepted) to Queen Elizabeth's death, from David all the Kings of Scotland, till King James the sixth, who on the death of Queen Elizabeth, succeeded in the Crown of England, in right of his descent from another Margaret, the eldest Daughter of King Henry the seventh. So that in his person there was not an union of the Kingdoms only, under the Title of Great Britain, but a restoring of the old Line of the Saxon Kings (of which he was the direct and indubitate Heir to the Crown of England; the possession whereof had for so long time continued in the Posterity of the Norman Conqueror. And upon this descent it followeth most undeniably, that though the Norman Conqueror got the Crown of England by the power of the Sword, from the true Heirs of Edmund the II. surnamed Troisfide, and that his Successors had enjoyed it by no other Title till Queen Elizabeth's death: yet James, the first Monarch of Great Britain, succeeded by a right descent from the Saxon Line; without relation to the Conquest of the Norman Bastard. 8. William, the Brother of Malcolm the fourth, and Nephew of David before mentioned by his Son Prince Henry, (who died in the life of his Father) being taken Prisoner at the Battle of Almwick, did homage to King Henry the second for the Crown of Scotland, and was thereupon restored to his Liberty, and his Realm to peace. What doth occur concerning the succeeding Kings, when their Affairs with England and the World abroad became more considerable, we shall see anon.

In the mean time proceed we to the story of Macbeth than which for variety of action, and strangeness of events, I never met with any more pleasing. The story in brief is thus: Duncan King of the Scots had two principal men, whom he employed in all matters of importance Macbeth and Banquo. These two travelling together through a Forest, were met by three Fairies Witches (Weirds the Scots call them) whereof the first making obeysance unto Macbeth, saluted him Thane (a title unto which that of Earl afterwards succeeded) of Glamis the second, Thane of Cawder; and the third, King of Scotland. This is unequal dealing, saith Banquo, to give my friend all the honours, and none unto me; to which one of the Weirds made answer, That he indeed should not be King, but out of his loyns should come a race of Kings that should for ever rule the Scots. And having thus said, They all suddenly vanished. Upon their arrival to the Court, Macbeth was immediately created Thane of Glamis; and not long after, some new service of his requiring new recompence, he was honored with the title of Thane of Cawder. Seeing then how happily the prediction of the three Weirds fell out in the former; he resolved not to be wanting to himself in fulfilling the third, and therefore first he killed the King, and after, by reason of his command among the Souldiers, and common people, he succeeded in his Throne. Being scarce warm in his seat, he called to mind the prediction given to his Companion Banquo: whom hereupon suspecting as his supplanter, he caused him to be killed, together with his whole Posterity; Fleance one of his Sons escaping only, with no small difficulty, into Wales. Freed as he thought from all fear of Banquo and his Issue, he built Dunfian Castle, and made it his ordinary seat; and afterwards on some new fears, consulting with certain of his Wizards about his future Estate, was told by one of them, that he should never be overcome, till Bernane Wood (being some miles distant) came to Dunfian Castle, and by another, that he should never be slain by any man which was born of a Woman. Secure then as he thought, from all future dangers, he omitted no kind of libidinous cruelty, for the space of 18 years; for so long he tyrannized over Scotland. But having then made up the measure of his iniquities, Mac-duffe the Governor of Fife, associating to himself some few Patriots, equally hated by the Tyrant, and abhorring the Tyranny, privily met one evening at Bernane Wood: and taking every one of them a bough in his hand, (the better to keep them from discovery) marched early in the morning towards Dunfian Castle, which they took by Scalado. Macbeth escaping was pursued by Mac-duffe, who having overtaken him urged him to the combat; to whom the Tyrant, half in scorn, returned this Answer, That he did in vain attempt to kill him, it being his destiny never to be slain by any that was born of a Woman. Now then said Mac-duffe, is thy fatal end drawing fast upon thee; for I was never born of Woman, but violently cut out of my Mother's belly: which words so daunted the cruel Tyrant, though otherwise a valiant man and of great performances, that he was very easily slain; and Malcolm Comter, the true Heir of the Crown, seated in the Throne. In the mean time Fleance so prospered in Wales, that he gained the affection of the Princes Daughter of that Country; and on her begot a Son called Walser, who flying out of Wales, returned into Scotland; and his descent once known, he was not only restored to the Honours and Estates of his Ancestors, but preferred to be Steward of the house of Edgar the son of Malcolm the third, surnamed Comter; the name of Stewart, growing hence hereditary unto his Posterity. From this Walser descended that Robert Stewart, who succeeded David Bruce in the Kingdom of Scotland, the Progenitor of nine Kings of the name of Stewart, which have Reigned successively in that Kingdom. But now it is time to leave off particulars, and look into the general Succession of 1107 18. Alexander, Brother of Edgar.

1124 19. David, Brother of Alexander.
1133 20. Malcolm, Son of David.
1166 21. William, Brother of Malcolm the fourth.
1213 22. Alexander II. Son of William.
1250 23. Alexander III. Son of Alexander the 2d, after whose death, dying without any Issue, An. 1285, began that tedious and bloody Quarrel about the succession of this Kingdom, occasioned by fudery Titles and Pretendants to it: principal whereof were Bruce and Baliol, descended from the Daughters of David Earl of Huntingdon, younger Son of William, and Great Uncle of Alexander the third, the last of the Male Issue of Kenneth the 3d, those of nearer Kindred being quite extinct. And when the Scots could not compose the difference among themselves; it was taken into consideration by King Edward the first of England, as the Lord Paramount of that Kingdom: who selecting 12 English, glish, and as many of the Scots to advise about it, with the consent of all adjudged it to John Baliol Lord of Galloway, Son of John Baliol and Derovguilla his Wife, Daughter of Alan Lord of Galloway, and of the Lady Margaret, the eldest Daughter of the said David; who having done his homage to the said King Edward, was admitted King.

1300 24 John Baliol, an English-man, but forgetful both of English birth, and English Favours, invaded the Realm of England in Hostile manner, and was taken prisoner by King Edward. Who following his blow, made himself Master of all Scotland, which he held during the rest of his life, and had here his Chancery, and other Courts. 6.

1306 25 Robert Bruce, Son of Robert Bruce Lord of Annandale (Competitor with Baliol for the Crown of Scotland in Right of Isabel his Mother, the second Daughter of David Earl of Huntingdon, and consequently a degree nearer to the King deceased than Baliol was, though descended from the elder Sister) was crowned King in the life-time of King Edward the first; but not fully possessed thereof until after his death: confirmed therein by the great defeat given to Edward the second, at the fight of Bannocks-burn, not far from Sterling, spoken of before. But he being dead, Anno 1332. Edward the third confirmed the Kingdom on 1332 26 Edward Baliol, Son of John Baliol, rejected by the Scots for adhering so firmly to the English; who thereupon harried Scotland with fire and Sword. 10.

27 David Bruce the Son of Robert, restored unto his Fathers Throne by the power of the Scots, and a great enemy to the English. Invading England when King Edward was at the siege of Calice, he was taken prisoner by Queen Philipp, the Wife of that King, and brought to Windsor, where he was prisoner for a while with King John of France. Released at last on such conditions as best pleased the Conqueror. 29.

1371 28 Robert II. surnamed Stewart, King of the Scots by descent from the eldest Sister of David Bruce, was extracted also from ancient Princes of Wales (as was said before): restoring thereby the British blood to the Throne of Scotland.

1390 29 Robert III. Son of Robert, the second, called John before he came to the Crown; in which much over-awed by his own Brother the Duke of Albany, who had an aim at it for himself. 16.

1406 30 James, Son of Robert the third, taken prisoner by King Henry the fourth of England, as he was crossing the Seas for France, to avoid the practices of his Uncle. Restored unto his Country in the beginning of the Reign of King Henry the sixth, after 18 years absence, he was at last most miserably murdered by the Earl of Arbol, claiming a right unto that Crown. 42.

1462 32 James III. slain by his own rebellious Subjects. 29.

1491 33 James IV. married Margaret the eldest Daughter of King Henry the seventh, but at the soliciting of the French; (against the Peace between the Nations) he invaded England (in the absence of King Henry the eighth) with 100000 men: but was met with by the Earl of Surrey (having 26000 men in his Army) nigh unto Falden; where he was slain, together with two Bishops, twelve Earls, fourteen Lords, and his whole Army routed. 23.

1514 34 James V. Son of James the fourth, and the Lady Margaret, kept for a time such good correspondence with the English, that in the year 1536, he was created Knight of the Order of the Garter. But afterwards inheriting his Fathers hatred against them, he invaded their Borders in the year 1542: and was met by the Lord Warrent, then Warden of the West Marches. The Battels being ready to joyn, one Sir Oliver Sinclair the Kings Favourite, though otherwise of no great Parentage, was by the Kings directions proclaimed General: which the Scottish Nobility took in such indignation, that they threw down their Weapons, and suffered themselves to be taken prisoners, there being not one man slain on either side. The principal prisoners were the Earls of Glen-carn, and Casset; the Barons Maxwell, Oliphant, Somervell, Flemming, with divers others: besides many of the principal Gentry. 28.

1542 35 Mary, the Daughter and only lawfully-begotten Child of James the fifth, succeeded in her Cradle unto the Throne; promised in Marriage to King Edward the sixth of England; but by the power of the Hamiltons carried into France, where married to Francis, then Dauphin, afterwards King of the French, of that name the second. After whose death, she married Henry Lord Darnley, eldest Son of Matthew Earl of Lennox. Outed of her Dominions by a potent Faction, she was compelled to flee into England; where after a tedious imprisonment, she was put to death in Fotheringhay Castle in Northamptonshire, and interred at Peterburgh. Anno 1586.

1567 36 James VI. the Son of Mary Queen of Scots, and of Henry Lord Darnley, was crowned King in his Cradle also. He married Anne, the Daughter of Christian the third, King of Denmark; was chose of the Order of the Garter, Anno 1590. and succeeded Queen Elizabeth in the Realm of England, March 24. Anno 1602. And here I cannot omit the prudent fore-sight of Henry the seventh, who having two Daughters, bestowed the Eldest (contrary to the mind of his Council) on the King of Scots, and the younger on the King of the French: that so, if his own Issue male should fail, and that a Prince of another Nation must inherit England; then Scotland as the lesser Kingdom would depend upon England, and not England wait on France, as upon the greater. In which succession of the Scots to the Crown of England, the Prophecy of the fatal Stone, spoken of before, did receive accomplishment. And so perhaps might that ascribed in the Poly-chronicon on an holy Anchorite living in King Egrededs time, which is this, Englishmen, for that they wonnest them to drunkenness, to treason, and to retchlessness of Gods house, first by Danes, and then by Normans, and the third third time by Scots, whom they holden least worth of all, they shall be overcome. Then the world shall be unstable, and so divers & variable, that the unstableness of thoughts shall be deceived by many manner diversity of Clothing. For on this Union of the Kingdoms, this Prediction seems to have been accomplished; the circumstances mentioned in the same so patly agreeing, and the Scots never subduing England, but by this blessed Victory. Unless perhaps the Accomplishment thereof be still to come; or that it was indeed more literally fulfilled in the great Defeat at Bannocks-burn, in which was slain 50000 English, as the Scottish Writers do report, and the name of Scot growing so terrible for a time, that an hundred of the English would flee from three Scots, as before was noted.

The Revenues of this Crown Botermus estimateth at 100000 Crowns, or 30000 sterling, and it is not like that they were much more, if they came to that: here being not commodity in this Kingdom to allure strangers to Traffick: the Demain or Patrimony of the Crown, but mean; the Country in most places barren, and many of the Subjects, those especially of the Out-Isles, and the Western parts, so extremely barbarous, that they add very small improvement to the publick Treasury.

And answerable to the shortness of their standing Revenue, were their Forces also. For though the Country be very populous, and the men generally patient both of cold and hunger, and inured to hardship; yet in regard the Kings hereof were not able to maintain an Army under pay, their Forces seldom held together above 40 days, & then, if not a great deal sooner, did disband themselves. For the Nobility and Gentry being bound by the Tenure of their Lands, to serve the King in his Wars, and to bring with them such and so many of their Vassals, as the present service did require; used to provide for themselves and their followers, tents, money, victuals; provision of all sorts, and all other necessities; the King supplying them with nothing. Which being spent, they usually disbanded, and went home again, without attending long on the Expedition. Which I conceive to be the reason, why the Scots in the time of hostility betwixt the Nations, made only sudden & tumultuary incursions into England; without any thing of special moment: and that they have not acted any thing elsewhere in the way of Conquest, but only as Mercenaries to the French and other Nations that have hired them. And though it be affirmed that the Army of King James the 4th, when he invaded England in the time of King Henry the Eighth, (being then in France) consisted of 100000 fighting men; yet this I look on only as an argument of their populosity: few of those men being armed or trained up to service, and therefore easily discomfited by a far less Army. It's true that in the year 1643. the Scottish Covenanters raised an Army consisting of 18000 Foot, and 2000 Horse, and 1000 Dragons; with Arms, Artillery, and Ammunition correspondent to it: which was the gallantest Army, and the best appointed, that ever that Nation did set out in the times foregoing. But then it is as true withal, that this Army was maintained & payed by the two Houses of the Parliament of England, at the rate of 30000 l. per mensum, and an advance of 100000 l. before-hand, the better to invite them to embrace the action, and prepare necessities for it, without any charge unto themselves. And though the Army which they sent into England above five years after, under James Duke Hamilton of Arran, was little inferior unto this number, but far superior to it both in Horse & Arms, and other necessary appointments: yet it is well known, that the Scots brought nothing but their own bodies to compound that Army; the Horse and Arms being such as they had gotten out of England in the former War.

In point of reputation amongst Foreign Princes, the Kings of the Scots, and their Ambassadors and Agents, had place in all General Councils, and Ecclesiastical Assemblies, before those of Castile: and by the Statutes of late times, have been reckoned (with the Kings of England, France, and Spain) for absolute Monarchs. But I conceive that this was only since the first years of King Edward the third, when they had quitted their subjection and vassalage to the Crown of England. For that anciently the Scots were Homagers to the Kings of England, may be apparently demonstrated by the following Arguments. 1. By the Homages, and other services, and duties, done by the Kings of the Scots unto those of England: Malcolm the third doing Homage unto William the Conqueror; as William one of his Successors did to K. Henry the second: and that not only for the three Northern Counties, or the Earldom of Huntingdon (as by some pretended) but for the very Crown it self: Kenneth the third, being also one of those eight Tributary or Vassal Kings, which rowed King Edgar over the Dee, as before was noted. 2ly, By the interposing of King Edward the first, and the submission of the Scots to that interposing, in determining the controvercie of succession betwixt Bruce and Baliol: as in like case, Philip the Fair adjudged the title of Artoys, which was holden of the Crown of France, and then in question betwixt the Lady Maund, and her Nephew Robert; or as King Edward the third, in the right of the said Crown of France, determined of the controvercie betwixt John Earl of Montford, and Charles of Blais, for the Dukedom of Breragn. 3ly, By the confession and acknowledgment of the Prelates, Peers, and other the Estates of Scotland, subscribed by all their hands and Seals in the Roll of Ragman; wherein they did acknowledge the superiority of the Kings of England, not only in regard of such advantages as the Sword had given him, but as of his original and undoubted right. Which Roll was treacherously delivered into the hands of the Scots, by Roger Mortimer Earl of March, in the beginning of the Reign of King Edward the third. 4ly, By the tacit concession of the Kings themselves, who in their Coins, Commissions, and publick Instruments, assume not to themselves the title of Kings of Scotland, but of Reges Scotsorum, or the Kings of the Scots: and thereby intimating that though they are the Kings of the Nation, yet there is some superiour Lord (King Paramount as we may call him) who hath the Royalty of the Land. 5ly, By the Judgments and Arrests of the Courts of England, not only in the times of King Edward the first, but in some times since. For when William Wallis a Scotsman by birth, and the best Souldier of that Country, was taken Prisoner and brought to London, he was adjudged to suffer death as a Traitor: which had been an illegal and unrighteous judgment, had he been a Prisoner of War, and not looked on by the Judges as a Subject to the Crown of England. The like done in the case of Simon Frezill, another of that Kingdom in the same Kings Reign. In like manner, in the time of King Edward the third, it was resolved by the Court, in the Lord Beaumonts case, when it was objected that one of the Witnesses was a Scot, and therefore as an Alien not to give his evidence; that his testimony was to be allowed of, because the Scots in the Law of England did not go for Aliens. And when one indicted for a Rape in the 13th of Queen Elizabeths Reign, desired a Medietatem Linguae, because he was a Scotsman, & so an Alien; it was denied him by the Court, because the Scots were not reputed here as Aliens, but as Subjects rather. So also, when Robert Umfraville, Lord of Kyeme was summoned to the Parliament of England, in the Reign of King Edward the third, by the name of Robert Earl of Angus, (which is a dignity in Scotland,) and after in a Writ against him was called only by his own name of Umfraville, without any addition of that honor; the Writ was judged to abate: which I conceive the learned Judges had not done, if Scotland had not been reputed to be under the Vassalage of the Kings of England, 6. and lastly, by a Charter of Lands and Arms, (which I have in my custody) granted by King Edward the first, in the last year of his Reign, to Peter Dodge of Stopworth in the County of Chester, one of the Ancestors of my Mother: in which it is expressed, that the said Lands and Arms were conferred upon him by that King, for his eminent services, encourte son grand Enemy & Rebel, Baliol, Roy d'Escoffe & vassal de Angleterre; that is to say, against his great Enemy and Rebel Baliol King of Scotland, and Vassal of England. A thing so clear, that if King James had not been extremely tender of the honour of his native Country, he needed not to have put his Lawyers to the trouble of a New Invention, in hammering the Case of the Post-nati for him; to make the Scots inheritable unto Lands in England. The acknowledgment and Reviver of their old Subjection would have served his turn. But of this argument enough, and perhaps too much. I only add, that upon conference which I once had with an honourable person of that Kingdom of Scotland employed unto the Court in a business of no mean consequence to the peace and quiet of his Country: I found him so sensible of the inconveniences of their present Government, by reason of the Kings absence, and the frequent divisions and partialities of his Council there; that he confessed that Nation could be never rich or happy, till they were made a Province of the English Empire; and governed by a Vice-Roy, as Ireland was.

The principal Order of Knighthood in this Kingdom was that of S. Andrew, instituted by Hungus, King of the Picts, to encourage his Subjects in the War against King Athelstane of England. The Knights did wear about their necks a Collar, interlaced with Thistles, with the picture of St. Andrew appendant to it: the Motto Nemo me impune lacessit. It took this name because after the Battle, Hungus and his Souldiers went all barefoot to S. Andrews, and there vowed that they and their Posterity would henceforth use his Cross as their Ensign (which is a Saltire Argent in a Field Azure) whensoever they take in hand any war-like enterprise.

2. But this Order being expired many Ages since, there is now no Order of Knighthood in it, (except Knights Bachelor) but that of Nova Scotia; ordained by King James, An. 1622. for the planting of that Country by Scottish Colonies; in imitation of the Orders of Baronets in England, for the plantation of Ulster. Hereditary, as that also is, but the Knights hereof distinguished by a Ribband of Orange-Tawny.

The Arms are Sol, a Lion Rampant Mars, within a double Tressure counter-flowered: which Tressure counter-flowered was added to the Lion by Achais King of the Scots, at what time he contracted the League with France, signifying (saith Helior Boetius one of their Historians) Francorum opibus Leonem exinde muniendum; that the Scotch Lion should be guarded by the riches of France.

IRELAND.

IRELAND is environed on all sides with the Ocean, parted from Britain by a violent and unruly Sea, called S. Georges Chanel. Situate on the West of Britain, next unto which it is the biggest Island of Europe, containing in length 300, and in breadth 120 miles: and is seated under the 8th and 10th Climates; the longest day being 16 hours and an half in the Southern, and 17 hours 3 quarters in the Northern parts.

It was once called Scotia, from the Scots who did there inhabit; and Scotia Minor, to difference it from Scotland, in the Isle of Britain. But the general name hereof is Ireland, by the Latines called Hibernia, by the Greeks, Iernia. And though some frame a wrestled Etymology from Iberus, a Spanish Captain, and some from Irnanib, once a supposed Duke hereof; as others, ab Hyberno aere, the Winter-like and inclement air: yet probably the name proceeded from Erinland, which signifieth in their own language a Western land. And yet I must not pretermitt the Etymon given us by Bochartus, (more near the name than most of his other Fancies) who will have it called Hibernia, from Ibernae, a Phœnician word, signifying the furthest Habitation: there being no Country known amongst the Ancients, which lay West of Ireland.

Their own Chronicles, or Fables rather, tell us, how Cesarea, Noahs Neece, inhabited here before the Flood, and how 300 years after the Flood, it was subdued by Bartholomaeus, a Scythian, who overcame here I know not what Giants. Afterward Nemetus another Scythian Prince, and Delus a Græcian, came hither: and last of all Gaothel, with his Wife Scota, one of Pharaohs Daughters, who must needs name this Island Scotia. But not to honour such fopperies with a confutation, doubtless the first Inhabitants of this Island came out of Britain. For Britain is the highest Country unto it, and so had a more speedy wastage hither. Secondly, the ancient Writers call this Island, a British Island: And thirdly, Tacitus, giveth us of this Country this verdict, Solum, calumque cultus & ingenia hominum, hanc multum a Britannia differunt; the Soil and Air, the habits and disposition of the people, were not much unlike the Britains. For further evidence whereof, it was observed, at the reduction of Wales to the Crown of England, by King Edward the first, that many of their Laws and Customs were those of the Irish: which shews, that they did both descend from the same Original. But then we must observe withal, that they were counted far more barbarous & savage by most ancient Writers, than those of Britain are deciphered at the first discovery: said by Syrabo to be Man-eaters; accustomed (as Solinus telleth us) to drink the blood of those whom they flew in fight. Nor were the Women, though the softer and more tender Sex, free from such wild and savage Customs, it being a constant curse amongst them, when they were delivered of a man-child, to put some meat into the mouth of it, on the point of a Sword, wishing therewith it might not dye but in the midst of Arms, and the heat of Cattel. Both sexes used to trim themselves with the Teeth of Fishes, white as the driven Snow, or the polished Ivory; and therein placed the greatest part of their pride and glory.

Nor are the modern Irish much abhorrent from such barbarous customs, as plainly shew from what Original they descend; altered but little by converse with more civil Nations. Of natural constitution generally strong and nimble of body; haughty of heart, careless of their lives, patient in cold and hunger, implacable in enmity, constant in love, light of belief, greedy of glory; and in a word, if they be bad, you shall no where find worse; if they be good, you shall hardly meet with better. The Diet, especially of the meer Irish, is for the most part, on herbs, roots, butter mingled with Oat-flower, milk, and beef-broth: eating flesh many times without bread, which they digest with Ugheabagh; and give their bread-corn to their horses instead of Proviender. But more particularly, those of the richer sort in all parts, and of all sorts those which inhabit within the Pale (as they themselves call it) and in such places where the English Discipline hath been entertained; conformable to civility, both in behaviour and apparel: The Kernes (for by that name they call the wild Irish of the poorer and inferior sort) most extremely barbarous; nor behaving themselves like Christians, scarcely like men. All of them so tenacious of their ancient customs, that neither power, nor reason, nor the sense of the inconveniences which they suffer by it, can wean them to desert or change them. A pregnant evidence whereof, is their use of Ploughing, not with such gears or harness, as in other places; but by tying the hindmost horses head to the tail of the former; which makes the poor Jades draw in a great deal of pain; makes them unserviceable by the loosening of their tails, and withal is a course of so slow a dispatch, that they cannot break up as much ground in a week as a good Team well harnessed would perform in a day; yet no persuasion hath been able to prevail upon them for the changing of this hurtful and ridiculous custom. And when the Earl of Strafford, the late Lord Deputy, had damned it by act of Parliament, and laid a penalty on such as should after use it: the people thought it such a grievance, and so injurious to the Nation, that amongst other things demanded towards a Pacification of the present troubles, their Agents and Commissioners insisted eagerly on the abrogation of this Law. An humour like to this in the point of Husbandry, we shall hereafter meet with in another place. Near of kin to which, is a lazie custom that they have of burning their straw rather than put themselves to the pains to thresh it; by that means to part it from the Corn. From which no reason can dissuade them, nor persuasions win them. They have among them other customs as absurd; though less inconvenient: as placing a green bush, on May-day before their doors, to make their kine yield the more milk; kneeling down to the New Moon as soon as they see it, desiring her to leave them in as good health as she found them; and many others of like nature.

They use a language of their own, but spoken also in the West of Scotland, and the Hébrides or Western Islands which though originally British, or a Dialect of it, by reason of their intermixture with Norwegians, Danes, Easterlings, or Oost-mans, and English Saxons; hath no affinity with the Welsh, for ought I can learn.

The Christian Faith was first preached among them by S. Patrick, affirmed to be the Nephew of S. Martin of Tours, Anno 435. Reformed in the more civil parts, and the English Colonies, according to the platform of the Church of England: but the Kernes; or natural wild Irish (and many of the better sort of the Nation also) either adhere unto the Pope, or to their own superstitious fancies, as in former times. And to say truth, it is no wonder that they should: there being no care taken to instruct them in the Protestant Religion; either by translating the Bible; or the English Liturgy, into their own Language, as was done in Wales; but forcing them to come to Church to the English Service, which the people understand no more than they do the Mass. By means whereof the Irish are not only kept in centinual ignorance, as to the doctrine and devotions of the Church of England, and others of the Protestant Churches; but those of Rome are furnished with an excellent argument, for having the Service of the Church in a Language with the common Hearers do not understand. And therefore I do heartily commend it to the care of the State (when these dissenters are composed) to provide, that they may have the Bible, and all other publick means of Christian instruction and devotion in their natural tongue.

The Soil of it self is abundantly fruitful, but naturally fitter for graze and pasturage, than it is for Tillage; as may be seen in such places where the industry of man is adding to the natural goodness of the Soil. But where that wanteth, the Country is either overgrown with Wood, or encumbered with vast Bogs, an unwholesome Maishes; yielding neither profit nor pleasure unto the Inhabitants. In some places, as in the County of Armagh, so rank and fertile, that the laying of any soil or compost on it, doth abate its fruitfulness, and proves the worst Husbandry that can be.

It hath been anciently very famous for the Piety and Religious lives of the Monks. Amongst whom I cannot but remember Columbus, and of him this memorable Apocryph: when offered many preferences to leave his Country, he returned this Answer, It becomes not them to embrace other mens goods, who for Christs sake have forsaken their own. Of no less piety, but more eminent in point of Learning, was Richard Fitz-Rafe, Archbishop of Armagh, commonly called Armacanus, who flourished about the year 1250. A declared enemy of the Errors and corruptions of the Church of Rome.

It is affirmed of this Island, that (amongst other Privileges which it hath above other Islands) it fostereth no venomous Serpent, and that no such will live here, brought from other places. Hence of her self we find her speaking in the Poet.

*Illa ego sum Graiis Glacialis Hibernia dicta;
Cui Deus, & melior rerum nascitur Origo;
Ius commune dedit cum Creta alrice Tonantis,
Angues ne nostris diffundant sibilis in oris.*

I am that Island which in times of old
The Greeks did call Hibernia, Iey-cold:
Secured by God and Nature from this fear,
Which gift was given to Crete, Joves Mother dear,
That poisonous Snake should never here be bred,
Or dare to hiss, or hurtful venom spread.

The other miracles of this Island are, 1. That there is a Lake in the County of Armagh, into which if one thrust a piece of wood, he shall find that part of it which remaineth in the Mud to be turned Iron; and that which is in the Water, to be turned into a Whet-stone: richly deserved by him, if the tale be false, who did first report it. 2. That the Kine will yield no milk, if their Calves be not by them; or at least their Calves-skins stuffed with straw or hay. It is said also, that all the breed of this Country are of less size than they be in England, except Women and Grey-hounds, and those much bigger than with us.

As for the Clergie of this Country, they have been little beholding to their Lay-Patrons in former times: some of their Bishops being so poor, that they had no other Revenues than the Pasture of two milch-Beasts. And so far had the Monasteries and Religious Houses invaded by Appropriations the Churches Rights; that of late times in the whole Province of Connaught, the whole stipend of the Incumbent was not above 40 shillings, in some places not above 16. So that the poor Irish must needs be better fed than taught: for ad tenuitatem Beneficiorum, necessario sequitur ignorantia Sacerdotum, Poor Benefices will be fitted with ignorant Priests, said Paormitan rightly. But this is remedied in part by his Sacred Majesty King CHARLES, the second Monarch of Great Britain, who liberally (at the suite of the late Lord Archbishop of Canterbury) restored unto this Church all the Improvements and Portions of Tithes, which had been vested in the Crown. An action of most singular Piety and Princely Bounty.

Principal Rivers of this Country, are, 1. The Shannon (the Senas of Ptolemy) which arising in the Mountains of Leitrim in the County of Connaught, and making many fair Lakes as it passeth forwards; loseth it self after a course of 200 miles (of which 60 Navigable) in the Western Ocean. 2. The Liff, by Ptolemy called Libinus, neighboured by the City of Dublin. 3. Awiduffe, or Black Water, as the English call it. 4. Slane, supposed to be the Medona of the ancient Writers. 5. The Showre. 6. The Boyne, &c. Of which, and others of like note, take this following Catalogue, out of the Canto of the Marriage of the Thames and Medway, in the Fairy Queen.

There was the Liffie rowling down the lea,
The sandy Slane, the stony Aubrian,
The spacious Shennin, spreading like a Sea,
The pleasant Boyne, the filthy-fruitle Banne,
Swift Awiduffe, which of the Englishman
Is called Black Water; and the Liffar deep, Sad Trowis that once his people over-ran,
Strong Allo tumbling from Slevlogher steep,
And Maullo mine, whose waves I whilom taught to weep.

There also was the wide-embayed Mayre.
The pleasant Bandon crown'd with many Wood;
The spreading Lee, that like an Island fair,
Incloseth Cork with his divided flood;
And baleful Owre, late stain'd with English blood,
With many more, —

So the renowned Spencer in his Canto of the marriage of Thames and Medway.

But besides these Rivers, this Island is in most places well stored with Lakes, yielding great plenty of Fish to the parts adjoining. The principal of which, 1. Lough-erne, containing 15 miles in breadth, and 30 miles in length; shaded with Woods, and so replenished with Fish, that the Fishermen complain of too much abundance, and the often breaking of their Nets. It hath also in many Islands, one most remarkable for the strange and horrid noises which are therein heard, called therefore by the Vulgar, St. Patrick's Purgatory. Almost as big as this is, 2. the Lake of Corber, which loseth it self in the Sea not far from Galloway. A lake of 26 miles in length, and four in breadth: said have in it 30 fifts, abounding with Pine-Trees. 3. Lough-foyle, supposed to be the Logia of Ptolemy. 4. Lough-Enagh, out of which the River Banne, abundantly well stored with Salmon, hath its first Original. And besides these and many others of less note, there are said to be three Lakes in the Province of Meth, not far asunder, and having an intercourse of waters: but of so different a temper, that the Fish which are proper to the one, (for each of them hath its proper and peculiar forts) will not live in the other: but either die, or by some secret conveyances, find a way to their own Lake out of which they were brought.

It was divided anciently into five Provinces, each one a Kingdom of it self, that is to say, 1. Leinster, 2. Meth, 3. Ulster, 4. Connaught, and 5. Munster: but of late time the Province of Meth is reckoned for a Member or part of Leinster.

1. LEINSTER, by the Latines called Lagenia, hath on the East, the Irish Chanel, (commonly called S. Georges Chanel) by which parted from the Isle of Great Britain; on the West, the River Newrie, (Neorus, as the Latines call it) which divides it from Munster; on the North, the Province of Meth; and the main Ocean on the South. The Soil more fruitful generally than the rest of Ireland, because better cultivated and manured, as having been longest in the possession of the English: from whom a great part of the Inhabitants do derive themselves, and for that reason more conformable to the civilities and habit of the English Nation. Well watered, besides a large Sea coast, with many fair and pleasant Rivers, the principal whereof, 1. the Barrow, called in Latine Birgos; 2. the Newrie, 3. the Showre, and 4. the Liffie, (the Libinus of Ptolemy) neighbouring Dublin the chief City.

It containeth the Counties of 1. Dublin, 2. Kilkenny, 3. Caterlongh, 4. Kildare, 5. Lease, or Queens County; 6. Opbalie, or Kings County, and 7. Weisford: in which are comprehended 34 Towns of note, and 88 Castles well fortified, and able to make good resistance against an Enemy; the English being forced to fortifie themselves in their Plantations with strong holds and fortresses against the incursions of the Natives.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Dublin, supposed to be the Eblana of Ptolemy, by the Irish called Baleigh, because, being seated in a fenny and moorish soil, it was built on piles, as the word doth signifie in that language. Situate at or neer the mouth of the River Liffie, which affordeth it a commodious Haven, but that the entrances thereof are many times encumbered with heaps of sand. The City very rich and populous, as being the Metropolis of all the Island, the Seat of the Lord Deputy, an Archbishops See, and an University; besides the benefit redounding from the Courts of Justice. In those respects well fortified against all emergencies; and adorned with many goodly buildings, both private and publick. The Principal of which, are the Castle, wherein the Lord Deputy resideth, built by Henry Loandres once Archbishop here: a College founded by Queen Elisabeth, to the honour, and by the name of the blessed Trinity; the Cathedral Church dedicated to St. Patrick, the Apostle of the Irish Nation; a fair Collegiate Church called Christ Church, besides thirteen others diffinitated to Parochial meetings. Being destroyed almost to nothing in the Danish Wars, it was re-edified by Harold, surnamed Harfager, King of the Norwegians, then Masters of most parts of the Island; and after the subjection of it to the Crown of England, was peopled with a Colony of Bristol men. 2. Weisford, or Wexford, the Menapia of Ptolemy, situate, on the mouth of the River Slane, supposed fed to be the Medona of the same Author; the first of all the Towns in Ireland which received a Colony of English.

3. Kilkenny, on the River Newrie, the chief Seat of the Bishop of Offory, and the fairest Town of all the Inlands: so called quasi Cella Canici, the Cell or Monastery of Canicus, a man of great renown for piety in these parts of the Country. 4. Kildare, an inland Town also, and a Bishops See; but of more note for giving the Title of an Earl to the ancient Family of the Fitz-Geralds, of long time honoured with this Title. One of which being much complained of to King Henry the 8th, as a man of so unquiet and turbulent a nature, that his Adversaries closed their charge against him with this expression, Finally, all Ireland cannot rule this Earl; the King replied, that then this Earl should rule all Ireland; and so for his Jests sake made him Lord Deputy of the Kingdom. 5. Rosse, once populous, well traded, and of large circumference, now a ruin only; nothing remaining but the Walls, which were built by Isabel, the Daughter of Richard Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke, the fortunate Conquerour of this Island for King Henry the second. 6. Philips Town, the principal of the County of Opbalie, or Kings County; so called in honour of King Philip; as 7. Mariburg, the chief of Lease, or the Queens County, was in honour of Queen Mary. 8. Leighlin, a place of great importance, well walled and fortified against the incursion of the Irish, by the Lord Deputy Bellingham. 9. Caterlogh, commonly, but corruptly Carlogh, a Town of great strength, and the chief of that County. 10. Rheban, not otherwise of note, but that it is conceived to be the Rheba of Ptolemy.

2. METH, by the Latines called Media, by Giraldus, Media; because situate in the midst of the Island, hath on the South Leinster; on the West Connaught; on the North, Ulster, on the East, the Irish Sea, or S. Georges Chanel. A small, but rich and pleasant Province: well stocked with people and stored with all things necessary for their sustentation; and for a sweet and wholesome air not inferior to any. Divided into three Counties only, that is to say, 1. East-Meth, 2. West-Meth, and 3. Long-ford; containing 13 Towns of note, and 14 Castles of good esteem. By reason of which strength, it is called by some Writers, the Chamber of Ireland.

Towns of most consequence herein, are 1. Trim, the chief Towns of the County of East-Meth, the ancient Barony of the Lacies; possessed in former times of a fair Revenue in this County; and the Lords of the greatest part of Ulster. 2. Tredah, more properly Droghedab, situate on the River Boine on the edge of Ulster, to which Province belongs so much of the Town as lieth on the North-side of that River: a very fair and populous City, as well by art as Nature very strongly fortified, and furnished with a large and commodious Haven. It took the name of Droghedab, from the Bridge there built upon the River for the convenience of passage (as the word signifies in that language) and therefore called Pontania by some Latine Writers. 3. Molinga, the chief Town of West-Meth. 4. Delvin, in the same County also, the Batony of the Nugents, an ancient Family in this Tract. 5. Long-ford, of most note in the County so named, but not else observable.

As for the Fortunes of this Province (for Leinster since the first Conquest of it, hath been inseparably annexed to the Crown of England) it was first granted in Fee-Farm by King Henry the second, to Hugh Lacy, a man of great merit and employment in the Conquest of Ireland, who left it unto Walter his younger Son. By Margaret, one Matilda, the Nieces of this Walter by his Son Gilbert, one moiety hereof came to the Mortimers Earls of Mareb, and in their right unto the Crown in King Edward the Fourth; and the other moiety to the Verduns, by whom dispersed and scattered into divers Families. Accompanied for one County only till the time of King Henry the 8th, in whose Reign it was divided into East-Meth, and West-Meth; to which the County of Longford was after added, as it continueth to this day.

3. ULSTER, by the Latines called Ultonia; is the largest Province of all Ireland, bounded on the South with Meth and Connaught; on the West, with the vast Irish Ocean; on the North, with that part of the Northern Ocean to which Ptolemy gives the name of Hyperborean; and on the East, with St. Georges Chanel. A Country fruitful of it self, but in most places formerly overgrown with Woods, and drowned in Marshes and great Bogs, by the natural slothfulness of the people: made more responal to the Husbandman both for Corn and Pasturage, since the late Plagitation of the British, than in times foregoing.

It is divided into the Counties of, 1. Louth, 2. Cavan, 3. Fermanagh, 4. Down, 5. Monaghan, 6. Armagh, 7. Colrane, 8. Tirconnel, 9. Tir-Oen, and 10. Antrim. In which are comprehended 14 Towns of note for Commerce and Traffick, and 30 Castles for the defence of the Country, and keeping under the wild Irish; wilder and more untractable in these Northern parts, than the rest of Ireland. The whole well watered with a large and spacious Sea, on three sides thereof; many great lakes in the body of it, besides the Rivers of 1. Boine called in Latine Boanda, which divides it from Meth, 2. the Bann, 3. Moandus, and 4. the Eyn, belonging to this Province wholly.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Armagh, on or near the River of Kalin, the chief Town of the County so called; and the See of an Archbishop, who is the Primate of all Ireland. An ancient City, but so miserably defaced by fire in Tir-Oens Rebellion, that it can scarce preserve the reputation of a Market-Town. 2. Carlingford, and 3. Dundalk, both situate on the Sea side, and both within the County of Louth. 4. Knock-Fergus, the chief of Antrim, more properly Rock-Fergus, (and in that sense called Carick-Fergus by the Irish) so called from Fergus one of the Kings of the Irish Scotts, who there suffered Shipwrack. Seated upon a large and spacious Bay (the Vindexia of Ptolemy) which giveth it both a safe and commodious Port; as well by natural situation; as the works of Art, very strongly fortified; by reason of the Neighbourhood of the Scots in Cantire, from which little distant. 5. London-Derry, a Colony of the Londoners, best built of any Town in the North of Ireland. 6. Dungannon, the principal Seat and residence in former times, of the great Oneals. 7. Dungall, the principal of Tir-Connel. 8. Robogh, a small Village at present, but anciently a Bishops See: fit to be mentioned in this place, in regard it still preserveth some foot-steps of the old Robogdii, an Irish Tribe, and placed by Ptolemy in this tract, where they gave name unto the Promontory by him called Robogdium, now the Fair Foreland; as is probably conceived by the learned Cambden.

This, as it is the largest Province of all this Kingdom, so was it with most difficulty subjected to the Crown of England, and reduced to good order and civility. First conquered by John Curcy, a valiant English man, in the Reign of King Henry the second, by whom created Earl of Ulster. But being malignated for his eminent Virtues, and after proscribed by King John, this Title and Estate were both conferred upon Hugh Lacie, the Lord and Conquerour of Meth, whom before we spoke of. By an Heir General of the Lacies, it came unto the Burghs then Lords of Connaught; and by the marriage of Elizabeth Daughter and Heir of Richard de Burgh, the last Earl of that Family, mily, it came to Lionel Duke of Clarence, the second Son (then living) of King Edward the third, as by his Daughter Philippa, to the Earls of March, from them by the like marriage to the House of York, and in the person of King Edward the 4th, to the Crown again. But being neglected by the English in the whole course of their Government, especially in the Wars betwixt York and Lancaster, it was carterd into many Estates and Principalities, by the great Lords of the natural Irish, (who had born too great sway here in the former times;) and so estranged from the civilities of England, and there Allegiance to that Crown as if that it had never been in subjection to it. In which estate it did continue (the Kings of England having here no more power or profit, than the great ones of the Country were pleased to give them): till the Rebellion first, and afterwards the vanquishment of Hugh O'neil, the then Earl of Tyr-Oen brought it in full subjection to the English Government, of which more hereafter.

4. CONNUGHT, in Latine called Connacia, by the Irish Connacht, is bounded on the North with Ulster, on the West with the main Ocean, on the South with Munster, from which parted by the River Shannon; and on the East, with Meath and some part of Leinster. So called from the Naginata, an old Irish Nation; or from Naginata a Port Town, both placed by Ptolemy in this Tract. The soil of the same temper with that of Ulster, as woody and as full of bogs till these later times, in which indifferently well cleared of both inconveniences.

It hath been also called by our English Writers the County of Clare, from Thomas de Clare, one of the younger Sons of Gilbert de Clare Earl of Gloucester, on whom it was conferred by King Edward the first: and is divided at the present into three five Shires, that is to say, 1. Leitrim, 2. Refcommoon, 3. Maia, 4. S'ego, and 5. Galloway and Twomond. In which are comprehended but 8 Towns of any consequence, for Commerce and Traffick, (an argument of the imperfect Plantation of it by the English Conquerors); and out 24 Castles for defence of the Country, of old erect on, besides such Fortresses as have been raised occasionally in these later troubles.

Places of most note and observation, 1. Toam, an Archbishop's See, 2. Ardferry an ancient Town, but decayed and ruinous, of most renown for being the Barony of John de Bermingham, a noble Englishman, who had great possession in this tract, 3. Leitrim, the chief Town of the County so named, neighboured by the Curlew Mountains, unfortunately memorable for the great defeat there given the English, in Tyr-Oen rebellion; and by the Spring or Fountain of the River Shenon or Shannon, whose course we have before described, 4. S'ego, and 5. Refcommoon, the chief Town of their several Counties, 6. Athlone, a piece of great strength, and the great Key of Connacht, 7. Twomond, not otherwise much observable, put for giving the title of an Earl to the Family of O Brian, (descended from the Kings of Connacht) advanced unto that honour by King Henry the 8th, 8. Galloway the principal of this Province, a Bishops See, and the third City of the Kingdom for beauty and bigess. Situate near the fall of the great Lake or River of Corber, in the Western Ocean, defended on that side from the fury of the Sea, and fear of Invasions, by the enterposition of some Islands (called the Isles of Arran) very strongly fortified. A noted Empory, and lately of so great fame with foreign Merchants, that an out-landish Merchant meeting with an Irishman, demanded in what part of Galloway, Ireland stood; as if Galloway had been the name of the Island, and Ireland only the name of some Town.

This once a Kingdom of it self, as the rest of those Provinces, the last King whereof was Roderick, surnamed the Great, who having a great hand over the rest of the Royalties, entituled himself sole Monarch or King of Ireland. But being forced to submit himself to Henry the second, his Country at the last was brought into subjection to the Crown of England, by the valour and good fortune of William de Burgh, Gilbert de Clare Earl of Gloucester, William de Bermingham, and other Noble Adventurers of the English Nation. And though all of them did partake of the fruit of their labours, yet the greatest part of the spoils together with the title of Lords of Connacht, fell to the Family of the Burghs, from them to Lionel Duke of Clarence, and by degrees unto the Crown, as before was shewn. Cantoned again amongst the Irish and degenerate English, as Ulster was, by the supine neglect of the Kings of England: till the Rebellion of Tyr-Oen, involving all the Chief of the Irish Nation in the same cause with him, involved them also consequently in the same destruction.

5. MONSTER, by the Latines called Momonia, is bounded on the North with Connacht; on the East with Leinster; on the West with the Atlantic or Western Ocean; and on the South with the Verigian. By the natural Irish it is called Mown, whence the English had the name of Munster. A Province, which for rich Towns, commodious Havens, fair Rivers, and the fertility of the Soil, yields not to any in the Kingdom.

It is divided into six Counties, viz. Limerick, 2. Waterford, 3. Cork, 4. Desmond, 5. Kerry, and 6. Tipperary, which two last anciently, enjoyed all the rights of a County Palatine: And in these Shires are comprehended (besides many safe Stations and Roads for Shipping) 24 Towns of Note and Trading, and 66 Castles of old erection.

Places of most observation, 1. Cassites, in the County of Limerick, an Archbishop's See, advanced unto that honour by Pope Eugenius the third, about the year 1150, 2. Limerick, the principal of that County, and the fourth in estimation of all the Kingdom: Situate in an Island compassed round about with the River, Shannon, by which means well fortified; a well frequented Empory, and a Bishops See, distant from the main Ocean about 60 miles, but so accommodated by the River, that Ships of Burden come up close to the very walls. The Castles and the Bridge-pieces of both great strength and beauty, were of the foundation of King John, exceedingly delighted with the situation, 3. Clonmel, in the County of Tipperary, of great strength and consequence, 4. Holy Cross, in the same County also, once flourishing by reason of the great resort of Pilgrims, to see and worship there a piece of the holy Cross, as it was supposed: which supposition as it drew much Wealth unto the Town, so it obtained the rights of a County Palatine for the County also, 5. Thurles in the same County, which gives the Title of a Viscount to the Earls of Omond, but not else observable, 6. Waterford, on the River Shore, a well traded Port, a Bishops See, and the second City of the Kingdom. Of great fidelity to the English since the Conquest of Ireland, and for that cause endowed with many ample privileges. First built by some Norwegian Pirates, who though they fixed it in one of the most barren parts and most foggy air of all the Country, yet they made choice of such a safe and commodious site for the use of Shipping, that of a Nest of Pirats it was effoons made a Receipt for Merchants, and suddenly grew up to great Wealth and Power, 6. Cork, (by the Latines called Cocagria) the principal of that County, and a Bishops See: well walled and fitted with a very commodious Haven; consisting chiefly of one street reaching out in length, inhabited by a civil, wealthy, and industrious people, 7. Dunk-Erae an old Episcopal See

See, supposed to come to be the Ivernus of Ptolemy, but not else observable, 8. Kinsale, upon the mouth of the River Bany, a commodious Port, opposite to the Coasts of Spain, and fortified in Tyr-Oen Rebellion by a Spanish Garrison, under the command of Don John de Aquila: but soon recovered (after the defeat of that Grand Rebel near the Walls hereof) by the valour and indefatigable industry of Charles Lord Mountjoy, the then Lord Deputy of this Kingdom, 9. Baltimore, 10. Tonghall, and 11. Berehaven, all upon the Sea, and all provided of safe Roads or convenient Havens, 12. Lismore, of old a Bishops See, now annexed to Waterford, in which Shire it standeth. Nothing in point of story singular which concerns this Province, but that it was so carefully looked to by the Kings of England, that there was appointed over it a peculiar Officer (in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, in power and place next to the Deputy himself) called the Lord President of Munster: by whose vigilancy there have hapned fewer Rebellions here, than in any Province of this Island.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Island, being originally Britains, (as before is said) were in the time of Ptolemy distinguished into the Nations of Robogonii, Darnii, Volontii, Venicii, and Erdini, possessing the Northern parts, now Ulster; the Auteri, Cangani, and Nagnata, inhabiting Connacht: the Felibri, Uterni, Fodii, and Coriandi, in the South, now Munster; and the Menapii, Canci, Blanii, Brigantes, taking up the Provinces of Meath and Leinster. Principal Cities of the which were Eblana, now Dublin; Menapia, now Waterford; Nagnata, which Ptolemy honoured with the Title of Urbs insignis; Rhigia, Rheba, Macolicum, Laborus, Ivernus, &c. not easily discernable by what names we may call them now: this Country never being so happy as to come under the power of the Romans, the great Masters of Civility and good Letters in the West of Europe: and by that means, the actions and affairs thereof buried in ignorance and silence. Towards the falling of which Empire we find the Nation of the Scots to be seated here, and from hence first to take possession of the Hebrides, or Western Isles, next of the Western part of Britain on the North of Dunbriton Firth. Afterwards some of the Saxon Monarchs cast their eyes upon it, and made themselves Masters of Dublin, and some other places; but being incumbered with the Danes, could not hold them long: being hardly able to defend their own against the people. The next that undertook the conquest, were the Northern Nations, Danes, Swedes, and Normans, all passing in the Chronicles of that time under the name of Norwegians: who first only scowled along the Coasts in the way of Piracy. But after finding the weakness of the Island, divided amongst many petit and inconsiderable Princes, they made an absolute conquest of it under the conduct of Turgesius, whom they elected for their King: soon rooted out by the policy of the King of Meath, the only Irish Prince who was in favour with the Tyrant. This petit King by name Oma-Laghlin, had a Daughter of renowned beauty, whom Turgesius demanded of her Father to serve his lusts; and he seeming willing to condescend to the motion, as if honoured by it, made answer, That besides his Daughter, he had at his disposing many others of more exquisite beauties, which should all be ready at command. Turgesius swallowing this bait, desired him with all speed to effect the meeting. But the King of Meath, attiring in the habits of Women, a company of young Gentlemen, who durst for the common liberty adventure their several lives: conducted them to the Tyrants Bed-chamber, And they according to the directions given them, (when for that little modesty sake he had in him, he had commanded all his attendants to avoid the room) assaulted him, now ready for and expecting more kind embraces, and left him dead in the place. The Merthian King had by this time acquainted diverse of the better sort with his plot; all which upon a sign given, rush into the Palace, and put to death all the Norwegians, and other attendants of the Tyrant: After this, the Royalties enjoyed their former Dominions, till the year 1172, in which Dermot Mac Mowrough King of Leinster, having forced the Wife of Maurice O Rork King of Meath, and being by him driven out of his Kingdom, came to the Court of England for succour. To this Petition, Henry the second then King, condescended: sending him aid under the leading of Richard de Clare, surnamed Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke, who restored King Dermot, and brought a great part of the Island under the English subjection. John, King of England, was the first who was entituled Lord of Ireland; which stile was granted him by Pope Urban the third, who for the ornament of his Royalty, sent him a plume of Peacock Feathers: and when Tyr-Oen stiled him Defender of the Irish Liberty, he was by Clement the 8th. honoured with the like plume. But here we are to understand, that though the Kings of England used no other title than Lords of Ireland; yet were they Kings thereof in effect and power: Lords Paramount, as we use to say. And though themselves retained only the name of Lords, yet one of them gave to one of his English Subjects, the honourable, but invidious title of Duke of Ireland. An they retained this title of Lords, till the year 1542, in which Henry the 8th, in an Irish Parliament, was declared King of Ireland, as a name more sacred, and repeated with Majesty, than that of Lord: at which time also he was declared to be Supreme Head, under God, of the Church of Ireland; and the pretended jurisdiction of all foreign Powers, especially the usurped authority of the Pope of Rome renounced by Law, though still acknowledged by too many of his superstitious and untractable People.

The Government of this Country, since the first Conquest by the English, hath been most commonly by one Supreme Officer, who is sometimes called the Lord Lieutenant, most generally the Lord Deputy of Ireland; than whom no Vice-Roy in all Europe hath greater power, or comes nearer the Majesty of a King in his Train and State. For his assistance he hath a Privy Council attending on him, though resident for the most part at Dublin: and in emergencies, or cases of more difficult nature proceedeth many times in an arbitrary way, without formalities of Law. And for their Laws, which are the standing Rule of all civil Government, they owe their being and original to the English Parliaments. For in the Reign of King Henry the 7th, Sir Edward Poynings, then Lord Deputy, caused an Act to pass in the Irish Parliament, whereby all Laws and Statutes, which were made in England before that time, were to be entertained and stand in force as the Laws of Ireland. On which foundation they have raised many Superstructures both of Law and Government, enacted in their own Parliaments, summoned by the Lord Deputy at the Kings appointment: in which, by another Statute made in the time of the said Poynings, the People are enabled to make Laws for their own good Government, conditioned they were first transmitted to the Court of England to be considered of by the King, before they were Voted to in either of the Houses of the Irish Parliaments. Which Laws commonly called Poynings Laws, have hitherto continued in force amongst them; though the last much stomached and repined at; not only as a badge of their subjection to the Crown of England, but as a Curb or Martingale to hold them in.

Yet notwithstanding these good Laws, and the ample power of their Commission, the Lord Deputies could never absolutely subdue the Island, or bring the people to any any civil course of life; the Fathers inflicting an heavy curse on all their posterity, if ever they should sow corn, build houses, or learn the English tongue. To this indispensible position of the Irish themselves, let us add the defects of the Kings of England, and Irish Deputies, in matters of civil Policy, as I find them particularized by Sir John Davies, in his worthy and pithy discourse of this Subject: I will only glean a few of them. First then, faith he, barbarous Country is like a field overgrown with weeds, which must first be well broken with the Plough, and then immediately sown with good and profitable seed: so must a wild and uncivil people, be first broken and ploughed up by war, and then presently sown with the seed of good Laws and discipline; lest the weeds revive in the one, and ill manners in the other. Here then was the first defect in our English Kings, not to tame and take down the Stomachs and pride of this people, though either civil or foreign wars perhaps occasioned this neglect: and also the Irish Deputies, who at such times as the people upon a small discomfiture, were crest-fallen, neglected the keeping of them by severity of Discipline. The second oversight concerneth particularly our Kings, who gave such large possessions and Regalities unto the first Conquerors, that the people knew no Authority in a manner, above their own immediate Lords. The Laws of England were not indifferently communicated to all the Irish, but to some particular Families and Provinces only: inasmuch as there were but five great Lords of the natural Irish, who had the benefit and protection of the Laws of England, that is to say, O Neale in Ulster, O Connors in Connaught, Mac Morrough in Leinster, O Malaghlin in Meath, and O Brian in Desmond; known by the name of Quinque Sanguines in some old Records. By means whereof the rest of the people being in the condition of Out-Laws, or at the best Aliens, had no encouragement either to build, or plant, or manure their Land, or to behave themselves as Subjects. A fourth defect was more particularly in the Deputies or Lords Lieutenants, who having made good and wholesome Laws against the barbarous customs of the Common people, and the merciless oppressions of the Lords, never put any of them in execution; as if they had been made for terror, not for reformation. Fifthly, add unto these (which Sir John Davies hath omitted) the little care which was too often taken by the Kings of England in the choice of their Deputies: sometimes conferring that high Office as a Court preferment, without relation unto the merits of the person, and sometimes sending men of weak or broken Fortunes, who attended more their own profit than their Masters service, and were more bent to fleece than to feed this flock. Sixthly, And yet besides these Errors of the Kings and Deputies in point of Government, there was another, and as great in the Planters themselves; who building all their Forts and Castles in the open Countries, abandoned the Woods and Bogs, and other Fastnesses to the natural Irish; the strength whereof not only animated them to Rebel upon all occasions: but served too fitly to continue them in their ancient Barbarism.

In these terms of wildness and non-subjection stood Ireland, till the latter end of Queen Elizabeths reign, at what time the rebellion of Hugh O Neale Earl of Tir Oen had engaged almost all the Irish in that desperate action which ending in the overthrow of that ingrateful Rebel, and all his partizans, not only crushed the over-much powerableness of the Irish Nobility; but made the final and full conquest of the whole Nation. So true it is, that Every Rebellion when it is suppressed, doth make the Prince stronger, and the Subjects weaker. Ireland thus broken and ploughed up, that glorious Queen died a victor over all her enemies, and left the sowing of it unto her succes-for King James, who omitted no part of skillful Seedman, 1. Then there was an apaising or Act of Oblivion made; whereby all the offences against the Crown were remitted, if by such a limited day the people would sue out their Pardons, and by the same Act, all the Irish were manumitted from the servitude of their Lords, and received into the Kings immediate Protection. 2ly, The whole Kingdom was divided into Shires and Judges Itinerant appointed to circuit them; whereby it hath followed, that the exactions of the Lords are laid aside, the behaviour of the people narrowly looked into, the passages before unknown unto our Souldiers, are laid open by our Under-Sheriffs and Bayliffs; and the common people seeing the benefit and security they enjoy by the English Laws, and loth to plead always by an Interpreter, begin to let their children to School, for the learning of the English tongue. 3ly, The Irish were not rooted out, as in the first plantation in Leinster, and the English only estate in their rooms: but were only removed from the Woods, Bogs, and Mountains, into the plain and open Country: that being like wild trees transplanted, they might grow the milder, and bear the better fruit. And 4. whereas there was but one Freeholder in a whole Country, which was the Lord himself, the rest holding in Villenage, and being subject to the Lords immeasurable taxations; whereby they had no encouragement to build or plant; now the Lords Estate was divided into two parts, that which he held in demain to himself, which was still left unto him; and that which was in the hands of his Tenants, who had Estates made in their Possessions, according to the Common course of England, paying instead of uncertain Irish taxations, certain English rents: whereby the people have since set their minds upon repairing their houses, and manuring their lands, to the great increase of the private and publick Revenue.

But that which most advanced the reduction of Ireland to a settled and civil Government, and rooted it in a subjection to the Crown of England, was the voluntary flight of the Earls of Tyrone, and Tyrconnell, Sir John O'Donoghue, and other great men of the North, possessed of large Territories and great Jurisdictions. Who being both incapable of Loyalty, and impatient of seeing the Kings Judges, Justices, and other Ministers of State, to hold their Sessions, and execute their Commissions of Oyer and Terminer within the parts where they commanded: without more provocation, or the fear of any danger but a guilty Conscience, forsook the Country, and left their whole Estates to the Kings disposing. By whose directions, the 1 Lands were seized upon and sold to several Purchasers, the City of London interested in a great part of them, for a great Plantation made in Ulster of English, Welch, and Scots, by the united name of a British Plantation; and a new Order of Knights Baronets erected in the Kingdom of England for raising money to advance and indear the work. Which had it been as cordially affected by the English, as it was by the Scots; if more of this Nation had gone thither, & not abandoned to great a part of it to the power of the other, it had been better for both Kingdoms, in the conformity of each to one form of Government (which the Scots, being factious for another, did not easily brook) and the uniting of both people in the bonds of amity: the Irish looking on the Scot as a meer Intruder, but on the English as his old Master or his Fellow Subject. Howsoever, so great a part of the Country (and that which heretofore was the nest of the Rebels;) being thus disposed of, it came to pass, that Ireland, which before served only as a grave to bury our best men, and a gulf to swallow our greatest treasures; being governed neither as a Country Free, nor conquered: was brought in some hope, by the prudence and policy of her last Kings and late Lord Deputies, to prove an orderly Commonwealth, civil in it self, profitable to the Prince, and a good strength to the British Empire. For to such Order it was reduced, in a little time that the wayfaring men might travel without danger, the Ploughman walk without fear, the Laws administered in every place alike, the men drawn unto Villages, the Woods and Fastnesses left to beasts, and all reduced to that civility, as our Fathers never saw, nor could we well sample out of ancient Histories.

The Revenues of this Kingdom are said by Walsingham in the time of Edward the 3d, to have been yearly 40000 pounds; but his Successors, till of late, have scarce got so much as the keeping of it cost them: King Richard the 2. being by the same Walsingham reported to have spent 30000 marks out of his own purse, over and above the money which he received thence. Whether this Country were so profitable to Edward the 3d, or no, I determine not, though I find good reasons to persuade me, that Walsingham was not well acquainted with the state of that Exchequer. But sure I am, that the Revenues of the Crown are more than double what they were in the said Kings Reign, and more duly paid into the Exchequer of that Kingdom than ever formerly; the profits of the Custom house amounting to 30000 per Annum, in the last year of King James his Reign. Not to say any thing of the great improvements which were made by the Earl of Strafford, in the time of his Government, because they fell together with him.

The strength of this Kingdom consisteth partly in the situation of it, begirt about with difficult and dangerous Seas, partly in the many Castles first built and fortified by the English Planters; and partly in a standing Army continually kept up by the Kings of England, for defence of their hold and interest against the rebellions of the Natives. What Forces it is able to raise both of Horse and Foot, could never be conjectured at, till now of late. For formerly the Kings of England being actually possessed only of those four Countries which they called the Pale, that is to say, the Counties of Dublin, Louth, Kildare, and Meath (which last hath since the time of King Henry the 8th been subdivided into three) were not able to raise any great power out of that Estate, but were forced to send Souldiers out of England (as occasion was) to preserve their Sovereignty in Ireland. The greatest Levy which I read of, was that of 1500 Irish, led by the Prior of Kilmainham to King Henry the fifth, then being at the siege of Harflew in Normandy. And on the other side, the great Lords of the natural Irish, & degenerate English, being divided into Factions amongst themselves, & never joined in any one principal of common interest, were more considerable than the weak, but united Forces of the Kings of England. And though most of them at the last were drawn into a confederacy with the Earl of Tir Oen, to make good his rebellion: yet find I not that their Army did exceed at any time, the number of 8000 men; and those not well appointed neither. So that the best estimate which can be made of the Forces of Ireland, must be measured by the Armies raised in the late Rebellion when the Irish had both time, and leisure, to get themselves some reputation in the World, and make provision for a War. In prosecution of which, he who considers the many Armies they have raised, since the first mustering under the command of Sir Phelim O Neale, the many defeats which have been given them, and those as many new recruits after each defeat; all of them raised out of the bodies of their own people, without supply from other Countries (besides such as have served against them for the King) must needs conclude that they want not men enough for service; nor skill, nor courage to attempt the most difficult enterprises.

The Arms of Ireland are Azure, an Harp Or, stringed Argent. Which Coat, King James, (to shew himself the first absolute King of Ireland) first caused to be marshalled with the Royal Arms of Great Britain.

The LESSER ISLANDS.

AND now we come at last to the LESSER ISLANDS, dispersed in several parts of the British Ocean. The chief whereof are, 1. The Orcaides, 2. Schotland, 3. The Hebrides, 4. Man, 5. Anglesey, 6. The Island of the Severn Sea, 7. The Sorlings, or Isles of Scilly, 8. Wight, 9. Thanet, 10. Sunderland, 11. Holy Island.

I. The ORCAIDES or Isles of Orkney are in number 32, situate over against Cathness, the most Northern Country of all Scotland, and separate from one another by some narrow Straights. The soil indifferently Fruitful, exceedingly well stored with Barley, and great Herds of Cattel, plentiful in Hares and Conies, as of Cranes and Swans; but destitute of Wheat, and unfurnished both of Woods and Trees. But their chief commodity is their Fish, which the Inhabitants catch upon the Coasts in great abundance. Those of most note in all the cluster, are, 1. Herb, conceived to be the Ocetus of Ptolemy: as 2. Fair Isle, on good reason thought to be the Dumna of Pliny, the chief Town of it being still called by the name of Dumna. 3. Hey, taken or mistaken for the Dumna of Pliny, but not also observable. 4. Pomona, the chief of all, in length about 26 miles, in breadth, where it is broadest, six. The chief Town of it Kirkcwall, honoured with a Bishops See, and strengthened with two Castles. This Island is well stored with Tin and Lead, and is at this day by the Inhabitants called Mainland.

The people of these Isles (according to Maginus) are great drinkers but no drunkards; Bibacisimi sunt incolae, nunquam tamen inebriantur. They use the Gothic Language, which they derive from the Norwegians, in whose possession they once were, and of whose qualities they still retain some smack. The Isles themselves, in the time of Solinus, were not inhabited, being then overgrown with rushes (now in a measure, populous and fertile as before was said) and were first discovered by Julius Agricola, the first that ever sailed about Britain. In later times they were possessed by the Normans or Norwegians, who held them till the year 1266, when Magnus King of Norway surrendered them up to Alexander King of Scotland; which Surrender some of the succeeding Kings did afterwards ratify: the claim heretofore being finally relinquished by Christiern the first, King of Denmark and Norway, on the marriage of his Daughter Margaret with King James the 3d. An. 1474. some money being added to make good the Contract, without which the Danes would not forgo their pretensions to them.

II. Two days sayling North of these Orcaides, lyeth
Q9 SCHET.

SCHETLAND, an Island belonging to the Crown of Scotland; and is by many learned men, upon very good reasons, supposed to be the Thule of the Antients. For first, it standeth in the 63 degree of Latitude, in which Protemy placed Thule. Secondly, it lyeth opposite to Bergen in Norway; against which Pomponius Mela hath seated it. And thirdly, Cajper Pencerus hath observed that this Schotland is by Mariners called Thylenfel; a name in which of Thule is apparently couched. That Ise-land was not Thule (as most say) we shall shew you when we come to Norway; and the Northern Islands. Here we add only, That the Antients did report many strange things of it, and some of them beyond all belief. Pliny affirming that they had no day here for all the winter (nulla per brumam dies, as his own words are) with whom agree Solinus and many others, as to that particular Isidore adds (Origen. lib. 1. c. 6.) nullum ultra eam diem esse, that beyond this Isle there was no day in any place; as if here had been the end of the World and Nature. But Pytbeas in Polibius goes beyond them all, reporting that in this Isle there was no distinction of Earth, Air, and Water: ἀλλὰ συνέχεται τὰ πάντα, but a confused mixture of all together, like the primitive Chaos of the Poets. The reason of which strange report was the audaciousness of those who had seen the Island, and thought that whatsoever they said of it would not be disproved, because of the remoteness of it from more civil Countries. So truly and judiciously spoken was that of Synefius, a right Learned Prelate, Ἡ Ἰσθμὸς οὗτος ἀπὸ τῆς ἀνατολῆς ἐστὶν ὡς τὸ ἀπὸ τῆς δύσεως. Id. Id. Id. Thule (saith he) gave those who had failed into it, the opportunity of lying without controul. An opportunity which many of our Mariners and vulgar Travellers have made too much use of in these last times also.

III. THE HEBRIDES, HEBUDAE, or Western Islands, situate on the West of Scotland: are in number about 44. The chief whereof, 1. Ila, 24 miles long, and 16 in breadth; plentiful in Wheat, Cattle, and herds of Deer. 2. Jona, Famous for the Sepulchres of the old Scottish Kings; whose chief Town is Sodore, once a Bishop's See, called hence Sodorensis; his jurisdiction comprehending these Islands with the Isle of Man; his See erected by Pope Gregory the 4th, Anno 840, or thereabouts. His dwelling for the most part of it in the Isle of Man, as the wealthier and more pleasant part of his Diocese; till the conquest of it by the English; at what time those of the Western Islands, withdrew themselves from his obedience, and had a Bishop of their own: both of them for a long time called Sodorenses; but at last this took the name of Lusulanus, Bishop of the Isles, which he still retains. 4. Mela, by Protemy called Maleos, (that of Ila before mentioned being his Epidia) mountainous and hilly, but affording good Mines of Lead and Copper, 25 miles more in compass than that of Ila. 4. Lewis, or Levisia, the largest of all the Hebrides, said to be 60 miles in length, and 30 in breadth, the more Western of the two Hebrides spoken of by Protemy; the other being now called Ske, famous for the multitude of Sea Calves in the Creeks thereof. 6. Racine, the Regina of Protemy, the smallest of the Hebrides, and most near to Ireland. The rest of less note, not known or not inhabited in the time of the Romans, and not very well peopled at the present; I forbear to name: some of them rather Rocks than Islands, others scarce having grass enough to hide their bareness. The people of them all, as well in language as behaviour, resemble the Wild Irish; and are called Red-foakes: a people, as King James affirmeth in his Basicon Doron, utterly rude, and without all shew of Civility; such as endure not to be governed by Laws, or kept under by Discipline. Legum severitate, & judiciorum metu, se alligari non pa- tiuntur, saith judicious Cambden. Such as they are, they came unto the Crown of Scotland by a Contract betwixt Magnus King of Norway, and King Alexander the third: the Orkades being bargained for at the same time also. South of the Hebrides, in the Bay of Dunbritten-Firth, lieth the Isle of Rorhlay, (now called Bute) which gives the Title of a Duke to the Prince of Scotland; and the Isle of Arran, which gives the title of an Earl to the chief of the Hamiltons.

IV. MAN is situate just over against the Southern part of Cumberland, from which it is distant 25 miles, and was judged to belong to Britain rather than to Ireland, because it fostered venomous Serpents brought hither out of Britain. By Protemy it is called Moneda, or the further Monas, to difference it from that which we call Anglesey; by Pliny, Monabia; Menavia, by Orajius and Beda; Eubonia, by Gildas, an old British Writer. The Welch at this day call it Menaw, the Inhabitants Maning, and the English Man. It is in length 30 miles, in breadth 15, and 8 in some places. The people hate Theft and Begging; and use a Language mixt of the Norwegians and Irish tongues. The Soil is abundant in Flax, Hemp, Oats, Barley, and Wheat; with which they use to supply the defects of Scotland, if not the Continent it self, yet unquestionably the Western Isles which are a member of it. For thus writeth the Reverend Father in God John Mericke late Bishop of this Island, in a Letter to Mr. Cambden, at such time as he was composing his most excellent Britannia. Our Island (saith he) for Cattel, for Fish, and for Corn, hath not only sufficient for its self, but sendeth also good store into other Countries. Now what Countries should need this supply (England and Ireland being afore-hand with such provision) except Scotland, or some members thereof, I see not.

Venerable Bede numbered in it 300 Families; and now it is furnished with 17 Parish Churches: the chief Towns are, 1. Balacuri, and 2. Ruffin, or Castle-Town, the Seat of a Bishop, who though he be under the Archbishop of York, yet never had any voice in the English Parliament. In this Island is the Hill of Seacalf, where on a clear day one may see England, Scotland, and Ireland: here also are bred the Soland Geese, of rotten Wood falling into the Water. This Island was taken from the Britains by the Scots, and from them regained by Edwin King of Northumberland. Afterwards the Norwegians seized on it, and made it a Kingdom; the Kings hereof ruling over the Hebrides, and some part of Ireland. From them taken by Alexander the 2. of Scotland, by a mixt tide of Arms and purchase. After which time it was sometime English sometimes Scottish, as their fortunes varied; till in the end, and about the year 1340. William Montacute Earl of Salisbury, descended from the Norwegian Kings of Man, won it from the Scots, and sold it to the Lord Scrope, who being condemned of Treason, Henry the Fourth gave it Henry Percy Earl of Northumberland; but he also proving false to his Sovereign, it was given to the Stanleys now Earls of Derby.

The Kings of Man of the Danish or Norwegian Race.

King in effect, though but Lord in title, as having here all kind of Civil power and jurisdiction over the Inhabitants under the Life and Sovereignty of the Crown of England, together with the nomination of the Bishop, whom he presents unto the King for his Royal assent, then to the Archbishop of York for his consecration. And this I take to be the reason why the Bishop of Man was no Lord of Parliament, none being admitted to that honour, but such as held immediately of the King himself; nor was it reason that they should.

V. ANGLESEY, is an Island situate in the Irish Sea; over against Carnarvonshire in North-Wales, from which it is divided by a narrow Strait, which they call the Monai: By the Britains themselves, as by the Welch at this day, it was called the Mon, from whence the Romans had their Monai: but being conquered by the English, it obtained the name of Anglesey, as one would say, the Island of the English-Men (eye in the Saxon language signifying an Island.) A place of such a fair revenue to the Princes of it, that Llewellyn, the last Prince of Wales being stripped of almost all the rest of his Estates by King Edward the first, paid to that King a tribute of 1000 per Annum for this Island only.

And to say truth, the Island is exceeding fruitful both in Corn and Cattel: from whence the Welch are liberally stored with both: and therefore it is said proverbially, Mon Mam Cymri, that Anglesey is the Mother of Wales. In length from East to West, about 20 miles, and 17 in breadth. Containing in that compass 74 Parishes, divided into six hundreds, & hath in it only two market Towns: that is to say, 1. Beaumaris, seated on a flat or marsh ground, near the Menai, built by King Edward the first to secure his Conquest: by whom well walled and fortified as the times then were. 2. Newburg, a Town of no great antiquity, as the name doth intimate, by the Welch called Rosfur: in former times it had an haven of some good receipt, but now choaked with sand. The other places of most note are, 3. Aberffraw, a small village now, but heretofore the seat Royal of the Kings of Wales: and 4. Holyhead, seated on a head-land or Promontory thrusting into the Seas, made holy (or thought so at least) by the religious retirement of Saint Kuby, or Kibin, one of the Disciples of St. Hillary of Poitiers; from whence by the Welch men called Caer Kuby: of most note for the ordinary passage betwixt Wales and Ireland. Antiently this Island was the seat of the Druides, and brought, with no small difficulty under the power of the Romans, by Suetonius Paulinus: the people fighting in other parts of Britain for their liberty only; but here pro Aris & focis too, for their Religion, Liberty, and their Goods to boot: Being deserted by the Romans with the rest of Britain, it remained in the possession of its own natural Princes, till the fatal period of that State, when added to the Crown of England by the puilliance of King Edward the first, by whom made one of the shires of Wales, as it still continues.

Nor far from Anglesey, somewhat inclining to the South, is the Isle of Bardsey, by Protemy called Edri, by Pliny Adros, by the Welch Enlhy; extended towards the East with a rocky Promontory, but rich and fruitful towards the West: the retiring place of many godly and devout Hermits in former times. Southwards from hence and over against St. David's, are two other Islands, the one called Selmauc, plentiful of wild honey; the other named by the Welch Lymen, by the English Ramsay; thought to be the Limni of Protemy, the Silimnum of Pliny, but not else remarkable.

VI. THE ISLANDS OF THE SEVERN SEA are four in number; of no great note, but I must take them in my passage to the Isles of Scilly. Of those the first is Flat-Holm; for the flat and level; the 2. Steb-Im, from the steep and craggy disposition of it: both by the Welch called Echni, and both situate over against the County of Somerset. More towards the opening of the Chanel, lyeth the Isle of 3. Chaldey called by the Welch Menis Fir, of as small note as the other: and at the very mouth thereof the Isle of 4. Laudey, over against Devonshire, the principal Island of this Sea: extending two miles every way; of excellent pasturage, well stored with Gones, and great plenty of Pigeons. Situate a good distance from any part of the land, in the midst of the fair & brackish Ocean, and yet yieldeth many Springs of Fresh-water for the use of the people; inhabiting for the most part in a Town of the same name with the Island. A place of very great strength and safety, begirt about with dangerous unapproachable Rocks: and having but one way of access into it, and that so narrow that two men cannot go a breadth.

VII. The Isles of SCILLY, in number 145, are situate over against the Western Promontory of Cornwall, from which distant 24 miles; and lyne round together in the manner of a ring or Circle. Discovered first by the Silures, a Phœnician Colony in Spain, opposite against which they lie; thence called Silures by Solinus: much traded and referred to by the said Phœnicians from the Isle of Gades; invited thereunto by the unexhaustible Mines of Tinn, which they found amongst them. A Trade so great and gainful to them, that they held it a great point of State: ἡ δὲ τῆς ἀργύρης τὴν πλῆθύν, τοῦ κέρους, τοῦ κέρους, τοῦ κέρους, to keep it as a secret from all the world, as we find in Strabo: who adds the story of a Carthaginian or Phœnician Merchant, encountered in his voyage hither, by some Roman Vessels; and splitting his ship on the next shore (where he knew the Romans would not follow him) rather than let them know to what place he was bound; was rewarded for his honest care, and recompensed for the loss of his Ship and goods, out of the publick Treasury. From this abundance of Tin, the Gracians when they came to know them, called them Cassiterides: (Cassiteros in that language signifying Tin) accordingly Herodotus; ἐν μὲν οὖν τῇ ἀρχαίᾳ καὶ ἀκριβέστερᾳ ὡς ἔστιν ἡ νῆα τῆς κασιτέρης, καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἡ νῆα τῆς κασιτέρης, affirming that he knew not those Islands called Cassiterides, from whence Tin was brought. The richness of this commodity, the pleasures of the place, and the Western situation of them, makes many of the Gracians call them Heperides: mistaking them for the Fortunate Islands. By Solinus they are called Silures; as before is said, Sigales in the corrupt Copies of Antonius; insula Silina, by Severus Sulpicius: from whence we have the name of the Isles of Scilly. The Flemings, I know not why, call them the Sorlings. All of them very fruitful in Corn and Herbage, besides the treasures hid within, well stored with Conies, Cranes, Swans, and most fords of wild Fowl. Ten of them more esteemed than the rest, are called by the names of 1. Armath, 2. Agnes, 3. Samson, 4. Scilly, 5. Bresfar, 6. Rufco, 7. S. Hellens, 8. Arthur, 9. S. Maurice, and 10. S. Maries: Of which the most famous in the account of former times, was that of Scilly, as giving name unto the rest, but in the present estimate S. Maries is accounted the chief of all: 8 miles in compass, fruitful of all necessaries, and fortified with a very strong Castle built by Queen Elizabeth; well manned and Garrisoned, for defence of a large and goodly Harbour made amongst these Islands, capable of the greatest Navies.

These Islands first discovered by Hamilco a Carthaginian, sent by that State to search into the West Coasts of Europe, became of great Fame afterwards both in Greece, & Italy, by reason of the Mines of Tinne (spoken of before): So beneficial to the Romans, that they used to send hither their condemned Prisoners to work in the Mines; as the best service to be done by their forfeited lives. And hither amongst others, Justinian, a fierce Priscillianist, for his factious and seditious carriage, was sent by Maximus; and Silius in fulam ultra Britanniam deportatus, as Sulpicius hath it. After the Romans had forsaken their hold in Britain, they returned again into the power and possession of the Natives; from whom subdued, and added unto the English Crown by Athelstane the 8. King of England. Now ordered for Civil matters, as a part of Cornwall, for military, by their own Captain, subordinate to the Lord Lieutenant of that Country, and for the Tin-Trade, by the Lord Warden and Court of Stanneries. An Officer and Court erected for the benefit and regulating of the Tinners of Cornwall, who by reason of their employment in these Mines have many privileges and exemptions more than other Subjects: but of late limited and restrained by Acts of Parliament.

VIII. The Isle of WIGHT lieth over against Hampshire, from which it seemeth to have been divided; the passage betwixt it and Hurst-Castle on the opposite shore, being very narrow; and the name of it intimating some such divisions. For by the Britains it was anciently called Guith, which signified a breach or separation, from whence the English have their Weight, the turning of Gu to W being familiar with the Saxons; and all other Dutch people; and from the same root probably, the Romans had the name of Peltis, Pecht Weight, and Guith, being words of near resemblance, that we need not travel further for an Etymology. The Island of an Oval form, 20 miles in length and 12 miles broad about the midst; from thence growing narrower towards each end, to the East and West. Naturally Fenced about on all sides, on the South especially, where it looks towards France, on which side inaccessible by reason of the steep and craggy Rocks, the whole length thereof; and not much less late on the North-West, where the remainder of the Rocks, (which they call the Shingels, and the Needles) not worn away either at or since the first separation from the other shore, make the passage dangerous; except to single Ships, and these not unacquainted with the Course of the Channel. Towards the North-east more flat and level, and therefore fortified with the two Castles of the Cows and Sandham. There is also the Castle of Tarmouth in the West of the Island and that of Garesbrook in the midst (but more towards the North) in which last there is said to be Armour for 5000 men; and in each village (of which here are 33, besides many Market Towns) a piece of Ordnance. Yet do not all these Arms and Castles add so much to the strength of it, as the natural courage of the People, warlike & stout, and trained up unto the postures of War from their very childhood.

The soil hereof abundantly answereth the pains of the Husbandman, so plentiful of Corn, and all the fruits of good pasturage; that they have not only enough for themselves, but furnish the markets of Southampton and Portsmouth (but the last especially) with the greatest part of the Wheat, Fleish, Cheese, and Butter, which is spent amongst them. Inasmuch that the Souldiers of Portsmouth depending on the strength of the Town, have been used to say, That if they had the Isle of WIGHT to their friend, and the Seas open, they cared not for all the world besides. Their Sheep here of so fine a fleece, that the Wool hereof hath the second esteem next to that of Lemster (in the Country of Hereford) and precedency of that of Cotswold.

Their chief Towns, 1. Tarmouth, on the North-West of the Island, seated on a convenient Haven, which is said to have some resemblance to that of Rochel; and that Haven defended with a strong Castle. 2. Brading, another Market-town. 3. Newton, an ancient Burrough, and privileged, sending Burgesses to the English Parliament. 4. Garesbrook, a large Town, and neighboured with an ancient Castle. 5. Newport, now the chief of all the Isle, called in the times past, Medena; afterwards Novus Burgus de Medena, at last Newport, seated upon an Arm of the Sea, capable of Ships of lesser burden to the very key; and by that means populous, well traded, and inhabited by a civil and wealthy people.

The Island first subdued to the Romans by the valour of Vespasian, (afterwards Emperor of Rome) in the time of Claudius, Extorted from the Britains by Cerdick King of the West-Saxons, and by him given to Striffa and Whigar, two of that Nation, who had almost rooted out the old Inhabitants. It was the last Country of the Saxons which received the Gospel, and then upon compulsion too, forced to it by the power as well as the persuasion of Cadwalla the West-Saxon King. Took from the English in the time of the Norman Conquerour, by William Fitz-Osborn Earl of Hereford, who thereupon was made the first Lord thereof. From whose Family, by the gift of Henry II. it passed to that of Redvers, or Rivers, de Riparis than Earl of Devonshire; and on failing of that House returned to the Crown in the Reign of Edward the first. Never so much ennobled as by Henry the sixth, who bearing a great affection to Henry Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, in the 23 of his Reign crowned him King of Wight, Apr. 1445. Which title ended with his life about two years after.

IX. THANET, is a little Island in the North-East of Kent, not far from Sandwich, environed on three parts with the Sea, into which it shooteth with a large Promontory called the North-fore-land; the Cantium of the ancient Writers; and towards the West, severed from the main land of Kent by the River Stour, which is here called Tenlade, but severed so, that by the benefit of a Causeway and passage for the waters in convenient places, it is united to the Continent or main land of Kent. The quality, site, and figure of it, taken in these Rhythms (for I dare hardly call them Verses) extant not long since in a Window of the chief Church there, viz,

Insula rotunda Thanatos, quam circuit unda, Nobilis & munda, nulli est in orba secunda.

That is to say,
Thanet is round with circling waters bound,
A neat and noble ground, none like it to be found.

Called by Solinus, Athanatos, in some Copies Thanatos from whence the Saxons had their Thanet. Famous, as

In other things, so in these particulars, that it was the place which the Saxons landed at, when they first came into Britain; the first Livery and Seisin, which they had of the whole Kingdom, conferred upon them by the improvident bounty of Vortiger, to whose aid called in; and the landing place of Augustine the Monk, when he brought the Gospel to the Saxons. The whole about two miles in length, and four in breadth, was reckoned to contain in those times, 600 Families; now very populous for the bigness, and plentiful of all commodities necessary, but of corn especially. The people generally are a kind of Amphibii, able to get their livings both by Sea and Land, well skilled, as well in steering of a ship at Sea, as in holding the Plough upon Land; and in both industrious. Of most note in it, 1. Stonar, a Port-town, the usual landing place of the Saxons; more memorable for the Sepulchre of Vortimer, King of the Britains, who having vanquished the Saxons in many battles, and finally driven them out of the Island, desired to be here interred on a conceit, that his dead corps would fright them from landing any more upon these Coasts. And this perhaps he did in imitation of Scipio African, who having had a Fortunate hand against those of Carthage, gave order to have his Tomb placed towards Africk, to fright the Carthaginians from the Coasts of Italy.

X. SUNDERLAND is an Island only at an high-water, when environed on all sides with the Sea; at other times joyned unto the Land, or of an easie passage from the one to the other: pulled by some tempest, or by the working of the Sea from the rest of the Land: whence the name of Sunderland. Situate in the North-East part of the Bishoprick of Durham, over against the influx of the River Wear. Rich in its inexhaustible mines of Coal, and for that cause seldom without the company of foreign Merchants, yet not to have been here remembered, but that it hath been thought worthy by our Sovereign Lord King Charles, the second Monarch of Great Britain, to confer the title of Earl to the two Noble Families of the Scropes and Spencers; the first in the third year of his Reign, An. 1627: the second in the 18th, An. 1642.

XI. The HOLY ISLAND lieth upon the Coast of Northumberland, not far from Berwick, stretched out in length from East to West, with a narrow point unto the Land, from thence growing broader like a wedge: fortified with a strong Castle, and of great safety, but more famous for what it hath been, than for what it is. In the dawning of Christianity amongst the Northumbers, made a Bishops See; by S. Aidanus, one of the first Apostles of that potent Nation. Selected for this dignity by that godly man, for the solitude and privacy of it; which made it thought more fit and proper for Devotion. The name then Lindisfarh; but the Religious Lives of so many pious Bishops, Monks, and others of the Clergy as did there inhabit, gained it the name of Holy Island. The See continued there 353 years, that is to say, from the year 637 to 990, under 22 Bishops, hence called Bishops of Lindisfarh; then removed to Durham: the insolencies of the Danes (who then raged terribly on those Coasts) compelling them to abandon that Religious solitude.

Thus have we taken a survey of the British Islands, and shewn by what means Ireland and all the lesser Islands became united either to the Crown of England or Scotland; and that the two Kingdoms to each other joyned in the person of the same King, and the participation of his Favours, though different still in Laws, and some forms of Government, as most of the Estates of Spain, at the present time. United also in one name, the different Appellations of England and Scotland being swallowed up, or incorporated rather in that of GREAT BRITAIN, which it pleased King James to own for his title Imperial. And for a memory thereof, to cause a piece of Gold to be coined of 20 s. (since raised to 22 s.) which he called the Unio, stamped on the one side with his picture, and this Inscription, JACOBUS D. GR. MAGNÆ BRITANNIÆ FR. ET HIBERNIÆ REX, and on the other side with his Arms, crowned with this Motto, FACIAM EOS IN GENTEM UNAM. All we have now to do, is to lay down the names of those puissant Princes, whom God hath raised to be

The Monarchs of Britain.

1602. 1. James, the sixth of that name, King of the Scots, Son of Mary Queen of Scots, Daughter of James the fifth, the Son of James the fourth, and of the Lady Margaret, eldest Daughter of Henry the seventh of England: which Margaret being after married to Archibald Douglas Earl of Angus, had a Daughter named Margaret also (the only child of her Parents) married to Matthew Stewart Earl of Lenox; by whom she was made the Mother of Henry Lord Darnley, the Father of King James the sixth, by the said Mary Queen of Scots. So that King James descending from the eldest Daughter of Henry the 7th, both by Father and Mother, on the expiring of the Line of Henry the 8th, in the person of Queen Elizabeth of Famous memory; was the next heir to the Crown of England, and was accordingly with all joyful acclamations proclaimed and acknowledged King in the City of London, March 24. An. 1602. (according to the Account of the Church of England) A learned and Religious Prince, a true Defender of the Faith, a Nursing Father of the Church, and a lover of Learning. He died at Theobalds, March 27. 1625. having reigned 23 years, and four days over.

1625. 2. Charles, second Son of King James, and of Anne of Denmark, (his elder Brother Henry dying long before) the 63d King in descent from Cerdick, King of the West-Saxons; the 45th King of England, in descent from Egbert; the 24th from the Norman Conqueror; the 64th Monarch of the English; and the second Monarch of Britain. In the beginning of his Reign he married the Princess Henrietta Maria, Daughter to Henry the fourth, and Sister to Lewis the 13th, French Kings; by whom blest with a Royal Issue of Sons and Daughters.

As for the Forces and Revenues of these British Monarchs, we cannot put the estimate of them in a better way than by laying together that which hath been delivered of each several part; out of which Items the summa totalis of the whole both in power and treasure, will be easily gathered. For though these Monarchs never had any occasion to muster and unite the Forces of their several Kingdoms upon any one Action, yet by considering what they have been able to do divided, we may conclude of what they may do, if need be, being now united. And so we are to do in marshalling the Arms of the British Monarchy, were are 1. Quarterly France and England, 2ly, Scotland; 3ly, Ireland, the Fourth as the first. I shut up this Discourse of the British Empire, with those words of Scripture (the Motto of another of King James his Coins) QUAE DEUS CONJUNXIT NEMO SEPARAVIT.

And so much for Britain.

Having pursued the Fortunes of the Roman Empire through the four Western Dio-ceses or Divisions of it, wholly subdued to the command of that conquering State: let us next look on those Coun-tries which lay farther North, and either never felt the force of the Roman Armies, or were but conquered in part, or else were reckoned as the members of some greater Province. Of this last sort was all that Tract which is now called Belgium, or the Netherlands, bounded Eastward with Westphalen, Gulick, Cleve, and the land of Triers, Provinces of the higher Germany, on the West with the main Ocean, which divides it from Britain, on the North with the River Ems, which parts it from East-Friesland; on the South with Picardie and Champagne, two French Provinces; upon the South-east with the Dukedom of Lorrain.

By the Latines (especially of these last times) it is called Belgium, from the Belge, the most potent people of all these parts; and sometimes also Germania inferior or the Lower Germany, (in the same sense as by the English it is called the Low Countries and the Netherlands) from their low situation, and the conformity which they have with the Germans in Laws, Languages, Customs and Man-ners, ners. By some it hath been called by the aggregate name of the Seventeen Provinces, from the like number of several and distinct Estates united under the Command of the King of Spain. The more peculiar name is Flanders, which, though but one of the Seventeen Provinces, hath yet given denomination to all the Netherlands, the people of which were once generally called by the name of Flemmings: and that either for the power of that Province, in regard of the others; or by reason of the great Trade and Traffick formerly driven at the Fairs or Marts of Bruges (a Town thereof) by the Merchants of all parts of Europe; or in respect that lying nearer than the rest to France, Spain, Italy, and England, that name was better known and took notice of. But this was when the whole Country was under the command of many Princes; of which the Earls of Flanders were esteemed most potent. And though this name continued also after the incorporating of most of these Provinces in the House of Burgundy, at which time they were called the Estates of Flanders: yet since the falling off of Holland and the rest of the United Provinces from the Kings of Spain, it hath lost this Honour, the name of Flanders being now restrained within narrower bounds.

But for the name of Belgium, though I find that name most current amongst the Latines of this Age, yet I see little reason for it. For first, old Belgium contained in it many fair and large Estates which are not now within the compass of these Belgick Provinces; that is to say, the Dukedom of Lorraine, Berg, Juliers, and a great part of Cleves, the Bishoppicks of Triers, Mentz, and Colen, and so much of the Kingdom of France as takes up all Picardy, with parts of Champagne and of France specially so called. Secondly, Gallia Belgica extended somewhat farther yet, comprehending a great part of the Lower Palatinate, all Elfsa, the whole County of Burgundy, and so much of Switzerland as lieth on the French side of the Rhene. And thirdly, the whole Provinces of West-Friesland, Groning, Over-Iffel, Zuiphen, together with all North-Holland, and so much of Gelderland, and Otrecht as lieth on the farther side of the middle Channel of the Rhene, were never counted of as parts of either Belgium or of Gallia Belgica (though now within the compass of the Belgick Provinces) but as parts of Germany; clearly without the limits of the ancient Gaul, of which Body Belgium was a limb or member in the Roman estimate.

As for the Belge, from whence we have the names of Belgium and Gallia Belgica, they were originally Germans, who driving out the Gauls, planted themselves within the Rhene, esteemed by Cæsar to be the valiantest of the Callick Nations for these three Reasons. 1. They were the farthest from Provence, where the Roman Civilities and more affable course of life was embraced. 2. They dwelt on a Sea not then frequented by Merchants; and so wanted those allurements to Effeminacy which are in Countries of traffick. 3. They bordered on the Germans, a warlike Nation, with whom they were continually in Arms. This people seeing the prosperous success of Cæsar's Victories in Gaul, joined together in a League, and mustered an Army of 260000 Fighting men against him. But seeing they could not draw him out of his Fortresses, they retired again, and that in such disorder, that three Legions (for no more was Cæsar's Army) put them to an infinite slaughter. After this, Cæsar, fighting against them severally, overcame them all, and made their Country, and the Country of the bordering Germans, whom he also vanquished, subject unto the Roman Empire. By Constantine the Great it was made part of the Dioceses of Gallia, and by him cast into five Provinces: that is to say, 1. Belgica Prima, containing the Dukedom of Lorraine and the Land of Triers, the Metropolis whereof was Tri- ers; 2. Belgica Secunda, comprehending Artois, Picardy, and the Country of Cambray, with parts of Champagne and France special, of which the Metropolis was Rhemes; 3. Germania Prima, comprehending Alfania, part of the Palatinate, and the Bishoppick of Mentz, the Metropolitane City of that Province; 4. Germania Secunda, containing Cleveland, Brabant, Gelaerland, Otrecht, Holland, Zeland, Flaunders, Hainault, Namur, Luxemburg, Limbourg, and the land of Colen, which last was honoured with the title of Metropolitane; 5. Maxima Sequanorum, so called of the Sequani, the old Inhabitants thereof, containing the whole County of Burgundy; and so much of Switzerland as lieth on the French side of the Rhene, of which Baselcon was the Mother City. But at this time none of the Provinces above specified are comprehended under the account and name of Belgium, but such as were possessed in these latter Ages by the House of Burgundy; some petty Seigniorities and Estates which properly do belong to Germany being added to it: that is to say, the Lordship of West-Friesland, given to the Earls of Holland by Charles the Bald, the Earldom of Zutphen united unto that of Gelders by Earl Orbo of Nassau; and finally the Estate of Groning, Over-Iffel, and some part of Otrecht by Charles the fifth. Under which name and notion we do now consider it.

And taking it according to this name and notion, it is in compass 1000 Italian, or 250 German miles; and is situated in the Northern temperate Zone, under the 7.8. and 9. Climates: the longest day in the midst of the 7th Climate, where it doth begin, being 16 hours; in the beginning of the 9th Climate increased to 16 hours three quarters, or near 17 hours. The Air in these later days is grown more wholesome than formerly; partly by the wonderful increase of the Inhabitants, and partly by the incredible industry of the people, who, by draining the Marshes, and converting the standing waters into running Streams have purged the Air of many grofs and unhealthy Vapours, which did thence usually arise in times foregoing.

The Country is very populous, containing well-nigh three millions of souls; the men being for the most part well-proportioned, great lovers of our English Beer, un-mindful both of good turns and injuries, of good wit for inventing, and of a most indefatigable industry for perfecting the rarest Manufactures. For unto them we are indebted for the making of Cloth, which we learnt of the Flemmings; as also for Arras-hangings, Dornix Clocks, Watches, and the perfection of the Mariner's Compass. They restored Musick, and found out divers Musical Instruments, being naturally good Musicians, and generally so given unto it, and so perfect in it, that therefore (till the Art of Musick grew more common) there were not many Great mens houses which had not Musicians to teach their Children. To them belongeth also the invention of Charities, the laying on of Colours with Oyl, the working of Pictures in Glafs, and the making of Worsted, Seyes, and Tapestries; the making of which and other Stuffs, being driven out of their Country by the Duke of Alva, they first taught the English. The Women generally are of good complexion, well-proportioned, especially in the Leg and Foot, honourers of Vertue, active and familiar. Both within doors, and without they govern all: which, considering the natural desire of Women to bear, rule, maketh them too imperious and burthenfome.

They use for the most part the German and Dutch Language, with a little difference in the Dialect. But in the Provinces adjoining to France, that is to say, Luxemburg, Namur, Artois, Hainault, and some parts of Flaunders & Brabant, they use the French; but the same very corruptly and imperfectly, by reason of that mixture which it hath of the Dutch or German, yet so that one may easily discern those people to be French originally, or some remainder of the old Gauls, mastered by the French, but not rooted out: from their Language or first Original called to this day by the name of Wallons, the Germans usually changing G into W, as Warre for Guerre, Warden for Guardian, and in the like cases Wales for Galles; I know there is another Etymology of the name of Wallons, some making them to be of the Burgundian race, who, at their first passing over the Rhene, enquired their way of the Country-people in these words, Ou allons, i.e. Whither go we; which being oft repeated by them: occasioning them to be called Wallons: A trim invention doubtless, but of no solidity, nor to be farther honoured with a confutation.

The Country in those parts which lie towards Germany, especially on the South-east bordering upon Cleveland and Lorraine, is somewhat swelled with Hills and over-shaded with Woods, the relics of the great Forest of Ardenne, which once took up a great part thereof: But towards the West and North, where it joins to the Sea, it is plain and level, full of Flats and Marshes, affording very little Corn, but abounding in Pasturage, which yields a great increase of Butter and Cheese, good flocks of Bees and Horses of more than ordinary bigness. By reason of which low and level situation, and the ill neighbourhood of a troublefome and unruly Sea, it hath been formerly much subject to Inundations; in some as in the time of King Henry the 2. Flanders was so overflowed, that many thousands of people, whose dwellings the Sea had devoured, came into England to beg new seats, and were by that King first placed Yorkshire, and then removed to Pembroke-shire. Since that, it hath in Zeland swallowed eight of the Islands, and in them 300 Towns and Villages: many of whose Churches and strong buildings are at a dead low water to be seen. And as once Ovid said of Helice and Buris, Cities of Achaia, so may we of these;

*Invenies sub aquis, & adhuc ostendere nauta
Inclinata solent cum manibus oppida versi.*

That is to say,

The waters hide them, and the Sailors show
The ruin'd Walls and Steeples as they row.

The chief Commodities which they vent into their Countries are Linen, Scarlets, Worsted, Seyes, Silks, Velvets, and the like rich Stuffs; together with great quantities of Armour, Ropes, Cables, Butter, Cheese, &c. Of which excepting Cheese and Butter, there is nothing of the natural growth of the Country; the rest being Manufactures which they make out of such materials as they fetch out of Foreign Regions. But the Commodity which yieldeth them most benefit is that of fish, not caught upon their own Coast neither, but either in the Northern Seas or the coast of England: the very Herrings which they cast on the shoars of England (to the no small dishonour of English Nation) bringing them a Revenue (besides what is purged up by the Adventurers) of 440000 pounds per annum; and that of Cod-fish, which they catch on the Coasts of Friesland, amounting to 150000 l. sterling yearly.

Captains of note and eminence it hath bred but few, the people living till of late in perpetual peace. The chief of those whose names have been transmitted to us are, 1. Civilis, a Prince of the Batavians, for subtilty of wit compared to Hannibal and Serronius: of which in the long War against the Romans, in the time of Vespasian, he gave very good proof. In the middle times, 2. William Earl of Holland, elected Emperor of Germany. 3. Baldwin Earl of Flanders, Emperor of Constantinople. 4. Philip the Good, and 5. Charles the Warlike, Dukes of Burgundy. 6. Charles the Fifth Emperor and King of Spain: And of late times the Princes of the House of Nassau and Orange, transplanted hither in the Agency Maximilian out of higher Germany. And to say the truth their Genius doth not lie so much for Land service as it doth for the Seas; in which they have been very famous, and not less fortunate. For of this Nation was Oliver Vander Noordt, the fourth that compassed the world, Jacob le Maire, the first discoverer of the Straight or Fretum, which now beareth his name, besides divers others. And generally the people are so expert in Navigation, (especially those bordering on or near the Coasts) that they seem born for and to the Seas: many of which, being born on Ship-board and bred up at Sea, know no other Country, and brook the Land as ill as a Fish doth the dry ground. Which natural inclination to it, and the necessity they have of employing themselves that way, (the Country not being otherwise able to provide sustenance for those multitudes of men which it doth abound with) hath so exceedingly increased their Shipping, that it is thought that they are masters of more Vessels of all sorts, taking one with another, than almost all the rest of Europe.

Scholars of note it hath bred many. 1. Erasmus, the great restorer of Learning in these parts of the World. 2. Justus Lipsius, as eminent a reviver of the Latine Elegancies. 3. Joseph Scaliger, the Son of Julius, 'o meî εὐν πρῶτος ἀνὰ νοῦς, a man not to be followed in all parts of Learning; but of equal Arrogance. 4. Radulphus Agriola. 5. Levinus Lemnius. 6. 7. Janus Donsa, the Father and the Son. 8. Abraham Ortelius, and 9. Gerard Mercator, the Geographers. 10. Geo. Cassander, 11. Dr. James Hermin. 12. Gerard Vossius, eminent Divines. And 13. Hugo Grotius, of as great parts (but seasoned with more modesty and moderation) as the famous Scaliger. 14. Janfenius, and 15. Pamelius, two right learned Men, but of the Pontifical party.

As much unfortunate it hath been in some wretched Hereticks, in none more than in David George, born at Delf in Holland who called himself Christ and King immortal. Flying from Delf to Basil with his Wife and children, An. 1545, he there taught his Doctrine, viz. 1. That the Law and Gospel were unprofitable for the attaining of Heaven; but his Doctrine able to save such as received it. 2. That he was the true Christ and Messias. 3. That he was not to restore the House of Israel by Deat; or Tribulation, but by Love and Grace of the Spirit. 4. That he had been till that present kept in a place unknown to all the Saints. And that this last Point might obtain the easier credit amongst the people, he bound his Disciples, first to conceal his name; secondly, not to reveal of what Condition he had been; thirdly, not to discover the Articles of his Doctrine to any man in Basil without his permission. But for all this great care of his with-in three days after his death (which happened in the year 1556), his Doctrines, being made known, were condemned by the Senate & Church of Basil, his goods confiscated, and his Bones most deservedly taken up and burnt. Of somewhat less impiety, but of no less phrensie, was 2. John of Leyden, (another Town of the same Province) who from a Tailor was made King of the Anabaptists, when they had ragged in Munster, and there we shall hear farther of him. 3. Cappinus, and 4. Quintinus, both Flemmings, the joint Authors and Co-founders of the Sect of the Libertines.

The Christian Religion was planted in several Provinces by several men: in Holland, Zeland, and Friesland, by Willibrod an English man, the first Bishop of Utrecht, whence by degrees it gained on the rest of the Country; these being the first people of the Franks, or German, converted totally to the Gospel. In tract of time it fell from the Primitive Purity, participating of the Errors and Corruptions of the Church of Rome; from which when they desired to reclaim themselves, they were there in opposed by the King of Spain and his Ministers. Hence the beginning of the Troubles, enlarged afterwards on pretence of Civil rights invaded and infringed by the Spaniards affecting a more absolute Dominion over them than their Laws admitted. At this time, as the Country doth stand divided betwixt the States and the Spaniards, it stands it with Religion also; the Spaniards permitting only the Religion of the Church of Rome within the Provinces and Estates under his command; and the States General indulging the free use of all Religions (even the very Jews) but countenancing only that of the Reformed Churches, according to the Platform laid down by Calvin.

Chief Forests of this Country are: 1. That of Ardenne, which in the time of Cesar extended from the banks of Rhene as far as Tournay one way, and Champagne another way, and was in compass 500 miles in the least account. In which circuit there was comprehended the Southern parts of Brabant and Flanders, all Limbourg, Luxemburg, Luyckland, Namur, and Hainault, together with the land of Gulick in the higher Germany, as some Writers say. At this time, though the greatest of all Gaul Belgick it reacheth but from Liege, to Tenonville, 30 leagues in length, and yet not all that Woodland neither, though within the Verge of the Forest: there being much Tillage and many Villages in that tract of ground, the principal of which is the Town of S. Hubert, situate almost in the midst of it. 2. Niepe, and 3. Nonnen, in the Earldom of Flanders; the first extending to the banks of the River Lis, the other coming up close to Ipres. 4. Pondsberg, in the Confines of Hainault and Flanders, near unto Mont-Gerard. All these were parts of this great forest of Ardenne, which once overshadowed all this Country. 5. Normault, in Hainault, in which is much Charcoal made, supposed for that reason to be a part of that Forest which the old French called La Charboniere. 6. Echierwald, in Gelderland, near Arnhem, &c.

The chief Rivers are, 1. Rhene, which ariseth out of two Springs in the Lepontian Alps amongst the Grisons, united into one stream near Chur: thence passing by the Cities of Constance, Basil, Spire, Wormes, Metz, and Colen, it is again divided about the confines of Gelderland into four Branches or Channels. Of which the first is called the Wael, which running through Gelderland by Nimwegen and Bommel, lofeth it self in the Maes. The second, which keeps the name of the Rhene, passeth by Arnhem, from thence in a contracted channel to Utrecht, and so through Holland unto Leyden. The third, called the Leek, taketh his course through the Provinces of Utrecht and Holland, and so into the Sea betwixt Dort and Rotterdam. And the fourth called the Tffel, which passing by the Towns of Zurphen and Deventer betwixt Gelderland and Over-Tffel, emptieth it self into the Ocean near Amsterdam. And of these Branches I have given the exacter reckoning, partly because the course of that famous River is otherwise not easie to be observed; and partly because the knowledge of a great part of these Provinces dependeth on the knowledge of the course of this River, it being the middle branch of the Rhene (that which goeth by Leyden) which anciently divided Germany from Gallia Belgica. A River of such reputation in the ancient times, that into it the old Belga used to cast the children which they suspected to be illegitimate: For were they born of lawful bed, they floated on the waters; if of unlawful, they sank immediately. Whereunto Claudian alluding saith, Nascens explorat gurgite Rhenus. But the great searcher of Antiquities, Vossian, is of opinion, than thereby they only injured their Children to hardness, and made trial of their strength; Adultery being rarely found among them, and so these kinds of experiments needless. 2. Mosa, the Maes, as the Dutch or the Menfe, as the French men call it, which springing from the Mountains of Vange in the confines of Lorraine, and not far from the Fountains of the Seine and Marne, runneth through Lorraine, Luxemburg, Luyckland, and Namur; from thence by Ruremond and Venlo, two known Towns of Gelderland, where turning towards the West, it taketh in a part of the Rhene, and from thence passing by Maeftricht, divides Brabant from Holland, watering the Town of Grave in the one, and of Dort in the other; and falleth into the Sea not far from Brill with so great a violence, that the waters of it for a long space continue fresh. 3. Emis, in Latine called Amisus, dividing the two *Friseland*s; of which more in Germany. 4. Scaldis, which arising in Picardy, and running through Artois, and between Hainault and Brabant, meeteth with the Sea a little above Amwerp. And 5. Lis or Ley, which runneth quite through Flanders. Besides which Rivers, and others of inferior note, (which we shall meet withal in their proper places) here are great store of Lakes, Pools and Marshes, which do both fortifie the Country, and provide it of Fish: besides many navigable Channels, made by the hand of man from one River to another, for the convenience of passage, and the more easie transport of their Commodities.

The Shoar of this Country hath been much worn out by the Sea, especially that of the Islands of Zeland, and such as lie scattered about Holland; where they are defended with Banks and Ramparts, painfully made, and chargeably maintained. These Banks are about ten ells in height, and twenty five in breadth at the bottom; they are made of the hardest clay that may be gotten, in the inside stuffed with wood and stone, on the outside covered with mats strong and thick made.

The former Inhabitants were divers, and were as differently disposed of in their several Countries. That is to say, the Atrebates in the greatest part of Artois; the Morini in the rest of Artois, and those parts of Flanders which make up the Imperial and Dutch Flanders; the Nervi in Hainault, Namur, and Flanders Gallicant; the Baravi in South-Holland, and so much of Gelderland and Utrecht as lies on the South-side of the Rhene, with the Menapii intermixt in the Dukedom of Gelders; the Mastiaci in the Isles of Zeland; the Aduatici and part of the Tangri in the Dukedom of Brabant, with part of the Treviri in Luxemburg, and of the Eburones in Luyckland and the Dukedom of Limburg: all which were Belgick Nations, and therefore anciently accounted of as parts of Gallia. Then on the Northern side of the middle Channel of the Rhene there dwelt the Frisii minores in North-Holland, and so much of the District of Utrecht as lies on the farther side of that channel; the Frisii majoris in West-Friesland and the State of Groning; some parts of the Sicambri in the Earldom of Zurphen and the rest of Gelderland, with part of the Bructeri in Over-Tffel all German Nations, and properly not within the reckoning of Gallia Belgica. Those which passed under the account and name of Belga being subdued, together with other Tribes of that numerous Nation, by the valour and good fortune of Julius Caesar, continued subject to the

Romans

Romans, without any notable disturbance unto their affairs but the Rebellion raised against them by Civilis Prince of the Barbarians in the time of Vespasian. In the declining of the Empire they were possessed by the French, under whom they made a part of the Kingdom of Metz, or Ostentreich, united by Childerick the third to the rest of France, and made a member of that Kingdom; as they continued till the time of Lewis the Godly, Son of Charles the Great. In the division of whose Empire amongst his Children, the Countries of Flanders and Artois being laid to France, the residue of these Countries on this side of the Rhene made up a special part of the Kingdom of Lorraine. Those on the farther side of the middle Channel of that River, being German Nations, gained to the vast Empire of the French by Charles the Great, in the division of the spoil spoken of before fell to the share of Lewis surnamed the Ancient, the first King of Germany, and after his decease to his Successors in that Estate, whether King or Emperours. And so we have the whole divided betwixt the three great Kings of France, Lorraine and Germany; by that means subdivided into lesser parcels, (no fewer than nineteen in all) we shall see anon.

In the mean time we are to know, that in the beginning of the French Conquests in the rest of Gallia, there started up in Belgica two great Estates, founded by Auberion, Regnault and Ranchaire, Sons of Clodion, the second King of the French; who being disinherited of their Fathers Kingdom by Merove Master of his Horse, to whose Tutition and Guardianship they had been committed, betook themselves to the most defensible places of the great Forest of Ardenne, and the Countries on the banks of the River Moselle, where they founded the two great Earldoms from thence denominated. That of Ardenne (for of the Earldom of Moselle we shall speak elsewhere) contained part of the modern Flanders, and some part of Brabant, together with all Hainault, Namur, Limburg, Luxemburg, and the Dukedom of Bonillon. Grown to this greatness by the withdrawing of the French forces into richer Conquests, and dismembering of that Empire into many Kingdoms, and trusting too much to that greatness, they drew upon themselves the jealousy of those mightier Princes: occasioning Clotaire the second to give their Country unto Dagobert his eldest Son, then King of Metz, whom he furnished with convenient Forces for the conquest of it. Brunnulp, the then Prince hereof, being by him discomfited and slain in Battle. By Sigebert, who succeeded his Father Dagobert in the Kingdom of Metz, the Earldom of Hainault is taken out of it, and given to Albert, one of the youngest Sons of Brunnulp. By Dagobert him self, succeeding in the Realm of France, (and whilst he lived sole King of the French) the parts of Flanders and Brabant, formerly belonging to these Princes, were dismembered from it, and laid unto two new Estates of his own erecting. And probable it is, that either to weaken this great House, or to comply with the ill Customs of those times, the Earldom of Namur might be taken out of it at the same time also, for the portion of some other of the younger Brethren. The rest of the Estate, with the title of Earl of Ardenne, remained unto the eldest Son: whose posterity, notwithstanding this great diminution, grew to such esteem, that Judith, the Widow of Buin, and Sister of Boson, Earls of Ardenne, was thought a fit Wife for Charles the Bald, King of France and Emperour, by whom (the more to honour his Family) the said Boson was created King of Arles and Burgundy. During the Empire of Orto the first, the Earldom of Luxemburg was divided from it, and given to Sigefride, one of the younger Sons of Ricwine the preceeding Prince, and so perhaps was Limbourg also for another of them. The rest remained to Godfrey the eldest Son, who by

Matilda, a Daughter to Orto the second, was father of another Godfrey, who succeeded after Charles and Orto, the third Duke of Lorraine: that Dukedom being ever since enjoyed by the House of Ardenne, and there we shall hear farther of it. This said, and so much of the Story opened as concerns the general, we will proceed to a particular Survey of the modern Belgium, divided at the present into seventeen Provinces, besides the two great Bishopricks of Liege and Cambray, which being always under the protection of the Belgick Princes, partakers of their fortunes, either good or ill, and lying intermixt among their Estates, shall have their turn in the description of these Countries, divided generally

|---------------|--|
| 2 Bishopricks | 1 Liege or Luyck ,2 Cambray .   |

Of these nineteen, two only did acknowledge the Sovereignty of the Kings of France, viz. Flanders and Artois; the Earls whereof were Homagers unto that Crown, but seldom did descend so low as to do their Homage, quitted at last to Philip the second King of Spain, and his Successors, by King Henry the second of France in the Treaty at Cambray, Anno 1558. The rest were held originally of the German Empire, and by Maximilian Emperour of Germany, and Regent of those Countries for his Son Philip, (who had a purpose to subject them to the Empire again) were made the tenth Circle of the Empire, called the Circle of Burgundy. But neither since, nor before that time, would the Princes of the House of Burgundy, acknowledge any such subjection, but governed these Estates as absolute Princes, without relation to the Empire, or Subordination to the Emperour or Imperial Officers, never appearing at the Diets, nor contributing to any Taxes there imposed, not holding themselves bound by any Constitutions which were made therein. So that these several Relations being out of use, we must behold it at this time as it stands divided betwixt the Spaniards and the States: beginning first with those Provinces which belong to the Spaniards, the true Proprietary of the whole; and therein first with Flanders, as of most esteem.

1. FLANDERS, and 2. ARTOIS.

These two I have thought fit to join together, because at first but one Estate; and though divided for a time, yet after five or six Descents again united, and have so continued ever since.

1. FLANDERS is bounded on the East with Hainault and Brabant, on the West with the English or German Ocean, on the North with the Seas of Zeland and a branch of the Scheld, and on the South with part of Picardy in France, interposing betwixt Calice and Greveling. So called, as some say, a Fland, because it lieth open to the winds; as others say, from Flandbert, the Son of Blefinda, Daughter of Clodion, the second King of the French. Some fetch it from a Town of this name, situate in that part of the Country where now Ardenburg stands; so long since ruined, that very few except themselves could ever hear of it: and others (which I think most most probable) from Flandrina the Wife of Lideric the second, the first who governed in these parts by the name of Forger.

The Soil is indifferently fruitful in Corn and Pasture, the Air healthful, temperate and pleasant. The whole Country not in length above 90 miles, and in breadth but 60, and yet containing in that compass above thirty Cities, (for they reckon all Cities which be walled) and 1154 Villages, which stand so thick, (as needs they must in so narrow a compass) that the Spaniards, at their first coming in with King Philip the second, took the whole Province for one Town. Divided commonly into 1. Imperial, 2. Gallican, and 3. Tenonican; or 1. Flanders Imperial, 2. Flanders Gallican, and 3. Flanders Flammen-gant.

1. FLANDERS FLAMMENGANT, which is the greatest of the three, is bounded on the East with Imperial Flanders and the River Scheld, on the West with the English Ocean, on the North with the Seas of Zeland, and on the South with Artois and Flanders Gallican. The chief Towns of it, 1. Caunt, in Latine called Gandavum, seven miles in compass, but taking the Suburbs, which are great and large, the whole circuit is ten miles at least. One of the greatest Cities in Europe for extent of ground but not so populous as many of a less capacity, there being much waste ground even within the Walls. Commodiously seated on the banks of the Scheld and the Ley, both which run through it, and make in it 26 Islands, joined together with 98 Bridges: and had not her many Seditions ruined her Beauties, she might have been the Queen of Europe. In this Town were born John Duke of Lancaster, commonly called John Gaunt, and Charles the fifth Emperor, and King of Spain: which last, to restrain the people from their old Seditions, which had been very troublesome to his Predecessors, (the Gauntis taking on them many times to rule and over rule their Princes) built a strong Citadel in the place where stood the Abbey of Saint Bavons. For Churches, Monasteries, and other places of Devotion, there were numbered in it 55, all of them answerable to the grandeur and renown of the City; the private Buildings being also very stately, if not majestic. But now it is much fallen from its former glories, the often Seditions of this people drawing upon themselves the vengeance of their angry Prince; and their Wealth much impaired by the long Wars, and the diversion of their Trading by the Hollanders, who command the Seas. 2. Bruges, or Brugge, more within the land. A Town that hath neither Port nor River, yet formerly of such Wealth, and the people in those times so willing to shew it, that Queen Joan, the Wife of Philip the Fair, having been there, and marked the pomp of the Women, complained that She was not Queen alone. The Town of four miles circuit within the Walls, wonderfully well peopled; the Buildings fair & sumptuous, (amongst which 60 Churches and Religious houses) the Streets large and straight, and a spacious Market place, from which the 6 principal Streets of the City do pass directly on to as many gates, which is very pleasant to behold. And though the Town hath neither Port nor River as before was said, yet was it anciently of so great Trading, that it was accounted one of the four Mart-Towns of Christendom; flourishing chiefly by the benefit of the English Cloth, and Wool; decaying when the English Traffic was removed hence to Antwerp. It was called by Earl Baldwin, An. 890, is distant three leagues from the Sea, and seated on a fair and deep Channel made by Art, and filled with the waters of all the adjoining Fountains and Rivulets; which artificial Chances are in these Countries very frequent, to the great enriching of the whole State. 3. Ypres a Town seated very high, and almost impregnable, on a small River so named: a reasonable rich Town, and well built, though most of the Houses be of Timber, very well serv'd with Water, conveyed into every house almost in leaden Pipes, of which there is so great a number, that the Foundations of it seem to be laid in Lead. 4. Bourbourg, a fine strong Town, but little pertaining to the French King in the right of the house of Bourbon. 5. Comines, on the River Lis, or Ley, beautified with a strong Castle, and an excellent Library; but more in being the Birth-place of Philip de Comines, that notable States-man and Historian. 6. Courtray, on the same River of Ley, one of the ancientest Towns in Flanders, yet still continueth well built of very great strength both by Art and Nature, famous for a great Overthrow given the French, Anno 1301, for which the Town was called of long time the Sepulchre of the Frenchmen. 7. Andenbourg, (called in times past Rodemburg) a pretty Town enriched every year with a great Horse-fair every June, and beautified with one of the goodliest Churches in all this Province: the principal Town of that part hereof which properly is called Flanders; that name being first given to the parts hereunto adjoining, as some conceive, and after by degrees communicated to the rest of the Country. 8. Bicrollet, both a Town and Island, and furnished with a good and commodious Haven; yet not to be mentioned in this place, but that the Salting of Herings was here first invented by one William Bachelme, who died An. 1397. 9. Winockberg, so called of a goodly Abby built upon an Hill in the honor of St. Winock an English man of an holy life, sacked by the French, Anno 1538, but since re-edified, and made more beautiful than it was before. 10. Graveling, on the Sea-side, which, since the taking of Calice by the French, hath been made the strongest Town in the Low-Countries. 11. Oudenard, seated on the Scheld, a fair strong Town and of very great Traffick, especially for Tapestry and the finest Linens, which are here made: the Birth-place of Margaret, Dutchess of Parma, and Mother to Alexander Prince of Parma, that renowned Soldier.

The principal Ports of Flanders, being four in number are all of them seated in this part. 1. Dunkirk, a small but safe Port, belonging to the French King (as doth Graveling also) in the right of the House of Vendosme, but strongly garrisoned by the Spaniard, even in times of Peace, because of the importance of their situation both by Sea and Land. Most memorable in these days for that the people of it in the times of War so infested the Seas. 2. Scluyt, seated at the mouth of the Channel of Bruges, beautified with a very fair Haven able to contain 500 good Ships; and is now subject to the States, with whose safety it could not well stand to let the Spaniards enjoy any safe and large Harbors so near unto them, Over against it lieth the Isle of Cassandre, famous for the birth of George Cassander, a moderate and learned Papist; formerly as big again as it is at the present, having then a fair Town in it and many rich Villages, of which there is but one remaining, (of the same name with the Island) the rest all swallowed by the Sea. 3. Newport a pretty Town, with a very strong Castle, built on a well frequented Haven, but not very safe, and therefore not much used by the men of War, nor made rich by Piracies, as Dunkirk. Near to this Town, Anno 1603, was fought the Field-battle betwixt the Archduke Albert and the States; the Victory, next under God being gotten for the States by the valour of the English, and the excellent Conduct of the Vere. 4. Ostend, not walled till the Low-country Wars, and then but with a mud-wall only, and that not finished till the Arch-duke fate down before it: inasmuch as the Arch-duchess Isabel is said to have sworn, that she would not shift her smock till the Town were were taken: who, had she kept that rash Oath, had been very lowlie; the Town (then garrisoned with English) holding out against the said Arch-duke a Siege of three years and as many months.

2. IMPERIAL FLANDERS, so called, because it was long under the obedience of Emperours, is severed from Brabant by the River Dender, and from the Gallick Flanders by the River Scheld, about Oudenard. It was sometimes called Brabant, of a Castle of that name, destroyed by Baldwin de Debonaire, Earl of Flanders; and is now called the County of Alost, from the chief Town thereof so named; the Jurisdiction whereof, containing 170 Villages, extendeth as far as to the Walls of Gannu and the Gates of Oudenard. The Town is strong, and indifferently fair, situate on the River Dender, most famous in these times for a Fair of Hops which is kept there yearly. 2. Hulst, a walled Town, and the chief of the four Towns in the County of Waes; the other three being, 3. Axele, 4. Monchant, 5. Affend; of which little memorable, but that they were all taken from the Empire by the said Baldwin de Debonaire in the time of the Emperor Henry the Fourth. 6. Dendermond, situate at the mouth of the Dender where it en-trench into the Scheld; a strong Town both by Art and Nature, and much enriched by making Fustians, and a weekly Market of Flax. A distinct Seignoury of it self, with many rich Villages belonging to it, incorporated into the Earldom of Flanders by the Marriage of Earl Lewis de Malaine with the Lady Margaret of Brabant, to which house it formerly appertained. 7. Rupelmond, on the mouth of the River Rupel, where it falleth into the Scheld: Famous in former time for an ancient Castle, in which were kept the Monuments and Records of the Earls of Flanders; more in late times for being the Birth-place of Mercator, that renowned Cosmographer. 8. Mont-Gerhard, called by the French Grandmont, a fine and pleasant Town seated on the Dender. Which three last Towns, together with Bornhem, a Fair large Village, having some Jurisdiction on the parts adjoining, made up that Estate which was called the Proper or Domaine of Flanders, because not holden of the Empire or the Kings of France, but in the Sovereignty alone of the Earls hereof.

3. FLANDERS GALLICANT, so called from the French language there spoken, lieth on the South of Flanders Flammen-gant; having Hainault on the East, Artois on the West, and the Country of Cambray on the South. The chief Towns of it are, 1. Lisle, in Latine, Insula, so called from its Island-like situation, among Ponds, Pools, Marshes, dried up and made firm land by Earl Baldwin de Barbu, who built the Town, Anno 1007, which afterwards was called by Baldwin de Lisle, his Son (born in this Town, and hence so named) Anno 1066. The Town made rich by Manufactures and resort of Merchants, accounted the best Town of Traffick next Amsterdam and Antwerp, in all the Netherlands. Not far from which are to be seen the Ruines of an ancient Castle called Brug, the Seat or Manor-house of the ancient Forsters, who had the Government of this Country for the Kings of France. 2. Doway, (Duaurum in Latine) a fair and strong Town seated on the Scharp, having many Fountains, good Buildings, and a great number of Churches; made an University by King Philip the second of Spain, who built therein a Seminary or Colledge for English Fugitives. 3. Orchies, a pleasant Town, and well traded for the making of Serges, which, with the other two, make up the three Estates of this part of Flanders. 4. Armentiers, an unwalled Town, but of very great Trading; there being yearly 5000 pieces of Cloth sent hence to Italy, and thence to Constantinople. 5. Tournay, (or Dornick, as the Dutch call it) a great, rich, mighty and strong Town, seated on the Scheld, well built, and full of stately and magnificent Churches and Religious Houses, and anciently honoured with a See Episcopal. A Town of great importance, and much contended for betwixt the Flemmings and the French; but finally fell unto the French, as the more puissant Prince; taken from them by Henry the eighth of England, An. 1513, to whom the Citizens paid 100000 Ducats for their present Ranfome; restored by him unto the French, An. 1518, for the sum of 600000 Crowns; and finally from them recovered by Charles the fifth, who restored it to the body of Flanders, from which it had been long dismembered; but so that it is governed as a State apart, and is called the Seignoury of Tournes, having a goodly Jurisdiction over the Country round about it. 6. S. Amand, in the Country of Tournes, pleasantly seated on the Scharp; in which is one of the richest Abbies in all Flanders; the Abbot thereof having the temporal and spiritual Jurisdiction over it and the parts about it. And so much for the Corography of the Earldom of Flanders, inhabited by the Nervii and Morini in the time of Cesar.

2. ARTOIS is bounded on the East with Flanders Gallican and the Country of Cambray, on the South and West with Picardy, on the North with Flanders Flammen-gant and the River Lis. The name is derived from the Atre-bates, the old Inhabitants hereof: the Air exceeding temperate, and the Soil so fruitful, that it serveth as a Granary to a great part both of Flanders and Brabant.

On the West part hereof towards France lieth the Earldom of S. Paul, so called from the chief Town thereof, a goodly Seignoury, and of great Jurisdiction and Revenue, containing besides many Villages, the good Town of Pern, a walled Town, and of great importance. The Earls hereof were lineally derived from Walleran, brother of Henry the 7. Emperor of Germany and Earl of Luxemburg; the last of which was Lewis of Luxemburg, made Constable of France by King Lewis the eleventh, with whom, as also with Edward the 4. of England, and Charles Duke of Burgundy, he plaid so many cross-tricks, that having long deluded them all, and kept them in a continual jealousy of one another, he was at last by Duke Charles taken and beheaded. After whose death this goodly Seignoury fell to the House of Vendosme in France, by the Marriage of Francis Earl of Vendosme with Mary the Daughter of this Lewis, to whom it was adjudged by the power and favour of the French King's, the Heirs-males being made incapable of Succession in it by the Attainder and Confiscation of the said last Earl. By means whereof the House of Vendosme was intitled to many fair Estates in Artois, Flanders, Hainault, and much goods Lands in France, which they were possessed of. Francis the 2. Son of that Francis, and Francis the only Son of this, being intitled, whilst they lived, Earl of S. Paul, and Dukes of Turtenville.

The Arms of these Earls were Argent, a Lion Gules armed and crowned Or, his tail forked of the second.

As for the residue of Artois, the Towns of most importance in it are, 1. Arras, in Latine Atrebatum civitas, the chief City of the Atrebat the old Inhabitants hereof in the time of Cesar, and still the chief City of this Province; a large, populous and well-fortified City, anciently honoured with a See Episcopal, and stocked with an industrious people, the first makers of the Cloth of Arras, which took name from hence: divided into two distinct Towns, both of them walled, and called by two several names; the lesser called La Citre, subject to the Bishop, beautified with a Fair and Stately Cathedral Church; and a Library containing many excellent Manuscripts; the lesser called La Ville, subject to the Prince, having large Streets, and a rich Monastery of the yearly Revenue of 20000 crowns. By Ptolemy it is called Regiacum, seated within a bow-shot of the River

River Scarp, and heretofore the Metropolitan Town of Flanders, till Artois was dismembered from it, since which time the chief City of this Province, as before is said, 2. S. Omar, a fair Town, and well peopled, seated upon the River As, some eight Dutch miles from the Ocean, 3. called from S. Omar, or Andomar, Bishop of the Morini, who built a Monastery in this place, from which grew the Town, the second of esteem and rank in all the Country. Near to it is a goodly Lake of fresh water, in which are many little Islands affording good Pasturage for Cattel: of which Lewis Guicciardine reporteth, that by fastning a Cord unto the bushes which grow in them, a man may draw them which way he will; and that under them there are found great numbers of Fishes, who hid themselves there for shelter against the Weather. 3. Bethune, a strong Town; and seated amongst excellent Pastures, of which the people make great plenty of the best Cheese: which, with the Territory hereof, fell to Guy of Dampierre, Earl of Flanders, in right of Maud his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Daniel the Lord of this Town, honoured in that regard with the birth of their eldest Son, who from this place had the name of Robert de Bethune. 4. Ayres, on the Lis, a strong Town, with a Castle of great Antiquity. 5. Bapaume, a little, but well Fortified Town; and yet more strong, because it cannot be besieged for want of fresh water, which is not to be had within three leagues of it. 6. Renty, an unwall'd Town, but fenced with a very strong Castle, besieged by the French, Anno 1554. but being overcome in a set Field by Charles the fifth, they were fain to raise a Siege and go home again. 7. Hesdin, on the confluence of two little Riverets, Blangis and Canche, 3. a Frontier-town on the edge of France, one of the strongest and most defensible places of all the Netherlands, built by Charles the fifth out of the ruins of old Hesdin, which having taken from the French, he commanded it to be razed as no longer serviceable, and raised this Town in stead thereof, somewhat nearer France. 8. Terwyn, or Teroane, the Teruanna of Ptolemy, and Civitas Morinorum of Antoninus, a Frontier-town, held for a long time by the French, by whom thought impregnable, till taken by King Henry the eighth, Anno 1513. they changed their opinion. A Siege not only memorable for the issue of it, but for two other matters of great moment. The one, that the Emperour Maximilian came and served in person under the colours of S. George, with the English Cross upon his breast: the other, that the French intending to victual the Town, had so great an overthrow, that had the English followed their Fortune, they had opened a fair way to have made themselves masters of all France; the French King being so assisted at the news hereof, that he prepared to fly into Bretaign. But the English more minded the Spoils and riches of Terwyn, than the sequel of an absolute Victory; Et frui maluerunt victoria, quam uti, as the Historian said of Hannibal. It is now after many changes of Fortunes in the hands of the French, and by some reckoned and accounted as part of Picardy. There are, besides these, three walled Towns more, that is to say, Lillers, Lens, and La Bassée, of which little memorable; and to the number of 854 Villages.

These Countries of Flanders and Artois were anciently, if not a part, (as the parts hereof about Tournay most undoubtedly were) yet much of the same nature with the great Forrest of Ardenne, nothing but a continual waste of Woods and Defarts, till the Conquest of it by the French; the Sea-coasts being then unpeopled for fear of the Danes, who by their frequent Piracies did much vex the Shores and the inland Countries meably planted, for want of Corn and other necessities for the life of man: subject in part to the great Princes of Ardenne, till the discomfiture of Earl Brunolph by Dagobert sole King of the French, by whom about the year 621 this wild Country, extending then as far as the River Some, and comprehending besides Artois and Flanders, a good part of Picardy, was given unto one Lideric de Buque with the title of Forester, to be holden under the Sovereign of that Crown. In whose posterity it continued with the title of Foresters till the time of Baldwin the first, the son of Odoacer, the seventh of the Foresters, whose names occur upon record; there being a long intermission of their names and memories during the Ravagements and Depredations of the Danes and Normans. This Baldwin having first ravished, and afterwards married Judith, Sister to Charles the Bald, King of France and Emperour, was by him created Earl of Flanders, the Sovereignty thereof reserved as before it was: in whose Issue it remained intire, till Philip the first Earl of that name gave unto Philip Augustus, King of France, the Country of Artois, with the Earldom or Country of Vermandois, part of Picardy, in Marriage with Isabel his Niece, Daughter of Baldwin Earl of Hainault. By Lewis the eighth, Son and Successor of Philip Augustus, Artois was given in Portion to his youngest Son Robert; made the first Earl of Artois by King Lewis the 9. An. 1234. And by the Marriage of Lewis the first of Flanders with Margaret the Heir of Artois and of the Earldom of Burgundy, both these Estates were added unto this of Flanders, now made far mightier than before. And yet before this great accession of estate it was accounted the prime Earldom, as Millane was the prime Dukedom of Europe: these Earls being privileged to write themselves Dei gratia, all others Dei clemencia only; and Flanders being now grown abroad to so great esteem, that it was generally used for all the Netherlands. Finally, by the Marriage of Margaret, Daughter of Lewis de Malain, Earl of Flanders, to Philip the Hardy, Duke of Burgundy, this great Estate became united to that House, and afterwards was conveyed to that of Austria, as shall be shewn hereafter in due time and place. In the mean season let us take a brief survey of

3. HAINAULT.

HAINAULT is bounded on the East with Namur, on the West with Flanders, on the North with Brabant, on the South with Picardy and Champagne in France. It was anciently called Salutis Carbonarius, from the abundance of Charcoal made in the Woods and Forests of it; by some Writers of the middle times, the Lower Picardy; by the Latine Writers of these times called Hannonia. It seemeth to have taken this new name from the River Haine, or Hania, which passeth through it, and the word Holt, signifying a Wood, as being over-spread in a manner with the Forests of Normants, St. Amant de Faignd, and that of Poodisberg. and then Hainault will be quasi Haine holt, i. e. a Country of Woods and Forests on the River Haine. Thus called originally by the French, (as the word importeth;) but by the Dutch best known by the name of Hagenow, i. e. the Country bordering on the Haine, as the name signifieth in that language.

The length thereof is 60 miles, 48 the breadth; comprehending in that compass 950 Villages, and 24 Towns; in and amongst which there is reckoned one Principate, 10 Earldoms, 12 Peerdoms or Pairies, 22 Baronies, 26 Abbeyes, one Lord Marhal, (besides other Officers of the Prince) descending by inheritance to the Lords of this Province.

The Air hereof is very good; and the Soil fruitful, by reason the Country is watered with so many Rivers, as the Scheld, the Sambre, the Dender, and several lesser Streams, besides divers Lakes, Marshes, Ponds and Pools, which do much enrich it, the Country abounding in most places with fresh Meadows and sweet Pastures, good Fruits, and profitable Trees, but especially with great plenty of Corn. Here are also in some parts of it notable Mines of Iron and Lead, and excellent Quarries of the best Stone, fit for all kind of Buildings.

The principal of these Towns are, 1. Mons, situate at the confluence of Haine and a little River called Trulle, which gives a good natural strength unto it; fortified besides with a very strong Wall, three large deep Ditches, and an ancient Castle. The Town is great, beautiful and rich, adorned with sumptuous buildings, both private and publick, and replenished with wealthy Merchants and men of Trade; the principal of all the Province, erected into an Earldom by Charles the Great; and sometimes used for the style of Earls of Hainault. In this Town is the noble Nunniery of S. Valdrade, once a Dutcheis of Lorraine, the Nuns whereof are to be Ladies and Gentlewomen of Noble Families; in the morning apparelled in white, like Nuns; in the afternoons according to their Birth and Qualities, who when they please may leave the Cloister and be married. The Abbess hath Jurisdiction both in the Town and Country about it, and anciently did put the Earls of Hainault into possession of the State. Another Nunniery like this (but not of such large Revenues) there is at 2. Mauveuge on the Sambre, a good Town of Merchandize, 3. Valenchiennes, seated on the Scheld, and a little River called Rouelle, which make not only in it many pleasant Isles, but pass almost under every man's house to the great benefit and delight of the place and people. The site hereof is so strong by Nature (besides the Fortifications of Art) that on the one side it may be easily made unapproachable by water, and on the other side is so defended by Hills, that it can hardly be besieged but by three Armies at once. A goodly, large and beautiful Town, especially for publick Building: the Chief whereof are the Church of our Lady, built after the ancient manner manner of Architecture, with sumptuous Arches and goodly Pillars of Marble and Porphyry; the Earl's Palace, and the Town-hall, Buildings of great magnificence and excellent workmanship. The Birth-place of Henry the 7th, Emperour of Germany, of Mary Daughter of Charles the Warlike, and of Froissart the great French Historian. Finally a Town which, for the eminence thereof, is governed as a State apart by itself, having under the Jurisdiction of it 3 Towns, 132 Villages, which on occasion of Appeal resort not to the Provincial Council at Mons, but the great Council at Mechlin. 4. Chimay, upon the River Blanche, near a pleasant Forest, which gives the title of a Prince to the eldest Son of the Duke of Aerschot, one of the principal Lords of Brabant, who hath here a very good Palace. 5. Halle, seated on the Sinne, which runs through it, a place of great credit amongst the Papists, by reason of an Image of the blessed Virgin famed for many Miracles. Of which see Lipfius on that Subject. 6. Beauvais or Bayay, an old Town, at a Pillar whereof begin all the ways leading to France, made of Pavestones by Bruneault the Wife of Sigebert King of Metz, and Austrasia, who with Fridegonde the Wife of Chilperick, and Katharine Medices, the Wife of Henry the 2d, are said to be the three Furies of France. 7. Landrecies, on the River Sambre, famous for the notable resistance which it made to Charles the 5th, 1543. 8. Marienburg, built by Mary Queen of Hungary, Governors here for the said Charles, An. 1544, to serve as a Bulwark against France, on which it frontiereth. 9. Philip-Ville, built and well fortified for the same reason by K. Philip the 2d. 10. Bonchain, upon the Scheld, in the County of Ostfrinand, which County is the Title of the first Son of Hainault: and by that name William the eldest Son of Albert Earl of Hainault and Holland, was admitted Knight of the Garter by King Richard the 2d. 11. Conde, a good little Town seated on the Scheld, the moiety whereof belonged heretofore to the House of Montpensier in France, as 12. Engbien, a Town of great Trade for Tapestry; to the House of Vendosme: from whence the Princes of Conde, and Dukes of Engbien do derive their Titles. 13. Beaumont, upon the knap of a goodly Hill, whence it hath the name; belonging at the present to the Dukes of Aerschot, but anciently the Partage of the second Son of the Earls of Hainault. 14. Bins, or Binche, on a branch of the River Hain, one of the Jointure-Towns of the Countesses of Hainault, much beautified and made a place of pleasures by Mary Queen of Hungary, to whom it was given by Charles the fifth, (commonly called the Queens Paradise) but burnt and utterly destroyed by the French, An. 1544. 15. Aeth, seated on both sides of the Dender; a little, but a pleasant and wealthy Town; here being held the Staple of Linen for all this Country, and the Cloth here fold amounting to 200000 Crowns per annum.

As for the History of Hainault, the ancient Inhabitants thereof were the Nervii, the most valiant and most potent people of all the Gauls, possessed not only of this Province, but of the whole Earldom of Namur, and some part of Flanders, able to bring, and de facto did bring into the Field, when the Belga mustered up their united forces against Julius Cesar, no fewer then 50000 fighting men. Wone from the Romans by the French, they became a part of the great Earldom of Ardenne, continuing so till the death of Burnulph, discomfited and slain in battle by Dagobert sole King of the French, whom his Father in his life-time had made Duke of Ardenne, and designed unto the conquest of it. But the fury of the War being over, the parts of Flanders and Brabant which belonged unto it, estated upon other Houses, and the rest allotted out amongst his Children, Alberic, surnamed the Orphelin, one of his younger Sons, was by Sigibert King of Metz or Austrasia, enfeoffed of this Country, by the name and Title of Earl of Hainault. Twice this Estate was added or united to that of Flanders: 1. In the person of Baldwin 5. Earl of Flanders, succeeding hereunto in right of Richild his Wife, Daughter of Regnier the 3d. 2. By the Marriage of Baldwin the 6th of Hainault with Margaret Countess of Flanders, Sister and Heir of Philip of Elfsa, Earl of Flanders. But being divided the first time by the usurpation of Flanders, wrested from Arnulph the 3d, by his Uncle Robert, and the second time by the intrusion of John de Avesnes, natural Son of Margaret the second Daughter of the Emperour Baldwin, into the Estate and Earldom of Hainault; it was finally annexed to Holland by the Marriage of John de Avesnes to Adelise or Aleide, Daughter and (at the last) Heir of Florence the 4th, Earl of Holland, Zeeland, &c. From which it never was divided, till they were both incorporated into that of Burgundy.

The Arms hereof are quarterly Flanders and Holland.

4. The Bishoprick of CAMBRAY.

Southward from Hainault lieth the Bishoprick of CAMBRAY, continuing a goodly Town and Territory, reckoned of anciently as a part of Hainault, now a State distinct, rather confederate with the Princes of the Netherlands, than subject to them.

The principal City hereof is Cambray, (called in Latine Cameracum) seated on both sides of the River Scheld, a fair, goodly and mighty City, full of people, many of which are rich Merchants, but all of them industrious, especially in making that fine linnen Cloth from hence called Camerai, or Cambrick. The private Buildings are very fair, but the publick much fairer, especially the Monasteries and other Churches, of which the most remarkable is that of our Lady, an ancient and sumptuous Fabrick, and the See Episcopal. From whence the Country and Territory hereunto adjoining is called Cambresis, in which are divers Villages and places of importance. The chief of which are, 1. Chasteau Cambresis, six leagues from the City, remarkable for the Treaty held there betwixt France and Spain, Anno 1559, in which a Peace was happily settled amongst all the chief Princes of Christendom, after a long and tedious War between those Kings and the Confederates of each; and before that, for the Confederacy there made by the said King of France and Spain, the Emperour, the Pope, and many of the Princes of Italy, against the Seignoury of Venice, Anno. 1508. called the League of Cambray. 2. Avesnes le Sec, (so called to distinguish it from Avesnes in Hainault) near which are digged excellent white Stones for building, little inferior unto Marble.

This Bishoprick was Founded in the person of S. Diogenes, a Gracian born, An. 390, or thereabouts: whose Successors in tract of time became so potent, that at the last the Bishop hereof became both the Lord spiritual and temporal of the Town and Territory, honoured with the title of a Duke, and Prince of the Empire, and was in the end made an Archbishop by Pope Paul the Fourth, An. 1562. And as for the City of Cambray, it was made Imperial by the German Emperours, afterwards by Henry the fifth, given in protection to Robert of Jerusalem, Earl of Flanders; and finally settled and confirmed on all his Successors by the Emperour Frederick, An. 1164. Which notwithstanding, the French finding it convenient for them, divers time possessed it: but governing with too great insolence, they were driven out by the people in the time of Lewis the 11th, and the Town yielded voluntarily unto Maximilian, Governour of these Countries for his Son Philip. Charles the fifth, in the year 1543, built a strong Citadel in it, pretending that he did it for defence of the Town against the French, but indeed to keep it for himself. After this it was taken by the Duke of Alençon, (Brother of Henry the 3. of France) then Governour of the Netherlands, An. 1582, but regained not long after by the Spaniards, the Inhabitants giving up the Town for want of victuals. Since that continually possessed by the Spaniards, and by them strongly garrisoned; but so, that the people still enjoy their ancient Privileges, and are governed by their own Laws and Bishops, as in former times.

5. NAMUR.

THE Ealdom of NAMUR hath on the East Hainault, on the West the Bishoprick of Liege, on the North Brabant, and on the South Luxemburg; so called from Namur the chief Town of it; Namurcum and Namurcensis (comitatus) in our Latin Writers. The Country is very small, containing only 182 Villages, and four walled Towns, but plentiful of all commodities, and replenished with a loyal and industrious people. Particularly the Air hereof is very wholesome, the Country watered with many Rivers and pleasant Brooks (amongst which the Sambre and the Maes) which, besides the benefit of Portage, yield great plenty of Fish. The Hills, whereof it hath not many, are clothed with Woods, abounding with all kind of Fowl and venison, the Vallies eminently fruitful of all sorts of Grain, rich Mines of Lead, Quarries of Marble of all colours, as also of Porphyry or Jasper, and great plenty of Coal. In Mines of Iron too abounding, and that continually hammered by a painful people, that Vulcans Forge may seem to be restored to the world again and seated here; which as it makes the people wealthy, so it keeps them from idleness. And as for the Nobility they are generally valiant, given to all military exercises fit for their degrees, and very affectionate to their Princes, the greatest virtue of a Subject.

Walled Towns it hath but four, as before was said, that is to say, 1. Namur, the chief of all the Province, where resideth the Council for the Country, from which lieth no Appeals but to Mechlin only. Seated it is between two Hills on both sides of the Shambre, which doth there fall into the Meuse. The City is rich, inhabited for the most part by the Nobility, defended with a strong Castle, and beautified with a fair Cathedral, Founded here in the Church of S. Albin, Anno 1559. Not far off in the Villages of Ardenne and Monfieur are two Nunneries of Ladies, like those of Monts and Maubuge, spoken of in Hainault. 2. Bovines, upon the Meuse, sacked by the French, Anno 1554, since repaired and fortified. 3. Charlemont, a small Town, but of most exact Fortifications, built by Charles the fifth, An. 1555, to oppose the French, who had then possessed themselves of Marienburg, a Town of Hainault. 4. Valencourt, a little Town, but standing in a goodly and fruitful Country. Of the Villages the chief is Dowse, seated on the Meuse or Maes, fortified with a strong Castle, and honoured with the title of a Viscountie. 2. Floren, 3. Vasche, and 4. Saulon, of much beauty and greatness.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Country were a part of the Nervii. It was first made an Earldom by some of the Descendents of the Sons of Clodion, the second King of the French, who being dispossessed of their Father's Kingdom by Meroveus, the Master of his Horse, (to whom he had committed the Guardianship or Tuition of them) were forced to betake themselves to the most defensible places of the great Forest of Ardenne and the parts adjoining, where they Founded the great Earldoms, of Ardenne and Moselle, as before is said, divided in succeeding times into many parcels, of which this is one. By what and how many Earls this Earldom was possessed, I am yet to learn, the Estate being small, and consequently the Princes of it not much considerable. They were allied to the Royal House of France, by the Marriage of Albert Earl hereof with Irmingrade Daughter of Charles of France, the first Duke of Lorraine; and after unto the House of Flanders, by the Marriage of N. the Daughter and Heir of Peter, the last Earl of that race, to Henry the Second, Son of Baldwin the eighth of Flanders, and Brother of Baldwin Earl of Flanders, and the first Emperour of the Latines in Constantinople, whom he succeeded in that Empire. After whose death it came by Toland his Daughter to Peter Earl of Auxerre, who succeeded also in the Empire, and after his decease to Philip his younger Son. But he deceasing without Issue, and Robert his elder Brother reigning in Constantinople, it was seized on by Philip the Brother of Henry, who, to assure himself thereof, took to Wife Mary Daughter of Philip Augustus King of France, by a Niece or of Cousin of this Philip it was conveyed in Marriage to Henry Earl of Luxemburg, (the Father by a former Wife of Henry the seventh, Emperour and Earl of Luxemburg) and finally brought back again to the House of Flanders, by the Marriage of Guy of Dampierre Earl of Flanders, with Isabel Daughter of that Henry by the Heir of Namur, and in his Issue it continued (for ought I can find) till it was swallowed up with the rest of the Belgick Provinces, by the House of Burgundy. So that the highest we can go in search of the Earls of Namur, is to the time of Hugh Capet and Charles of Lorraine, which was 540 years after the coming in of the Sons of Clodion. From which time downwards the Succession is confused and broken, and towards the latter end discontinued for 140 years. Such as are left upon Record I have drawn together (not without much trouble) in as good order as I could, and here present them in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Earls of NAMUR.

1. Albert, the Co-temporary of Hugh Capet, spoken of before.

8. Philip II. Brother of John and Henry without Issue also.
9. John II. surnamed of Dampierre, the third Son of William of Dampierre by Margaret Countess of Flanders, Daughter and Heir of the Emperour Baldwin, succeeding by the gift of his Mother, challenging the disposing of it as next Heir of Philip the second, or in the right paramount of the Earldom of Flanders, enjoyed upon a better Title by
10. Guy of Dampierre, Earl of Flanders, and elder Brother of John the second, in right of Isabel his Wife, Daughter of Henry Earl of Luxemburg by thy Heir of Namur, but I neither find her Name nor Parents.
11. John III. Son of Guy and Isabel.
12. John IV. Son of Guy, by a former Wife, the Brother of John the third by the whole blood being absent or unfriended, and so put beside.
13. Guy II. the Brother of John the Fourth by the same Venter.
14. John V. Son of Guy the second, who in the year 1307. married a Niece of Lewis the ninth of France, by Robert Earl of Clermont a younger Son.
15. John VI. who in the year 1429. sold his Estate to Duke Philip the Good, to be enjoyed by him on the death of Theodore, the next Heir hereof, infirm, and (as it seems) without hope of Children.
- 16 Theodore, or Theodorick, the last Earl of Namur, after whose Death Duke Philip entered on this Earldom by the former Contract, and as the next Heir of the House of Flanders it continuing ever since unto his Posterity.

The Arms hereof are Or, a Lion Sable, bruised with a Bend Gules.

9. LUXEMBURG.

LUXEMBURG is bounded on the East with the Moselle and the Land of Triers, on the West with the Meuse or Maas and a branch of the Forest of Ardenne, on the North with Luyckland, Namur, and a part of Hainault, and on the South with the Dutchie of Lorraine; so called from the Castle near the Town of Luxemburg, seated by Sigefride the first Earl hereof for his Seat and Residence.

The whole is divided into parts: the Eastern part being called Faveune, fruitful of Corn, and yielding with some Wines, some Mines, and many excellent Quarries of goodly Stone, the Western called the Ardenne, a remainder of that spacious Forest, which sometimes overshadowed all this Country, barren of Corn, but very plentiful of Venison, and of Fowl good store.

The people of this Country are not all of one Language: those nearer Germany, as in Luxemburg, Arlun, Rodemark Theoville, and the rest on that side speaking the Dutch as those of Montmedy, Marville, Dampvillers, with the rest bordering on France, do a corrupt or broken French, in which regard the Pleadings held before the Council residing in Luxemburg are made in both Languages, that so they may be understood by all that have business there. But the Nobility and Gentry (of which there is more in this Province than in any other of the Seventeen) speak both Tongues perfectly. A breed of men full of Vertue, Courtesie, and Hospitality towards one another, and of great Truth and Faith to their Prince: but reckoned for the worst Landlords in all these Countries; governing their Subjects and Tenants like the Peasants of France, contrary to the use and Liberties of the rest of the Netherlands. Both sorts, as well the Nobility as the Commons, hate both Law and Lawyers, and for the most part end their Controversies amongst themselves without any Process.

The whole Country containeth in compass about 70 leagues, or 200 Italian miles, in which are comprehended 23 walled Towns, and 1168 Burroughs and Villages. The principal of which are, 1. Luxemburg or Lucemburg, built in the place where anciently stood the Augusta Veromandunum of Ptolemy; and took this new name quasi Lucis burgum, from the Image of the Sun there worshipped, seated on the Alsuminum, or Alze, which runneth through it, large and of a strong situation, but not very well built, nor yet recovered of the spoils which the long Wars betwixt the French and the Spaniard brought upon it before the Treaty of Cambray. However it is the chief Town of the Province, honoured with the Residence of the Council hereof, and the Sepulchre of John King of Bohemia slain in the Battel of Cressy against the English, An. 1348. 2. Arlun, on the top of an Hill, so called quasi Ara Luna, from an Altar consecrated to the Moon in the time of Paganism. 3. Theoville, on the Moselle, over which it hath a goodly Bridge, a Frontier town near Metz and the Border of Lorraine, and for that cause made marvellous strong; but taken by the French, An. 1558. 4. Bessenack, a fair Town, and very well traded, commonly called the Paris of Ardenne, in which part it standeth. 5. Montmedy, on an high Hill, at the foot of which runneth the River Chiers. 6. Dampvillers, once a very strong place also: both taken and ranfacked by the French, An. 1552. 7. Marville

7. Marville, upon the Chiers, the one half whereof belongeth to the Duke of Lorraine, the other to the King of Spain as Duke of Luxemburg, for which cause it is called la Ville commune. 8. Rock di Marche, fortified with a strong Castle. 9. Yvois, a place once of great importance, sacked by the French, An. 1552. and restored by the Treaty of Cambray, on condition it should never more be walled. 10. La Frette on the Chiers, a Town of the same condition.

In the skirts of this Country towards France standeth the Principality of Sedan, extended all along the banks of the River Maes, from the borders of Lorraine on the South, to the great Forrest of Ardenne and the Dukedom of Bouillon on the North. A small, but very fair Estate, of fruitful Soil, and beautified with many rich Villages, and some Towns of note: the principal whereof are, 1. Jamais upon the borders of Lorraine, by the Duke whereof it was taken, after a long season, from the Lady Charlotte, the Last Heir-general of the House of Mark, An. 1585. and laid unto that Dukedom as a part thereof. A place of great importance, and therefore much contended for by each Pretender. 2. Donchier, a strong Town of war, bordering on Tirafcke in Picardy, to which by some it is ascribed. 3. Sedan, in Latin called Sedunum ad Mosam, because situate on the banks of the Maes or Mos, the usual Residence of the Prince: a fine neat Town, well fortified, and planted with 80 braves pieces of Ordnance; honoured with a seat of Learning, which being of a middle nature betwixt a Grammar-School and an University, is in the Criticism of these times called a Schola illustis, to which men may send their children to learn good Letters, though they can take in them no Degrees, that being a privilege reserved only to the Universities. So that these Schools may be somewhat like our Collegiate Churches of Westminster, Winchester and Eaton, but that the younger Students in these last named are more restrained to Rhetorick and Grammar, than in the other, though these more liberally indowed for the encouragement and reward of Learning than all the Schola illustres of either Germany, or Moulton, a Town of great strength and consequence on the River Maes, upon some jealousies of State, garrisoned by the French, as also is Sedan it self, and most of the other good Towns belonging unto this Principality; but so that the Revenues of it, execution of Justice, and all other rights of Sovereignty, are still enjoyed, as formerly, by the Lords thereof.

This estate anciently was a part of the Dukedom of Bouillon, from which it was dismembered for the Portion of some younger Prince, at such time as Godfrey Earl of Ardenne and Bouillon succeeded in the Dukedom of Lorraine, after Charles and Otho the first Dukes; or else expected and reserved by Godfrey, surnamed of Bouillon, Duke of Lorraine, and King of Hierusalem, when he sold the Dukedom of Bouillon to the Bishop of Liege. By many mean Conveyances and alterations of the Owners it came at last to the House of Ardenberg, a Family of great wealth and power in Westphalen, (a Province of Germany not far off) by the Heir-general of which House it was brought in Marriage to Engelbert Earl of Mark, about the year 1330, from whom descended Robert Earl of Mark, and Sovereign of Sedan with the Towns annexed, who succeeding his Mother in the Estates of Sausy and Florence, Fiefs holden of the Dukedom of Bouillon, and eagerly affecting to unite the Estates together, (as they had been anciently) purchased the Town and Title of Duke of Bouillon of Eberhard Earl of Mark his Brother, Bishop and Cardinal of Liege, and consequently Duke of Bouillon also. Proud of his honour, and being somewhat too stiff in maintaining the Rights of his new Dukedom against a Sentence passed in the Imperial Chamber, in a Suit there depending betwixt two of his Vassals, he took up Arms against the Empire, with far more courage than discretion. For being in the course of that War worsted by Charles 5. (for whom he was too weak an enemy) the Town of Bouillon, being taken by the conquering Emperour, was afterwards restored to the Bishops, and nothing but the Title of Dukes of Bouillon left to the Princes of Sedan. And that he might be able to hold Sedan, this Robert was fain to return again to the protection of the French, (as his Ancestors from the time of Charles 8. had done before) and died Anno 1535, leaving his Titles and Estate unto Robert his Son, one of the Marshals of France, whose Grandson, called also Robert, being a dear friend and companion of Henry of Bourbon King of Navarre, and afterwards of France also, dying without Issue at Geneva, Anno 1588, committed to him the disposal of his Estates, and of the Lady Charlotte his only Sister. And he so well discharged his trust, that (having settled his own affairs) he gave the Lady in Marriage to Henry de la Tour, Viscount of Turenne, in France, (one who had done him very good service in the course of his long War, against the Leaguers) and with her the possession of Sedan, and the Title of Bouillon; whose posterity do still enjoy it. The whole Succession of these Princes we shall find in Bouillon, of which more anon.

But to return again to the Dutchie of Luxemburg, It was at first a part of the great Earldom of Ardenne, dismembered from it in the time of the Emperour Otho the first by Sigefride the Son of Ricwine Prince thereof, who, in the division of that Estate amongst his Brethren, had this for his Portion, with the Title of Earl. Of his Successors there is little to be found upon good record in a constant order of Succession, until the time of Henry 1. Father of Henry 2. Emperour of Germany, and they of a Royal Progeny of Kings and Princes; two of the which are most considerable, though all of them of eminent quality in their several times, viz. 1. Henry, elected and crowned Emperour by the name of Henry 7. said to be poisoned by a Friar in the holy Chalice, to prevent some designs he had against the Pope, in asserting the Imperial power in Italy. 2. John, the Son of this Henry, chosen K. of Bohemia, in regard of his Marriage with Elizabeth the Daughter of Wenceslaus King thereof, the possession of which Realm he left unto his posterity, advanced unto a Dukedom by Charles 4. the eldest Son of this John, in the person of Wenceslaus his younger Brother. What else concerns it we shall find in this following Catalogue of

The Earls and Dukes of LUXEMBURG.

1. Sigefride, the Son of Ricwine, Prince of Ardenne, the first Earl of Luxemburg.
2. Gilbert, the Father of Ogine, Wife of Baldwin the fourth of Flanders; but whose Son I find not.
3. Godfrey, Earl of Namur, was also Earl of Luxemburg by the right of Marriage, Father of Agnes the Wife of Simon the second Duke of Lorraine.
4. Conrad, perhaps the Son of Godfrey by the Daughter of Luxemburg, Father of Catharine, Wife of Matthew the second, Duke of Lorraine.
5. Henry Earl of Luxemburg, slain in the quarrel of Raimond Earl of Geldres, contending with John Duke of Brabant for the Dutchie of Limbourg.
6. Henry II. Son of Henry the first, by means of his Brother Baldwin, Elector of Triers; was chosen Emperour of the Germans, the seventh of that name, Anno 1308, first crowned at Aken, Aken, and afterwards at Rome; one of the last Emperours that meddled in the affairs of Italy.

- 1319 7. John, Son of Henry II. Earl of Luxemburg, married Elizabeth, Daughter of Wenceslaus the elder, K. of Bohemia; of which he was upon that Marriage elected and crowned King, Anno 1311, in the life of his Father; slain by the English in the Battel of Cressy, Anno 1346.
- 1346 8. Wenceslaus, the younger Son of John, created Duke of Luxemburg by his elder Brother Charles the 4th, Emperour and King of Bohemia.
- 1383 9. Wenceslaus II. eldest Son of the said Charles 4. Emperour and King of Bohemia also, succeeded his Uncle in the Dukedom.
- 1419 10. Sigismund, Brother of Wenceslaus, succeeded Wenceslaus in all his Estates, to which he added the Crown of Hungary, by the Marriage of Mary, Daughter of King Lewis the first.
11. Elizabeth, Daughter of John Duke of Gorlitz, (a Town of Lusatia) the Brother of Sigismund, by the gift of Sigismund her Uncle, being then alive, the better to fit her for the Bed of Anthony of Bourgoign Duke of Brabant, after whose decease she married John the 3. Earl of Hainault, Holland, &c. But having no Issue by either of them, she sold her interest in this Dukedom to Duke Philip the Good.
12. Philip the Good succeeded on the Sale aforesaid made by the said Elizabeth, in pursuance of the Contract and Agreement made at her first Marriage, for settling this Estate in the House of Burgundy. Of whom, and his Successors in these Belgick Provinces, we shall speak hereafter.

The Arms are B. six Barrulets A. supporting a Lion G. crowned and armed Or.

7. LIMBOURG.

THE greatest of the Estates of Belgium for extent of Territory, at the time of their Incorporating in the House of Burgundy, was that of Brabant, comprehending 5 of the 19 Provinces; that is to say, the Dukedom of Limbourg, and Brabant, the Marquisate of the Holy Empire, and the Seigniorie of Mechlin, with the Sovereignty of Liege or Luyck-Land.

LIMBOURG hath on the East the Dukedom of Guilick in High Germany, on the West the Bishoprick of Liege, on the North Brabant, and on the South the Dukedom of Luxemburg. The Soil is fruitful of all necessary Commodities, excepting Wines, the want whereof is recompensed with most excellent Wheat, great store of Fewel, and plenty of the best Iron Mines in all these Countries: all which Commodities it hath of so great excellency in their several kinds, that it is said of them proverbially, that their Bread is better than Bread, their Fire hotter than Fire, and their Iron harder than Iron. It is also well stored with medicinal Simples, and enriched with a Mine of Copperas, (by Pliny called Lapis arosus, lib. 34. c. 10.) which being incorporated with Brags makes Latrin, and increaseth the Brags by one third part. Lapis arosus multum aris habet, & ex eo suso fit, as that Author hath it.

It is one of the least of the Belgick Provinces, containing in it but 125 Villages, and no more than five walled Towns or Cities: viz. 1. Limbourg, which gives name to the whole Estate, pleasantly seated on a Hill amongst shady Woods, under which runneth the River Wesla; which, having warred the whole Country, emptieth it self into the Maes; well built, and fortified with a very strong Castle, mounted upon a steep Precipice, of no easie access. 2. Valkenburg, called by the French Fauquemont, a reasonable fair Town, with a large Territory, two Dutch miles from Masfricht; conquered from Reynold, Lord hereof, by John the third Duke of Brabant. 3. Dalem, a little Town with a Castle, the Territory thereof extending beyond the Maes, conquered by Henry Duke of Brabant, of that name the second. 4. Rhode le Duc, a little old Town with as old a Castle, half a league from Valkenburg. 5. Carpent, situate between Guilick and Collen, beautified with a Collegiate Church and a strong Castle, in which there is a Governour with a good Garrison for defence of the place. Each of these Towns hath Jurisdiction on the parts adjoining, but with Appeal unto the Chancery at Brabant.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Tract, and the Bishoprick of Liege adjoining, were the Eburones. When it was first made an Earldom, I am yet to seek. Most probable it is, that lying within the Verge of the great Forest of Ardenne, it was at first a member of that Earldom also, dismembred from it for the Portion of some younger Son, as Luxemburg and Namur were, or seized on by some strong Pretender (as Guilick was) when Godfrey and Baldwin Dukes of Lorraine, and the direct Heirs of the House of Ardenne, were absent in the Wars of the Holy Land. But whensoever & by whomsoever it was made an Earldom, certain it is, that of an Earldom it was made a Dukedom by the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa, An. 1172. Henry, one of the Dukes hereof, married his Daughter Margaret to Godfrey the third, Duke of Brabant, which gave that House some colour to pretend unto it, backed with a better Title on the death of another Henry, the last Duke of Limbourg, whose next Heir, Adolph, sold it to John, Duke of Brabant, pretending to it in the right of the former Marriage, An. 1293. But Reynold Earl of Geldres, thinking himself to have a better Title than Adolph in right of Ermengrude his Wife, the Daughter of Herman, a late Duke hereof, put in his plea, and challenged it by force of Arms; but being vanquished and taken prisoner by the said Duke John in the Battel of Worancan, was slain; for his Release, to release all his Claim and Title to the Dukedom of Limbourg, after that quietly enjoyed by the Dukes of Brabant, till they fell both together to the House of Burgundy.

The Arms hereof are Argent, a Lion Barrie of ten pieces, Or and Gules.

8. LUTCK-LAND, or, the Bishoprick of LIEGE.

WESTWARD of Limbourg, but a far mightier Estate than it, lieth LUTCK-LAND, as the Dutch, or the Bishoprick of LIEGE, Leodiensis, as the Latin and French Writers call it; anciently under the protection of the Dukes of Brabant, and afterwards of the Princes of the House of Burgundy, as Lords of that Country. By some it is accounted of and described as a part of Germany; but for the reasons before mentioned I shall place it here. It is environed on all sides with the Belgick Provinces, that is to say, with the Dukedom of Limbourg and the Earldom of Namur on the East, with Brabant on the North and West, on the South with Luxemburg.

The Air hereof is very wholesome, and the Earth as fruitful, abounding with all kind of Grain and Fruits, with some store of Wine; and as for Fleish, Fish, Fowl and Venison, it hath very great plenty, and that too of an excellent taste: less fertile it is in such parts hereof as lie towards Luxemburg, in which it is most swelled with Hills, and over-bread with shady Woods, remainders of the great great Forest of Ardenne, within which it stood. But the chief Riches of this Country is under ground, consisting in mines of Lead and Iron, and some few of Gold; Quarries of Alabaster, mingled with all sorts of Marble; rich veins of Brimstone, and unexhaustible pits of Coals: which last it hath in such abundance, that there is digged within the compass of one league of the City of Liege, not only sufficient for that great City, but so much over-plus, as being sold at mean prices about the Country, amounts unto 100000 Ducats of yearly value. The Coal much sweeter than elsewhere, and of nature contrary to all other Coal, in that it is kindled with water, and quenched with oil, and the strong fervour of it taken off by casting Salt on it.

The whole Country containeth 24 walled Towns, and 1800 Villages. The principal of which are 1. Liege or Luyck, (in Latine Leodunum) situate in a pleasant Valley environed with Hills, the Meuse entering in two branches, accompanied with four lesser Riverets, which make in it many delightfull Islands. The compass of it is about four miles; the ordinary Buildings very fair, all built of Stone, the Bishops Palace a magnificent and sumptuous piece, the Churches in number forty, of which eight are Collegiate, 32 Parochial, all of them for their riches and beauty exceeding all in any City of France or Germany. Besides these, there are so many Convents, Monasteries and Religious Houses about the Town, that taking all together they amount to an hundred; all of them of such fair Revenues, so well endowed, and the Religious persons thereof of so great authority, that it is called the Paradise of Priests, and that deservedly. It is also an University of good antiquity, wherein were Students at one time 9 Kings Sons, 24 Dukes Sons, 29 Earls Sons, besides Barons and Gentlemen; the greatest part of which were Canons of the Church of S. Lambert, which is the Cathedral of the City. Yet notwithstanding it hath tasted of the malice of Fortune as well as others, being first destroyed by the Danes, then by the Normans, twice taken, and once destroyed by Charles of Burgundy, Anno 1468. Subject it is unto the Bishop as Lord temporal of it, from whom (being long since made an Imperial City) there lieth an appeal to the Chamber of Spire. 2. Dinant, upon the Meuse, near Namur, of very great Traffick, till destroyed by Charles of Burgundy in the same year with Liege; hardly recovered of which wounds, it was again sacked by King Henry the second of France, Anno 1854. 3. Musck, upon the Meuse or Maes also, a league from whence is the fair Nunnery of Thuren, of the same nature with that of Mons, and others spoken of before: the like to which there is near 4. Bissen, another Town of this Bishoprick; the Abbesses of each having the privilege of Coining both Gold and Silver. 5. Lootz, by the Dutch called Borcholm, in the County of Dioftein, made a County in the time of Charles the Great, the Title and possession of Ozier the Dane, so famous in the History of Gallen of France and others of the old Romanesque. 6. Franchimont, which gives the Title of a Marquess to the Bishop of Liege. 7. Centron, or St. Truden, a fair Town, so called of the Abbey dedicated to that Saint. 8. Huy or Hoey, so called of a violent River which there runs into the Meuse. 9. Tungres, the City of the Tongri, which together with the Eburones were once the inhabitants of this Tract, in which are still the ruins of a Temple consecrated to Hercules. Anciently it was an Episcopal See, translated hence to Masfricht, and at last to Liege, and in those times to great and of such renown that Attila the Hun destroyed in it 100 Churches; now but a very small Town, and not worth the mentioning but for these Antiquities. Eight leagues from hence amongst the shady Thickets of the Forest of Ardenne, is 10. that so celebrated Villages, and those famous hot Baths frequented from all the places in Europe, called the Spa; not so pleasant as wholesome, not so wholesome as famous. Yet are they good for sundry diseases, as the Tertian Ague, the Dropsie, the Stone, the Exasperation of the Lungs, the Sciatica, &c. They are of most virtue in July, because they are then hottest, and to such as taste them they relish much of Iron, from some Iron Mines, it seemeth, through which the waters run, which feed them. These Baths were of great fame in the time of Pliny, who doth thus describe them: Tungri Civitas fontem habet insignem plenis bullis stillantem ferrugine saporis, quod ipsum non nisi in fine potus intelligitur. Purgat hic corpora febres, tertianas discutit calculorumque vitia. So he lib. 31. c. 2. agreeably to the nature of them at this present time.

This Country (not taking the Dukedom of Bouillon, though now reckoned as a part thereof, into this account) followed the same Fortunes with the rest of Belgica, till the Conquest of it by the French, by whom it was made a part of the Kingdom of Lorraine in the division of which Kingdom between the Kings of France, and Germany it fell unto the share of the Kings of France, as lying almost wholly on the West or French side of the River Maes, which parted their possessions in that broken Kingdom. Won from Lotharius the French King (the last but one of the Caroline Race) by Otho the 2. it was by him made part of the Dukedom of Lorraine then by him erected, and continued as a part thereof, till sold by Gouffrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorraine to the Bishops of Liege, (of which more anon) since which time it hath been the Patrimony of those wealthy Prelates. As for the Bishoprick of Liege, it was founded at Tungres; as before was said, after the sackage of which City by Attila, it was removed Anno 498, by S. Servatius unto Masfricht. But the people of Masfricht having martyred S. Lambert their Bishop, Anno 710, by Hubert, his designed Successor, with the leave of Pope Constantine, it was translated to this place, and a Cathedral Church her founded by the name of S. Lambert. His Successors did so well husband their advantages that they did not only buy the Dukedom of Bouillon, but the City and Territory of Liege, sold unto Spentus and Oberius successively Bishops of it by Godfrey of Bouillon Duke of Lorraine, at his departure hence to the Holy Land: not much increased since that in Lands, though they be in Titles, the Bishop being stiled a Prince of the Empire, Duke of Bouillon, Marquies of Franchimont, Earl of Loetz, and Hasbain. Yet are not his ordinary Revenues above 30000 Ducats yearly, his Subjects living very well under him, at easie Rents, and growing for the most parts unto good Estates. An argument whereof may be, that when the Liegeois had rebelled against Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy (under whose Clientele they were as Dukes of Brabant) they bought their Peace of him at the Price of 600000 Florens of the Rhene, to be paid in six years. After which again Rebelling against Charles the Warlike, (as they have been observed to be the most rebellious City in Europe, excepting Gant) they were able to wage 30000 men; but not being able to withstand the Forces of their Lord Protector, they fell in to that miserable destruction spoken of before. Since that time they have lived with more moderation under the protection of the Princes of the House of Austria; but were counted Neutral in Quarrels betwixt the King of Spain and the States Confederate, as formerly between the Spaniards and the French, though many times they suffer in the contentions.

Southward hereof betwixt it and Luxemburg lieth the Dukedom of Bouillon, subject unto the Bishops of Liege, but a State distinct, and holden by a different Title. It taketh up a great part of that Country which more particularly and specially is called the Forest of Ardenne, with the Woods thereof in many places overshadowed; but not unfurnished of fair Towns and wealthy Villages. The principal of which are, 1. Loni, and 2. Maison-Cour, destroyed by Charles the fifth in his War against Robert Earl of Mark and Duke of Bouillon, but on the Peace ensuing repaired again. 3. Sausi, and 4. Floringe, Fiefs, as before is said, of the Dukedom of Bouillon, but possessed by the Sovereigns of Sedan, since the time that Robert Earl of Mark and Sovereign of Sedan had them in Marriage with Joan his Wife, the right Heir thereof, from whom came Robert Earl of Mark, the first Duke of Bouillon of that Family. The last a pretty Town, till destroyed by the French, in the Wars betwixt Henry and Philip the seconds, Kings of France and Spain, since passing in account as a principal Village. 5. Hierk, in the Forest of Ardenne, the cause of the great War betwixt Charles the fifth and Robert Duke of Bouillon, spoken of before, the Emperor, having passed sentence in behalf of the Embrires, who laid claim unto it, and Robert favouring the pretensions of the House of China. 6. Bouillon, built on the side of a Hill near the River Senoy, a fair large City, and beautified with a goodly Castle on the top of the said Hill, and commanding over a large and goodly Territory, so strong as well by Art as Nature, that before the use of great Ordnance it was held impregnable; much spoiled in the War betwixt Charles the Fifth and Robert of Mark, and tossed from one Master to another in a little time, for being taken from Earl Robert by the power of Charles, it was from him gotten by the French, Anno 1552, and finally restored to the Bishop of Liege by the Treaty of Cambrai, An. 1559, but without prejudice to the Claim and Title of the Prince of Sedan. So that there are no fewer than three distinct Families which at this time enjoy the Title of Dukes of Bouillon, that is to say, the Bishop of Liege, who hath precedence of Title, and the possession of the City, the House of de la Tour, who hold Floringe, Sausi, and some other pieces, and the Heirs-males of the collateral Line of the House of Mark, who hold Lumaine, Rechfort, and some other places, but of less importance.

This Dukedom, once a part of the great Earldom of Ardenne, in the division of that Estate betwixt the Children of Ricquie, Prince or Earl thereof, fell to the share of Godfrey his eldest Son, (Sedan with its appurtenances then belonging to it) with the Title of Earl of Ardenne and Bouillon. By Godfrey his Son it was united to the Dukedom of Lorraine, who succeeded into that Estate after Charles and Orho, and by another Godfrey the first Duke of Lorraine dismembered from it, and given in Dower with his Sister Ida, at her Marriage with Eustace Earl of Boulogne in Picardy. Of these was born the famous Godfrey, commonly called Godfrey of Bouillon, either because he was here educated, or in regard he was Duke hereof before he did attain to the Dukedom of Lorraine; who, to provide himself of necessaries for the Wars of the Holy Land, (to fortunately conveyed and conducted by him) sold first this Dukedom unto Orho, as afterwards the whole Country of Luyck-land to Spertius, Bishops of Liege successively, and their Successors for ever; which though accounted by most Writers for a part of Luyck-land, or of the Bishoprick of Liege, call it which you will, was notwithstanding held by those great Prelates as a State distinct, and governed under them by the Estates of the Country, from whose Sentence there lay no Appeal. The maintenance of which Privileges, on an Appeal made by the Embrires unto Charles the fifth, cost Robert Earl of Mark so dear, who had not long before purchased this Estate of his Brother Eberhard, Bishop and Cardinal of Liege, as was said before. The rest of the Story we have had already in our description of Sedan: we will now look upon the Princes which have born these Titles.

The Dukes of Bouillon of the House of Ardenne.

2. Godfrey II. Son of Godfrey the 1. who in the year 1004, by adoption of Duke Orho his Cousin, and the power of Henry the 2. Emperor, succeeded in the Dukedom of Lorraine.
- 1019 3. Gozelo, Brother of Godfrey the 2. Duke of Lorraine and Bouillon.
- 1044 4. Godfrey III. Son of Gozelo.

6. Godfrey IV. surnamed of Bouillon, Son of Eustace and Ida, on the death of his Uncle Godfrey, succeeded in the Dukedom of Lorraine, Anno 1078, and died King of Jerusalem. Going unto the Wars of the Holy Land, he sold this Dukedom to Orho Bishop of Liege and his Successors, Anno 1096, who did accordingly enjoy it till the year 1509 or thereabouts, when it was sold by Eberhard of Mark to his Brother Robert, of whose descent and Successors you may take this view in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Sovereigns of Sedan, and Dukes of Bouillon of the House of Mark.

1. Engelbert, the ninth Earl of Mark in Germany, by marrying with the Daughter and Heir of Aremberg, added Sedan, Jamais, &c. to the House of Mark.
2. Everhard, second Son of Engelbert by the Heir of Aremberg, Lord of Aremberg, Sedan, &c.
3. John, Son of Everhard, Earl of Mark, Lord of Aremberg, Sedan, &c.
4. Everhard III. Brother of John, Earl of Mark, &c.
5. John II. Earl of Mark, Son of Everhard the 2.
6. Robert of Mark, the 2. Son of John the 2. Lord of Sedan, his elder Brother Everhard succeeding in the Estates of Aremberg. He added Floringe and Sausi, Towns of the Dukedom of Bouillon, to his other pieces.
7. Robert II. Son of Robert the 1. Sovereign of Sedan, and Duke of Bouillon, which Dukedom he purchased of Everhard his Brother, Bishop and Cardinal of Liege.
- 1534 8. Robert III. Son of Robert the 2. one of the Marshals of France, Sovereign of Sedan, and Titular Duke of Bouillon.
- 1556 9. Henry Robert, Son of Robert the 3.
10. Robert-William, Son of Henry-Robert, zealous in the Reformed Religion, and a great follower of Henry of Vendosme King of Navarre, to whom, dying at Geneva, An. 1588, he bequeathed the care of his Estates.
11. Charlotte, the Sister of Robert-William, married by Hen. of Navarre (then King of the French) to Henry de la Tour, Viscount of Turenne.
12. Henry de la Tour, Viscount of Turenne in France, defended from the Heirs-general of Eustace Earl of Boulogne and Duke of Bouillon, by Marriage of the Lady Charlotte, and the gift of Henry the 4. of France, succeeded in the Sovereignty of Sedan and Title of Bouillon; a Protestant, and the Founder of the Schola Illustri in Sedan.

13. De la Tour, Son of Henry by one of the Daughters of William Prince of Orange, succeeded his Father in his Estates, but not in his Religion also, which, to ingratiate himself with the French King, he exchanged for Papistry, made thereupon one of the Marshals of France, and now living, Anno 1648.

9. BRABANT. 10. The MARQUISATE. and 11. MECHLIN.

These I have joined together, though distinct Estates, because they have a long time followed the same fortune, and that the two last do no otherwise differ from the first than the parts from the whole; the Marquisate and Mechlin being now reckoned as parts of Brabant, and included in it.

1. BRABANT is bounded on the East with Luyckland or the Bishoprick of Liege, on the West with the River Scheld and a part of Flanders, on the North with the Maes, which severeth it from Holland and Gelderland, and on the South with Hainault, Namur and a part of Luyckland: so called quasi Brackland, that is to say, a barren Land, as at first it was; or from the old Bravupantium, which Cesar placeth in this Tract, but from whether of the two is not yet determined.

The Air hereof is generally very wholesome and good, and the Soil naturally fruitful, excepting Kempenland, (being the parts thereof lying towards the North) which being barren of it self, is made indifferently fertile by keeping Cattel, Soiling the ground, and other arts of good Husbandry. The people live in most freedom, and are the best privileged of any in Belgium. A thing for which they are more beholden to the Prince's goodness, than their own great wits; being noted to be none of the wisest, especially as they grow in age, when most men learn wisdom. Brabanti, quò magis senescunt, eo magis insensescunt, as Erasmus.

The length hereof, from S. Gertruydenburg to Gembloers, North and South, is 22 Dutch or German miles; from Helmont to Bergen of Zoom, East & West, 20 of the same miles; the whole compass 80. Within which circuit are contained 26 walled Towns, and Villages with Parish Churches 718; of which the odd 18, called Frankes or Market-Towns, enjoy the Privileges of walled Towns or Cities, though unwall'd themselves.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Hertogen Bosch, or the Bosch, as the Dutch Bos le Duc; or Bolduc, as the French, and Sylva Ducis, or Boscom Ducis, as the Latin; call it each name derived according to their several Languages, from a pleasant Wood, belonging to the Dukes of Brabant, where the Town now stands, situate on a little River called Deuse, some two Leagues from the Maes, near the borders of Gelderland. A large and well-built Town, very strongly fortified, and of great trade for Clothing, here being made yearly in the time of Lewis Guicciardine 200000 Cloths, worth 200000 Crowns to the Clothier or Draper: Made an Episcopal See, An. 1559, the Cathedral, which is fixed in the Church of S. John, being fair and large, and beautified with one of the goodliest Dials in the Christian world. This is the principal Town of Brabant (properly and distinctly so called) comprehending under it the four Countries of Kempenlands, Maesland, Peelland, and Ostervick; and was taken by the Confederate States from the King of Spain, after a long and chargeable Siege, Anno 1628. 2. Tilmont, on the little River Gest, once chief of Brabant, but long since decayed. 3. Aerschot, on the little River Denne, which gives the title of Duke to them of the noble House of Croy, descended from the Kings of Hungary (of which we spake before at large when we were in Picardy) the Dukes hereof (advanced unto that honour by Charles the fifth) being men of greatest Revenue, and Authority of any in Belgium. 4. Bergen of Zoom, so called from the River Zoom upon which it is situate, about half a league from the influx of it into the Scheld, and not far from the Sea, which gives it a reasonable good Haven. A Town of great strength by nature, but more strongly fortified, famous for being made a Marquisate by Charles the fifth, An. 1553; more for the notable Resistance which it made to the Marquess Spinola, An. 1622. 5. Breda, upon the River Merck, a Town pleasantly seated, well fortified, and of great Revenue, having under it the Town and Territory of Steenberg, the Franchise of Rosendale, and the Seigniority of Princes, the Residence, Barony, and chief Town of the Order of Orange, from whom being taken by the Spaniards in the beginning of those wars, it was again recovered by some venturous Gentlemen, who hiding themselves in a boat covered over with Turf, were conveyed into the Castle, which they easily mastered; and made the Prince Lord of it again after retaken by the Spaniards, An. 1625, but now in the possession of its natural Owners, to whom it came by the right of the House of Nassau, by the Marriage of Engelbert the Earl of that House, with Mary, Daughter and Heir of Philip the last Lord hereof, about the year 1400. 6. Dijsk, on the River Denne, a good Town and invested with a goodly Territory, belonging to the Prince of Orange, whose Ancestors of the House of Nassau had it in exchange for some other Lands of the Duke of Cleve; and in right hereof he is Burgrave of the City of Antwerp. 7. Grinbergen, an ancient Barony, with a large Jurisdiction, defendable on the youngest Son only, after the manner of Burg English, as our Lawyers call it. 8. Gertruydenburg, standing on the Douze, not far from the influx of it into the Maes, the farthest town in the North of Brabant, where it joins to Holland; which makes it a matter of dispute betwixt those Provinces, to which of them it doth belong. A Town of great trade for Fishing, plenty of Salmon and Sturgeon being taken here, but of Shads especially, whereof 18000 are sometimes caught in a day, salted, and sent abroad into Foreign parts. It acknowledged the Prince of Orange for the Lord thereof, as doth also, 9. Grave, a good Town upon the Maes, bought by these Princes of the King of Spain without consent of the States, without whose approbation no part of the Domain is to be dismembered. 10. Maeftrecht, (in Latine Trajectum ad Mosam) so called of a Ferry over the Maes in former times; supplied now with a goodly Stone-Bridge in the place thereof. A fair and goodly Town, beautified with two Collegiate Churches, in one of which the Dukes of Brabant were always Canons; subject in part to the Bishop of Liege, and partly to the Duke of Brabant. The Children are subject to that Prince to whom the Mother was subject at the time of the Birth, without relation to the Father according to that Maxim of the Civil Law, Partus sequitur ventrem. And if a Stranger come to live there, he must declare to which of the two he will be subject. Yet is the Duke of Brabant the chief Sovereign of it, he only having the power of Coinage, and of granting Pardon to Offenders; and as a Town of this Dukedom it was besieged and taken by the Confederate States, Anno 1632.

Here it also within the limits of this Dukedom the Town and Seigniority of Ravestein, situate on the banks of the Maes, held by the Dukes of Cleve of the Duke of Brabant, but no otherwise subject; and on the same River the Town and Country of Horn, a Pief Imperial, beautified with a strong Castle and a goodly Territory, in which is Wiert, the Residence of the Earls of Horn, defended of the ancient House of Montmorency in France.

2. The MARQUISATE OF THE EMPIRE, so called because the farthest Bounds and Marches of the German Empire fronting on Flanders, which appertained unto the Sovereignty of the Crown of France, comprehended four of the best Towns in Brabant, with very large and spacious Territories adjoining to them: viz. 1. Louvain, on the River Dile, about four English miles in compass; but in that compass much of the ground is taken up with Vineyards, Gardens, Meadows and pleasant Fields, which make the situation far more delightful than if all built and peopled. It was the Mother-Town of Brabant, and sometimes gave the Title of an Earl to the Dukes hereof: afterwards was made an University by Duke John the 4. An. 1426. wherein are contained about 20 Colleges, such as they be, much privileged, and enriched with Penfions for publick Readers, by King Philip the 2. 2ly, Bruxels, (Bruxella) the Seat of the ancient Dukes of Brabant, and of the Dukes of Burgundy also, after they came to be Lords of those Countries; seated upon the Sinne, and other sweet Springs and Riverets, which make it one of the sweetest situations in all Europe, having withall a goodly Chancel made by Art from Brussels to the River Dille, and from thence to the Scheld, the charge whereof amounted unto 500000 Crowns. It is of the same compass with Louvain, the Building sumptuous, and the Town very rich, not only in regard that it is the ordinary Seat of the Prince or his Regent, and the Chancery for all Brabant and the Dutchy of Limbourg, but in regard of the rich Manufactures of Armour and Cloth of Arras, of Silks, Gold and Silver, which are there industriously pursued. 3. Nivelle, on the borders of Hainault, in a very rich and fruitful Soil, remarkable for the abundance of fine Linen which is therein made, but most of all for a very rich Nunnery (or rather a Nursery), of noble Ladies of the same nature with those of Mons and others before described. 4. Antwerp, situate on a goodly Plain on the River Scheld, above 17 leagues from the Sea, but furnished with eight Chancels, cut out of the River for the Transport of Commodities, one of the which is capable of 100 great Ships. The private Buildings are very handsome, but the publick sumptuous; the chief whereof were reckoned the Church of Notre-Dame, the Burse, the Town-house, and the House of the Easterlings or Eastern Merchants. Well peopled it is, and of so great Trade in former times, that it was held to be the richest Empory of the Christian World; the Commodities here bought and sold amounting to more in one month than those of Venice in two years. The causes of which sudden growth and encrease of Trading are said to be these. 1. The two Marts holden here every year, either of them during six weeks, in which time no man's person could be arrested, or his goods distrained. 2. The King of Portugal having in the year 1503 diverted the course of Merchandise from Alexandria and Venice to the City of Lisbon, kept here his Factories, and sent hither his Spices and other Indian Commodities; for which cause the Merchants in the year 1516 forsook Bruges in Flanders, and settled here. And 3. many of the Nobility and Gentry, during the long and bloody Wars betwixt France and Spain, forsook their Country-houses, and repaired hither: by means whereof Antwerp, in a very little time grew bigger by 3000 houses than it had been formerly. But as the growth hereof was sudden, so the fall sensible; occasioned through the yoking it with a Citadel by the Duke of Alva, which made Merchants afraid to resort any longer thither, as a place of little freedom and less security; but chiefly by blocking up the Haven and intercepting the Trade at Sea, by the more powerful Hollanders, which hath removed this great Traffick to Amsterdam and other Towns of their Country. So that now the chief support of it is the reputation which it hath of being an Imperial City, the place of receipt for the Kings Revenues, and a Bishops See founded here in the year 1559, which draweth hither some resort of Lawyers and Church-men.

3. The Seignoury of MECHLIN consisteth only of that City and a small Territory of 9 Villages adjoining to it. The City is seated on both sides of the River Dille, which ebberth and floweth to the Town and a league above it, and runneth through the very midst, maketh in it a number of small Islands, to the great ornament and commodity of it. A goodly Town containing seven Parish-Churches, besides the Cathedral, being the See of an Archbishop, founded here in the year 1559. Strong, in regard it may be easily drowned on all sides; and of great wealth, by reason of the many Manufactures of Linen, great Artillery of Brass and Iron, Bells, Painted works, and others of like use and ornament. And being situate in a manner in the Centre of Brabant, distant 4 Leagues from Antwerp, Louvain, and Bruxels, it was made by Charles the Warlike (who loved the place) the ordinary Seat of the great Council of State, to which Appeals are made from the other Provinces. But yet it was more beautiful in former times than it is at the present; the City being much defaced by firing 200 Barrels of Powder, An. 1546, and by the Sackage of the Spaniard, by whom it was taken by force, Anno 1572. Most memorable at this time for a famous Nuntery, like to that of Nivelle, wherein are sometimes 1600 Nuns, who when they please may leave their Cloister and be married. A Town though in Brabant, yet not of it, but a State distinct: for which cause many Women at the time of their Child-birth use to lay down their Bellies in some Village of Brabant, that their Children may be capable of the Privileges and Immunities of that Country. The principall of the Villages is named Leest or Heyst, pleasantly seated on an Hill, the residue of the Burroughs lying at the foot thereof. Both Town and Villages were the Patrimony heretofore of the noble Family of the Bertholds, which failing in the person of Gautier, slain in the Battel of Worancan by John Duke of Brabant, it fell the one half to the Bishop of Liege, who sold his moiety to John the 2. Duke of Brabant; the other to the Earl of Geldres, who in the year 1333 sold his part unto Lewis of Malain, Earl of Flanders. But he sold nothing but the Title; John the third Duke of Brabant having seized upon it, and added it to his Estate: the occasion of some quarrel between those Princes, composed by the Marriage of Lewis with the Heir of Brabant.

But to return again unto Brabant it self, the ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Aduatici and some part of the Tungri: it was accompted by the Romans a part of the Province of Germania Secunda, and by the French a Province of the Kingdom of East-France or Austrasia; the Southern parts thereof towards Hainault under the Government and Command of the Earls of Ardenne; the Northern parts lying towards the Sea, and terribly infested with the Depredation of the Danes and Normans, committed to the care of some principal Officers, whom they called Lords Wardens of the Marches. Theobert Son of Theodorick the first King of Austrasia, accompanied with Utile a Boiarian Prince, having repulsed these common Robbers, obtained for Utile, of his Father, the command of those Countries, and possession of a great part of them also, by the Title of Lord Marquess of Antwerp: the fourth from whom, called Arnulph, was the first Maior of the Palace (of this House) to the Kings of France, made as it were hereditary unto his Successors. By Dagobert the first, sole King of the French, that part of this Country which was under the Earls of Ardenne being taken from them, the whole Estate was conferred on Ansegisus, the Son of Arnulph, with the Title of Duke of Brabant. The actions and achievements of so many of them as were

Maiors

Maiors of the Palace we have already seen when we were in France. The whole Succession follows here in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Marquesses of Antwerp and Dukes of BRA-BANT of the German or Boiarian Race.

1. Utile, Son of Theodorick, the first Duke, and Nephew of Aldagerius, the last King of the Boiarians.
2. Hugobert, Son of Utile.
- 563 3. Asopert, the Son of Hugobert, and Husband of Phylbida, Daughter of Clotaire the first of France.
- 579 4. Arnoldus, the Son of Asopert.
- 601 5. Arnulph, Son of Arnoldus, the first Maior of the Palace of this Family.
- 641 6. Ansegisus, Son of Arnulphus, Marquess of Antwerp, and Maior of the Palace, by Dagobert the first made Duke of Brabant.
- 679 7. Pepin, surnamed the Fat, Son of Ansegisus, Successor to his Father in his Honours, Offices and Estates, and was herein succeeded by:
- 734 8. Charles, the base Son of Pepin, for his valiant acts surnamed Martel, there being no lawful Issue of his Father living.
- 741 9. Pepin II. surnamed the Short, Son of Charles Martel, having managed the Affairs of France from the death of his Father for the space of ten years, usurped the Kingdom, and was solemnly crowned King at Soissons by Boniface Archbishop of Mentz, on May-day, A. 751. The Dukedom of Brabant returning by this means to the Crown of France, continued a Province of that Kingdom, till the division of the French Empire among the Sons and Nephews of Lewis the Godly; when it was made a Member of the Kingdom of Lorraine. Not long before the fatal period of that Kingdom, having been many years before divided by the River Mense betwixt the Emperours of Germany and the Kings of France, (each taking to themselves the Title of Kings of Lorraine) it was by Lotharius the 3. of France, in whose share it lay, conferred on Charles his younger Brother, together with the Title of the Dukes of Brabant. But indeed this Donation proved of little worth, the greatest part hereof, together with the rest of that part of the Kingdom of Lorraine which of right belonged unto the French, being conquered by the Emperor Otho the 2. and by him added to the Empire. And yet this also fell out in fine to the profit of Charles, who being Cousin-german to this Otho the 2. by the Lady Gerburt, (Sister of Otho the 1. and Wife of Lewis surnamed Transmarine, K. of France, the Father of Charles) was by him invested into the great Dukedom of Lorraine, that Dukedom in the full latitude and extent thereof containing the modern Dukedoms of Lorraine, Gulick, and Brabant, with the Lands of Luyck, with parts of the Lands of Triers and Colen. Brabant at that time had the name of Bas (or Low) Lorraine, and as in memory thereof, there is a Court for criminal & civil Causes held at Gennap (one of the Franks or Market-Towns of Brabant) called La Court de Lorraine to this day: an Estate first erected, as before is said, by the Emperor Otho II. who giving it to the said Charles of France, reserved out of it, as a Dowry for his said Aunt Gerburt, the Towns and Territories of Louvain, Bruxels, Nivelle and Antwerp, lying on the Marches of his Dominions towards France, which (with reference perhaps to the old Marquise of Antwerp) he honoured with the title of Marquise of the holy Empire. A. 981. Gerburt, the Sister, and Heir of Otho, the Son of Charles above mentioned being put besides her hopes of that fair Inheritance by her Brother Otho, (who gave it to Geoffrey of Ardenne) succeeded her Grandmother, the first Gerburt, in the Towns and Territories of Louvain, Nivelle, and Bruxels, which the conveyed in Marriage to Lambert, one of the Sons of Regnier of Hainault, with the title of Earl of Louvain. Henry his Son, having made himself Master of Antwerp also, was by that means possessed of the whole Marquise, but still retained the title of Earl of Louvain. Godfrey the 6. Earl, having enlarged the bounds of his Dominions by the Conquest of the rest of the Country Godfrey & Baldwin, Dukes of Lorain, being then absent in the Wars of the Holy Land, was by the Emperor Henry the fifth (whose Sister he married) created the first Duke of Brabant. John, the first Duke of that name, added hereunto the Dutchie of Limbourg, and John the third, the Seignoury of Malins or Mechlin. How it became united to the House of Burgundy is to be seen in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Earls of Louvain and Dukes of BRA-BANT of the Race of Charlemagne.

- 1004 1. Lambert, one of the Sons of Regnier Earl of Hainault, made the first Earl of Louvain, in right of Gerburt.
- 1015 2. Henry the Son of Lambert, who took Antwerp, making it the head City of the Marquise of the holy Empire.
- 1046 3. Lambert II. Son of Henry.
- 1054 4. Henry II. Son of Lambert the second.
- 1068 5. Henry III. Son of Henry the second.
6. Henry IV. Son of Henry the third.
- 1096 7. Godfrey, surnamed Barthany, Brother of Henry the fourth, in right of his descent from Charles Duke of Lorain challenged the Country, and recovered it from the House of Ardenne, and finally by the Emperor Henry the fifth was created the first Duke of Brabant. An. 1108. Father of Adelise, the second Wife of our Henry the first, and of Josceline de Louvain, the Progenitor of the (late) Earl of Northumberland.
- 1140 8. Godfrey or Geoffrey II. Son of Godfrey.
- 1143 9. Godfrey or Geoffrey III. Son of Geoffrey the 2.
- 1183 10. Henry V. Son of Geoffrey the third.
- 1230 11. Henry the VI. surnamed the Good, Son of Henry the fifth.
- 1247 12. Henry VII. surnamed the Magnanimous, by whose Marriage with Sophia, Daughter of Lewis the sixth, Lantgrave of Thuringia, the Lantgravedom of Hassia came into this House invested in it in the person of Henry his Son by the said Sophia.
- 1260 13. John, Son of Henry the seventh, took in the Dukedom of Limbourg, and destroyed the potent Family of the Bertholds: his younger Brother Henry, by another Vener, succeeding in Hassia.
14. John II. Son of John the first, bought of the Bishop of Liege the moiety or one half of Mechlin.
- 1312 15. John III. Son of John the second, added the whole Estate of Mechlin to the Dukedom of Brabant.
- 1355 16. Joan, the eldest Daughter of John the third, married to Wenceslaus the first Duke of Luxemburg, but died without Issue.
- 1406 17. Anthony of Bargogne, Son of Philip the Hardy and the Lady Margaret his Wife, daughter of Lewis de Malain Earl of Flanders and of Margaret the Sister and Heir of Joan, after the death of the said Wenceslaus and Joan his Wife, succeeded in the Dukedom of Brabant, his elder elder Brother John giving way unto it at the request of their great Aunt Joan, the Proprietary of it.

- 1415 18. John IV. Son of Anthony by his first Wife Joan, Daughter of Walter an Earl of Saint Paul.
 1426 19. Philip, the second Son of Anthony and Brother of John the 4.
 1430 20. Philip II. called the Good, Duke of Burgundy, Son and Heir of John Duke of Burgundy, elder Brother of Anthony, on the death of his two Cousin-germans, John and Philip, succeeded in the Dukedom of Brabant, as the direct Heir of the Lady Margaret, Wife to Lewis de Malain, and Daughter of John the third, the last Duke of Brabant of the House of Louvain. Of whose Successors more in another place.

The Arms hereof are Sable, a Lion Or.

12. HOLLAND. 13. ZELAND.
 14. WEST-FRIESLAND.

HAVING thus spoken of those Provinces which still continue in Subjection to the K. of Spain, (except some few Towns in Flanders and Brabant before mentioned,) let us next look on those which have withdrawn their Obedience from him; beginning first with Holland and its Appendices, as of more power and consideration than all the rest. Which though distinct Provinces, and acting in their several capacities at the present time; yet having been always under the Command of the same Princes, they must be joined together in the Story of them, but shall be severally handled as to the Chorography.

HOLLAND hath on the East the Zuider-See, Utrecht and some part of Gelderland, on the West and North the German Ocean, on the South the Islands of Zeeland and some part of Brabant. So called, as some think, but with little reason, quasi Hols land, that is to say a woody Country; as others quasi Hollow-land, from the Bogs and Marshes and unfound footing on the same; and some will have it called quasi Hay-land, from the great quantity of Hay. But the learned Junius, not relishing any of the three, conceives that both his Country and the Isles of Zeeland, being planted by some Colonies of Danes and Normans (at the time of the Irruption of those Northern Nations) were called thus with reference to Sealand and Oeland, two Islands of the Baltick Sea, out of which they came. The Reader hath good choice, and may please himself.

The Country for the most part lieth very low, inasmuch that they are fain to fence it with Banks and Ramparts to keep out of the Sea, & to restrain the Rivers within their bounds; so that in many places one may see the Sea far above the Land, and yet replenished with those Banks; and it is wishal so fenny and full of Marshes, that they are forced to trench it with innumerable Dikes and Channels, to make it firm Land, and fit for dwelling; yet not so firm to bear either trees or much Grain. But such is the Industry of the people and Trade they drive, that having little or no Corn of their own growth, they do provide themselves elsewhere; not only sufficient for their own spending, but wherewith to supply their neighbours: having no Timber of their own, they spend more Timber in building Ships and fencing their Water-courses than any Country in the World: having no Wine, they drink more than the people of the Country where it groweth naturally; and finally, having neither Flax nor Wool, they make more Cloth of both sorts than all the Countries in the world, except France and England.

The present Inhabitants are generally given to Seafaring lives, so that it is thought that in Holland, Zeeland and West-Friesland, there are 2500 Ships of war and burthen. The Women are for the most part laborious in making Stuffs. Nay you will hardly see a Child of four years of age that is not kept to work, and made to earn its own living; to the great commendation of their Government. The greatest of their natural Commodities is Butter and Cheese; of which, besides that infinite plenty which they spend in their own Houses, and amongst their Garisons and Ships, they sell as much unto other Countries as comes to 100000 Crowns per annum. By which means, and by the greatness of their Fish-trade, spoken of before, they are grown so wealthy on the Land, and so powerful at Sea, that as Flanders heretofore was taken for all the Netherlands, so now Holland is taken generally for all the Provinces confederated in a League against the Spaniard.

The whole Compass of it is no more than 180 miles, no part thereof being distant from the Sea above three hours journey: and yet within that narrow Circuit there are contained no fewer than 23 walled Towns and 400 Villages, some situate in North, and others in South-Holland, as it stands divided. In South-Holland (being that part hereof that lieth next to Zeeland and the middle Channel of the Rhene passing from Utrecht unto Lyden) the principal Towns are, 1. Dordrecht Lutina Dordrechtum formerly the Staple for Rhenish Wines, a large, rich, and well-peopled Town; anciently joined to the firm land, but in the year 1421 rent from it by the violence of the Sea, and made an Island; of great command upon the Traffick of the Maas and the Waal, upon whose Confluence it stands, but of most note in these later times for an Assembly of Divines out of divers Countries following Calvin's Doctrine, for condemnation of the Lutheran or Arminian Tenets, concerning Universal Grace and Predestination, Anno 1618. 2. Gorckum, situate on the Waal, where it meeteth with the Linge: a Town of great Trade and Riches, by reason of a daily Market of Cheese and Butter brought hither in very great quantity; beautified anciently with a strong Castle and a fair Church, from the Steeple whereof one may behold 22 walled Towns, besides an infinite number of Villages. The Country is round about it called by that people Van Arckel, or the Land of Hercules, from an opinion that Hercules the German did there appoint his Camp, or rather from some Temple dedicated to him in the place whereof the Lords of this Trade, who from hence took the name of Arckel, (Arckels they are called in our Latine Writers) founded a Church unto the honour of the Virgin Mary, in the time of Thierrie the 2. Earl of Holland, by whom they were first settled in this Country. And here they flourished as Lords of Gorckum, Leerdam, and the parts adjoining, till the year 1416; when falling to John L. of Edmond, by Mary his Wife, Daughter of John of Arckel, and the last Lord hereof, and Mother of Arnold of Edmond D. of Geldres, it was by him sold to William the 6. Earl of Holland, and so again united unto that Estate. 3. Rotterdam, seated on a Dike or Channel called the Rotter, not far from which at a place named Rempen, the Leck, one of the three main branches of the Rhene; falleth into the Maas: a strong fair and well-traded Port: the birth-place of the learned Erasmus. 4. Schoonhoven, situate on the Leck, a fair Town having a commodious Haven. 5. Goude, one of the six principal Towns of Holland, rich and well fortified, seated on the River called Tijfel, which rising about Tijfelstein, spoken of anon, falleth into the Leck at a place called Tijfelmond, and therefore different from the branch of the Rhene so called, which giveth name to Over-Tijfel. On the same River also stand, 6. Oudwater, and 7. Tijfelstein, the last belonging properly to the Prince of Orange; the first of great Trade for making Cables and Cords for shipping. 8. Lyden, or Lucanum Batavorum, an University, founded Anno 1564. The Town consisteth of 41 Islands, to which they pass partly by Boats, partly by Bridges, whereof there are 144, and of them 104 built with Stone. Here is in this Town a Castle, said to have been built by Hengist the Saxon at his return out of England. And not far off stood the famous Nunnery of Nisburg, of the same nature with those of Monts and Nivelle before described; so liberally endowed, that 2000 persons did there daily receive relief. 9. Vianen, on the Leck, a Seignoury distinct from Holland, pertaining anciently to the Lords of Bruderode: and so was also 10. Huesden, a good old Town, once beautified with a fair Castle, and a goodly Territory, but belonging to the Earls of Cleve, of which House it had Lords of his own, as acknowledging no subjection to the Earls of Holland; from the year 850, or thereabouts, to the year 1290, at which time Theodorick the 9, of Cleve at a merry meeting transferred the Sovereignty thereof to Florence Earl of Holland, of that name the fifth. Finally, having continued in the possession of 20 Lords of that Family, on the expiration of that Line in the person of John the 9. dying without Issue, Anno 1334, it was made a member of this Earldom (after some short disputes with the Dukes of Brabant, claiming it by a Relinquation of the last Lord John by William of Bavaria Earl of Holland, and Hainault, Anno 1361, or thereabouts. 11. Leerdam, upon the River Linge, which together with Tijfelstein, before mentioned, fell unto Philip Prince of Orange in right of his descent from the Earls of Bueren, 12. Delft, a Town of great Trade for Cloathing, but more by reason of the Cloth of England brought thither in great quantities by the English Merchants, than for any great store of their making; by reason of the concourse which that Trade brings with it, rich, large and well built, beautified with Spacious Streets and goodly Churches; the birth place of that monstrous Heretick David George, who called himself King, and Christ immortal, as is before said.

In that part thereof which is called North Holland, lying betwixt the middle Channel of the Rhene and the Zuider See, the Towns or Cities of most importance are, 1. Alkmaar, encompassed with deep Fens and Marshes; a rich Town, in regard of the great plenty of Butter and Cheese which is made about it, more than in any place of Holland, and famous for the defeat which the Duke of Alva received before it. For he in the beginning of the Low-Country Troubles, having with the loss of 20000 of his own men forced Harlem, laid his Siege round about this Town. Had he left any way for the Soldiers to have fled thence, the Town had been abandoned; but having invironed them round, he put them to such a resolution, or desperation, (chuse you whether) that manfully they resisted three of his Assaults, and in the end made him depart with great loss, as well of his Soldiers, as his reputation. 2. Amsterdam, a very fair Haven-Town, where divers times at one tide 1000 Ships of all sorts have been seen to go out and in. So truly said a modern Poet.

Quod Tagus atque Hermus vehit, & Pactolus, in unum
 Verè hunc congestum dixeris esse locum.

What Tagus, Hermus, and Pactolus bear,

One would conjecture to be heap'd up here.

The people thereby are so rich, that if a Fleet of 300 Sail should come into the Port fraught with all kind of Commodities, in five or six days they would be ready to buy all the Lading. Situate it is on the Gulf called the Tie, and the Dike or Channel called Ansel, whence it hath the name of Amsteldam, in Latine Amstelodamum, built upon Piles like Venice, and resembling it in so many points, that it may justly be called the Northern Venice. It was first fortified with Towers and Ramparts by Giselbert of Amstel, about 300 years ago: but being burnt, through the envy of its neighbours, it began to be walled, Anno 1482. Grown to this wealth since the diverting of the Trade from Antwerp hither, and for that cause inhabited by men of all Nations and of all Religions, and those not only tolerated and connived at in private, but openly and freely exercised without any dislike. A greater Confusion (in my mind) than that of Babel, this being of Religions; that of Languages only. 3. Harlem on the Lake called Harlemmeer, the greatest Town of all Holland; and the second for dignity, well built, and very pleasantly situated amongst many goodly Meadows, near a delightful Forest; and round about invironed with wealthy Villages; famous for the invention of Printing, invented here, but perfected at Memz in Higher Germany; the first Book which was ever printed being Tully's Offices. 4. Nacarden, on the Zuider-See, fortified with a strong Castle, held of the Earls of Holland by the Dukes of Branswick, to whom it anciently belonged. 5. Enchusen, on the very point of the Gulf of Zuider-See, opposite to Friesland, from which not distant two leagues. A Town of great consequence to the Prince of Orange in the first revolting of these Countries from the King of Spain. For siding with him in that war, and standing conveniently to obstruct the passages by Sea unto Amsterdam, it compelled that City in short time, by stopping all supply's of Victuals and other necessities, to yield it self unto the Prince. 6. Horn, on the same Gulf also, a rich Town, with a very good Haven, and of so great strength by reason of the multitude of Dikes and Channels which are round about it, that it seems impregnable. 7. Edam, upon the same Gulf of Zuider-See, remarkable for the great number of ships which are built yearly in it, and an incredible number of the best Holland Cheeses made in the Country round about it. 8. Middelhlick, on the Ocean, seated in the best Country of Holland for the feeding of Cattel; unwall'd, but enjoying all the Privileges which a walled Town hath, and fortified with a right strong Castle.

The chief of the Holland Villages is the Hague, or 's Graven Hague, in Latine Haga Comitum, because formerly the Court and residence of the Earls of Holland, who had here a very large and beautiful Palace, founded by Earl William King of the Romans; and therein a choice and excellent Library gathered together by John Haire a Canon Regular of this place and by him given to Charles the fifth. In former times the Residence of the Council for the Province of Holland, as it is now of the Commissioners or Delegates of the Confederate provinces called by the name of the States General. It is now much increased in Buildings of what it was; and yet so great in the time of Lewis Guicciardine, that it then contained 2000 households. The Inhabitants will not wall it, as desiring to have it rather accounted the chief Village in Europe, than the second City. The other Villages of note, 2. Edmond, 3. Bruderode, 4. Wassenaer, which anciently gave names to three noble Families; of which none so illustrious and renowned as that of Edmond, descended lineally from Radbold, Son of Adgillis the King of the Frisons, the first Lord of Edmond, who died Anno 791. Advanced by Marriages to the Dukedom of Gelderland, the Seignouries of Tijfelstein and Bueren. And finally, they were made Earls of Edmond by Maxilian the Emperor, Anno 1592. But both his House and that of Wassenaer being now extinct, there is none left but that of Bruderode for ought I can learn. Near to the last stood the famous Fortrefs called Arx Britannica, built by Caligula in memory of his great Battell upon this Shore. For making shew of a Voyage into Britain, to subdue that Island; he boarded his Galley, embattell'd his Soldiers, caus'd the

Trumpets,

Trumpets to sound, gave them the Signal, and then Commanded them to gather Cockles. Which Tower or Fortrefs was at the fall of the Roman Empire overwhelmed by the Sea; the Ruines whereof at a dead low water are still to be seen.

Besides these places on the firm Land or Continent, there are some Islands which pertain to the State of Holland, called by the general name of Voorn, because situate directly against Holland Voorn, signifying as much as before, or in old English bevoerne, but known by their distinct and more proper names of Somersdike, 2. Gaurde, 3. Pier-schille, so called of their principal Towns, and 4. Voorn specially so named, the chief of them all, being of a fat and fruitful Soil, and plentiful of most sorts of Grain. The principal Towns whereof are, 1. Briel, (which we call the Brill) a strong Town, and the first that revolted against the Spaniards, Anno 1572. Cautionary to the English with the Town of Flushing; chosen by them in regard of the great command it hath upon the passage to Gertruydenberg and the rest of Brabant, as also to Delft, Dort, and Rotterdam, the greatest Towns of Trade in the South of Holland. 2. Gerdriet, a small Town but having a Jurisdiction over many Villages. There are also on the North side of Holland the Isles of Wierogen and Texel; of which little memorable, but that the last is furnished with a safe and capacious Bay for receipt of Shipping.

One special accident concerning Holland I cannot overpass in silence, namely, how Margaret Countess of Hennenberg, and Sister to William King of the Romans, being of the age of 42 years, was delivered at one birth of 365 children, the one half Males, the other Females, the odd one an Hermaphrodite; all christened at the Church of Loofduynen, not far from the Hague, by the names of John and Elizabeth, in two Basins still to be seen in the said Church, by Guido the Suffragan of Utrecht; all which immediately after died, and with them the Mother.

The Arms of Holland of it self, as a State distinct, are Or, a Lion Gules.

ZELAND consisteth of seven Islands, the remainder of 18, the rest whereof the Sea hath swallowed, and in them 300 inhabited Towns. It is severed from Flanders with the left branch or arm of the Scheld, which they call Honte, and on the East from Brabant with the right branch of the said River, which still keeps his name; on the North from Holland with the Gulf called the Vlack, and on the West with the main Ocean from the Kingdom of England. So called, as some say, quasi Sea and Land; but as Junius rather thinks, from Seland, an Island of Denmark, as before was noted.

The Country is generally more fruitful than the neighbouring Brabant, producing great quantity of excellent Corn, plenty of Coriander, and abundance of Madder, used in Dying: the Soil also is very rich in Pasture, but low and marthy, which makes the Air to be very unhealthy; and the whole destitute both of Fresh water and Wood, the want of which last is supplied with Coal out of England and Scotland, or by Turf digged amongst themselves but very sparingly, for fear of weakening the Seabanks.

The whole containeth 8 Towns, and 100 Villages. The Islands which remain are commonly divided into the Western, and the Eastern, according as they lie with reference to the River Sheld. The Western Islands are four in number: That is to say,

1. WALCHEREN, (Valachria in Latine) lying to the North of Sclays in Flanders; the richest and most populous of all this Province, in compass 13 Dutch, or 40 Italian miles. The principal Towns of which are 1. Mid- deburg, seated on a Creek of the Sea, well walled and fortified, the Streets spacious, the Houses and Churches well built, inhabited by wealthy Merchants and industrious Traders, and of late times (since the removing of the English Trade from Amwerp) a most flourishing Empory: So called because built in the midst of the Island; or because built (as saith Ortelius) by Prince Zelandus, of whom this Province was thus named, in honour of his Grandfather Metellus, and by him called Metelli Burgum.

2. FLUSHING, of great note for its good Port and invincible strength. One of the first Towns which the Low-Country men took from the Spaniards by the diligence of Voorst a Seaman and Monseur de Berland, then the Bay-liff thereof, and not long after put into the hands of the English as a Town of Caution; the first Governour of it being the renowned Sir Philip Sidney. A poor Town then it was, God wot, now the Key of the Netherlands, without whose license no Ship can pass either to or from the City of Amwerp; inasmuch that if the Duke of Alva in the beginning of his Government had bestowed that pains in the fortifying this and others of the Maritime Towns, as he did in the strengthening Amwerp and some Midland Cities, he had in all probability hindered the remediless Revolt of these flourishing Countries. Not far off standeth the Fort called the Rammekins, once Cautionary to the English also, together with the Briel, the chief Town in the Isle of Voorn, (an Isle of Holland) all three being taken from the Spaniards, Anno 1572, made Cautionary to Queen Elizabeth Anno 1585, and finally surrendered by King James to the States United, Anno 1616. Robert Lord Lisle (afterwards created Earl of Leicester) the Brother of Sir Philip Sidney, then Governour of Flushing. 3. RAMME, or Armenyden, an unwalled Town, but beautified with one of the goodliest and most frequented Havens in all the World; out of which one may sometimes see 500 Sail of Ships of great burthen set forwards on their Voyages to several parts. 4. Vere or Camfere, seated in the North part of the Island, which once gave Title to a Marquess, and from which the Noble Family of the Veres (now, and of long time Earls of Oxford) took denomination. So as it is no marvel that so many of that Family have ventured their Estates and lives in the Wars of his Country, being their Grandmother in a manner, or their primitive Parent, from whence they were transplanted into England.

2. SOUTH-BEVERLAND, situate betwixt Walcheren and Brabant, the greatest of the Isles of Zeland; heretofore 20 Dutch miles in compass, but now much diminished by the rage and fury of the Sea, by which the Town and Seignoury of Bourselle, with all the Countries round about it, was swallowed up, Anno 1532. That which remains hath in it many goodly Woods and pleasant Thickets, full of Fowl and wild Beasts for Hawking and Hunting. Chief Towns here are 1. Romerswale, seated on the East toward Bergen op Zoom, severed at the same time from the rest of the Island, and made an Island of it self, defended with continual charge from following the sad fate of the Town of Borselle. 2. Goes, or Tergoes, on the Northern Coast, a strong Town, well privileged, and the only walled Town in all the Island.

3. NORTH-BEVERLAND, lying betwixt South-Beverland and the Isle of Schouwen, in former times esteemed the Paradise of Zeland, and having in it a proper Town called Chort Cheen, but so destroyed by the Sea-breach, spoken of, before, that there is nothing now remaining but a few poor Villages.

4. WOLFERSDIKE, lying betwixt the two Beverlands, the smallest of the Western Islands, as having in it no more than two Villages but replenished with good store of Pasture.

And

And these are all which fall in the division of the Western Islands, so called because they lay Westward of the River Sheld; as those which they call the Eastern Islands, on the East thereof. Of which last there are three in number.

1. SCHOWEN, lying on the South-West of Holland, so near unto North-Beverland in former times, that the Inhabitants could talk together from one shore to the other: but now the Sea hath set them at a greater distance. It containeth in compass fix Dutch miles. Chief Towns wherein are, 1. Zierikzee, the ancientest Towns of all Zeland, once beautified with a fair and commodious Haven, now choaked up with Beach, yet still reputed for the second Town of all the Province: the whole Trade thereof consisting in Salt and Madder, of which it yields good plenty. Most famous for the birth of Levinus Lemnius, that renowned Philosopher and Physician. 2. Brouwers-Haven, inhabited only by Fishermen, not else remarkable.

2. DUVELAND, so named from the multitude of Doves or Pigeons, situate between Schouwen and Tolen, in compass about 4 Dutch miles. It hath no good Town in it, but only Country Villages and Gentlemens Farms. Surrounded by the Sea, Anno 1530, but by the industry and diligence of Adolph of Burgundy and the Lord of Bosforen in Flanders recovered again, and at the excessive charge of the people hitherto preserved.

3. TOLEN, so called from the chief Town of the Island, where the Earls Toll was wont to be paid, whence it had the name, is situate over against the North-west of Brabant, from thence disjoined by a narrow Creek or Arm of the Sea: the second Town of note being called S. Martins Dike, walled, but not otherwise considerable.

Agreeable to the quality of this Country of Zeland are the Arms thereof, being Or, a Lion Gules rising out of a Sea wavy Argent and Azure.

WEST-FRIESLAND, hath on the East Groening-Land and a part of Westphalen in High Germany, on the South Over-Tysel and the Zuider-See, on the North and West the main Ocean. The Country is generally moorish and full of Fens, unapt for Corn, but yielding great store of Pasture: which Moorishness of the ground make the Air very foggy and unhealthy, nor have they any Fewel wherewith to rekindle it, (except in that part of it which they call Seven-Walden) but Turf and Cow-dung, which adds but little to the sweetness of an unfond Air. Nor are they better stored with Rivers, here being none proper to this Country, but that of Leewards, the want of which is supplied by great Channels in some places, which do not only drain the Marshes, but supply them with water: Which notwithstanding, their Pastures do afford them a good breed of Horses fit for service; plenty of Beeves both great and sweet, the best in Europe, next these of England; and those in such a large increase, that their Kine commonly bring two Calves, and their Ewes three Lambs at a time.

The Country is divided into three parts. In the first part, called WESTERGEE, lying towards Holland, the principal Towns are, 1. Harlingen an Haven-Town upon the Ocean, defended with a very strong Castle. 2. Hindolopen, on the same Coast also. 3. Staveren, an Haven-Town, opposite to Enchusen in Holland, the Town decayed, but fortified with a strong Castle, which secures the Haven. 4. Franecker, a new University, or a Schola Illustris, as they call it. 5. Snack, in a low and inconvenient situation, but both for largeness and beauty the best in this part of the Province, and the second in esteem of all the Country. In OESTERGEE, or the East part, lying towards Groening-Land, the Towns of most note are, 6. Leeuwarden, situate on the hinder Leewards the prime Town of West-Friesland, and honoured with the Supreme Court and Chancery hereof, from which there lieth no Appeal: a rich Town, well built, and strongly fortified. 7. Dockum, bordering upon Groening, the birth place of Gemma Frisius. In SEVEN-WOLDEN, or the Country of Seven Forests, so called from so many small Forests joyning near together, is no Town of note, being long time a Wood-Land Country, and not well inhabited till of late. The number of the walled Towns are 11 in all; of the Villages or Burroughs, 345.

To this Province belongeth the Isle of Schellink, the shores whereof are plentifully stord with dog-fish, took by the Inhabitants in this manner. The men of the Island attire themselves with Beasts Skins, and then fall to dancing, with which sport the fish being much delighted, make out of the waters towards them; Nets being pitched presently betwixt them and the water. Which done, the men put off their disguises, and the frightened Fish hastning toward the Sea are caught in the Toils.

Touching the Frisons, heretofore possessed of this Country, we shall speak more at large when we come to East-Friesland, possessed also by them, and still continuing in the quality of a Free Estate, governed by its own Laws and Princes: here only taking notice that the Arms of this Friesland are Azure, semy of Billets Argent, two Lions Or.

The ancient Inhabitants of these three Provinces were the Batavi and Caniofates, inhabiting the Island of the Rhene, situate between the middle branch thereof and the Wael, which now containeth South-Holland, Utrecht, and some part of Geldres; the Frisi, dwelling in West-Friesland and the North of Holland; and the Mattiaci, inhabiting in the Isles of Zeland. By Charles the Bald these Countries, being almost unpeopled by the Norman Piracies, were given to Thierrie, Son of Sigebert, a Prince of Aquitain, with the Title of Earl: his Successors acknowledging the Sovereignty of the Crown of France, till the time of Arnulph the 4. Earl, who turned Homager to the Empire. In John the 2. they became united to the House of Hainaut, and in Williams the 3. to that of Bavaria; added to the Estates of the Duke of Burgundy in the person of Duke Philip the good, as appeareth by his Successors on of

His Successors we shall meet with shortly in another place.

15. UTRECHT. 16. OVER-YSSSEL.

THE Bishoprick of UTRECHT, I mean the temporal Jurisdiction and Estate thereof, contained once all that Tract of ground which now makes up the Provinces of Utrecht, Over-Yssel, and Groening. But Groening was long since dismembered. Utrecht and Over-Yssel remaining parts thereof till the year 1528, then added to the rest of the Belgick Provinces by Charles the 5.

UTRECHT hath on the East Gelderland, on the West, North and South, environed with Holland. The Country is very fruitful, much drier than Holland, and so fitter for all sorts of Grain. It containeth 70 Villages, and 5 walled Towns: that is to say, 1. Wyck at Duerfede, situate on the middle Channel of the Rhene, where it diverteth into the Leck; well built, and fortified anciently with a good Castle; supposed to be the Batavodurum spoken of by Tacitus, the Mansion at that time of the second Legion. 2. Rhenen, upon the same branch or Channel, whence it hath the name: about which is digged abundance of Turf for fuel. 3. Amerfort, on the River Em, (called in Latine Amisus) a fair Town, well peopled. 4. Montfort, upon the Yssel, pleasantly seated, and of great strength, as being anciently a Frontier-Town against the Hollanders. 5. Utrecht, situate on the middle Channel of the Rhene: first called Antonina, from one of the Antonines of Rome; but Dagobert King of France gave it the name of Trajectum (or Utrajectum), we now call it Utrecht because there was at that time the common Ferry over the River. The Town is large, beautiful, and very sumptuously built, having in it many goodly Churches of which 5 were anciently Collegiate; besides two famous Monasteries of noble Women, such as those spoken of elsewhere: the private houses well contrived, most of them having goodly Cellars, vaulted with wonderful art and skill, to which the people may resort in all times of danger. Sometime the Seat-Royal of Radboud, King of the Frisons, then of the Bishops; honoured of old with a Jurisdiction for the parts adjoining, and now the principal of this Province. A City so miraculously seated amongst walled Towns, that a man may go from hence in one day to any one of 50 walled Towns or Cities, thence equally distant; or to any one of 26 Towns to Dinner; and come home to bed.

OVER-YSSSEL, in Latine Transsalana, so named from its situation beyond the Yssel, is bounded on the East with Westphalen, on the West with the Zuider-See, on the North with West-Friesland, on the South with Gelderland. The Country is very plain and without Hills, but wet and moorish affording excellent good Pasturage, and not defective in Corn. It is divided into three parts, that is to say, Twent, confining upon Westphalen; Yssel-land, on the River Yssel; and Drenth, beyond the River Veicht: in all which are contained 11 Towns, and 100 Villages. The principal of which are, 1. Deventer, on the River Yssel, strong and well fortified, and withal beautiful and well peopled; an Hanse-Town, and the chief of all this Province; first taken for the States by the Earl of Leicester, then Governour of those Countries for Queen Elizabeth, Anno 1586, treacherously re-yielded to the Spaniards by Sir William Stanley, but in the year 1590 again recovered by the States. 2. Swoll, standing on a little River which runs into the Vidre, anciently fortified with a double Ditch and very strong Ramparts, an Hanse-Town; as is also 3. Camden, situate on the left Shore and fall of the Yssel into the Zuider-See, a fair and large Town, and of very great strength by reason of those inaccessible

Marshes

Marshes amongst which it is situate. These three are in that part hereof which is called Yssel-land, and by some Saland, by whom (erroneously) it is supposed to be the Country of the ancient Sali. In that part hereof which is called Twent we have the Towns of 4. Oldenzeel, 5. Enschede, 6. Delden, 7. Ameloo; of which little memorable. And in that of Drenth, the Town and Castle of Valenkoven, standing upon the Zuider-See, well served with all sorts of Victuals; and for that cause made the ordinary Residence of the Governour and supreme Council for the whole Province.

The ancient Inhabitants of these two Provinces were some parts of the Baravi and Frisi minor, for that of Utrecht, the Bracteri and (as some say) the Sali; in Over-Yssel. Both Provinces belonging anciently to the Episcopal See of Utrecht, founded by Dagobert King of France, who endowed it with great Lands and Territories; the first Bishop being Willibald, an Englishman; who converted these parts to Christianity. His Successors grew to so great power that they were able to bring 40000 men into the Field, and with great courage did maintain their Estates and Patrimony against the encroaching Earls of Holland; but at the last having continued for the space of 900 years, Henry of Bavaria Bishop hereof, being extremely distressed with War by the Duke of Gelder, and driven out of the City of Utrecht by his own Subjects, (perhaps upon some humour of Reformation) alienated all the Temporalities of his Bishoprick to Charles the fifth, An. 1527. and the next year the Imperialists by one of Ractions were let into Utrecht at what time both the Estates of the Country, and Pope Clement the 7. confirmed the Alienation made by the Bishop. After which solemn Acts of theirs the Emperor caused himself to be invested in this Estate by the States of the Empire, (for Utrecht was of old an Imperial Fief,) and for the better Government and Administration of it, divided it into two Provinces as it still continueth. But what this Bishop lost in Power his Successors not long after gained in Title; the Bishop of Utrecht being made an Archbishop or Metropolitan, Anno 1561. But by reason of the change of Religion which was then working, and the falling off of these Countries, which soon after followed, he had but little joy in his new Preferment.

17. GELDERLAND. 18. ZUTPHEN, and 19. GROENING.

THE Dukedom of Gelderland, at such time as it was first taken in by Charles the fifth, contained under it the Dutchie of Gelders, properly & specially so called, the Earldom of Zutphen, & the Town & Seignoury of Groening, held by distinct Titles and governed ever since their union with the Belgick Provinces as distinct Estates. GELDERLAND is bounded on the East with Cleves-land and the Earldom of Zutphen, on the West with Holland and Utrecht, on the North with Over-Yssel and the Zuider-See; and on the South with Brabant and the Land of Gulick. The Country is flat, having few hills in it, but many pleasant and commodious Woods, especially that called Echterwald, of Corn and Cattel very fruitful.

The whole Country is generally divided into two parts, 1. The Veluwe, contained within the Zuider-See, the middle Channel of the Rhene, and the Yssel; the barer of the two, and the worse inhabited; the people hereof preferring Health before Wealth, as in other places; but affording a more pure Air, and a pleasanter dwelling than the other; the Woods and Forests well replenished with most kinds of Game. The Betuwe (so called of the Baravi, who possessed these parts) intercepted betwixt the said middle Channel of the Rhene and the Wael, exceedingly fruitful in Corn, and of so excellent a Pasturage for the feeding of Cattel, that in the year 1570 there was a Gelderland Bull sold in Amwerp which weighed 3200 pounds.

In both Divisions (not reckoning in the County of Zutphen) are contained 300 Villages, and 16 walled Towns; besides some fortified of late since the wars began. The chief whereof are, 1. Nimwegen, (in Latine Novesium) an Imperial City, ordained by Charles the Great to be one of the three Seiges of the Empire for their outer parts; the other two being Thionville in Luxemburg, and Aix of Aken in the land of Gulick. And, as a Town Imperial it had anciently the privilege of Coining money; for which and other Freedoms or immunities indulged unto it, the people did no other Service to the Emperours than once a year to send a man to Aix or Aquilgrave with a Glove full of Pepper. But the Town being sold to the Gelders by William Earl of Holland and King of the Romans for 21000 Marks of Silver, Anno 1248, the power of Coining fell to those Princes; and yet the Town was brought to do a better Service than formerly it had done at Aix. The Town is high-mounted on the top of an Hill, the Wael, which is there large and deep running at the foot of it; rich, great, and populous, having besides the modern Fortifications an ancient Castle, with so goodly a Prospect, that from thence one may behold the best part of the Country; built, as some say, by Julius Caesar, to command those parts. Under the Jurisdiction of it are, 2. Tiel, and 3. Bomel, two walled Towns; both situated on the Wael, both strong, and having many rich Villages under their command, and 4. Ghent, on the Wael also, an unwalled Town, but having all the Privileges which the walled Towns have. Not far off, at the first meeting of the Wael and the Maas, stands the strong Fort of S. Andrews, raised by the Archduke Albert to command the passage of those Rivers; but in the year 1600 taken in by Maurice Count of Nassau, (after Prince of Orange) and ever since garrisoned by the States to secure that passage. 5. Rearmond, seated on the mouth of the Kuer, where it falleth into the Maas; a beautiful and well-peopled City, strong by Art and Nature, and seated in a fruitful Country, heretofore of the Diocess of Leage, (as Nimwegen anciently of Colen) but made a See Episcopal by King Philip the 2. Anno 1559. This is the second capital City of Gelderland, and hath under the Jurisdiction of it 6. Venlo, a strong Town on the Maas, in which the Duke of Cleves yielded himself to Charles the fifth, An. 1542. 7. Geldres, heretofore of such reputation, that it gave name to all the County, and well it doth deserve to do so still, being the only Town in all this Dukedom which neither first nor last hath been won by the Hollanders, but still preserved themselves in their Obedience to their natural Princes. 8. Straelen, or Stralen, a well-fortified piece; but which, according to the chances of War, hath often changed its Masters. 9. Arnhem, the Arenacum of Tacitus, and in those times the Mansion of the tenth Legion, situate on the Rhene, not above a mile from the great Channel, which Drusus, to keep his Souldiers from idleness, caused them to dig, to let the waters of the Rhene into those of the Yssel, called therefore by the Ancients Fossa Drusiana, by the Modern Yssel-Dort. The Town is large and well built; the ordinary Residence heretofore of the Dukes of Gelderland, who had here their Chancery, and other supreme Courts of Justice. This is the third Capital City of Gelderland, (anciently of the Diocess of Utrecht) and hath under the Jurisdiction of it, besides divers Villages, 10. Wageningen on the Rhene, the same which Tacitus calls Vada. 11. Harderwick on the Zuider-See, burnt to the ground Anno 1503, but since re-edified, and now more strong and and beautiful than ever formerly. 12. Hatem, upon the Tissel, a good Town of War, but not else observable.

Within the Limits of this Dukedom stands the Town and County of Culemburg, erected into a County by King Philip the 2. by reason of the fair Territory which belonged unto it; formerly held in Fee of the Dukes of Gelderland, but otherwise not reckoned as a Member of it. 2. The Town and Earldom of Bueren, situate on the River Linge, having a strong Castle anciently, and a goodly Territory, holden immediately of the Empire, as a Rici Imperial. It was first made an Earldom in the person of Frederick Lord of Egmond, Brother's Son to Arnold of Egmond, the sixth Duke of Geldres, created Earl of Bueren by Maximilian the first, An. 1492. which Frederick was Grandfather of the valiant Maximilian of Egmond Earl of Bueren, who died Anno 1548. after whose death it fell at last to Philip of Nassau, eldest Son of William Prince of Orange, and of Ann the Daughter and Heir of the said Maximilian upon the death of the said Ann, Anno 1551.

ZUTPHEN, accounted formerly for the fourth capital City of Gelderland, now a distinct Province of it self, is bounded on the East with Westphalen, on the West with that part of Gelderland which is called Veluwe, on the North with Over-Issel, on the South with Cleveland. It containeth 8 walled Towns, besides many Villages; that is to say, 1. Potsum, standing on the old Tissel, rising out of Westphalen. 2. Doenburgh, where the old Tissel falleth into the new Tissel, or the Trench called Fossa Drusiana, communicating thereunto its name. 3. Bronckhorst, a County of it self, which anciently had its particular Government. 4. Lochem, upon the River Berickel. 5. Tpserenberg, a Town and County. 6. Groll, taken by the Prince of Orange, for the States Confederate Anno 1627. 7. Braderpord, a Town of War, and subject to the change of Masters, as such places are. 8. Zurphen, or Zuiden, so called of the Southern situation of it amongst the Fens, on the right Shore of the Tissel, where it receiveth into it the River Berickel, which runs through the Town. A Town indifferently well built, as well for private as publick Edifices; a distinct State in Civil matters, but in Spiritual subject (in former times) to the Bishop of Munster. A thing observable and not to be paralleled elsewhere, that the four chief Towns and Quarters of one Province only should appertain (as here in Gelderland) to four several Dioceses. Of which there may some reason be assigned for Zurphen, in regard it is a State more ancient than that of Gelderland it self, and not depending anciently on the fortunes of it; united to it by the Marriage of Orho of Nassau, the first Earl of Gelderland, with Sophia, Daughter and Heir of Wickman the last Earl of Zurphen. So as this Earldom ended when that first began. After this it continued subject to the Earls and Dukes of Geldres, till the revolt of Holland and the other Provinces from the King of Spain; at what time it was besieged for the States by the Earl of Leicester: at the Siege whereof fell that gallant Gentleman Sir Philip Sidney, of whom our British Epigrammatist thus verifieth.

Digna legi scribis, facis & dignissima scribi;
Scripta probant doctum te tua, facta probum.

Thou writ'st things worthy reading, and didst do things worthy writing too:

Thy Acts thy Valour show,

And by thy Works we do thy Learning know.

And though upon the loss of that gallant man (Nephew and Heir unto that Earl) the Siege was raised at the present; yet was it re-inforced again, An. 1590, and the Town then taken, continuing ever since in the Confederacy of the States United.

GROENING-LAND hath on the East East-Friesland, on the West West-Friesland, on the North the main Ocean, on the South Over-Issel; so wedged in as it were betwixt both Friebrands, that some hold it to be but a part of the West. It containeth under it the Country called the Ommelands, (corruptly for the Emmelands, as I conjecture, because lying along the River Em) and therein 145 Burroughs and Villages. The Chief thereof are, 1. Dam, near the Em, bordering on East-Friesland. 2. Keykirk. 3. Old-Haven standing on the Sea. 4. As for the Town of Groning it self, it is rich, great, and very well built, situate amongst divers small Streams which run through it, and having also divers Chanels for conveyance of waters, which adds much to the safety and strength thereof. A Town of great Jurisdiction both within and without, judging absolutely without Appeals in causes both Civil and Criminal; in Spirituals, subject heretofore to the Bishop of Munster, till made one of the new Bishopricks by King Philip the second, Anno 1559. And though the Prince in Civil Causes had his Officer or Lieutenant there; yet in Criminal the Town was Sovereign, and granted Pardons as Sovereign of the whole Estate, paying to the Prince for all Duties yearly but 6000 Crowns. Both Town and Country anciently belonging to the Bishops of Utrecht, for whose negligence in defending them they submitted their Estate to the Duke of Gelderland. But the Dukes of Saxony laying some claim to it, disturbed this agreement for a time; during which Ezardus the Earl of East-Friesland possessed himself of it; but not able to make good his unjust possession fold his Estate therein to the Duke of Geldres, An. 1514, to whom of right it did belong. Afterwards in the year 1536, they put themselves under the command of Charles the fifth, but with the reservation of all their Privileges and ancient Liberties, for preservation of the which, in danger to be over-born by the power of the Spaniards, they confederated with the rest of the United States, Anno 1594, and so still continue.

The ancient Inhabitants of these Countries were the Menapii and Sicambri, very valiant people, possessing Gelderland; and the majoris Frisi, which were planted in Groning and the rest of Friesland. Of these the Sicambri were accounted the most valiant People, uniting with other nations in the name of French, and by that name possessing with the rest of those nations the mighty Empire of the West. In the division whereof by the posterity of Charles the Great, these Countries were first part of the Kingdom of Austrasia or East-France, afterwards of the German Empire; governed at the first by Guardians or Protectors created by the people in the Reign of Charles the Bald, the two first being Wickard and Lupold (or Leopold) two Brethren, who fixing their chief Seat in the Castle of Geldres, occasioned the whole Country to be called Gelderland. But they and their Successors, by what name or Title soever called, were in effect but provincial Officers, accountable to the Emperours for their Administration; the first free Prince hereof being Orho of Nassau, who having to his first Wife the Lady Altide, Daughter of Wickard, the last Guardian, was by the Emperour Henry the third made first Earl of Gelderland, adding thereto the State of Zurphen by a second Marriage, as is said before. In Rainold the ninth Earl it was made a Dukedom by the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, Anno 1339. Sold by Duke Arnold (justly incensed at his ungracious Son Adolph) to Charles Duke of Burgundy for 92000 Florens of ready money, and an annual Pension, Anno 1472. But notwithstanding this Agreement, Adolph (upon the death of Charles) possessed himself of it, and left it unto Charles his Son, who finally surrendered it unto Charles the fifth, Anno 1547.

Being afterwards taken, imprisoned, and most barbarously handled by his own Son Adolph, and delivered by Charles the Warlike, Duke of Burgundy, he sold to him his Estates of Geldres and Zurphen, to be enjoyed by him after his decease, Anno 1472.
- 1473 16. Adolph, the wicked Son of Arnold, dispossessed of his Estate by the said Agreement, which D. Charles enjoyed for his life, after the death of the said Charles was restored to liberty by the Gantois, An. 1467, and made the General of their Forces against Lewis the 11.
- 1477 17. Charles, Son of Arnold, after long Wars with the Princes of the Houses of Burgundy and Austria, pretending the Sale and Legacy of Duke Arnold to Charles, the Warlike, surrendered his Estates unto Charles the 5. to be enjoyed by him after his decease, if he left no Issue. According to which Contract the Emperour Charles succeeded him in Geldres and Zurphen, Anno 1538, being the year of his decease; after which time they were accounted in the number of the Belgick Provinces.

The Arms hereof were Quarterly, 1. Azure, a Lion Or, crowned Gules; for the Dukedom of Gelderland; 2. Azure, a Lion Gules, for the Earldom of Zurphen.

Thus have we seen a Country which at the first erecting of these States was nothing, in a manner but Bogs and Marishes, and at the best but a continual Wilderness of Woods and Forests, by the great providence of the Princes, and extreme industry of the people, made the most populous, best planted, and the wealthiest Estate (for the bigness of it) in the whole habitable world. And we have seen those several Estates and Principalities, by Marriages and other Contracts, reduced into the hands of the House of Burgundy; under the Princes of which great and illustrious Family, inferior to no Kings of Christendom for Power and Riches (especially under Duke Philip the Good) the Subjects hereof did so abound in wealth and plenty; that Philip de Comines, who then lived; affirmeth, that this Country seemed like the Land of Promise. Some thought there was a purpose in this Duke Philip of erecting these States into a Kingdom, from which he was diverted by the difference and variety of Laws and Privileges which those people severally lived under, not to be brought without great difficulty and distaste to one form of Government; yet might he have done it, if he would, as himself openly affirmed to the Ambassadors of King Lewis 11. But Charles his Son, being more bent on the Design, negotiated to that end with the Emperour Frederick, whom he met at Triers, An. 1473; and doubtless had obtained his purpose, upon the Marriage of his Daughter with Maximilian Frederick's Son, (which was then propounded) had not his rash Engagement against the Swissers, and his untimely death therein, broke the course of these Projects: which Projects had they took effect, as in all probability they had but for that Engagement, he had extended his Dominions all along the Rhene; and on both sides of it, from the Alps to the German Ocean, and been the most considerable Prince at that time in Christendom; all Elfsa in High Germany being sold or mortgaged to him by the Duke of Austria, the Dukedom of Lorraine at his mercy; besides the hopes he had of the Earldom of Provence, intended to him by King Reny, which would have opened him a way into the Mediterranean. He being dead; the Government continued as before it was; each Province having its distinct Laws, and living according to their ancient Privileges, till the attempt of Philip the second, King of Spain, most resolutely (but unfortunately) bent to bring them under the command of that Crown, to cancel all their Privileges, and new-mould the Estate according to his own will and pleasure; occasioning thereby the Revolt of a great part of the Country, and the setting up of a new Estate opposite unto him, and destructive of his Interest in it. But before we come unto this Change, we will first look upon the Prince's Power, Revenue, and other things considerable touching this Estate, whilst it stood entire under the Princes of the House of Burgundy and

Lords of BELGIUM.

- 1369 1. Philip the Hardy, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, Earl of Flanders and Artois, the first great raiser of this House.
- 1404 2. John the Proud, Duke of Burgundy, &c.
- 1419 3. Philip the Good added to his Estates the Dukedom of Brabant and Limburg, the Marquisate and Mechlin by the death of his Cousin Philip; the Earldoms of Hainault, Holland, Zealand, and the Lordship of West-Friesland, by the Resignation and death of the Countess Jaqueline, whose next Heir he was; the Dukedom of Luxemburg; and the Earldom of Namur, which he bought for money.
- 1467 4. Charles the Warlike, who bought the Estates of of Geldres and Zutphen, and held them peaceably all his life.

- 1476 5. Mary, the Daughter and Heir of Charles, married to Maximilian, Son of the Emperor Frederick, from whom King Lewis the eleventh of France took the Dukedom of Burgundy, and the greatest parts of the Counties of Burgundy and Artois, unfortunately killed with a fall from her horse, and an unseasonable Modesty in not suffering the Chirurgion to dress her wound, the hurt which she had taken being on her thigh.

- 1482 6. Philip III, Son of Mary and Maximilian, to whom Charles the 8th. of France restored all the places in Artois and the County of Burgundy, taken by his Father, married Joan, Daughter of Ferdinand and Isabel King and Queen of Spain.

- 1506 7. Charles II. Archduke of Austria, King of Spain, and Emperor of that name the fifth, added to his Estate in these Countries the Dukedom of Gelderland, the Earldom of Zutphen, the Lordships of Utrecht, Over-Issel and Groening.

- 1558 8. Philip IV. of Belgium, and the II. of Spain, invading these Countries against their Privileges, was by a great part of them rejected from being their Prince, Anno 1581, which made him, after a long and bloody war to surrender all his Interest in them to

- 1599 9. Isabella Clara Eugenia, his Daughter, and Albert, Archduke of Austria, whom he married to her; during whose Government a Truce for 12 years was made, and in the Preface to that Truce, the Confederate Estates declared to be treated with as a Free State, to whom the King of Spain could pretend no Title.

10. Philip V. of Belgium, and the IV. of Spain, on the decease of the Archduchess Isabella his Aunt, succeeded in the Possession of some, and the Title unto all the Belgick Provinces.

The ordinary Revenue of these Countries to the Dukes of Burgundy, and after to the King of Spain, before the Breach, were estimated at three millions of Crowns yearly, which was more than any King in Christendom at those times received, the French only excepted; the very measuring of Coin in the City of Antwerp being farmed yearly for 100000 Crowns in ready money: but the extraordinary was far greater, the Estates of these Countries in the year 1550 granting to Charles the fifth an Aid which they call the Noventale, amounting to 150000 Crowns a month; and yet the Provinces of Luxembourg, Limbourg, Geldres and Groening, were not rated to it. And it is said, that Philip the II. at his first coming to the Estate, was presented with a Grant of 40 millions of Florens, to be paid in few years. So that these Countries were the true Correlative of both his Indies: the loss of which, before the making of the Truce, Anno 1609, cost him above 100 millions of Crowns, and the loss of 400000 men.

The Forces of these Princes by Land may best be seen in the expedition of Charles (then Earl of Charolois) against Lewis the eleventh, whom, Duke Philip the Good, his Father furnished to that enterprise with 9000 Archers, and 14000 men at Arms, every one of which had five or six great horses attending on him; and at his setting forward he was told by his Father, (never accounted for a Braggart) that if he fell into any danger, he should not be abandoned for the want of 100000 fighting men. The said Duke having thus sent away his Son, and being provoked by the indignities of those of Liege and Dinant, who revolted from him, suddenly raised an Army of 28000 Horse, and a proportionable number of Foot, for the chastisement of that proud and rebellious people. And Charles himself, succeeding on the death of his Father, in his unprosperous attempt upon the Swissers, had no less than 80000 men at the Battle of Murat. As for their power at Sea, I find not that they kept any standing Navy, nor needed they so to do, as the case stood with them; considering that when they had occasion of any such service, they used to take up all the Ships which they found in their Harbours, (of which there never wanted good store) employing as many as they pleased, and dismissing the rest.

The principal order of Knighthood ordained by these Princes was that of the Golden Fleece, first instituted by Duke Philip the Good (in imitation of the order of Saint George in England) Anno 1430. The name and fancy was borrowed, as some conceive, from Gideon's Fleece; from Jason's Fleece, as others think; but more probably from the Golden Fleeces of England, which brought him in so much gold and treasure in the way of Custom. Their Habit is a Collar of Gold interlaced with Irons, seeming to strike fire out of a Flint. (Ex ferro flammam being the word:) at the end whereof hangs the Troison d'Or, or Fleece of Gold. Their number at the first was but 25, (which is the number of Knights of the English Garter) increased afterwards by the same Duke Philip unto thirty one. Charles the first raised them to fifty one; and now the King of Spain hath assumed a liberty of making as many as he pleaseth: this being the only Military or Civil Order of which those Kings have the bestowing; the Orders of Alcantara, Calatrava, and the rest of Spanish institutions, being rather Religious and Monastical, at the best but mixt. St. Andrew's day is the day of Installation.

In this great Pomp and Glory did these Princes live as long as they continued in good terms with the subject Provinces, being masters of more goodly Jewels, magnificent Furniture for their Houses and costly Moveables, than any three of the greatest Princes in Europe. And on the other side, the Subjects, whilst they lived in Duty under so great Princes, attained to the height of all worldly happiness; in their Apparel excessively gorgeous, in their Feasts and Banquets over-sumptuous, in their Manners dissolute; Vices which usually accompany that kind of Felicity. An happiness too great to continue long. By the ambition and Violence of Charles the Warlike they were first plunged into a War against Lewis the eleventh, of which they did not only feel the present miseries, but lost all the Towns and Holds which they had in Picardy, with the whole Dutchy of Burgundy. And by a like, but better-grounded, Ambition of Charles the fifth, they were exercised in continual Wars against the French, who miserably harrassed and ransacked the Countries of Luxembourg, Hainault and Artois, bordering next unto them. Charles at his death commended them to the special care of Philip his Son, advising him to use them kindly, as those that were the chief Supporters of his State and Glory; adding, that if he should deal otherwise with them, it would prove the ruine of his Fortunes. And on the other side, the people to obtain his favour, presented him at his first entrance on the Government with a Grant of 40 Millions of Florens, as before was said. But he, transported with Ambition and a Catholic zeal, not only forgot their Love, but his Father's counsel; and had no sooner concluded a peace with France, effected by the Treaty of Cambray, An. 1599, but presently he cast his thoughts on the subjection of this ple to his will and pleasure. For they were so fortified with Privileges, which their former Princes had granted, and the latter had been sworn to observe, that he wanted much of that absolute and uncontrollable command which he strongly aimed at. Some of which Privileges were,

1. That the Prince could place no stranger amongst them with Jurisdiction over their Estates and Persons, in Offices of War or Justice. 2. The Prince could give nothing to the Clergy; nor 3. Leavy any Subsidies without the States of the Country. 4. But the main Prerogative was that of the Brabanters, (viz.) That if the Prince by violence or wrong did infringe any of the laid Charters and Franchises, the people, after declaration thereof made, might go to election of a new Prince. This not a little grieved the Spaniards, that such base and unworthy people (for so they esteemed them) should in such liberty possess so brave and rich a Country, their King bearing no title of Majesty or absolute command over them. Besides the Reformation of Religion, which then began to grow to some strength, moved the King to reduce them back to the Church of Rome by the power and terror of the Inquisition; and by the erecting of some new Episcopal See amongst them, (for before there were but three in all) to settle some more constant course of Ecclesiastical Discipline. Against both which, when the People violently opposed, he then resolved of bringing them by Spanish Rhetorick (that is, by the Sword and the Cannon) to their old obedience. To these ends he sends the Duke of Alva, an old and expert Captain, (as having 60 years been a Souldier) with a puissant Army, to be his Vice-Roy amongst them. He also gave him a Commission of that large extent, that he might place and displace whom he would, and execute all such as he could find opposite to his designs. At that time the two chief men amongst them were the Prince of Orange and Count Egmont; the first more potent with the People, the latter with the Souldiers. Had these two joyned together, they might easily have prevented D. Alva's entrance; but Egmont was sofooth-ed up with Letters from Spain, that he believed not the intelligence which the Prince had concerning the Duke's Commission. The Earl exhorted the Prince to submit himself to the pleasure of the King, and so to prevent the ruine of his House. The Prince desired the Earl to maintain the Liberty of the Country; as for himself, He had rather be a Prince without a House, than a Count without an Head. Being thus resolved, the Prince retires to his County of Nassau in High Germany; the Earl stayeth to congratulate the entrance of the new Governour: who had no sooner settled himself, but he entrapped the Counts of Horn and Egmont, and beheaded them, An. 1567. Being thus rid of these two, with divers others of good quality, who living would have much hindered his proceedings, he quartered his Spaniards in the Towns and Provinces, spoiled the people not of their Privileges only, but their Liberty. Amongst the Reformed he brought in the bloody Inquisition; and indeed so tyrannically did he behave himself, that the people were forced to a Defensive War, as well for their Lives as Substance. This was a War of State, not Religion, the most part of the Hollanders being Papists at the time of their taking Arms. During these Troubles the Prince of Orange was not idle, but he in one place, and Count Lodowick his Brother in another, kept Duke Alva employed; though divers times not with such fortunate success as they did expect. In the year 1572. Flushing was surprised by Voorst and Berland, as we have before said: so also was the Briel in Voorn, an Island of Holland, by the Count de la March. And not long after all Holland, except Amsterdam, followed the fortune and side of the Prince; together with all the Towns of Zeland, Middleburg excepted, Anno 1573, Duke Alva being recalled. Don Lewis de Requesens was appointed Governour; during whose rule many of the Belgians abandoned their Country, some flying into Germany, others into France, most into England. After his death, and before the arrival of Don John, the Prince and his Party recovered strength and courage again till the coming of the Prince of Parma, who brought them into worse case than ever. Yet, Anno 1581, they declare, by their Writings directed to all people, that Philip of Spain, was fallen from the Government, and take a new Oath of the People, which bound them never to return to the Spanish Obedience. This done, they elect Francis Duke of Anjou, their apparent to the French King, and then in so small hopes of marrying Queen Elizabeth of England, to be their Lord. But he intending rather to settle a Tyranny in himself, then to derive it from the Spaniard, attempted Antwerp, put his men into the Town, but was by the valour of the Burgers shamefully repulsed: shame of this ignoble enterprise, especially grief for its ill success, took him out of the world. About which time the Estates of this Country were thus by this Hieroglyphick expressed. A Cow represented the Body of Belgium: there stood the King of Spain spurring her, the Queen of England feeding her, the Prince of Orange milking her, and Duke Francis plucking her back by the tail, but she could not suffer his fingers. During his unfortunate Government, Parma prevailed in all places, especially after the death of William Prince of Orange, treacherously slain with a Pistol, Anno 1584. Now were the poor Hollanders truly miserable, desperate of Pardon from their Prince, and having none to lead them, none to protect them, but such as were likely to regard their own profit more than theirs. England was the only Sanctuary they had now left; to which they sue, offering the Queen thereof the Sovereignty of their Provinces, who had, if not a Right, yet a plausible Title to them, as being lineally descended from Edward the third and Philip his Wife, who was Sister and (as some say) Heir to William Earl of Hainault, Holland, &c. If Margaret from whom the Right of Spain is derived, were Daughter to Earl William, then was our Queen to succeed after Philip, who was rejected: if that Margaret were (as many write) his younger Sister, then was our Queen the undoubted Heir, her Predecessor Philippa being Earl William's eldest Sister. But that Heroick Queen not disputing the right of the Title, nor intending to her self any thing save the honour of relieving her distressed Neighbours, and providing for her own Estate by this diversion, took them into her Protection. Under which the Belgian Affairs succeeded so prosperously (I will not now stand upon the particulars) that before they would hearken to any Treaty of Peace, they forced the King of Spain to this Conclusion, that he treated with them as with a free Estate, abstracted from all right and Title which he might pretend unto the places which they were possessed of. This Peace was concluded, Anno 1609. Since which time they have kept Garrisons well disciplined, and as well paid: so that these Countries have in these late days been the Campus Martius, or School of defence, for all Christendom, to which the youth of all Nations repair to see the manner of Fortifications, and learn the Art of War, and the use of their Weapons. Thus did they for 40 years hold the staff against a most puissant Monarch, and in the end capitulated with great advantage; that it is observed, that whereas all other Nations grow poor by War, these only grow rich. Whereupon it is remarkable to consider into what follies and extremities Princes run by using their people to the War. The Kings of France place most of their hopes in their Cavalry, because in policy they would not that the vulgar should be exercised in Arms.

Arms. Lycorgus gave a Law to the Lacedemonians, that they should never fight often with one enemy: the breaking whereof made the Thebans, a small Commonwealth, to be their equals in power: whereupon it was tartly said by Antalcidas to Agessians King of Sparta, that by his frequent warring on them and fighting with them he had made the Thebans good Souldiers against their wills. The Turks won the vast Empire they now possess by making many and speedy Wars. But now that Policy being worn out of fashion, we see that (to omit Perfia) the little and distracted Kingdom of Hungary hath for 200 years resisted their Forces. So was it betwixt the Dukes of Austria and the Switzers, and so it is between the Spaniard and Low-country-men; who formerly being accepted as a dull and heavy people, altogether unfit for the Wars, by their continual combating with the Spaniard, are become ingenious, full of Action, and great managers of causes appertaining to Fights, either by Sea or Land. We may hereby also perceive what advantage a small State gaineth by fortifying places and passages: there being nothing which sooner breaketh a great Army, and undoeth a great Prince than to beleaguer a well-fortified Town; for that here-in he consumeth his time, and commonly looeth his men, credit and money; as the Romans before Numantia, the great Turk in Malta, and Charles of Burgundy before Nancie. For where War is drawn out of the Field unto the Walls, the Mattock and Spade being more necessary than the Sword and Spear, there the Valour of the Assailant is little available, because it wanteth its proper object.

Thus as before we brought these several Estates and Provinces into one hand, so now we have broke them into two; the one part continuing in Obedience to the Crown of Spain, the other governing themselves as a State apart. Under the King remain the Dukedoms of Luxemburg, Limbourg and Brabant, some few Towns excepted) the Marquisate of the Empire, the Earldoms of Hainault, Namur, and Avois, and Flanders, (except only Sclays) and the Lordship or Seignoury of Mechlin, with many places of importance in the Dutchie of Geldres, to countervail the Towns are held from them in Flanders and Brabant. This is by far the greater part of the Country, and more fruitful in regard of the Commodities there naturally growing, but as much inferior to the other in power and riches, by reason of their strength in Shipping, by which they have the command at Sea, and thereby draw the whole Trade of Christendom, driven before at Antwerp, to Amsterdam, and other Towns of their Confederacy.

For the general Government of these Provinces there is a Regent sent from the Court of Spain, whose Authority is generally as great as that of the King; save that all matters of moment pass under the King's name, and that all Officers of any great trust and concernment are appointed by him, and that all Laws, Decrees, Sentences and Negotiations are dispatched in his name also. For the assistance of the Regent there is a Privy Council, a Council of State, and a Council of Finances, by whom all things are ordered which concern the Publick, the Regent's Authority co-operating and concurring with them, without which, though they may consult, they can execute nothing. And for the Governance and well ordering of their several Provinces there is in every one of them a Lieutenant or Provincial Government, subordinate to the Regent, and accountable to him; and in each Province a particular Council held in the King's name, consisting of more or less Counsellors, (as the bigness of the Province is) for the most part Doctors or Licentiates of the Civil Laws, with a President at the Head thereof, which in some places they call the Parliament, after the manner of the French, and in some the Chancery. To these Courts all the Subjects do resort for Justice, in Causes both Criminal and Civil: to these are brought Appeals from inferior Judicatures, such as the Courts of great Towns and particular Franchises: and from these lyeth an appeal to the great Council at Mechlin, supreme and superintendent unto all the rest.

When any thing is to be done which concerns the profit of the Prince, or otherwise is of publick moment, the Regent sendeth out Letters in the King's name, to command the Estates, that is to say, the Clergy, the Nobility, and the Principal Towns of every Province, (except those of Luxemburg, Geldres, West-Friesland and Over-Iffel, who by special Privilege cannot be called out of their own Countries) to come before him. The place of their Assembly is for the most part at Brussels, the Court and Residence of the Regent; because the Brabanters are also Privileged not to be summoned out of the Precincts of their own Province. Where heing come, the States Assemble not altogether, but those of one Province at a time, so one after another: to whom the President, or some one of the Council of State proposeth in the Prince's name that which he demandeth. To which if any Town oppose, then all which the rest have done is of no effect, nothing being granted by the Deputies or States of any Province, but with this condition, that all the rest of the Estates do agree unto it. Without this punctual consent of all parties interested, the Prince can impose nothing by their Laws upon the Subject, nor alter any thing at all in the publick Government.

And as the people are thus Privileged in regard of the Prince, so are the Princes and Prelates privileged in regard of the Pope, it being agreed upon between them.

1. That the Prince is to give Clergy-Benefices, and the Pope to maintain them.
2. That neither Prelate nor Lay-person may be cited to Rome, but the Pope to send his Delegates or Commissioners into the Country.
3. The Pope not to give a Benefice, nor grant a Pardon, nor send a Bull into the Country, without the leave of the Prince.
4. That no Clergy-man can buy Lands or other immoveables, without the Prince's consent.
5. That the Prince hath power to visit the Clergy, to see if they be well governed or not; and if they be not, to reform the Abuses.

Great Privileges, if considered rightly; greater than which few Protestant Princes do pretend to in their own Dominions.

As for the Revenue raised by the Spaniard out of his part of this Estate, it is not easy to be guessed at; and of that which is, there comes but little to his Coffers. The expences of his Court there is as great as ever under any of the former Regents; and his charge of entertaining Souldiers for his Towns and Garisons greater than before. Nor doth it now stand with reason of State to lay any arbitrary Taxes upon the People, least he exasperate them to a second Rebellion, or startle them to some new Confederacy against his Quiet.

Under the Government of the Confederate Estates are the Dukedom of Gelderland, excepting some few Towns in the hands of the Spaniard, the entire Earldoms of Holland, Zeland and Zurphen, the Seignouries of West-Friesland, Utrecht, Over-Iffel, Groning, the Town of Sclays, with the Isle of Cassands in Flanders, and many pieces of importance in the Dutchie of Brabant. This is the lesser part by far, and far inferior to the other in regard of the Soil, but the more populous of the two, and by the Industry dultry and great Trading of the people the more rich and powerful. They are governed after their own old Laws, by the particular Estates of every Province, not yet united into one entire Body of a Commonwealth; saving that for the better preservation of their Confederacy, the Commissioners of the several Provinces do consult together, whom they have honoured with the name of the States General.

The Estates of the particular Provinces elected out of the principal Towns and Places of most importance, do order the Affairs thereof according to their ancient Privileges Rights, and Customs, as well by themselves as by their Collegues and Officers whom they do appoint; and that as well for matters of State as in point of Justice. For Administration of the which, the Governours, President and Counsellors of the Provincial Courts, have the cognizance of all Cases, both civil and criminal, and in all Causes of Appeal from inferior Courts; in each of which they proceed without Appeal, making their Acts and Commissions in the name of the said Governours, Presidents, and Council, but pronouncing Sentence and executing Judgment in right of the Sovereignty of the said Province. And these provincial States are chosen Generally out of the Plebeians or common People; and the Burgers (at the best) of the greater Townships: the Nobility and Gentry being for worn out, that in all Holland and Zeland there are not left above three Families of Gentlemen, and those compelled to live after the Plebeian fashion for fear of Envy, and to avoid the Insolency of the saucy Clowns, who, out of rudeness and the desire of Equality, hate nothing more among them than the name of a Gentleman.

Out of these Provincial States, which hold not for any certain and determinate time, but only during the pleasure of the Community for which they serve, are chosen one or more for each several Province, according to the condition and capacity of those which are chosen, to reside at the Hague, there to consult of the Affaires which concern the publick: but so, that be they more or less out of every Province they make amongst them but one Suffrage, when any thing is put unto the Vote. And these they call the States General, first because a collected Body out of all the Provinces; and, secondly, because they are not properly to deal in any matters of particular concernment, which are determinable absolutely by the States provincial, but only in such things as concern the general good of the whole Estate, as treating with Ambassadors, making War and Peace, &c. For their assistance in the which, there is a Council of State, made up of the Governours and some eminent men of every Province, (in which the Ambassadors of England, as long as we held Flushing and the other Cautionary Towns, had his voice or suffrage) by whose advice they dispose of all things which concern the publick: but so that if any difficulty do appear in the businesses, they conclude nothing till they have the approbation and consent of the particular Cities and Provinces for which they are chosen, to whom they are accountable for their Administration, and by whom revocable whensoever they please.

The Revenue of this Estate doubtless is exceeding great, the Army which they keep in continual entertainment consisting of no less than 30000 men; which they can draw into the field, leaving the Forts and Towns very well provided; yet so well paid that we never read of any Mutiny amongst them for want thereof. The whole Charge with the entertainment of Captains and superiour Officers, is laid to amount to 500000. l. per annum, raised on the people by Excise laid upon all Commodities, and many Taxes of like nature, so insupportable in themselves, and amongst men which would be thought to live in a free State, that should the Spaniard or any Prince in Christendom lay but half so much on their Subjects, it would occasion a Revolt. So that whereas one of the first causes of their falling off from the King of Spain was to free themselves from Taxes and Impositions illegally (as they said) enforced upon them; they have drawn on themselves more arbitrary and illegal Payments than any Nation in the World. So little have they got by the change of Government. Touching their power at Sea, we have spoke of already. All I shall now add to it is by way of instance, which is, That in the year 1587 the King of Denmark, on pretence of some displeasure, arrested 608 Ships, of theirs of all sorts at one time in the Sound; and that the next year after they set out, upon very short warning, and hundred good men of War, to join with England against the invincible Armado, which then threatened both. To conclude, there is nothing wanting to these Countries wherewith the God of all blessings doth enrich a Nation, but a gracious Prince, unity of Religion, and a quiet Government: which if it pleased the Almighty to confer upon them, they would surpass all neighbouring States in Treasure, Potency, Content, and all wordly Happiness.

OF GERMANY.

GERMANY is bounded on the East with Prussia, Poland, and Hungary; on the West with France, Switzerland and Belgium, on the North with the Baltic Seas, the Ocean, and some part of Denmark; on the South with the Alps, which part it from Italy. By which account the modern Germany much differeth from that described by Tacitus and others of the Roman Writers: That comprehending the three Kingdoms of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, with so much of the Kingdom of Poland as lieth on this side of the River Vistula; but bounded on the East with the Rhene, and on the South with the Danow; the modern Germany containing on the farther banks of those Rivers five whole Roman Provinces, that is to say, Noricum, Rhipense, and Meditraneum, Rhetia secunda, Belgica and Germania prima, with some parts of Rhetia prima and Germania secunda: but terminated with the Danes and the Baltic Sea.

It was first called thus by the Romans, (as some conceive) who seeing the people both in Customs, Speech and course of life so like those of Gallia, called them the Germans to the Gauls; the word Germanus in the Latine signifying a Brother of the whole blood, (as our Lawyers phrase it) that is to say, a Brother both by Father and Mother; those which have the same Mother, but divers Fathers, being called Fratres uterini. And of this mind is Strabo, who speaking of the great resemblance which was betwixt these Nations in Manners, Speech, Customs and way of life, concludes it thus, that the Romans did with very good reason call them Germans, cum fratres eos Gallorum hoc nomine vellent ostendere; intending to signify by that name, that they were the Brethren of the Gauls. But this is to be understood of those people only which dwelt next to Gaul, and not of all the Nations which inhabited in this vast Continent according to the ancient extent thereof; it being very well observed by Tacitus, that Germany was at first Nations, non Genus, nomen, the name of some of the Nations only, not of all the Country; the name in process of time spreading over all that large Tract of ground and those scattered Nations which were either conquered by them or incorporate with them. Others will have the name to be merely Dutch, deriving it from Ger, which signifieth All, and the word Man, signifying in that Language as in ours; whence also they derive the name of Germans; by which they would imply that the Germans or Germans are a very warlike Nation, a people that have in them nihil nisi virile, nothing not worthy of a man. Bochartus, somewhat near to this, telling us that Ger in the ancient Gallick did signifie as much as Guerre in the modern French, would have them at their first coming over the Rhene to be called Germans by the Gauls, that is to say, men of War, (or Gens de Armes in the present French) by reason of the great and many Victories obtained by them.

The like diversity I find for the name of Almain. For though some gave them the name of Almain from the same originals from whence they fetch the name of Germans, as was said before, yet others as probably conjecture, that they had that name because they consisted of so many several Nations coming out of the North and North-east hither, that they seemed to be a Hotch-potch of all sorts of men, kneaded into one name and Nation; which is the conceit of Apinus Quadratus. But for my part, I do conceive (supposing the name of Almain to be Dutch originally) that the whole Country was not called Almain till such time as the Princes of the Dukedom of Almain (since called Suevia, or Schwaben) did possess the Empire, which continuing in that potent Family near 100 years, might very well occasion them to be called the Emperours of Almain, or the Almain Race, and so impart that the name to the Empire also. And for the mans naturally and properly so called (of whom we shall speak more when we come to Suevia) I see no Etymology more agreeable to true Antiquity, than to derive the name from Mannus, the Son of Tuisko, one of their Gods, and a principal Founder of this Nation, (Tuisko-nem Deum & filium Mannum; originem gentis conditoresque, as it is said by Tacitus: the people being called Alemanni (with a double n) in all ancient Writers, as men that did derive themselves from this Mannus, the Son of Tuisko. In like sort as (I think) the Marcomanni, inhabiting the Countries of Moravia, were so called, as being the Manni of the Marches or outborders of Germany, and not the Markmans, as if they were men of mark, the only men of fame and honour of all those Nations; we might as well be pressed from the Dutch original as that of All-man, in the meaning by them pretended. And unto this opinion I am swayed the rather because I find the Dutch Nation generally so much inclined to derive their Original from Tuisko, (from whom the Teutones, inhabiting about Brandenburg, may well fetch their Pedegree;) the name of Dutchland or Dutchmen coming near in found to Tuisko-land and Tuisko-men. In which I shall subscribe to Verstegan's opinion, though for the most part I look upon him but as the second part of Goropius Becanus.

But being the Etymologies of the names of most ancient Nations are very uncertain, and for the most part founded on Conjectures only; let us leave the Name a while, and survey the Country: the length whereof (according to the truest and exactest measurement) from East to West, that is to say from Vistula or Weissel to the Rhene, is estimated at 845 Italian miles; the breadth from North to South, that is to say, from the Ocean to the Town of Brixen in Tyrol, 740 of the same miles. So that the Figure of it being near a Square, it may take up 3160, miles in compass, or thereabouts. Situate in the Northern temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the sixth and tenth Climates, the longest day in the most Southern parts, being 15 hours and an half, and in the most Northern 17 hours and a quarter.

In this compass and extent of ground are supposed to live 10 millions of people. The men of the poorer sort are laborious painful, and of a sincere and honest carriage; the Nobles for the most part either Scholars or Souldiers, and true lovers of Honour; though Tacitus hath otherwise resolved it, affirming that the Gauls fight for Liberty, the Belgians for Honour, and the Germans for Gain. Which yet is true enough of the common Souldiers, who, if they fail fail of Pay, fail in Courage presently. Of both sorts they are generally tall and big, of great Bones, much Flesh, and large Sinews, but commonly of such a phlegmatick constitution, that they have not spirit enough to manage such a mass of flesh as they bear about them. Which want of natural heat to concoct that humor makes them for the most part to be men of a bright or light brown Hair, and fair Complexions. They are little addicted to Venus, and very much to Bacchus; whence the Proverb, Vivere Germanorum est bibere, and the old Verses, Germani possunt cunctos tolerare labores.

Quinam possent tam bene ferre sitim.

The Dutch themselves to labour well endure.

O would they Thirst could half so well endure.

This love unto their Liquor, together with their natural Temper, maketh them fat and corpulent. Whereupon Pope Julius the second, styling the Spaniards Birds of the Air, because of their Ambition, the Venetians and Genoese Fishes of the Sea, because so much accustomed to Navigation, called the Germans by the name of the Beasts of the Field. And when Augustus was resolved to take unto himself the supreme Government of Rome, he was advised by Agrippa to chuse a Guard of Germans to attend upon him. The reason was, (as Dion giveth it) Because in those great Bodies there was little Malice hidden, and less Subtily; and that they were a people that took more pleasure to be commanded than to command. In matters of War this people have been formerly in a measure famous; yet not so much by the valour or conduct of their Captains, (for they have had but few such) as by their own hardiness. They withstood the Romans 210 years, assisting and troubling them more in that space than either the Carthaginians, Spaniards, Gauls, or Parthians; and even at the last (saith Tacitus) Triumphati magis sunt quam victi. In our times the Rotters and Lanzenkights of Germany, (for so they call their Horse and Foot) have been much employed; but more by reason of their numbers, easily raised out of so large a Country, than any opinion of their Valour; being slow of motion, dull of apprehension, fearful of putting any thing to the chance of War. By reason of which fearfulness, as they are very cruel upon all advantages, not sparing either age or sex when they get the Victory; so are they apt to run upon any any Alarm, not to be rallied, if once routed, upon any persuasions. Inasmuch as Charles Count of Mansfeld, General of an Army of 50000 fighting men, but most of this Nation, was forced to suffer a small Army of 10000 Turks to pass by his Trenches, being then strongly encamped before Strigonium, (now Gran) a Town of Hungary, and to victual the Town before his face; not daring to set upon them or disturb their purpose, for fear least, being lustily charged his Germans would give back and endanger all. And yet besides these weaknesses, they have some great faults. One of which is a custom, if their wages be not duly paid, (though it be in the very midst of a Battel) to cry Guel, Guel, thrown down their weapons, and suffer themselves to be cut in pieces by the Enemy. And so they served Frederick the Electour Palatine at the Battel of Prague. The other is an extreame humour of Spoil and Plunder: on which they are so bent wheresoever they come, that such as entertain them have just cause to say, that they receive more damage by them than they do by their Enemies. Two undecivable notes of mercenary Valour.

The women are of a good Complexion, but by reason of their intemperance in eating and drinking, much given to Corpulency; women of a good carriage, (as the saying is) good Bearers, and as fruitful Breeders; servilely obsequious to their Husbands, whom many of good rank serve at the Table with Trenchers and other necessities, and take a way when he hath done, eating the residue apart with and amongst their Maids, scarce sitting down with him once a week; and then too at the lower end, or at some such distance. And though the Women by their Laws have a propriety in their Goods, which they bring with them at their Marriage, or are given them alter, (so as the Husband hath but the use of them only) and may dispose of them by their last Will at the time of their death; yet is their condition thereby little better, the Husband being no less churlish and imperious than he would be otherwise. Which made Caracalla to say often, that only that Nation knew how to rule their Wives, which added the Feminine Article to the Sun, and the Masculine to the Moon, as the Germans do. Most of them, as well Wives as Virgins, (except persons of Honour) use to go bare-footed within doors, and seldom put on Shoes or Stockings, but when they are to go abroad on their occasions. A thing that seems the more strange in regard of the extreme coldness of the Country, which is so fierce that generally they lodge between two Feather-beds, both in Summer and Winter: and in the most houses have their Stoves, of which the doors and windows are kept very close, as well to retain the heat, as to keep out the cold. Which though they may be usefull and inoffensive in Gentlemen's houses; yet in the common Inns, where all sorts of people are necessitated to throng together, the ill smells never purged by admitting any fresh air, are ready to stifle and choke up the Spirits of raw Travellers, not accustomed to them.

The Diet of Germany, France and Italy, is by a Traveller thus censured: The Germans have much meat, but stultishly dress it; the French little, but neatly cooked; the Italians neither the one nor the other. And to say truth, the Germans have meat enough; the people being generally of good stomachs, and either by nature or ill custom excessive both in eating and drinking, seldom rising from the Table till they have consumed all which was set before them. Inasmuch that in some places it is provided by Law, that in their feasts they shall not sit above five hours at the Table. During which time, if by Intemperance either in eating or drinking a man disgorge his foul stomach in his fellow's Lap, or piss under the Table, it is no disgrace to him, nor at any time taken notice of to his reproach. Which humour of gormandizing and excessive drinking is not only cherished among the Vulgar, but even amongst their greatest Princes; who, besides what they do in this kind themselves, have their drinking Champions, as well to answer all Challenges, as to challenge all comers, contending with each other, as a point of State, whose Celler shall afford the greatest and most capable vessels.

The Title of the Father descends to all the Children; every Son of a Duke being a Duke, and every Daughter a Dutchesse: a thing which the Italians hold to ridiculous that they put it in the fore-front of this facetious Satyre, The Dukes and Earls of Germany, the Dons of Spain, the Monseurs of France, the Bishops of Italy, the Nobility of Hungary, the Lairds of Scotland, the Knights of Naples, and the Younger Brethren of England, make a poor Company. For by this common assuming of the Father's Honour, and the parting his Lands among all the Brethren, the Nobility is beyond reason multiplied, and no less impoverished; their being not long since seventeen Princes of Anhalt, and twenty seven Counts of Mansfeld; to most of which their Arms have been the best part of their Riches, & nihil nisi arma & manus & in his omnia, as Tacitus once said of the ancient Britains. And yet there is not one of this poor Nobility that will vouchsafe to marry with the Daughter of the wealthiest Merchant, or suffer any of their Sisters to be married to any under the degree of a Nobleman; nor any juster cause of a Disinheriting their Children than ignoble Marriages: they never permitting the Issue of such a Bed to succeed in any of their Fees, Estates or Titles: by means whereof, though they debar themselves of such accessions of wealth as Matches of that kind might bring them; yet, to the great honour of their generosity in this particular, they preserve the pure Stream of their Blood from running into muddy Channels, and keep the Spirits of brave men though they want the Fortunes.

The Languages here spoken are, the French in Lorraine; and in some Towns of the Bishop of Triers; the Italian in the highest part of Tyrol, which lie next to the Commonwealt of Venice; the Slavonian spoken in Bohemia, Moravia, and some parts of Lusatia; and the high Dutch, the general Language of the Country. A Language very ancient doublets, (though I am not so much a Gropeopias as to think it spoke in Paradise, or before the Flood) and such as, by reason of the little or no impression which the Roman Armies made upon this Country, hath less commixture with the Latine than any which is used in these Western parts, (the Welsh excepted) and is very harsh by reason of its many Consonants.

This Country was esteemed by Tacitus to be rude and barren, containing nothing but unpeopled Forests, unprofitable Heaths, and unhealthy Pools. Germaniam informem terris, asperam caelo, tristem cultu aspectuque, as he farther addeth. And such no doubt it was in those times wherein Tacitus lived; the people not being civilized, nor the Country cultivated, nor any means found out to rectify the sharpness of that Northern Air. But he who doth observe it now, cannot but confess that there is no Country in the World either better planted, or replenished with more goodly and gallant Cities, being also in most parts both pleasant, healthy and profitable; abounding with Mines of Silver and inferior Metals, plentiful in Corn and Wines, with which they supply the defect of other Nations, as also with Fleish, Fish, Linen, Quicksilver, Alum, Saffron, Armour and other Iron-works. The Arable Lands are so spacious in the Eastern parts, that the Husbandman going forward with his Plough in the morning, turneth not back again till noon; so making but two Furrows for his whole daies work. For this Vershegan is my Author; and if it be not credible, let him bear the blame.

Souldiers of most eminency in the elder times were 1. Arminius, the Prince of the Cherusci, who overthrew Quintilius Varus and the Roman Legions. 2. Wittkind, the last King of the Saxons. For the middle Ages, 3. Otho the first, 4. Frederick Barbarossa, 5. Rodolph of Hapsburg, Emperours and Kings of Germany; 6. Henry, surnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony. And in the last Century of years, 7. Frederick the second, Elector Palatine, who made good Vienna against the Turks; 8. Albert of Brandenburg, of whom more hereafter; 9. Ernest Earl of Mansfield, 10. John-George of Jagerndorf, 11. Albert Wallenstein Duke of Fridland, and divers others of late days.

Scholars of note the elder times afforded none, nor the middle many; Learning being here so rare in the middle of the eighth Century, that Vigilius Bishop of Salzburg was condemned of Heresie, for holding that there were Antipodes. In the next Age there flourished Rabanus Maurus, Haimo of Halberstadt, Walafridus Strabus, men learned for the times they lived in. And in the following times, Ockam, a stout defender of the Rights of the Empire against the Enroachments of the Pope, Orho Frisingensis the Historian, Albertus Magnus the Philosopher, of which last it is said, that he made the Stalpa, of a Man, which with the help of artificial Engines could speak articulately, and was the work of 50 years. Then in the days of our Grandfathers we have 1. Martin Luther, that great instrument of the Reformation. 2. Philip Melancthon, his Coadjutor in that work, but of more excellent parts, and far better temper; thence called the Phoenix of that age. 3. Jochim Camerarius, a great friend of Philip. 4. Martin Chemnitius, a solid and laborious Writer. 5. Fiacius Illyricus, the chief Author of the Magdeburg Ecclesiasticals, and Father of the Rigid Lutherans. 6. Sebastian Munster, an industrious Cosmograher; and a learned Linguist. 7. Silburgius, and 8. Buxtorfius, as great Linguists as he. Not to descend to farther instances in those who have so filled the Marts of Frankfort in these latter times.

But the greatest excellency of this people lieth in the Mechanical part of Learning, as being eminent for many Mathematical Experiments, strange Water-works, Medicinal Extractions, Chymistry, the Art of Printing, and inventions of like noble nature, to the no less benefit than admiration of the World. Amongst which I cannot chuse but instance in that work of Regiomontanus, an excellent Mathematician, and a cunning Artizan, spoken of by Keckerman; who at the coming of the Emperour Maximilian to the City of Nuremberg, made a wooden eagle, which flew a quarter of a mile out of the Town to meet him; and being come to the place where he was, returned back of its own accord, and so accompanied him to his Lodging. A thing if true, (as the Relator was a man of too much gravity to abuse the World with an untruth) exceedingly beyond that Miracle of a flying Dove, for which Archytas is so famed amongst the ancients. Exceeded only by himself in a like invention, which was that of an Iron Fly, (the greater Miracle of Art, because less in quantity) which at a Feast, to which he had invited some of his special Friends, flew from his hand about the Room and returned again, as is affirmed by Peter Ramus; expressed thus by Divine Dn Baras.

Once as this Artill, more with mirth than meat,
Feasted some Friends, whom he esteemed great,
From his learn'd hand an Iron Fly flew out,
And, having flown a perfect Round-about,
With wearied wings return'd unto her Master,
And as judicious on his arm he plac'd her.
O divine Wit, that in the narrow Womb
Of a small Fly could find sufficient room
For all those Springs, Wheels, Counterpoise and Chains,
Which stood instead of life, and spur, and reins!
And amongst these I reckon Bertholdus Swartz, a Franciscan Frier, the Inventor (though by accident) of that fatal Instrument, the Gun. Studios in Chymistry, he mingled dried Earth, Sulphur, and some other Ingredients, which he had put into a Mortar covered with a stone; and striking fire to light a Candle, as the night came on, a spark by chance fell into the Mortar, and catching hold of the Sulphur and other Minerals, with great violence blew up the stone wherewith it was covered. Amazed at which, he made trial severally of these Ingredients, to find out which of them it was that produced that effect: which having discovered, he caused an Iron Pipe to be made, crammed it with Sulphur, Saltpeter and Stones; and putting fire to it, saw with what violent noise and fury it discharged it self. This Invention he is said to have first communicated to the Venetians, Anno 1330, or thereabouts, who having been often vanquished by the Genoeses, and driven almost to a necessity of yielding to them, by the help of their Guns (Bombards) they were then called) gave unto their enemies a notable discomfiture. And this was the first Battel that ever those warlike Pieces had a part in; which not long after put to silence lence all the Engines and Divices wherewith the Ancients were wont to make their Batteries. The next that made use of this instrument were the Inhabitants of the Baltick Sea; and not long after them the English, at the Siege of Calice, Anno 1347; about which time they began also to be used in France: The French, it seemeth, learned the use of them from the English, and the first benefit received by them was the death of that famous Leader, Thomas Montacute, Earl of Salisbury, who at the Siege of Orleans was slain with a great shot, Anno 1425. Twenty years after this, Anno 1446, they were first used in Spain, at the Siege of Setteville, a Town of the Kingdom of Granada, by the Castilians; and after by degrees made common to the rest of that Continent. And being grown common in this Continent, as well unto the Jews and Moors as unto the Christians, it was not long before they taught it to the Turks. For the Jews being forced to abandon Spain, Anno 1492, betook themselves to Greece and other parts of the Turky Dominions, to whom they shewed the Art of making Ordnance, Gunpowder, Harquebusses, sufficiently since used by that people to the hurt of Christendom. But somewhat before this the Turks had been in part beholden for them to the Wars they had with the Venetians; beholden, I say, for notwithstanding the harm received by them at first, yet afterwards growing expert in managing of them, they gave unto Ossan Cassanes and Hismael, two of the most mighty Emperours of Persia, two memorable Overthrows by the help of their great Ordnance only. The Portugals were in this Art the Tutors to the Persians: for, as Solyman the Turkish Emperour objected against them, they not only aided Tamas the Sophi with certain Harquebussiers, but also sent him workmen to shew him the use and making of Artillery. These great Pieces at the first invention were rude unwieldy, and charged with Stone-bullets only: but by degrees they came to that perfection, both for the wall and the hand, which they now have. Whether now Archery or Gunning be to be preferred, I stand not here to determine; only this I am sure of, that Victories have been of late purchased with less expence of blood and life than ever formerly. But of this Theam more perhaps hereafter, when we shall come to take the Parthian Archery into consideration.

The Religion of this Country it is not easie to name, considering for many are here allowed; Jews being intermingled with Christians, and these divided into Papists and Protestants; the latter also divided into Lutherans, Calvinists, &c. The Christian Faith was first planted here, if Dorotheus Bishop of Tyre be of any credit, by St. Thomas surnamed Didymus, one of the Twelve. But being there is little trust unto his Relations, the best were to say with the Magdeburgians and the Maritologies, that the Germans had not all the same Apostle; that the Gospel was first preached amongst the Rhetians and Vindelici by S. Lucius of Cyrene, amongst those of Noricum by S. Marck, by S. Crescens at Metz, S. Clement at Metz in Lorraine, all of them Apostolical men, and of the number of the 70. after that by S. Maternus at Colen, and by S. Eucherius at Triers. That the Faith was planted very early in these Countries, Irenaeus, the renowned Bishop of Lions, Anno 170, is sufficient evidence, who takes notice of it; and that it prospered very well and took very good root, appeareth by the Bishops of Metz, Triers, Worms, Spires, Basil, and Straesburg, subscribing to the Council of Colen in the Reign of Constantine the Son of Constantine the Great, Anno 347. But the light hereof being extinguished for a time by those barbarous Nations who fell upon these out-parts of the Roman Empire, began to shine again on the Conversion of the French in all parts of this Country; the Conquests and example of this Puissant Nation giving great encouragement thereunto. In which as those of other Countries do not want their honour, so the greatest part thereof belongs to the English-Saxons; Willbrode the first Bishop of Utrecht, Willibald of Aichstat, Swibert of Verden, Willibald of Breme, and especially Boniface the Archbishop of Metz; being most gloriously fortunate in that sacred service. The Moravians, Bohemians, and others farther off, came not in till afterwards. Not fully converted to the Faith, they began to suck in the Corruptions of the Church of Rome, discerned and opposed by Hulse and Hieromus of Prague, Bohemian Divines, who, by reason of the Marriage of King Richard the second of England with the Daughter of Wenceslaus Emperour and King of Bohemia, had opportunity to be acquainted with the Preachings of Wicliffe, the Point of whose Doctrine they approved and propagated; But these two being burnt at Constance, by the decree of that Council, their followers in Bohemia would not so give over, but after many sufferings and much blood-shed, obtained at last a Toleration of the Emperour Sigismund their King, more able to make good his word in his own Dominions, than he had to save the two Martyrs from the fire at Constance, to whom he had granted his safe Conduct for their coming and going. In this condition they remained under the name of those of the Sub utraque of Calistini, because of their administering the Sacrament in both kinds, till the rising of Luther; who justly offended at the impious and unwarrantable Assertions of Frier Tökel, and others of the Pope's Pardon-mongers; first opposed their doings, and after questioned their Authority by which they acted, falling from one Point to another, till he had shaken the Foundations of the Roman Fabrick. Of the success of his undertaking we shall speak but little, as in a thing well known to all men of knowledge. Suffice it in this place to say that his Doctrine was not only received in Germany, but generally embraced in the great Kingdoms of Denmark and Swetland, with the Provinces and Islands appertaining to them, in great part of Poland, Hungary, and Transylvania, as far almost as to the banks of the Euxine Sea; but for the progress of it here (which we are more especially at this time to enquire into) it was so well approved of, that the Dukes of Saxony, Brunswick, Lunenbourg, Wirttemberg, Mecklenburg, and Pomerania, the Marquises of Brandenburg, the Lantgraves of Hassia, and most of the free Imperial Cities did adhere unto it, who from their Protestation made at Spires (the Imperial Chamber) to that effect, Anno 1529, had the name of Protestants. The next year following they delivered in the Confession of their Faith at Ausburg, a City of Suevia, thence called Confessio Augustana, authorized, or tolerated at least, after a long War, with variable success on both sides, by the Emperour Charles the fifth, at the Pacification made at Passaw, Anno 1552. and afterwards more fully at Ausburg, where their Confession had first been tendred, Anno 1555.

But not to pass over this matter in these generals only, we may know once for all, that in the year 1530, the Protestant Princes having tendred their Confession at Ausburg, (as before is said) and finding it not so well received as they did expect, entred into a Confederation at the Town of Smalcald (belonging to the Duke of Saxony) for defence thereof, and for the Defence of one another in pursuance of it. Into this Confederacy first entred John Frederick the Duke of Saxony and his Son, Ernest, and Francis Dukes of Lunenbourg, Philip the Lantgrave of Hassia, George Marquise of Brandenburg, the Cities of Straesburg, Neurenberg, Heilbrun, Ruteling, Ulme, Lindau, Constance, Memming, and Campdena. Afterwards, Anno 1555, there entred into it Barnimus and Philip Princes of Pomerania, Ulrich Duke of Wirttemberg, Ro- bert Duke of Zweibrücken, (or Bipont, as some Writers call him) William Earl of Nassau, George, and Jochim Earls of Anhalt, the Cities of Frankford, Hamborough, Ausburg, Hanover, and not long after the Palgrave and King of Denmark. But this Confederacy was like to have dashed the business. For Charles the fifth looking upon it as a matter of dangerous consequence to the power and safety of the Empire, and withal infligated thereunto by the Popes of Rome, whose interest was no less concerned in it, considering that he could not otherwise untie this Gordian knot, resolved to cut it with the Sword. At first the War succeeded luckily with the Protestant Princes, who armed themselves upon the noise of his Preparations: But there being an equality of Command between the Duke John Frederick and Philip the Landgrave, the one sometimes not approving, otherwhiles thwarting the other projects, the end proved not answerable. Besides, the politic Emperour knowing full well that the Forces of confederate States are oftener broken by Delays than Battle, avoided all occasions of fighting, and thereby wearied out this great Army, which without performing any notable exploit disbanded it self, every man halting home to defend his own. But none had more reason to do than the Duke Electour: For in his absence his Cousin Maurice (forgetting the Education he had under him, and how formerly the Duke had conquered for him and elated him in those parts of Misnia (maugre all opposition of the Popish part.) which formerly had belonged to Duke George his Uncle) combined himself with the Emperour, and invaded the Electour's Country; who notwithstanding recovered not only all his own, but a great part also of those Lands and Territories in which he had before estated his ungrateful Kinsman. But while he was in the Career, the Emperour suddenly falls upon him not far from Ausburg, (where the Duke was then hearing a Sermon) and by the suddenness of his coming routed his timorous unprovided Army; the Duke himself with some few resolute Gentlemen making head against him, till the most of them were slain, and the Duke taken Prisoner. The next morning he was condemned to lose his head, but pardoned at the last upon some Conditions: amongst which it was none of the least, that he should surrender his Estates, and resign the Electoral dignity to be disposed of by the Victor, as also that he should without ransom release Marquess Albert of Brandenburg, (a busie and unquiet man) who was then his Prisoner. This done, the Emperour fraudulently intrappeth the Landgrave, as we shall shew more at large hereafter in another place, and carrying on the Wars from one free City to another, compelled them to receive the Mass, and to submit to such Composition as he pleased to grant them; inasmuch as it was thought that the Emperour gained in this journey a Million and 600000 Crowns, and 500 pieces of great Ordnance. But these Successes were too great and too unjustly grounded to continue long. For Maurice, the new Duke Electour, who had married the Landgrav's Daughter, and engaged himself unto his Children both by Word and Bond (and that too at the Emperour's instance) for the safe returning, conceived himself unworthily dealt with so to be made the instrument of his Father's shuldrom, and therefore that he was obliged both in love and honour to leave no way untried which might gain him liberty. And withal, finding cause to fear that the course of the Emperour's great Successes might end at last in the subversion of the common Liberty, he secretly by an under-hand practice called in the French and raising Forces under colour of the Emperour's service, gained Marquess Albert before mentioned (who had then a running Army in the field to associate with him, and fell so suddenly on the Emperour lying then at Innspruck, that he compell'd him to run away in post-hast by torch-light, and the Prelates to break off the Council of Trent, where at that time they were assembled. Upon which turning of the balance a Peace soon ensued, which brought forth the Edicts of Passaw and Ausburg, spoken of before, the best and and surest Pledges of the Peace of Germany.

In the mean time, while the Lutherans thus played their game, there started up another party, begun at first by Zuinglius amongst the Switzers, of whose both Doctrine and Success we have spoken there. These not communicating Counsels went two several ways, especially in the Points of Consubstantiation and the Real Presence; not reconciled in their times, nor like to be agreed upon amongst their followers. For Calvin, rising into the esteem and place of Zuinglius, added some Tenets of his own to the former Doctrines touching Predestination, Free-will, Universal Grace, Final Perseverance, (Points fitter for the Schools than a popular Auditory), by which the Difference were widened, and the Breach made irreparable: the Cause being followed on both sides with great impatience, as if they did not strive so much for Truth, as Victory. And of the two, those of the Lutheran party seemed more violent, (though the other was altogether as irreconcilable) who could not chuse but stomach it, to see themselves undetermined and blown up by a new form of Doctrine not tolerated in the Empire; but under colour of Conformity to the Confession of Ausburg. For Zuinglianism being entertained amongst the French, a busie and active people, spread it self farther in few years than it was propagated by the Switzers (men of the same temper with the Dutch) in all times before. Inasmuch as it did not only prevail in France, but by the reputation of Calvin, and the diligence of his Followers, was wholly entertained in the Kingdom of Scotland, the Netherlands, in many parts of the Kingdom of Poland, and even in Germany it self, in which it got footing in all the Territories of the Counts Palatines in the Rhene, in some of the Landgraves of Hassia, in the Imperial City of Strasburg, many of the Hanse-Towns, and amongst other Princes and free Cities of inferior note. The rest of Germany, containing the Patrimonial Estates of the House of Austria, the Dukedoms of Bavaria and Lorain, the Territories of the three Spiritual Electors, and of all the other Bishoppicks in the hands of the Clergy, some of the Marquess of Baden, part of the subjects of Cleve, and but three of the Imperial Cities, (and those small ones too) that is to say, Gemund, Überlingen, and Dinkels-Spyell, (unless some more be added by the great late Successes of the House of Austria) remain in their Obedience to the See of Rome; all which together will hardly make up one fifth part of this spacious Country, the other four being in the power and possession of the Protestant party: yet so that there be many Protestants in Bohemia, Austria, &c. in other the Estates of the Popish Princes; as there be Papists in the Free Cities of Frankford, Nuremberg, Ulm, Aken, and some other places, besides the late increase of them in both the Palatinates. Of such a speedy growth was the Reformation, that within the space of 40 years it was not only received in all those Countries which do now profess it, but had also got some footing both in Spain and Italy.

And here perhaps it will not be improper to look upon the means which were chiefly used for the Promoting of this Work, by which it came to spread so far in so little time, and next upon the Stops and Hinderances which were given unto it, by which it was restrained from spreading farther. 1. For the means used in the Advancement of his Work, (next under the Almighty power of the most wise God) they were these especially. 1. The trans-translating of the Scripture into Vulgar Languages, which easily discovered the Corruptions of the Church of Rome both in Doctrinals and Forms of Worship. 2. The diligent Preaching of their Ministry, both in Towns and Villages, for the expounding of the Scriptures, and fitting them to the Capacities of the meanest Auditors; which gained exceedingly both on the judgment and affections of the common people, the course of preaching having been formerly neglected by the Parish Curate, and turned off wholly in a manner to the Begging-Friars. 3. The publishing of Books of Practical Piety and Devotions, which mightily inflamed the hearts of all sorts of men; accustomed before to no other Duties than to tell over their Cred's and Pater-nosters, and to keep a just account of their Ave-Maries, and that most commonly in a tongue which they understand not. 4. The Education of youth, especially in Catechisms containing the whole body of Christian Religion; which once well planted in their minds, could not so easily be pulled up and removed thence by any contrary persuasion. 5. Their continual offers of disputation with the adverse party in a public audience; which being denied (as generally at the first it was) gave great assurance of the truth and soundness of the one side, as of the falsehood and weakness of the other. 6. Their compiling of Martyrologies and Histories of the Church, which could not but produce an admirable Zeal and Constancy both in the Readers and the Hearers animated thereunto by those brave Examples which therein was presented to them. One point of Prudence hath been wanting, which is the calling of a General Council of all the Protestant and Reformed Churches, for the composing of the Differences which have grown between them. And this I look on as the first and greatest stop to the Reformation from proceeding farther; many men (not improbably) thinking there must be some want of truth in the Foundation of that Building, which had such wide and open breaches in the Superstructures. The Tyranny and Terror of the Inquisition, by which it is kept out of Spain, and kept down in Italy, and all other parts of the Pope's Obedience, together with those other Policies both to discountenance and suppress it, (which we have spoken of in our description of the Papacy) may come next to this. Then add to these the cares and diligence of the Jesuits and Seminary Priests, in applying themselves to all those means which they found so effectual on the other side, thereby not only countermining their endeavours, but fighting them upon even ground with the self-same weapons. And last of all, the Piety and Practices of the Papal Ministers in working on the humours of the opposite parties, thereby engaging them not only into Tongue-combats and verifications of the Pen, but even to try it out by blows in an open War, once I am sure. By these means they have not only stopped the Progress of the Reformation but would fain give themselves some hopes to destroy it utterly, and thereby to restore the Pope to that power and splendour which formerly he had attained unto in these parts of Europe. But of these and such like self-batteries I shall say with Seneca, or rather in his words applied to my own Intention, — Hæmannus Torjam erigent?

Parvus habet spes Troja, si tales habet.

That is to say

Shall these small Jars restore the ruin'd Pope;
Small hopes he hath, if this be all his hope.

As for the Government of their Churches, those that continue in obedience to the See of Rome are under the old form of Archbishops and Bishops, coeval in all Germany (as in most places else) with the Faith it self. The Calvinists (by which name the Zuinglians now also passeth, if not eaten out) submit themselves for Doctrine, Discipline and forms of Worship, to Calvin's Model; whereof we have spoke more at large when we were in Geneva. And for the Lutherans, they have divided the Episcopal Function from the Revenues, giving these last to some of their younger Princes, with the Title of Administrators of such a Bishoppick; the Function or Jurisdiction to some of the more eminent Clergy, with the title of a Superintendent, aligning to them a priority both of place and power before other Ministers, which they enjoy for term of life, together with some liberal maintenance in proportion to it. In other things, as Order, Habit, and Title of dignity, they differ not at all from the other Ministers. And over them, in the place of Archbishops, they have their general Superintendents; all of them of each sort accountable to the supreme Ecclesiastical Consistory, (as formerly to the Provincial or National Synod) made up of Counsellors of State and the Heads of the Clergy. So that the form seems to be much the same as in elder times, but is indeed more different than it seems to be; a great part of the alteration being in the Names, and that no other in a manner than by changing the old Greek word Episcopus into the new Latine word Superintendens, both signifying an Overseer, though in different Languages. And S. ex Gracis bonis Latinas fecere non bonas, in the Poet's words. Which brings into my mind the Story of a people of Africa, who having received much hurt by Tigers, made a Decree that no man from thenceforth should call them Tigres, but give them a more harmless or less hated name, and then all was well. And as they do conform thus far to the elder times in form of Government, so do they also come up to them in their forms of Worship; retaining still a settled and prescribed Liturgie for all their Churches, most of the Holy-days observed in the former Ages, the Cross in Baptism, Kneeling at the Communion, and many other innocent and significant Ceremonies, commended to the Church by most pure Antiquity. In point of maintenance they are as defective as the Calvinists are; few of their Ministers having Tithes, most of them Pensions or Stipends, and those small or else also, seldom exceeding two or 300 Guildens, besides Wood for fuel, Corn, and some other necessities.

Now because mention hath been made of the Hanse-Towns and Imperial Cities, we are to understand that the Cities of this Country are of three sorts. 1. Such as are holden in possession by some of the Princes in way of inheritance, part of their Patrimony and Estates; as Heidelberg, Vienna, Munich, Wittenberg, &c. 2. Such as are held originally of the Empire it self: which are called Free Cities, for their great Prerogatives of Coining money, and Governing themselves by their local Ordinances; Imperial, in regard they know no Lord or protector but the Emperour only, to whom they pay two third parts of such Contributions as are assessed in the Assemblies or general Diets, and 1500 Florens yearly for themselves and their Territories. They are in number about 60, many of which are of a fair and large Estate; such as are Nuremberg, Ausburg, Ingolstadt, Spire, Wormes &c. Of which thus Guiccardine: Those, saith he, are called Free Cities, which acknowledging by a certain determinate Tribute the Authority of the Empire, do notwithstanding in all other things govern themselves after their own Laws, not seeking to amplify their Territories, but defend their Liberties. 3. The third sort is of those which are called Hanse-Towns, or Hanse-Cities, that is (say some) Anzee Sweden, Towns upon the Sea; such as those were who first entered into this Confederacy; but at this time the name extends to many in-land Cities, and of no great Trading, joined with them in a League for their common common defence and preservation. A League made first against the *Dan*s and the *Bar*ls of Holftein by some of the Maritime Towns bordering next unto them, that is to say, Lubeck, Hamburg, Rostock, Wismar, Stralsund, and *Lunenb*urg: but afterwards many other of the Imperial Cities and Towns of Trade associated with them in an offensive and defensive League against all enemies whatsoever. In number about 72, those of Livonia and Prussia being taken into the reckoning: many of which are able to put to Sea 150 good Sail of Ships, such as lie more within the Land contributing in money or otherwise to the common charge. First handfelled by Waldemar the 3. of Denmark, whom they vanquished in a Naval Battle. After that growing into credit, and driving a great Trade in most parts of Christendom, they enjoyed many large and ample Privileges wherefore they came: called amongst us sometimes by the name of Easterlings, from their Easterly dwelling, and Merchants of the Steel-yard, from the place where they stowed their Commodities; and Guilda Teutonicorum, in regard of their Nation, for the most part Dutch. But the *Engl*ish learning so much wit at the last as to make use of their own Shipping, they began here by little and little to decay, and are now almost worn out of memory with us, though still of good esteem and credit in other Countries.

The principal Rivers hereof are, 1. Danubius, or the Danow, which rising out of Nigra Sylva, or Schwarzenwald, as the *German*s call it, at a little Village of Schwaben called Den Eschingen, about two Dutch miles from the shores of the Rhene passeth through Schwaben, Bavaria, Austria &c. by the Cities of Ulm, Regensburg, Passaw, Vienne, Rab, Buda, and Belgrade, beyond which it beginneth to be called Ister, by that name most generally known amongst the Gracians: and receiving into its Channel, from the long Tract of the Alps, the Sarmatian and Carpathian Mountains, about 60 navigable Rivers, besides lesser Brooks, disgorgeth his full stomach by several mouths (the names whereof we shall find in Dacia) into the lap of the Euxine Sea, the whole length of his course 1500 miles: Inasmuch as we may say with a Modern Poet,

Cedere Danubius se tibi, Nile, negat.
O seven mouth'd Nile, I plainly see,
Danow will scarce give way to thee.

2. Rhene, (of whose original and course we have spoke more fully when we were in Belgium) which running from Switzerland through Germany and Belgium, after a course of 800 miles, emptieth it self into the German Ocean. All which shall here be added is, that it gives the Title of the Rhine-grave, to some Princes of as good Blood as the best in Germany, whose Possessions and Estates bordering near unto it they were from thence so called; but of late times decayed (almost to nothing) in their Estates and living for the most part on the entertainment of other Princes, whom they serve in their Wars; the *Pal*grave of the Rhene, and two at the least of the three Bishops Electors raising themselves upon the ruins of this House. 3. Elb. (Albis) which springing out of the Mountain of Risenberg in the skirts of Bohemia, runneth a course of 400 miles and passeth by the Cities of Dresden, Meissen, Torgau, Wittenberg, Magdeburg, and Lauenburg, Cities of the Electoral and ancient Saxony, and so betwixt the Dukedom of Holftein (now part of Denmark) and the rest of Germany. 4. Oder, which hath its Fountain in the highermost parts of Moravia; and after it hath run its course through Brandenburg and Pomerania, of some 300 miles in length, falleth at last into the Baltick Sea. 5. Visturg, or the Weser, which issuing out of the Hills of Thuringia, runneth through Hassia and Westphalia, to the City of Breme, not far from which it falls into the German Ocean. 6. Vistula, or the Weyssel, which ri-ling out of the Carpathian Mountains betwixt Poland and Hungary, first passeth by Cracovia, the chief City of Pole, then betwixt Pomeran and Prussia, and so into the Baltick Sea; the ancient Boundary of this Country, dividing it from Sarmatia Europaea. 7. Moselle, which rising out of the Mountain Vange, in the Confines of Lorrain and the County of Burgundy, passeth directly through Lorrain, and the District of Triers, by the Cities of Toul, Metz, and Triers it self, beyond which it falleth into the Rhene, at the Town called Confluentz. 8. Sala or Salza, which rising in the Mountains of Fitchelberg in the Borders of the Upper Palatinate, and passing by the skirts of Misnia and Saxony specially so called, falleth into the Elb beyond Wittenberg, having first watered the Cities of Naumburg, Mersburg, and Jene, very observable for being the most Eastern Bounds of the Saxon Conquests, by this River parted from the Slaves. 9. Menne, or the Maine, which hath its spring in the Mountains of Bohemia, and passing by the Cities of Bamberg and Wurtzburg, is received into the Rhene beneath Frankford. 10. Amisus, or the Ems, which hath its Fountain near Paderborn in Westphalia, and passing between the two Friselands, falleth into the German Ocean not far from Emden.

Chief Mountains of this mighty Country, besides the Alps spoken of before, which run in a long tract betwixt it and Italy, are 1. Abnoba, now called Schwarzwald, (the present name both of this Mountain and the Forest of Martiana, which doth overshadow it) out of which rise the springs of Danow and the Neccar, two principal Rivers of this Country. 2. The Sudeta, incircling Bohemia, covered with the Woods called incircling Gabreta and Luna, now called the Woods of Passaw and Bohaim, from the places adjoining. 3. Cetus in Austria, now called Culemburg, the ancient Bounds betwixt Pannonia and Noricum, two Roman Provinces. 4. Vogesus, commonly called Vange, and by some French Writers le Monte de Faucities, which encircling Lorrain, divideth it on the East and South from Elzass and the County of Burgundy. As for the Forests of this Country, besides those spoken of already, that of most note was the Forest of Hercynia, (of which all the rest were but Limbs or branches) the beginning whereof was about the Borders of Switzerland and Alsatia, from thence running Eastward along the course of the Danow unto Transylvania, and thence declining on the left hand through the vast Countries of the Lituanians, Moscovites, and Russes, in which last there are still many vast Deserts of it; the greatest part thereof in Germany being long since consumed, in place whereof ate many goodly Corn-fields and well-built Cities. A Wood so formidable to the Romans, that they durst never venture to search the end of it; the length thereof after the end of 60 days Journey being undiscoverable, and the farther search into it quite laid aside.

These Boundaries and Land-marks being thus described we shall the better follow the Chorography of this great Continent, according to the several Principalities and Estates therein; having first taken a survey of the ancient condition of it, with so much of the Story as concerns the whole, before it came to be divided into so many hands. The Country was first planted by the Posterity of Gomer, who, descending from the Mountains of Albania, their first Seat, in memory thereof first called Gomerini, after Cimmerini, by that name known to Pliny, Ptolemy, and others of the ancient Writers, removed into the more fruitful Plains of Phrygia, and there built the City Cimmeris, which Pliny speaks of. But that small Province proving of too narrow a compass to contain his Offspring, and the adjoining Countries being taken up in the former Plantations, they removed unto the North-west of the Euxine Sea, where we find a City of their building

ing called Cimmerium, mentioned both by Pliny and Strabo, and the adjoining Streight or Fretum, called by the name of Bosporus Cimmerius by the Greeks and Latines. Driven from these Dwellings by the more powerful Scythians, they spread themselves into the West, where they began to be called Cimbri, and by that name, and under those of the Ambryones and Teniones, several Branches of them, intended an Invasion and Conquest both of Gaul and Italy: wherein they had prevailed in all probability, nisi isti seculo Marius contrisisset, had not Marius happened to have lived in that Age, by whom they were discomfited and destroyed. That these Gomerians or Cimbri were the first Inhabitants of Gaul, Germany, and all the Nations of the North and West of Europe, is generally agreed upon by all the Learned. Divided they were into several Nations, and those also subdivided into lesser Tribes, and more obscure Families; amongst which those of Teniones or Tuisciones, from which the Dutch do so affect to derive themselves, might be some of the principal. There settled, and not pleased with that desert dwelling, such of them as dwelt nearest to the Rhene passed over that River, and beating the Gauls farther up into the Country, possessed themselves of their Dwellings, enjoying them (till conquered by Julius Caesar) without any Rival. But Caesar, moved with the complaints of the Gauls, and the insolencies of Ariovistus a King of the *German*s, (for by that name for the reasons aforesaid the Romans called them) marched into their Quarters: the Roman Legions being so afraid of this dreadful Enemy, ut testamenta passim in principis scriberentur, (saith the Historian) that many of them made their Testaments at the Gates of their Camp, before they fell upon the Enemy. Vanquished by Caesar, and Ariovistus being fled over the Rhene, the Romans, by command of their General made a Bridge over the River, and rather terrified than conquered the neighbouring *German*s, who were more fully brought into subjection by Drusus, the adopted Son of Augustus Caesar, from thence called Germanicus, by whom not only the Rhati and Norici, then lying out of the bounds of Germany, now included in it, were subdued in fine, and brought into the form of Roman Provinces; but the whole Country in a manner to the very Ocean was forced to yield obedience to the Roman Empire. But this was for so short a time, that it was both won and lost during the Reign and Government of Augustus Caesar. So that the whole established Conquests of the Romans upon this Country, as it is now bounded, contained no more than the Provinces of Germania, and Belgica Prima, with part of Germania Secunda, belonging unto the Dioceses of Gaul; the greatest part of the two *Rhatia*s being under the Dioceses of Italy; Noricum Mediterraneum and Ripense, with some parts of Pannonia, parts of the Dioceses of Illyricum. But none of these (as lying on the West side of the Rhene, and the South of the Danow) did ever pass in the account of the ancient *German*s, the *German*s not enduring the yoke so long as to be brought within the number of the Roman Provinces. Provoked with the Lust and Insolencies of Quintilius Varus, who succeeded Drusus in that charge, they set upon him under the conduct of Arminius, a chief Prince amongst them, kill him, and utterly cut off three Legions; as we shall see more particularly when we come to Brunswick, the ancient Seat of the Cherusci, by whom the Forces of that Emperor were driven over the Rhene. After which defeat Augustus laid aside the Affairs of Germany, confining his Empire within the Rhene, which Drusus had extended to the banks of the Ocean. Hac clade factum, ut Imperium quod in littore Oceani non fateretur, in ripa Rheni fluminis trarer, saith the Historian. Nor did the Romans only forbear to revenge this Loss by making a new War upon them; but seemed more careful to defend themselves against their Invasions, than to incur the hazard of a new Defeat; quartering eight Legions with their several Wings and Aids on the shores of the Rhene, and four upon the banks of the Danow, to keep these people from incroaching on the Roman Provinces. But the fatal period of that Empire drawing on apace, the French, Burgundians, Almans, and other Dutch Nations break through those Guards, dispossess the Romans of all Gaul, Rhetia, and Noricum, which they share amongst them; till in the end the French, prevailing over the rest, extend their Empire over all the modern Germany; chiefly performed by the valour of Charles the Great, created Emperor of the West by the people of Rome, and crowned with the Imperial Crown by Pope Leo the 4. on Christmas day, Anno 801. So that now the old Prophecie of the Druides, concerning the removing of the Empire into the West, came to be accomplished, though Tacitus in his time accounted it for a vain and idle Prediction. For when Civilis raised a Rebellion amongst the Baravi (the Hollanders and parts adjoining) against Vespasian then newly made Emperor, possessionem rerum humanarum Transalpinis gentibus portendit Druidae canebant, the Druides prophesied of the translation of the Empire to the Transalpine Nations: accomplished, as before is said, in the person of Charles the Great, King of France and Germany. By whom it was divided (for the better ordering or Governance of it) into West-France, or West-rick, in the barbarous Latine of those times called Westfrasia, containing the modern France, and so much of the Netherlands as lieth on the French side of the River Maas; and Osten-rick, (i.e. the Eastern Kingdom) in the Latine of those times Austrasia, containing so much of the modern Germany and Pannonia as was possessed by the French, with the rest of the Netherlands. This was afterwards subdivided into the Kingdoms of Lorrain and Germany: whereof the first contained all Germany within the Rhene, together with the Belgick Provinces before described, the Counties of Flanders and Artois excepted only; the Kingdom of Germany taking up the rest. For in the time of Ludovicus Pius, the Son of Charles, the great Empire of his Father was parcelled out into many members, as Italy, France, Burgundy, Lorrain, and Germany, distributed amongst his Sons and Nephews with the Title of Kings: by means whereof the Kingdoms of Germany and Lorrain, united in the person of Lewis the Ancient, in little time were alien'd from the House of Charles, and left off to be French, possessed by the great Princes of Lorrain, Saxony, Schwaben, and Bavaria; by them dismembered into many Principalities and inferior States, all passing under the account and name of the Dutch or *German*s. The Kings and Emperours of which here follow.

The Kings and Emperours of GERMANY.

815. 2. Ludovicus Pius, King of France, Germany, and the Emperour of the Romans.
841. 3. Lewis, surnamed the Ancient, second Son of Ludovicus Pius, King of Germany, to which Anno 876. he united that of Lorrain also.
4. Charles the Gros, Son of Lewis the Ancient, reigned at first jointly with Carloman and Lewis his elder Brethren, after their deaths sole King of Germany. Anno 880. he succeeded Ludovicus Balbus in the Title of Emperour, continued unto his Successors; and during the minority of Charles the Simple

- by a Faction of the French Nobility was chosen King of France: the whole Estate of Charles the Great becoming once again united in the person of one Sovereign Prince.
- 891 5. Arnulph, the natural Son of Carloman, the Brother of Charles, King of Germany, and Emperour.
- 903 6. Lewis or Ludovick IV. (Lewis the Brother of Charles and Carloman being reckoned for one) King of Germany, and Emperour, the lawfully begotten Son of Arnulph.
- 913 7. Conrade, the Son of Conrade, the Brother of Lewis the 4. the last Prince of the masculine issue of Charles the Great. After whose death the Francones and Saxons, seeing Charles the Simple, King of France, overlaid by the Normans, or embroiled by the Princes of the House of Anjou, took that advantage to transfer the Empire to themselves; and they made choice of Henry Duke of Saxony to be their Emperour. A worthy Prince, by whom some Nations of the Slaves, the Hungarians and part of Lorraine were subdued or added to the Empire.
- 929 8. Henrick, surnamed Anceps, or the Fowler, Duke of Saxony, elected by the German Princes, but designed by Conrade, as being eldest Son of Otho Duke of Saxony by Luitgardis Daughter to the Emperour Arnulph, and consequently a branch of the Caroline Stock.
- 938 9. Otho, surnamed the Great, the Son of Henry, Emperour and King of Italy. 36 years.
- 974 10. Otho II. Son of Otho the first, Emperour and King of Italy. 10.
- 984 11. Otho III. Son of Otho II. Duke of Saxony, and the last of that House which had the title of Emperour and King of Italy. After whose death, all right of Succession being disclaimed, the Emperours became elective; but for the most part the Election was ingrossed or monopolized (since the Failure of the House of Saxony) by the Dukes of Franconia, Suevia, Bavaria, and Austria, notwithstanding the liberty or freedom of Election pretended to by the Electors. The business was first projected in the Court of Rome, to make the Emperours less powerful, and distract the Germans, whom they feared, into Sides and Factions: confirmed by a Decree of Pope Gregory the fifth, being a Native of that Country.
- 1002 12. Henry II. surnamed the Saint, Duke of Bavaria, the first Emperour elected according to the Constitution of Gregory the fifth, but so elected, that he challenged it in a manner by the right of Blood, as being the Grandchild of Henry surnamed Rixofus, the first Duke of Bavaria of the Saxon race; the second Son of Henry the first, and consequently the next Heir male of that House after Otho the 3. compelling some of the Electors, who opposed his Title, by the force of Arms to yield unto it. So that the first Emperour who came in by a clear Election, but not without pretension of a Title also, was
- 1025 13. Conrade II. Duke of Franconia, surnamed Salicus, Husband to Luitgardis, one of the Daughters of Otho the first, and consequently not a Stranger to the former Family.

- 1040 14. Henry III. surnamed Niger, the Son of Conrade.
- 1056 15. Henry IV. Son of Henry the third, in whose days the Popes began to usurp Authority over the Emperours; inasmuch as Leo the ninth, having received the Papedom at the Emperours hands, repented himself of it, put off his Papal Vestments, went to Rome as a private person, and was there new chosen by the Clergy. This was done by the persuasion of a Monk called Hildebrand, who being afterwards made Pope by the name of Gregory the 7. excommunicated this Henry, the first Prince that was ever excommunicated by a Pope of Rome. From which time till the year 1254. there were continual Wars and Thunders betwixt them and the nine following Emperours, some of them being excommunicated, some forced to put their Necks under the Feet of the Pope, others to quit the care of the Commonwealth, and betake themselves unto the Wars of the Holy Land, leaving the Pope to do what he list in Germany.
- 1106 16. Henry V. Son of Henry the 4. armed by the Pope against his Father, whom he had no sooner succeeded in the Empire, but the Pope excommunicated him, for being too stiff in the business of Investitures, and raised up the Saxons against him; by whom being vanquished, and otherwise afflicted by the Pope's practices, he was forced to submit unto his commands, and was the last Emperour of the House of Franconia.
- 1125 17. Lotharius Duke of Bavaria, seizing on the Empire without any Election, was reconciled unto the German Princes by the means of St. Bernard. He settled the Affairs of Italy in two Journeys thither. 13.
- 1139 18. Conrade III. Son of Frederick, the first hereditary Duke of Sueve or Schwaben, and Sister's Son unto Henry the fifth, vanquished Henry surnamed the Proud, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria; and going to the Holy Wars with Lewis King of France, discomfited the Turks near the Banks of Meander 15.
- 1153 19. Frederick, surnamed Barbarossa, Duke of Sueve, crowned at Rome by Adrian the 4. and not long after excommunicated by Pope Alexander the 3. to whom he was fain at last to submit himself, the Pope insolently treading on his Neck. He went after to the Holy Land, where he died, having discomfited the Turks in three great Battels. 37.
- 1190 20. Henry VI. Son of Frederick, and King of Sicily, in right of Constance his Wife, crowned by Pope Celestine, who employed him in the Wars of the Holy Land; in his Journey towards which he died at Messina. 8.
- 1198 21. Philip, Duke of Sueve, Brother of Henry the 6. excommunicated by the Pope, (who loved not this Family) by whose means Otho, the Son of Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony, was set up against him. The occasion of great Wars among the Germans, reconciled by Marriage of Otho with a Daughter of Philip. 9.
- 1207 22. Otho IV. Son of Henry surnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, crowned at Rome by Pope Innocent the 3. by whom not long - long after he was excommunicated, for taking into his hands some Towns of Italy which belonged to the Empire: vanquished in Brabant by the Faction raised up against him, he relinquished the Empire to his Competitor.

- 1212 23. Frederick II. King of Sicily and Naples, Son of Henry the 6. having settled Germany, disposed himself for the Wars of the Holy Land, where he recovered the possession of the Realm of Jerusalem. He was excommunicated by the Pope at his return into Italy, and not long after poisoned.
- 1250 24. Conrade IV. Son of Frederick, the last Emperour of the House of Schwaben. After whose death the Empire being distracted by the Pope's practices into many Factions, each Faction chose an Emperour or King of the Romans: so that at one time there were elected Henry Earl of Thuringia, William Earl of Holland, Alfonso King of Castile, the renowned Author of the Alfonso Tables, and
- 1254 25. Richard Earl of Cornwall, Brother of Henry the third of England, the best monied man of all his time, supposed therewith to buy the Suffrages of the Archbishop of Colen and Elect of Palatine, by whom he was elected and crowned King of the Romans, An. 1254. and after he had dealt in the affairs of the Empire 6 years, he returned into England, where he died. After whose death, or an Interregnum of 12 years from his Exit rather, the Title was at last accepted by
- 1273 26. Rodolph Earl of Habsburg, a petit Prince, (others of greater Estates and Fortunes not daring to take up the honour) the Raiser of the present Austrian Family.
- 1292 27. Adolph, Earl of Nassau, who served in person under King Edward the 1. of England against the French; for which being disfiled by the Germans, he was encountered and slain near the City of Spire.
- 1298 28. Albert Duke of Austria, Son of Rodolphus the Emperour, to whom Pope Boniface the 8. gave the Realm of France, of which he had deprived King Philip the Fair. But Albert would not meddle out of Germany, and did nothing in it.
- 1308 29. Henry, Earl of Luxemburg, who made a Journey into Italy to recover the Rights of the Empire, (where an Emperour had not been seen in 60 years:) supposed to be poisoned in the Chalice by a Friar at Benevent, a Town of the Pope's, 6.
- 1314 30. Lewis, Duke of Bavaria, crowned at Aix in the wonted manner; opposed by Frederick Duke of Austria, chose by another Faction, and crowned at Bonna, a Town of the Archbishop of Colen: but he being defeated, Lewis remained sole Emperour, and was excommunicated by Pope John, 22. 33.
- 1346 31. Charles IV. Son of John King of Bohemia, and Grand-son of Henry the 7. crowned with the Iron Crown at Millain 1354; the framer of the Golden Bull. 32.
- 1378 32. Wenceslaus, King of Bohemia, and Earl of Luxemburg, deformed and vicious; deposed by the German Princes. 22.
- 1400 33. Rupertus, Elect of Palatine, passed into Italy
- for the recovery of the Dukedom of Millain, sold by Wenceslaus; but was well beat by John Galeazzo, and so returned. 10.
- 1410 34. Podocus Barbatus, Marquis of Moravia, Uncle to Wenceslaus.
- 1411 35. Sigismund Brother of Wenceslaus, King of Hungary and Bohemia, and Earl of Luxemburg, crowned at Rome on Whitsunday 1432. He travelled exceedingly for establishing the Peace of Christendom, distracted at that time with three Popes at once; and was a great promoter of the Council at Constance.
- 1439 36. Albert II. Duke of Austria, Son-in-law of Sigismund, whom he succeeded in all his Estates and Titles, excepting Luxemburg. 1.
- 1440 37. Frederick III. Duke of Austria, the Son of Ernest of Austria, and next Heir of Albert the 2. He procured the calling of the Council of Basil for the Peace of Christendom, travelling for that cause to Rome, where he was declared Emperour, Anno 1442. 54.
- 1494 38. Maximilian, Son of Frederick, Duke of Austria, who first united the Estates of Burgundy to the House of Austria. A Prince that undertook many great Actions, but went through with none. 25.
- 1519 39. Charles V. King of Spain, Son of Philip King of Spain, and Archduke of Austria, Son of Maximilian by the Lady Mary of Burgundy. A puissant Prince, who had Prisoners at the same time the French King and the Pope of Rome. He ruined the League made by the Protestants at Smalcald, took Prisoners the Elect of Saxony, and the Landgrave of Hessia, drove the great Turk from Vienna, won the Kingdom of Tunis, and in the end resigned all his Estates; and died in a Monastery. 39.
- 1558 40. Ferdinand, Archduke of Austria, the Brother of Charles, King of Hungary and Bohemia, elected King of the Romans by the procurement of Charles, Anno 1531. Upon whose Resignation he was chosen Emperour, Anno 1558. 7.
- 1565 41. Maximilian, the Son of Ferdinand, elected King of the Romans in the life of his Father, Anno 1562, succeeding the Empire after his decease.
- 1577 42. Rodolphus, the eldest Son of Maximilian, had great Wars against the Turk, with whom in the year 1600 he concluded a Peace; but being undermined by his Brother Matthias, was forced to surrender to him the Kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia, and to content himself with Austria and the Empire only. These eight last Emperours were all of the Order of the Garter.
- 1612 43. Matthias, Brother of Rodolphus, King of Hungary, Bohemia, and Archduke of Austria; in whose time were sown the seeds of that terrible War which had almost destroyed the Empire. Having no children of his own, he procured Ferdinand of Gretz to be declared Successour into his Estates. 7.
- 1619 44. Ferdinand of Gretz, Archduke of Austria, Son of Charles of Gretz, the younger Son of Ferdinand, the first, succeeded Matthias in all his Estates and Titles. A Prince more zealously affected to the See of Rome than any of his Predecessors, and a great enemy of the Protestant Religion, occasioning thereby that long and bloody War in the Empire of Germany, not yet fully ended.

1637 45. Ferdinand III. Son of Ferdinand II. broke the great power of the Swedes, (called in for the support of the German liberty, and against the violent resolutions of his Father at the Battle of Norlingen) the twelfth Emperor of the House of Habsburg, and the ninth of the House of Austria without intermission. The cause of which is to be attributed to Charles V. who procured in his life-time that his Brother might be chosen Rex Romanorum, as his Successor in the Empire: a policy which hath been ever since continued by his Successors. And the Germans are the more willing to hearken to it, because the Austrian Princes are not only Natives of this Country, but better able to back out the Empire in its complete Majesty than any of the rest of that Nation are.

And to say truth, it is but need that some great Prince or other be elected to it, who by the power and reputation of his own Estate may preserve the Honour of the Empire, confined in a manner within Germany, and there so weakened by the alienating of whole Countries from it, (some Titulary acknowledgment excepted only) that it is nothing in effect but magni nominis umbra, the shadow of a mighty body, a meer empty Title. For if we look upon the present state and condition of it, we shall find it otherwise too weak to support the great and swelling Title of the Roman Empire. For as for the Empire itself, it hath some Countries reputed as parts of it, which yet acknowledg no Subjection; as Belgium, Switzerland, and Denmark: Some do acknowledge a kind of Subjection, but the Princes of them come not to the Imperial Diets; as the Dukes of Savoy and Lorraine, and some of the Italian Potentates: Finally, some both confess the Emperor to be their Sovereign, and that they owe Service to his Courts, which are the Princes and Cities of Germany only, but those so privileged, so exempted from his commands, so absolute and uncontrollable in their own Estates, that they care little for his power, and not much (if any thing) for his person; of which we shall speak more hereafter, when we come unto the form of the publick Government. In the mean time, if we would know by what occasions the Empire became so feeble, it may be said, that the reasons and occasions of it have been very many. As first, the weakness and improvidence of the Caroline Race, dismembering from it many powerful and wealthy Provinces, reserving only a bare Homage and some slight acknowledgment. 2. The Cunning of the Popes, who from the time of Henry IV. to Rodolph of Habsburg had by their Excommunications and other practices so exercised the Emperours with intestine troubles, that they forced them in a manner to abandon Italy: inasmuch that the said Rodolph finding the inconvenience of it, sold most of his Estates there to the fairest Chapmen. 3. This done, and the Popes knowing well enough that they could not wax strong in Italy, if they did not weaken the Emperor's estate in Germany, they first wrested out of their hands the Investiture of the Bishops, Abbats, and other Ecclesiastical Preferments; who being now made their own creatures, were so increased both in Revenue and Power by little and little, and fortified with so many Immunities, that some of them grew in time to be Free Estates, all of them Princes of the Empire. 4. But fearing that this might not bring the Emperours low enough, they bated them with continual Factions and perpetual Broils: which put them to a necessity of making what Friends they could, though they paid very dearly for them; and taking up what monies they could of the wealthier Cities, paying them in Exemptions and Royal Privileges, when they could not otherwise cancel or discharge the Debt. 5. And unto this, the making of the Empire Elective gave no little help, few of them looking on the Empire but as Tenants for term of life, and therefore were more likely to discharge such Debts by impairing the publick Patrimony, which they had no hold in, than to diminish any thing of their own Estates. 6. But being the Title of Emperor was the greatest Honour which any of that Nation could be capable of, and such as by good husbandry might be made beneficial unto their posterity, (as we see what good uses have been made of it by the Austrian Family, ever since the time of Rodolph of Habsburg;) who would not part with some of the Imperial Rights, to advance his own House to an equal greatness? And herein many of the Emperours were exceeding faulty, who, to get the Empire to themselves, or leave it after them unto their posterity, dismembered from the same many Towns and fair Possessions, given by them to the Electors for their Votes and Suffrages. 7. A thing which the Electors understood sufficiently, and therefore were resolved to make the best of the market, knowing that the Commodity could be bought of none but themselves: as in the Election of Wenceslaus Son of Charles the 4th. of whom it was but Ask and have what they have a mind to. By means whereof the Princes grew in time so strong, that there were few of them who durst not undertake a War against their Emperours. And this appeareth by the Story of Charles the fifth, who, though the most puissant Emperor which had reigned in Germany since Charles the Great, yet found himself so over-matched by these ruffling Princes, that he was willing to resign the Empire to his Brother Ferdinand.

But to proceed: By these and every of these means the Body of the Empire came to be divided into many Estates, and those Estates to be made absolute and independent, as before is said. The principal whereof, which being described will make up the Chorography of this great Continent, are those of 1. Cleveland, 2. the Estates of the three Spiritual Electors, 3. the Palatinate of the Rhene, 4. Alsatia, 5. Lorraine, 6. Suevia or Schwaben, 7. Bavaria, 8. Austria and its Appendixes, 9. the Confederation of Wederaw, 10. Franconia, 11. Wurtemberg, and 12. Baden, 13. the Palatinate of Northgoia, or the Upper Palatinate, 14. Bohemia and the incorporate Provinces, 15. Pomerania, 16. Mecklenburg, 17. the Marquisate of Brandenburg, 18. Saxony, and the Members of it, 19. the Dukedoms of Brunswick and Lunenbourg, 20. the Lantgravedom of Hassia, 21. Westphalia, 22. East-Friesland. Such lesser States as, being absolute and free, are of lesser moment, shall be reduced (together with the Imperial Cities) to those several Provinces in which they are included, or out of which they were taken. As for the Province of Holftein, or Holfatia, though it be Imperial, and in this respect by some accounted as a Province of Germany, yet being under the command of the King of Denmark, and by all Writers reckoned as a part of that Kingdom, I shall there speak of it. Some of these are thus censured by Aubanus, a late Writer. They of Suevia (saith he) are Whores, they of Franconia Ravishers and Buggers, they of Bohemia Hereticks, those of Bavaria Thieves, they of Saxony Drunkards, they of Friesland and Westphalia Swearers, and they of the Palatinate Gluttons. But I hope more charitably of them all than so. I know there is another division of this Country, made by the Emperor

Maxi-

Maximilian at the Diet at Colen, Anno 1522. who, for the better raising both of men and money for all publick services, caused it to be divided into the ten Circles of 1. Lower Saxony, 2. Upper Saxony, 3. Westphalia, 4. Of the Rhene, 5. Of the four Electors of that part, 6. Franconia, 7. Suevia, 8. Bavaria, 9. Austria, and 10. Burgundy. But that before proposed being the more particular, I shall follow that, according to the order before laid down; beginning first with those which, together with the Belgick Provinces and the Dukedom of Lorraine, contained anciently the Provinces of Belgica and Germania Prima, and some part of Germania Secunda and made up the Kingdom of Austrasia, strictly and specially so called.

1. CLEVELAND.

CLEVELAND, or the Estates of the Duke of Cleve, before dismembered and divided betwixt the Competitors for the Dukedom on the death of the last Duke hereof, Anno 1609, contained the Dukedoms of Cleve, Guilick and Berg, and the Earldom of Mark or March, all lying in a ring together; And though these two last lie on the other side of the Rhene, and not so properly within the old Precincts of the Kingdom of Lorraine, or any of the Roman Provinces before named, yet being they belonged all to the same Prince, not parted by the interposition of other Countries, they shall be handled here together as the same Estate.

1. The Dukedom of CLEVE, properly and distinctly so called, hath on the East the Countries of Mark and Berg, with some part of Westphalen, on the West Gelderland and some part of Limbourg, on the North the Earldom of Zutphen and the Land of Over-Yssel, and on the South Guilick, and the Land of Colen. So called from Cleve the chief Town of it.

The Country is very fruitful both for Corn and Pasturage, well stocked with Cattel of all sorts for necessary use and pleasure; hath good store of Fowl, both tame and wild; is blessed also with an healthy Air, and, in a word, with all things needful for the life of man, well watered with the Rhene, the Roer, the Duffel, the Exfar, and the Nirfs, common to this and the rest of the incorporate Provinces.

The places of most importance in it are, 1. Cleve, (in Latine Clivia) so called, because built on the sides of three little Hills (which the Latines call Clivi) gently descending towards the Banks of the Rhene, which not far off divides it self into several Channells. An ancient Town, and of great note in former time, as appears by many old Foundations and other monuments of Antiquity continually digged up in the Fields adjoining; but chiefly by an old four-square Tower built on the highest of the three Hills, of great height and state, Founded by Julius Caesar as a Bulwark against the Germans inhabiting the farther side of the River. For proof of which, besides the old Tradition constantly maintained, there is an Inscription on the Gates of the Duke's Palace, near adjoining to it, which saith; Anno ab Urbe DCXCIIIX. C. Julius Dictator, his paribus subactis, hanc Arcem fundavit, i.e. that in the year 698, from the building of Rome, Julius Caesar the Dictator, having subdued those parts of the Country, caused this Tower to be built. 2. Santen, on the banks of the Rhene, a Town of great Antiquity, as the Ruines of it do declare; supposed by Piginius to be the Trajana Colonia of the Ancients. 3. Wesel, (in Latine Vesalia) a fair and rich Town, seated on the Confluence of the Rhene with the River of Lippe, which, rising in Westphalia, doth here lose it self; of great note for a Colledge of Secular Canons built here by Eberard the 9th

Earl, Anno 840, or thereabouts; and an Hospital liberally endowed for old impotent persons, Founded by Henry de Baer, the Duke's Chancellor. A Town not subject to these Dukes, though within the Dukedom, being reckoned an Imperial City, and one of the Hanse-Towns; now neither so Imperial nor so free as formerly; possessed first with the Spaniards, with a Garrison of 3000 men (at the beginning of the War of Olve) by D. Lewis Valsco, and from them taken by the States of the United Provinces, Anno 1628. 4. Burick, on the French side of the Rhene, over against Wesel, amongst goodly Corn-fields and pleasant Pastures. 5. Duisburg, or Tuitzburg, in Latine called Tentoburgum, a Town of the ancient Germans, (as the name importeth) situate on the Rhene, betwixt the Angra and the Roer, two noted Rivers. A Town formerly of great Trading, and notably well built; Imperial, and one of the Hanse; but ceased to be Imperial when sold by Rodolph of Habsburg to Theodorick the ninth of that name, Earl of Cleve, together with 6. Cranenburgh, another Town of this Dukedom, but of lesser note. 7. Emmerick, on the Rhene, a well-frequented Town, remarkable for a very fair School. 8. Rees, 9. Griet, and 10. Griethuisen, all upon the Rhene. 11. Calcar, a Town more within the Land, but not far from the River; grown wealthy by the trade of Cloathing, and the best Beer or Ale in all these parts, sold thence abundantly into the Country round about. Not far from whence, at a place called Auff de Baern, it is supposed that Cesar Germanicus built his Bridge over the Rhene, when he went from Vetula Castra against the Marsi, a Nation of Germany. 12. Gennep, upon the Niers or Nirfs, not far from its influx into the Maes: which together with Duffele and Rienwald were bought of Sigismund, the Emperor, by Adolph the first Duke of Cleve, for a great sum of money.

South of the Land of Cleve, betwixt it and Colen, lieth the County of MUERS, extended all along on the banks of the Rhene; a distinct State, the Earl of which is subject to no other Prince but the Emperor only; so called from Muers, the chief Town of it, situate on the French side of the Rhene, over against Duisburg. Next Towns to which are, 2. Orsey, 3. Angur; of which little memorable. A small Territory, but in a very fruitful Soil. The neighbourhood whereof to the Land of Colen (to which it serveth as an Outwork upon that side) preferred it in former times from the Dukes of Cleve, who otherwise, no doubt, either by Arms or Marriage had been masters of it, as they were of the adjoining Provinces on both sides of the River.

2. GULICK-LAND, or the Dukedom of Guilick, hath on the East the County of Muers, and the Land of Colen, on the West Gelderland and Limbourg, on the North Cleve, and on the South the rest of the Land of Colen. The Air and Soil are much of the same nature as in Cleve; save that here is a greater plenty of Wood for dying, and a better breed of Horses than in the other, The Seat of the Menapii in the times of old.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Guilick, in Latine Juliacum, (whence the French call it Juliers) known by that name in the Itinerary of Anonimus, sufficient proof for the Antiquity thereof, but not otherwise famous, seated upon the River Roer, the chief Seat heretofore of the Dukes of Guilick, before the uniting hereof with Cleve; and, since the dissolution of that Estate, possessed sometimes by the States of the United Provinces, and sometimes by the Spaniards, called in by the Competitors to assert their Titles. 2. Dueren, on the same River, the Marcodurum of the old Writers; and of late memorable for the long Siege which it held against Charles the fifth in in his Wars against William Duke of Cleve and Gulick for the Dukedom of Geldres. 3. Munster Eyfel, (in Latine Monasterium Eyfalia) so called to distinguish it from Munster of Westphalen, pleasantly seated in a Valley begirt with Mountains, not far from the spring or fountain of the River Erp. 4. Caster, so called of a stately and magnificent Castle built for defence of this part of the Country. 5. Berken, on the River Erp. 6. Mervaden, beautified with a strong Castle, which gives name to an honourable and ancient Family. 7. Enkerick. 8. Berlen, &c.

There is also within the limits of this Dukedom the famous Town of Aix, as the French, or Aken, as the Germans call it, famous of old time for the hot Baths both within and without the Town, whence it had the name of Aix or Aken, (in Latine Aquisgranum) situate on the edge of Limbourg, in a fruitful Soil, but the Buildings nothing answerable to the fame of the place; inhabited for the most part by Smiths and Braffers, who drive the greatest Trade herein, working continually on Iron and other metals, with which they are supplied abundantly out of Liege and Limbourg. The Town is Imperial, but under the Protection of the Dukes of Cleve: at the expiration of which Family, under colour of some quarrels about Religion, it was seized on and garrisoned by Marquess Spinola for the King of Spain. It was of great fame formerly for the death and sepulture of Charles the Great, by him made one of the three seats of the Western Empire, and designed by him to be the place in which the King of the Romans should receive his Crown for the Kingdom of Germany at the hands of the Archbishop of Colen. The Town is supposed to be formerly the wintering Camp of the Romans, called in Tacitus Vetera, which was taken by Crovis in the beginning of his Rebellion against Vespasian; during which Wars it is often mentioned by the Writers of those times. They were built and strengthened by Augustus, the better to keep under the Germans; quippe illis hybernis obsideri premique Germanias Augustus crederet, as Tacitus. At this day, this Town and Triers are reputed famous for holy Reliques; here being said to be amongst others the Bearing-cloth wherewith our Saviour was wrapt when he was in his Swaddling-cloths, which the Emperour solemnly worshipped at his Inauguration. Concerning the ambition which the Papists have to be thought possessors of these Reliques, see, I beseech you, how pitifully they have mangled the Head of S. John Baptist. They of Amiens brag that they have his Face, and so do they of S. John d'Angelic. The rest of his Head is at Malta; yet is the hinder part of his Skull at Namur, and his Brain at Novum Rostovienfe: another part of it is at Maurienne, another piece at Paris; his Jaw at Wesel, his Ear at S. Flowres, his Forehead and Hair at S. Salvatore's in Venice: another part of his Head is at Noyon, and another at Luca: Yet is his whole Head entire and unmaimed in S. Sylvesters Church at Rome. And so no doubt is this Bearing-cloth at more places than one.

But to return again to Gulick. It was once part of the possessions of the Dukes of Lorraine; whether laid to it at the first erection of that Dukedom, as some Writers say, or added to it by the Princes of the House of Ardenne, when they succeeded in the same, I dare not possibly determine; although the lying of this Country within the ancient Verge or Perambulation of the great Forest of Ardenne makes the last in my opinion not to be improbable. It was first made an Earldom of it self in the person of Ensface, Brother of Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorraine, who seized upon it as his part of the Estate on the death of Godfrey, his elder brother Baldwin being absent in the Holy Land. In the person of William the fourth of that name it was made a Marquisate, advanced unto that honour by the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria, Anno 1329, created not long after Duke of Gulick by Charles the fourth, Anno 1356. His Estate was much augmented about that time, or but shortly after, by his Marriage with Mary, Sister and Heir of Rainold and Edward Dukes of Geldres, adding thereby that Dukedom unto this of Gulick. His two Sons, William and Rainold, both Dukes successively, dying without issue, the Estate fell to Adolphus, Duke of Berg or Monts, as the next Heir-male, Anno 1425; and finally, together with that of Berg, was added to the Dukedom of Cleve, by the Marriage of Mary Heir hereof with John the 3. Duke of Cleve, and with it conjoynd till the expiration of that noble Family; whereof more anon.

As for the Estates of Berg and Mark, they had one original, begun by two Brothers, the Sons of Theodorick Lord of Teisterbant, of the House of Cleve: out of which House as they descended, so into that they finally were again resolved, as their first materials. Of these two Brothers, Adolphus being the elder, was by the Emperour Henry surnamed the Fowler, made Earl of Altena Anno 930, or thereabouts; and Eberard, the younger, by the same Emperour made Earl of Berg. But Eberard entering a Monastery of his own Foundation, left his Estate and Earldom of Berg to the Elder Brother. United thus into one Estate, they became again divided betwixt the Sons of Adolph, the 3. of that name, and fourth Earl of Altena and Berg; Engelbert the younger Son enjoying the Estate of Berg, and Eberard the elder succeeding his Father in that of Altena. How they became united to the House of Cleve, we shall see hereafter, having first looked over the Chorography or Description of them.

3. The Dukedom of BERG is bounded on the East with Westphalen and the Country of Mark, on the West with the Rhene from Wesel up as high as Colen, by which 'tis parted from the Dukedom of Cleve, on the North with the River Lippe, which separates it from the rest of Cleve, and on the South with the Land of Colen. So called from the Hilliness of the Country, Berg in Dutch signifying an Hill, (as Burg doth a Town or Burrough); from whence the Earls and Dukes hereof are called Montenfes in Latine, and les Comtes and Ducs de Mons in French. The Country for the most part, in the Vales especially, yields a great store of the best Wheat, and consequently of the purest Bread, and in the Hill-countries rich Mines of Coal, wherewith they do supply their neighbours.

Chief places in it are, 1. Dusseldorp, so called of the River Dussel, upon which it is situate, the River not far off falling into the Rhene. 2. Adenburg, built by Eberhard the first Earl of Berg, the Seat of him and his Successors, till removed to Dusseldorp. 3. Keiserwerd, situate on the Rhene, belonging anciently to the Emperour, but bought for a great sum of money of Charles the 4. by John Earl of Cleve. 4. Mulheim, on the Rhene also, just against Colen on the other side of the water, fortified in the year 1614, and made the Receptacle of the Protestants of that Bishoprick, prohibited the free exercise of Religion in their own dwellings; but razed not long after by Marquess Spinola, on complaint made by those of Colen to the Emperour Matthias. 5. Stelt, or Steltium, on the Roer, among the Coal-mines. 6. Angermund; on the mouth of the River Angra, as the name imports. 7. Esson, or Essendia, on the borders of the County of Mark, once an Imperial, but under the Protection of the Earls of Berg, of most note for a Monastery here built by Alfride the 4. Bishop of Hildesheim, for 52 Nuns and 20 Canons, liberally endowed, and having great command on the Dorps adjoining.

How

How Berg at first was made an Earldom, how joyned unto Altena, and disjoyned again, hath been shewed before. No sooner made a State distinct, but it was added to the Patrimony of the Earls of Gulick, by the Marriage of Earl William with the Daughter and Heir of Berg. Parted again betwixt William and Adolphus, Sons of Gerrard the 2. Anno 1247, the first succeeding in the Earldom of Gulick, and the last in Berg. During this Partage it was made a Dukedom in the person of William the first of that name by Wenceslaus, the Emperour, Anno 1389, whose Son Adolphus, as next Heir, succeeded in the Dukedom of Gulick, Anno 1423. How both were added unto Cleve hath been said already.

conveyed the whole Estate in Marriage to John the 3. Duke of Cleve and Earl of Mark, continuing in that Family till the expiration of it in the person of John-William, the last Prince heretofore, Anno 1610.

4. The Earldom of MARCH, or MARK, hath on the East and North Westphalen, on the West the Dukedom of Cleve, on the South that of Berg or Monts. So called, as being seated in the Marches of Westphalen, out of which it was taken. The Country for the most part, like the rest of Westphalen, is more fit for Pasturage than Corn, woody, and yielding store of Pannage to those herds of Swine with which it plentifully abounds.

Chief places in it are, 1. Werden, upon the River Ruer, on the edge of Westphalen, the people whereof get great wealth by grazing of Cattel. 2. Soff, (in Latine Susatum) for wealth and greatness not inferior to any in Westphalen, (except Munster only) consisting of ten Parishes, and lording it over many rich and pleasant Villages. Anciently it belonged to the Bishops of Colen, but in the year 1454, did voluntarily yield it self to the Duke of Cleve (being then Earl of March also) and was by Duke John the 4. courageously defended against those Prelates. 3. Arnsberg, a fine and pleasant situate for a retiring-place by the Electors of Colen, unto whom it belongs. 4. Dertmund (in Latine Tremonia) a County anciently of it self, and held immediately of the Empire, possessed by the Trotmanns, a Tribe of the Suevians, from whence first called Trotmania, and at last Tremonia. 5. Blancstein, built commodiously by Adolphus the fifth of that name, and first Earl of March, as was also 6. Ham, or Hammon, 7. Unna, of which nothing memorable. 8. Altena, the first Title of the Earls of this House, before they assumed that of the Earls of March, assumed first by Adolphus the 4. on the Conquest of some Lands in the Marches of Westphalen, continuing in that Family till united with Cleve.

As for the Earldom or Dukedom of CLEVE, out of which it was taken, and to which the rest of those Estates did in time accrue; it was one of the most ancient Estates or Principalities in these parts of the world, continuing in a direct line for the space of 900 years, held by them of the Kings of France, and afterwards of the Kings of Lorraine, till the incorporating of that Kingdom with the German Empire. Begun first by Elias Grallius, Companion to Charles Martel in his Wars against the Frisons, Saxons and Bavarians, whose Son Theodorick added hereto by Marriage the County of Teisterbant, containing the Towns and Seigniories of Altena in Westphalen, as also of Bornel, Heudson, Bueron, Culemburg, in the Belgick Provinces. By Baldwin the sixth Earl was added the Territory of Twentzen, (in Latine Regio Tuentana), given him by Ludovicus Pius, by Theodorick the fifth, the Town and Seigniory of Dinflack, settled upon him on his Marriage with Matilda the Heir thereof; by Theodorick the 9. the County of Halkenrade, near Nuyis in the Land of Colen, together with the Towns of Dunsburg and Culemburg, bought of Rodolphus Habsburgensis; by John his Son the Town & Territory of Keiserwerd, bought of Charles the 4. By Adolph the 29 Earl, the Earldom of March, formerly taken out of it, was again united. By Adolph his Successor (made the first Duke hereof by the Emperour Sigismund, Anno 1417,) were added the Lordships of Gennep, Duiffels, and Rixwald bought of the said Emperour, together with the County of Ravensstein, the Towns of Leoburg, Limers, and Hatteren, for the ransom of William Duke of Berg, & other noble persons taken prisoners by him, Anno 1397; by John, the first Duke of that name, the the Town and Territory of Soeff; and finally by John the 3. the Dukedoms of Berg and Gulick, as Heir thereof by his Mother Mary, sole Daughter and Heir of William the fifth and sixth, the last Duke thereof. To which great height this ancient and noble Family had not long attained, and thereby made themselves and their Sons and Daughters fit Matches for the greatest Princes, but it pleased God to bring to its fatal end, and by that means to dissipate this brave Estate in the hands of Strangers, as shall be shewed in the conclusion of this Catalogue of 1443 31. John III Son of Adolph, Duke of Cleve, Earl of March, and Lord of Ravenstein.

1521 33. John III Duke of Cleve, and Earl of March, &c. by descent from his Father; and Duke of Gulick and Berg in right of his Wife, Daughter and Heir of William the last Duke thereof.

1539 34. William Son of John the 3. and Mary his Wife, Daughter and sole Heir of William the last Duke of Gulick and Berg, Father of the Lady Anne of Cleve, one of the Wives of Henry the 8 of England. He contended very strongly against Charles the fifth for the Dukedom of Geldres; but, being too weak for so great an Adversary, made his Submission to him at Penlo, and so saved his Estates.

1584 35. John-William, Son of the former William, during the life of Charles Frederick, his elder Brother, was Bishop of Munster; on whose death Anno 1575, he resigned that dignity, and in the end succeeded his Father in his whole Estates, which he managed with great piety and prudence till the year, 1610. and then died issueless, the last of that ancient and noble Family of the Dukes of Cleve. After whose death much quarrel and contention grew about the Succession betwixt the several Competitors and Pretenders to it: of which the principal were, 1. Leopold, Archduke of Austria, pretending an Investiture from the Emperor Rodolphus in the Dukedom of Juliers, to whom, for want of Heirs-males, the Estate was said to be escheated. 2. John-George, Duke of Saxony, descended from Sibyll, Daughter of Duke John the third; at whose Marriage with John-Frederick the Elector of Saxony, Anno 1535, it was said to have been solemnly agreed upon, that on the falling of the Heirs-males of Cleve, the Issue of that Marriage should succeed therein. 3. George-William, Duke of Prussia, Son of John Sigismund the Elector of Brandenburg, by the Lady Anne his Wife, eldest Daughter of Albert of Brandenburg, Duke of Prussia, and of Maria Eleonora, the eldest Sister and next Heir of the Duke deceased. 4. Wolf-gangus-Guilielmus, Palatine of Newburg, Son of Magdalen, the younger Sister of that Mary, who claimed the Estate as nearest Kinsman by one degree to the said last Duke. And though the right seemed most apparently on the side of Brandenburg, the Estate in tail, pretended by the Duke of Saxony, being formerly cut off by Imperial authority and that pretended to by the Duke of Newburg not of force in Germany: yet Daughter and Heir of Aremberg, descended that branch of the House of March, which till of late were Sovereigns of Sedan and Dukes of Bouillon.

13. Adolph VI. Husband of Mary (or Margaret) Daughter and Heir of Theodorick the 9. Earl of Cleve.

yet being that Leopold was in Arms, and had already forced a possession of Juliers and of most parts of that Country, the two Princes of Brandenburg and Newburg soon agreed the controversy, and by the help of the Protestant Princes their Confederates recovered the greatest part of it from the hands of Leopold. But the Palatine of Newburg, not content with his Partage, first married with a Daughter of the Duke of Bavaria, then reconciled himself to the Church of Rome, and called in the Spanish Arms, under the command of Marquess Spinola, to abett his Quarrel: which made George-William, Son of the Elector of Brandenburg and the Lady Anne, to call in the Forces of the States, under the command of Maurice Earl of Nassau, after Prince of Orange. The issue of which War was this, that Spinola possessed himself of Wesel, Aken, Mulheim, Dusseldorp, and most other places of importance in Berg and Gulick, and the States got into their power some Towns of Gulick, with Rees and Emmerich in the Dukedom of Cleve, and almost the whole County of March. And though most parts of these Estates have been delivered since to the rightful Owners, yet other places of importance are detained from them. Which notwithstanding that they both pretend to keep for the use of those Princes in whose cause they stood: yet when such strong parties keep the Stakes, it is most easie to determine who will win the Game: such Alterations as have happened in the chance of War, by the reciprocal winning and losing of some Towns on both sides, not much conducing to the benefit of the rightful Owners.

The Arms of these Princes were, 1. Gules over an Esccheon in Fesse Argent, a Carbuncle pierced, pommelled and floured Or, for the Dukedom of Cleve. 2. Or, a Lion Azure, armed Gules, for the Dukedom of Gulick. The Arms of Berg and March I have no where found.

2. The Estates of the Three ELECTOR-BISHOPS.

ADjoining to the Estates of Cleve are those of the Spiritual Electors of the Empire of Germany, Colen, Mentz, and Triers; not so contiguous and continous as those of Cleveland, and therefore to be laid out severally by their Metes and Boundaries. And first for COLEN-Land, or the Estate of the Archbishop and Elector of Colen. It is bounded on the East with the Dukedom of Berg, divided from it by the Rhene, on the West with Gulick, on the North with Cleve it self and the County of Muers, and on the South extending to the Land of Triers. The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Ubii, in former times possessed of the Countries of Berg and March; but being warred on by the Germans bordering next upon them, they were by the clemency of Agrippa, then Lieutenant of Gaul, received into protection, and by him placed along the French side of the Rhene, as well for defence of the Borders of the Roman Empire, as for their own security against that Enemy. Won from the Romans by the French in the Reign and under the conduct of Childerick, An. 412, or thereabouts, and from the French by the Emperor Orbo the first, An. 949. By Orbo the 2. made a part of the Dukedom of Lorraine, or at the least given by him unto Charles of France, the first Duke thereof. After whose death, deceasing without Issue-male, the Town of Colen and many other pieces upon the Rhene were seized on by Orbo the 3. and by him restored to the Empire. Since that time the City of Colen hath remained Imperial, and of late times incorporated amongst the Hanse-Towns; but the Territory near unto it, and a great part of Westphalen, subject immediately to the Bishop. The Bishop's See was first founded here by S. Maternus, one of the Disciples of S. Peter, as hath been constantly affirmed by old Tradition: but howsoever it was an Episcopal See, without all question, in the time of Constantine, Maternus, Bishop hereof, subscribing amongst others to the Council of Arles, Anno 326. And being Colen was in those times the Metropolis of the Province of Germania Secunda, the Bishop had the power of a Metropolitan; according to the rule and observation so often mentioned. Afterwards when the Empire was made Elective, these Bishops, with their brethren of Mentz and Triers, were made three of the seven which were to nominate and elect the succeeding Emperor: after which time it is no wonder that they grew both in Power and Patrimony.

Places of most importance within this Electorate are, 1. Bonn, situate on the banks of the Rhene, in the most pleasant and fruitful place of all the Country; the ordinary Residence of the Archbishop, whose House or Palace here is said to be one of the fairest in all Germany. By Tacitus it is called Bonna, and sometimes Castra Bonnen-sia, the Wintering-camp in his time of the Sixth Legion. 2. Nays, by the same Writer called Novesium, (Niveis by Antoninus) seated on the Erp, not far from its fall into the Rhene; the break-neck of the glories of Charles Duke of Burgundy, who being resolved to get this Town into his hands, as a convenient pass into Germany, lay so long before it, that he lost the opportunity of joining with King Edward the 4. of England, whom he had purposely invited to the War of France, and yet was fain to go without it. By means whereof he grew so low in reputation, that he was undermined by the French, defied by the Lorrainer, forsook by the English, baffled by the Switzers, and at last overthrown and slain by that beggarly Nation. 3. Ernae, or Andernach, by Marcellinus called Antenacum, one of the ten Garrisons erected by the Romans on the banks of the Rhene, to secure their Province from the Germans; the other nine being Constantz, Boppard, Worms, Bing, Zabern, Altrip, Seltz, Strasbourg, and Wassenburg. 4. Lutz, seated on the same River also. 5. Sontina, a Town of good repute. 6. Zulp, now a Village of no esteem but for the Antiquities of it, by Tacitus and Antoninus called Tolliacum, most memorable for the great Victory which Clodius the first Christian King of the French (upon a Vow made in the heat of the Fight to embrace the Gospel) obtained against the whole power of the Almans, never presuming after that to invade his Territories. 7. Rhineberg, commonly called Berck, the most Northern Town of all the Bishopricks, situate on the Rhene, (as the name imports) there where the Lands of this Bishop as also of the Dukes of Cleve and the Earls of Muers meet upon a point. A Town which for these 60 years hath been of little use or profit to the right Owner, possessed sometimes by the Spaniards, sometimes by the Confederate States; for each commodiously seated, as opening a passage up the River, and receiving great Customs on all kind of Merchandise passing to and fro. But having finally been possessed by the Spaniard from the year 1606 till 1633, it was then regained for the States by Henry of Nassau, Prince of Orange, with the loss of no more than 60 men: there being found in the Town 30 brass pieces of Ordnance, 70 barrels of powder, with Victuals and Ammunition of all sorts thereunto proportionable. 8. Colen, situate on the Rhene, first built by the Ubii before mentioned, and by them called Oppidum Ubiorum, afterwards, in honour of Agrippina (Daughter of Germanicus, and Wife of Claudius) who was here born, made a Roman Colony, and called Colonia Agrippina, and sometimes by way of eminency Colonia only; thence the name of Colen. A rich, large, populous and magnificent City, containing about five miles in compass, in which are numbered 19 Hospitals, 37 Monasteries of both Sexes, 30 Chappels of our Lady, 9 Parishes, and 10 Collegiat Churches, besides the Cathedral, being a Church of vast greatness, but of little beauty, and not yet finished: the Metropolitan whereof is Chancellor of Italy, the second of the three Electors, and writes himself Duke of Wesphalen and Angriavaria. Nigh to this Town did Cesar with incredible expedition make a Bridge over the Rhene, which more terrified the barbarous enemy than the reports of his valour. So powerful is laborious industry, that it overcometh all disasters, and maketh the most unpassable waters yield to heroic resolutions.

In this Town also is said to lie the bodies of the Three wise men which came from the East to worship our Saviour, vulgarly called the three Kings of Colen. The whole Story is at large written in Tables which are fastened unto their Tombs; the pith whereof is this: The first of them, called Melchior, an old man with a large Beard, offered Gold, as unto a King; the second, called Gasper, a beardless young man, offered Frankincense, as unto God; the third called Balthasar, a Blackmore, with a spreading Beard, offered Myrrhe, as unto a Man ready for his Sepulchre. That they were of Arabia, the Table saith is probable; 1. Because they came from the East, and so is Arabia in respect of Hierusalem; and 2. because it is said in the 72<sup>d</sup> Psalm, The Kings of Arabia shall bring gifts. As for their Bodies, they are there said to have been translated by Helena the Mother of Constantine, unto Constantinople; from thence by Eusebivius, Bishop of Milain, removed unto Milain; & finally brought hither by Rainoldus Bishop hereof, Anno 1164. This is the substance of the History, which for my part I reckon amongst the Apocrypha, (except it be their coming from some part of Arabia) but have not leisure in this place to refel the Fable.

As for the temporal Estate of the Bishops of Colen, it came unto them specially by the munificence of the Emperours of the House of Saxony; the Dukedom of Engern, containing a good part of Wesphalen, being acquired unto this See by Bruno, once Archbishop hereof, one of the younger Sons of the Emperour Henry the first, surnamed the Fowler, with the consent of Otho the first, his elder Brother. To which was added not long after the whole Land of Colen (as we have formerly described it) by Otho the 2. which being formerly a part of the Kingdom of Lorraine, was taken out of it, and settled on the Bishops hereof, at such time as the Dukedom of Lorraine was erected by him; such pieces only as are found on the other side of the Rhene (neither great nor many) being added by the Wit and Industry of the following Bishops: exceedingly increased both in Power and Patrimony by the addition of Liege to this Electorate; it being of late the constant custom of the Canons of Liege to chuse the Archbishop of Colen for their Prince and Pastor.

Next to the Bishoprick of Colen lieth the Land of TRIERS, extended all along the course of the Moselle, from the Dukedom of Lorraine on the South, beyond the Influx of that River into the Rhene at the City of Confluentz, where it bordereth on the Land of Colen. It is bounded on the East with Luxemburg, as on the West with that part of Franconia which lieth below the confluence of the said two Rivers, and is now called Rhinogow; more Southward on that side with the Country of West-reich and the Dukedom of Zweibruck, parts of the Palatinate of the Rhene. The Country towards Lorraine and Luxemburg is somewhat wild and barren, more fruitful about Triers it self and the bank of the Rhene; in all parts generally more pleasant than profitable, the greatest Riches of it lying in Woods and Minerals. The Bishop's See was here first erected by Eusebivius, a Disciple and follower of S. Peter. The reality whereof is not only testified by the Martyrologies, but by Methodius, a Writer of approved credit, who adds Valerius and Maternus for his next Successors, the line Episcopate continuing till the Council of Arles, Anno 326. Agrius Bishop of Triers subscribing to the Acts thereof. From this time forwards, and before, the Bishop had the reputation and authority of a Metropolitan, the City of Triers being anciently the Metropolis of Belgica Prima, within which it stands. It increased exceedingly by being made one of the three Electors of the Spirituality, though the last in order, and Chancellor to the Emperour for the Realm of France: the Fortunes of which Realm it followed, till wrested from it, with the rest of the Kingdom of Lorraine, by the German Emperours.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Confluentz, or Coblentz, the Confluents of Antoninus, so called because seated on the Confluence or Meeting of the Rhene and the Moselle; the Station anciently of the first Legion. A populous and well-built Town, and seated in a pleasant and fertile Country. 2. Ehrenbreitstein, over against Coblentz, on the other side of the Rhene, beautified with a strong Castle of the Bishop's, mounted upon a lofty Hill, which not only gives a gallant prospect to the eye, but commands both the Town and River. 3. Boppard, seated on the Rhene, and called quasi Bonoport, from the commodiousness of the Creek (upon which it standeth) for the use of Shipping: one of the Forts (as Confluentz before mentioned) also was erected by the Romans on the Rhene for defence of Gaul against the Germans; occasioning in time both Towns. It was once miserably wasted by Richard Earl of Cornwall and King of the Romans, because the Bishop of Triers agreed not unto his Election; but soon recovered of those hurts. The ancient name hereof in the Itinerary of Antoninus is supposed to be Bedobrica. It was pawned to the Bishops of Triers by Henry the 7. and not yet redeemed. 4. Sarbrucken, on the edge of Lorraine, (by Antoninus called Pons Sarnix) seated on the River or Brook called Sar, (whence it had the name) at the fall thereof into the Moselle: possessed at the present by a Branch of the House of Nassau, (but Homagers of this Electour) entituled hence, according to the Dutch fashion, Counts of Nassau in Sarbruck, 5. Veldentz, and 6. Beilstein, on the Moselle, of which nothing memorable. 7. Treves, or Triers, in Latine Augusta Trevirorum, the principal City of the Treviri, who possessed this Tract; seated upon the Moselle also; the Metropolis of the Province of Belgica Prima, and honoured with the Residence of the Vicar or Lieutenant-General for the whole Diocess of Gaul; by consequence the Seat of a Metropolitan when it submitted to the Gospel. Of such antiquity it is, that it is said to have been founded 150 years before the City of Rome: of no great beauty of it self, and as little Trading; the River not being capable of Ships of burthen, and the Air generally so cloudy and inclined to rain, that it is by some called merrily Cloaca Planetarum. It passed sometimes among the number of Imperial Cities, but now acknowledgeth the Electour for the Lord thereof; by whom it was made an University, one of the ancientest in all Germany, and of as much reort for the study of good Arts and Sciences as the best amongst them. 8. Ober-Wesel, or Vesalia Superior, (so called to distinguish it from Wesel in the Dukedom of Cleve, which is Vesalia inferior, or the Under-Wesel) the farthest place of this District, seated on the Rhene, not far from Baccharach a Town of the Palatinate; of no great note, but that it is accounted for a Town Imperial.

This Country anciently was part of the great and famous Earldom of Moselle, denominated from the River Moselle, along the Course whereof it was first erected; an an Estate founded by the diherited Sons of Clodian, second King of the French, at the same time (and on the same occasion also) in which the Earldom of Ardenne was erected by them, of which we have already spoken when we were in Belgium: this of the two the more obnoxious to the power of the Kings of Metz, as lying nearer to the Court, and so more in fight, the other being farther off, in Countries far less cultivated, but more defensible. This Earldom comprehending, besides this of Triers, the Countries of Zweibrucken and West-reich, so much of the Lower Palatinate as lieth on the French side of the Rhene, occasioned the Princes of it to be much looked after; and they maintained their Port to the very last: in somuch that Gislebert or Gilbert Earl of Moselle, in the time of the Emperour Henry the first, surnamed the Fowler, was thought by him a fit Husband for his Daughter Gerberg, married after his decease to Lewis surnamed Transmarine, King of France; and Gerrude, Daughter of Theodorick, who came after Gilbert, was married to Henry surnamed Gozelo, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, and by him made the Mother of another Henry, Successour unto Otho the 3. in the Roman Empire. Impoverished not a little both in Power and Patrimony by the erection to the Dukedom of Lorraine, there grew some Feuds between those Houses, occasioning the death of Albert, another of these Earls, slain (as it is said by Lazius) by Godfrey, Son of Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorraine; more probably by some other Prince of the House of Ardenne, it not being founded in any other approved Author, that Godfrey of Bouillon was the Father of any Children. But this Difference being reconciled by the Marriage of Bertha, Daughter of Simon Earl hereof, with Tierrie the 9. Duke of Lorraine, and the Family of these Earls expiring in a short time after, this part of the Estate was seized on by the Bishops of Triers; that part of the Palatinate which lieth on the Gallic side of the Rhene, by the Bishops of Metz, Spire, Wormes, and the Princes Palatine; the rest being taken in by the Dukes of Lorraine, who did still enjoy it: the Emperours of those times being either willing to it, or not able to help it.

3. The Bishoprick of MENTZ is not laid out by Bounds and Limits, as the other, because the Patrimony and Estate thereof doth not lie together, dispersed for the most part about Franconia, intermixed with the Lands & Towns of the Princes Palatine, the Bishops of Wormes, Spire, and others. So that the Temporal Estate of this Electour is every way inferior unto those of Triers and Colen; superiour unto both in place and dignity, he being the first in rank of the whole Electoral College, Chancellor for the Empire, and in all Meetings siteth at the right hand of the Emperour. The Bishop's See was first placed here, as some report by S. Crepenn, one of the Disciples of S. Paul, of whose being sent by him into Gallia (for so the ancient Writers understand Gallia) the Apostle speaketh 2 Tim. 4. Though others with more probability seat him at Vienne in Dauphine. But whether it were here or there, certain it is, that anciently this City was a See Episcopate; Marinus, the Bishop hereof subscribing to the Acts of the Council of Colen, Anno 347. And if a Bishop, certainly a Metropolitan Bishop, this City being in those times the Metropolis of the Province of Germania Prima. But Christianity being worn out of these parts of Germany by the Conquest of the French, Almans, and other Infidels, was again restored in this Tract by Boniface, an English-man, the first Archbishop of Metz of this new Plantation, (in and about the time of Pepin surnamed the Groß, Major of the Palace to the French Kings, and Father of Charlemagne) who, for the Orthodoxy of his Doctrine, and the number of Churches founded by him, hath been deservedly honoured with The title of the Apostle of Germany.

Towns of most note belonging to the Bishops hereof are, 1. Metz it self, the Maguntiacum of the Ancients, so called from the River of Maine, formerly Mogus and Mogonus in the Latine, (now better known by the name of Maine) opposite to the fall whereof into the Rhene it was built of old, so having the command of both Rivers; and for that cause made the Seat of a Roman Officer, commonly called the Duke of Metz, who had a charge of the Frontiers, and especially of those ten Garrisons planted on the banks of the Rhene, spoken of before. It is stretched out in great length on the River's side, but not of answerable breadth; well built, and populous towards the water, in other parts not so well inhabited. The publick Buildings generally are very large and beautiful, the Houses built according to the old Roman Model; the most magnificent whereof is the Bishop's Palace, who is the Immediate Lord both of the Town and Territory, extended on both sides of the Rhene, fruitful in all natural Commodities, and abounding with most excellent Wines. Of good note also for an University here founded by Theodorick, one of the Electors; but especially for the Art of Printing, which was here invented, or perfected at the least, and made fit for use. 2. Bing, seated on the Rhene, another of the Garrison-Towns erected by the Romans on the Banks of that River. In a small Island of which, not far from this Town, is a Tower or Castle called the Mons-le-turm, i. e. the Tower of Mice, built by one Hatto (or Hanno) Archbishop of Metz, Anno 900, or thereabouts, who, in a year of great scarcity, pretending to relieve the poor people oppressed with Famine, caused them to be gathered together into an old Barn, where he burnt them all, saying, They were the Rats and Mice which devoured the Corn. After which barbarous act he was so persecuted by these Vermin, that to avoid them, he was fain to build a Palace in the midst of the Rhene, whither the Rats and Mice followed him, and at last devoured him. 3. Landstein, 4. Halsford, 5. Oxenford, 6. Alderburg, 7. Middleburg, 8. Corlostadt, the Birth place of Caroloftadius, of great note in the time of Luther. 9. Bischoffstein, 10. Königsberg, (Mons regius in Latine) the Birth place of Joannes de Monte regio, a famous Mathematician, as appeareth by his Comment upon Ptolemy's Almagest. Most of which Towns being in Franckenland, though of his Electorate, were not gained in grofs by these Electors, as were the Land of Colen and District of Triers, but piece-meal in a manner, and by retail; partly upon the failure of the House of Schwaben, Dukes of Franconia also, partly by the munificence of the German Emperours, but specially by making the best use of their Votes and suffrages in the Choice of the Emperours, which they did not part withal for nothing. Such Towns hereof as lie on the French side of the Rhene were gained by like means upon the expiration of the House of Moselle.

3. The PALATINATE of the RHENE.

THE PALATINATE of the RHENE is bounded upon the East with the Dukedom of Wirttemberg and some part of Franconia, with the residue thereof and the River Maine on the North, on the South with Elfsa or Alsatia, and on the West with the Land of Triers; extended in length from Conb to Gernersheim, North and South, 72 miles, and in breadth from Zweibrucken to Landen, East and West, 90 miles.

It is called the Lower Palatinate, to difference it from the Palatinate of Bavaria, which is called the Upper; the Palatinate of the Rhene, because lying on the banks of that famous River. The whole Country is said to be the most pleasant part of all Germany, stored with all sorts of Fruits and Metals, abounding with those cool Wines which growing on the banks of the Rhene, have the name of Rhenish; adorned with many goodly Towns; both for strength, populousness, and beauty; and finally, watered with the famous River of the Rhene, and the Neccar.

The Religion of this Country, and that of the Upper Palatinate, which depends upon it, hath much varied since the first Reformation established by Frederick the second according to the Form and Doctrine of the Confession of Augsburg; the Doctrine and Discipline of Calvin being introduced by Frederick the third; the Lutheran Form restored again by Lewis or Ludowick the fifth, after his death exchanged by Frederick the fourth for that of Calvin, as more conducing to the ends of some needy Statists, who could not otherwise raise their Fortunes than by invading the Tithes and Glebe, and other poor remainders of the Church's Patrimony; of which the Clergy being universally deprived throughout this Country, and reduced to miserable short Stipends, by the name of a Competency, became so contemptible, and neglected by all sorts of men, that at the last the Church of the Palatinate was in the same condition with the Church of Israel under the Reign of Jeroboam, when Priests were made out of the meanest of the people. And for the Government of the Churches, though moulded to the Geneva Plat-form as near as it might be, yet were those Princes, loth to leave too much power in the hands of the Elderships, and therefore did appoint some superiour Officers to have an eye on them, whom they called Inspectores & Propositi, their Power being much the same with that of the particular Superintendent amongst the Lutherans; and over them a standing Consistory consisting of three Ministers and as many Counsellors of State, of the Prince's nominating, who in his name were to take care of all things which concerned the Church. A Temperament for which they were beholden to Erasmus, a Doctor of Physick in the University of Heidelberg, who made this Pill, to purge Presbytery of some Popish humours which secretly lay hid in the body of it. But this whole Model and Religion of the Country is much changed of late; and the Religion of the Church of Rome restored in most parts thereof since the Conquest of them by the Spaniards and Bavarians, which before we speak of.

Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Mospach, a pretty neat Town on the banks of the Neccar, and a Prefecture, not far from the borders of Wirtemberg. 2. Ladenberg, near the influx of the same River into the Rhene; the moiety whereof was brought by Rupertus, the Emperour and Palatine, of the Earls of Hohenloe, An. 1571, the other moiety belonging to the Bishop of Wormes. 3. Weinheim, a small Town not far from Ladenberg, belonging once to the Arch-bishop of Mentz, but on some controversy arising about the Title, adjudged up to the said Rupertus and his Heirs for ever. 4. Sieffsen, in the same Tract, well seated but not very large, fold with the Castle of Siraluberg to the said Rupertus by Sifide (or Sigfide) of Siraluberg, the right Heir hereof, Anno 1347. 5. Heidelberg, on the right shore of the Neccar, (going down the water) compassed on three sides with Mountains and lying open only towards the West, Which makes the Heir hereof to be very unhealthy. The chief Beauty of it lieth in one long Street, extended in length from East to West: on the South-east side whereof is a fair & pleasant Market-place, and not far off a very high Mountain called Koningstall, (that is to say, the King's Seat) upon the middle ascent whereof is the Castle, where the Princes Electors use to keep their Courts; and on the very Summit or top thereof, the ruins of an old Tower blown up with Gun-powder. A Town of no great bigness, nor very populous, there being but one Church in it, which was used in the time of my Author for Prayer and Preaching: the rest being either ruined, or employed unto other uses, if not repaired again, since the Spaniards became masters of it, for more frequent Masses. Howsoever, it hath the reputation of being the chief Cities of this Palatinate, not long since furnished with a great and gallant Library, which for choice and number of Books (especially Manuscripts) was thought not to be followed in all Europe, till matched if not over-matched, by the famous Bodleian Library of Oxford. Most of them to the great prejudice of the protestant Cause were carried to Rome, and other places of that party, when the Town was taken by the Spaniards, Anno 1620. Finally for the Town it self, it was once part of the possessions of the Bishop of Wormes, from whom it was taken by the Palatines; and it is now famous for being the Seat of the Palgrave, the Sequel of Rodolphus Agricola, and for a University founded by the Emperour and Palatine Rupertus, An. 1346. 6. Baccharach, on the Banks of the Rhene, so called quasi Bachi ara, for the excellent Wines. 7. Coblentz, on the other side of the water; near unto which is the old and fair Castle called Pfalz, from whence the name Pfalz-grave, or Palsgrave seemeth to come to have been derived. 8. Oppenheim, a strong Town, which together with Keisers-Lautern an Ingelheim were given to the Palatines by Wenceslaus, and after settled on them by Rupertus the Emperour and Palatine for 100000 Florens, Anno 1402. 9. Crenz-nach, called anciently Staronesius. 10. Frankendale, lately a Monastery only, but being well peopled by such of the Netherlands, who to avoid the fury of the Duke of Alva fled thither, is now a Town of principal strength. 11. Gernersheim; and 12. Manheim, a well-fortified Town, seated on the Confluence of Rhene and Neccar.

On the Eastern part of the Country standeth 13. Laden, situate on the little River Tauber, the farthest bound of the Palatinate towards the North-east, there adjoining to the rest of Frankenland. And on West side the Towns of 14. Neustadt, 15. Keisers-Lautern, in Latine called Cæsarea Lutra, once a Town Imperial, from which, and from its situation on the River Lauter, it received this name. 16. Zweibrucken, invested with a large and ample Territory round about, called the Country of Zweibruck, the Patrimony and Title of a younger House of the Pfalzgraves, whom the Latine Writers call Principes Bepontani, the French the Princes of Deuxponts. 17. Simmeren, on the North-west point of it, where it meets with the distinct of Triers; the Title of another Branch of the Palatine Family, called the Duke of Simmeren, situate in that part of the Country which is called Westreich, of which Zweibrucken is also part. In all there are contained within the Palatinate 24 walled Towns, and 12 fair Palaces of the Prince: most of which they have added to their Estates within little more the 400 years. Such excellent managers have they been of their own Estates, so potent in ordering the affairs of the Empire both in War and Peace, and so ingrafted themselves into the most notable Families of Germany, that I may well say with Irenicus, Non est alia Germaniæ Familia cui plus debeat Nobilitas.

Within the Limits of this Country, and Intermingled with the Lands of the Princes Palatine, are the Bishopricks of Spires and Wormes; both ancient, of great Revenue, but Feudatories for a great part of their Estates to these Electors. Of these more towards the head of the Rhene, and on the Gallick side thereof, stands the City of Spires, by Ptolemy called Neomagus, from the newness of the building when that name was given, by Antoninus, Civitas Nemetur, from the Nemetes, who possessed this Tract; and sometimes Spira, by which name it doth still con-continue. A Town Imperial, and anciently a Bishop's See, Tessit the Bishop hereof subscribing to the Acts of the Council of Colen, Anno 347. A neat Town, and very delectably seated, of great resort, by reason of the Imperial Chamber, the Sovereign Court of Judicature of all the Empire, capable of Appeals from the Tribunals of all Princes and free States thereof. A Court which first followed the Emperour in all his Removes, (as anciently the King's Bench in England) but by Maximilian the Emperour first made feodentary, and fixed at Frankford; removed after to Wormes, and finally to this City by Charles the fifth. Sufficiently famous in that the name of Protestants was here taken up, given to the Princes and free Cities following the Reformed Religion, upon their legal Protestation here exhibited. More down the water and on the same shore thereof, stands the City of Wormes, one of those built upon the Rhene for defence of Gaul against the Germans; by Ptolemy called Borbetomagus by Antonine Civitas Wormensis, whence the modern name; but generally Civitas Pannonum, from the Pannonians, the old Inhabitants of those parts, whose chief City it was. A Town Imperial as the former, and a See Episcopal as that is, and as ancient too; Victor the Bishop hereof subscribing to the Acts of the Council of Colen before mentioned. A Town to be observed for the first appearance which Luther made before Charles the 5. (the Imperial Chamber then being holden in this City) who, being dissuaded from that journey by some of his Friends, returned this resolute Answer, That go he would, though there were as many Devils in the Town as there were Tiles on the Houses. Chief Towns belonging to this Bishop are, 1. Udenheim, a Town belonging to the Bishop of Spires, whose Residence it sometimes is; conveniently seated for the command of the Country, and therefore upon some design which was then in hand fortified strongly by the Bishop. But this new Fortification, being begun in a time of Peace, gave great occasion of distrust to the neighbouring Princes, who interposed with Frederick the fifth, then Prince Elector, (of whom it was held in chief) to cause the Bishop to desist from the finishing of it. Which when he had refused to do, pleading a Placart from the Emperour Matthias to compleat the work, the Prince Elector with the rest of the Confederates beat it down by force. For this contempt they were cited to Spires, the Imperial Chamber, in which it was also resolved to proceed suddenly and severely to their condemnation. One of the chief motives which occasioned that unfortunate Prince to entertain the offer of the Crown of Bohemia, and consequently a chief cause of the German Wars. In managing whereof this Town was thought so commodious, that Marquels Spinola caused the works to be raised again, made it the strongest Hold in all those Countries, and caused it to be called by the name of Philipsburg. 2. Rottenberg, originally belonging to the Bishops of Spires, but of late times possessed by the Princes Palatine. Others of lesser note I forbear, to mention.

The first Inhabitants of this Country on the French side of the Rhene were the Nemetes and Pannonians (spoken of before the other side the Intuerge). That on the West side of the River was first conquered by the Romans, and from them by the French, of whose Empire it remained a part, but so that it was subject more immediately to the Earls of Moselle, first under the Sovereignty and Vassalage of the Kings of Metz, and after of the Kings of Lorraine. In the dividing of which Kingdom between the Emperours of Germany and the Kings of France, it became subject to the Empire, but still possessed by those of Moselle as it was before. Escheating to the Empire on the expiration of that Family, partly by force of Arms, partly by paying down ready Money, and partly too by selling of their Voices, as they saw occasion, it was gained by the Electors Palatine: and so also that part of it which lies on the Dutch side of the Rhene, which being anciently and properly a part of Frankenland, followed the fortunes of that Country, till the failure of the House of Schwaben, and then devolved unto the Empire, as the other did. By little and little it got into the hands of the Princes Palatine, who being originally Officers of the Emperour's Household, (such as the Majors of the Palace to the French Kings at the first institution) had first the honour of Counts Palatine bestowed upon them, and afterwards the place of an Elector in the choice of the Emperour. But where their Estates then lay, where they fixed their dwelling, and what Provinces or people they had subject to them, nullo inveni scriptum, I could never find any good Record to build on, saith the learned Munster; their habitation and possession in and of these parts (acquired for the most part by Arms and Money) not being above 450 years standing at the utmost. Likely it is, they had their Residence for the most part in the Emperour's Palace, living upon their Rents, (as others great Officers of Court in these late times) the Dignity and Authority of so great a place seeming sufficient to content them: but were called Count Palatines of the Rhene, because their Jurisdiction and Authority lay most especially in those parts of the Empire which were towards that River. Afterwards, on the Marriage of Otho, the second of that name, Duke of Bavaria, with Gertrude, the Daughter of Henry the Elector Palatine, this Office with the Electoral Dignity fell into that House, possessed at that time of those parts of Francia and the Earldom of Moselle, who not long after, on the dividing of that Estate betwixt Rodolphus and Ludovicus, the Sons of Ludovicus the 2. Elector Palatine and Duke of Bavaria, made up this Palatinate. A State which suddenly received a great augmentation, partly by the care & good husbandry of Rupertus, Emperour & Elector Palatine, partly by the weakness and ambition of Wenceslaus, Emperour and King of Bohemia, and partly by the valour of Frederick, the Prince Elector. Of these the first bought in the Towns of Weinheim, Ladenberg, Sieffsen, and the Castle of Siraluberg, with their lands and Territories. The second gave unto the Palatines, for their Voices in his Election, three strong Towns of the Empire, viz. Keisers Lautern, Ingelheim, and Oppenheim. And the last took in Battel, An. 1452, the Earls of Wirtemberg, the Marquels of Baden, the Bishop of Spires, and the Archbishop of Mentz, and ransomed them on what condition he pleased. More particularly the Earl of Wirtemberg (for it was not yet erected into a Dukedom) paid for his ransom 100000 Florens; the Bishop of Mentz redeemed himself for 450000 Florens. The Bishop of Spires gave for his liberty the Towns of Rottenberg and Werlaw. And the Marquels of Baden yielded up in lieu of his freedom the Country of Spanheim, of which Crenz-nach is a part; the Towns of Besken and Binheim, the right which he pretended to Eppingen, a Town over against Gernersheim and his Royalties between this Gernersheim and Selz, a Town of Alsacia, in Fishing and Hunting. So having brought these Princes unto their Estates, let us next take a view of those who have successively enjoyed both the State and Title, as far as we can go by the light of Story.

 1381 16. Rupertus II. Son of Adolphus the Simple.
 1398 17. Rupertus III. elected Emperor in the place of Wenceslaus King of Bohemia, Anno 1406, made Knight of the Garter by King Henry the fourth.
 1410 18. Ludovicus II. firnamed Cacus and Barbatus, the eldest Son of Rupertus the Emperor, married Blanche, Daughter to K. Henry, the fourth of England.
 1439 19. Ludovicus III. Son of Lewis the second.
 1451 20. Frederick, Brother of Ludovicus, during the Minority of Philip his said Brother's Son, succeeded in the Electoral Dignity, and added much to that Estate by his personal Vertue.
 1478 21. Philip, the Son of Lewis the third; pretended to the Dukedom of Bavaria in right of Margaret his Wife; but, after a long and bloody War, was forced to go without it.
 1508 22. Ludovicus IV. Son of Philip.
 1544 23. Frederick II. Brother of Lewis the fourth, who first introduced the Reformed Religion into the Palatine.
 1556 24. Orto-Henry, Son of Rupertus, the Brother of Frederick and Lewis, the last of the direct Line of this House of Bavaria.
 1559 25. Frederick III. Duke of Simmeren, descended from Stephen Palatine of Zweibruck or Bipont, younger Son of the Emperor Rupert, succeeded on the decease of Orto-Henry without Issue.
 1576 26. Ludovicus V. Son of Frederick the third, a munificent Benefactor to the University of Heidelberg.

- 1583 27. Frederick IV. Son of Lewis the fifth, married Ludovica, or Louisa, Daughter of William, and Sister of Maurice, Princes of Orange.
 1610 28. Frederick V. Son of Frederick the 4th, married the Princess Elizabeth, Daughter of James King of Great Britain. In danger of being proscribed for demolishing the Works of Udenheim, he accepted the Crown of Bohemia. But, worried at the Battle of Prague, and warred upon by the Bavarian and the Spaniard, he lost both that and his own native Estates and Dignities; of which he was deprived by Ferdinand the prevailing Emperor: the Lower Palatine being assigned over to and conquered by the King of Spain; the Upper Palatine, with the Electoral Dignity, bestowed on the Duke of Bavaria. Restored to the possession of the most part of his Country by the power of the Swedes, he died at Mentz, November 29. 1632. the whole Country falling again not long after under the power and Government of the former Conquerors.
 1631 29. Charles-Ludowick, the Heir both of his Father's Estates and Misfortunes too; not yet admitted to his Honours, (contrary to the Fundamental Constitutions of the Empire, by which the Sons of the Electors and other Princes are not involved in the guilt of their Fathers offences) but in fair hopes to be restored thereto in part, by the Pacification made at Munster this present year 1648: which I pray God to prosper, for the peace of afflicted Christendom.

Now to proceed to the Civil State, and the Concernment of these Princes. The Palgrave hath many Privileges above the Electors of either fort. He taketh place of the Duke of Saxony and Marquess of Brandenburg, because Henry the Palatine was defended of Charles the Great: for which cause he is also, in the Vacancy of the Empire, Governour of the Western parts of Germany. In which Office he had power to alienate or give Offices, to take Fealty and Homage of the Subjects, and which is most, to sit in the Imperial Courts, and give Judgment of the Emperor himself. And look whatsoever shall in the Vacancy of the Empire be by the Palatines enacted, that the new Emperors are by Oath to confirm and ratify.

The Revenues of these Princes were conceived to be about 100000 l. per annum; nor could they be supported at less: the Silver mines about Amberg only in the Upper Palatine yielding 60000 Crowns a year, and the passage of one Bridge over the Rhene about 20000 Crowns more; besides the Demesne Lands, and the Lands of the Church, incorporated (since the Reformation) into their Estate.

The Arms hereof are Diamond, a Lion Topaz, Armed and Crowned Ruby.

4. ALSATIA.

ALSATIA (or ELSAZ, as the Dutch call it) is bounded on the East with the Rhene, which parteth it from the Marquissate of Baden, and some parts of Schwaben; on the West with the Mountain Vange or Vogesus, which separateth it from Lorraine; on the North with the Palatine; on the South (where it groweth very, very narrow) with a point of Switzerland. A Country for the Pleasants and fertility of it inferior to none in Germany: called therefore Elfsaz, (as some think) quasi Edelfaz, that is to say, a noble Seat; derived more probably by others from the River Ill, the only River of note in all this Tract, and called so, quasi Illfz, the Seat or situation on the River Ill.

It is divided generally into the Lower, and Higher, to which the Country called Sungow may come in for a third. The LOWER ALSATIA is that which bordereth on the Palatine, so called because farther off from the Mountains, and down the water in respect of the course of the Rhene. A Country so abundantly fruitful in Wine and Corn (with which it furnisheth some parts of Germany, and not a few of the neighbour-Countries) that it is generally called Germania Nutrix, or the Nurse of Germany, by Winhelegius, the Epitome, or Abstract of it. Chief Towns therein are, 1. Straesburg, so called from the multitude of Streets, (the Dutch call them Straets) anciently Argentoratum, and then Argentina, from the Roman Exchequer or Receipt, here kept in the time of their Greatness; or from some Mines of Silver which were found about it. A stately, rich, and populous City, well stored with publick Garners and Cellars of Wine against times of Dearth; situate on the two Rivers Ill and Brusch, where they both fall into the Rhene, by which, and by the helps of Art, it is very strongly fortified: designed from the first foundation for a Town of War, this being another of the Towns which the Romans built to defend the Rhene against the Germans; now an Imperial City, and a See Episcopal, the Bishop whereof is Lord of the Lower Alsatia. The Church Cathedral is one of the fairest in all Germany, much famed for a clock of most admirable workmanship, and a Steeple as curious a frame as that, mounted 574 foot in height, the highest of any in Christendom, higher (if the measure of it be not mistaken) by 40 foot than the Steeple of St. Pauls in London before the firing of it. Of this thus saith the Poet in Adrianus,

*Urbs præclara sit, ripis contermina Rheni,
 Maxima cui cella metimtur mania turris.
 Straesburg on Rhene's inamell'd Banks doth lie, Whose Tower even bids defiance to the Skie.*

2. Zabern, or Elfsaz, Zaavern, the Taberna of Antonine and Marcellinus, another of the old Roman Garrisons, destroyed by the Almans, and repaired again by Julian the Apostate, then Emperor; now the chief place of Residence for the Bishops of Straesburg, and well frequented in regard of the Courts of Justice kept by his Officers in this City for the Lower Alsatia. 3. Altrip, so called from Altra ripa, from the high banks of the River on which it is seated; another of the Towns or Forts which the Romans, like politic Conquerors, built on the West side of the Rhene, to prohibit the Incursions of the barbarous Nations. And so was 4. Seltz, seated on the Rhene, betwixt Straesburg and Zabern. And 5. Weissburg, more towards the Palatine, now a Town Imperial, but seated on the River Lutra, not far from its fall into the Rhene; encompassed with little Hills and delightful Groves, the River gently washing the Walks thereof, and adding much to it both of strength and beauty. 6. Hagenau, betwixt Seltz and Straesburg, but not so near unto the Rhene as either of them; first walled by Frederick Barbarossa, Anno 1164, and since that time of great importance for command of the Country, but seated in a sandy and unfruitful Soil; frequented chiefly heretofore by the old Lantgraves of Elfsaz for the commodities of hunting. More from the Rhene, 7. Stechfels, corruptly so called for Steffensfels, from the Monastery of S. Stephen; there founded. 8. Hastel, on the Brusch, &c.

Places of the most importance in the HIGHER ALSATIA are, 1. Ruffach, on the River Ombach, belonging to the Bishops of Straesburg, of old called Rubeachum, from the red colour of the earth, well built, invironed with a double Suburb; in ancient times of great resort by the Roman Nobility, much taken with the fruitfulness and pleasures of it, and well inhabited at this day, as is all the Country round about it, by reason of their vigorous proceedings against Thieves; from whence the Germans have a Proverb, that the old Gallows at Ruffach is made of Oak. 2. Enfheim, or Ensfheim, on the River Ill, anciently the Station of the Tenth Legion, and then called Aruncis; now of most note for the Supreme Court of Justice there held for Brissgow, Sungow, and this part of Alsatia, by the Archdukes of Austria, the chief Lords thereof. 3. Colmar, an Imperial City, raised out of the Ruines of old Argentaria destroyed by Attila and the Huns; well built, and situate almost in the very Navel of Alsatia, not above an hour's journey from the foot of the Mountains, but in a fruitful and rich Soil both for Corn and Pasturage, the Country hereabouts being very well watered with the Lauch, Duro, Fech, and Ill. 4. Schlestad, in the modern Latine, Selestadium, but by the ancients called Elzebus, the Station at that time of the 19 Legion; afterwards of great fame for a Church here built by Hildegardis Dutches of Schwaben, Anno 1044, according to the pattern of the Temple of Jerusalem, which in tract of time became the richest Monastery in all these parts. It is situate in a very fertile and delightful Soil, having the Rhene on the one side, and some spurs of the Mountain Vange, shadowed with Groves of Chestnuts, upon the other; walled in the time of Frederick the second, about the year 1216, and on the East defended with impassible Fens. 5. Gelmiler, and 6. Warweil, both seated near the aforesaid Mountains, and both subject to the Abbat of Murbach. 7. Keisersberg. 8. Turcheim, two Imperial Towns, but not otherwise memorable; as neither are many of the rest, but for name and number: there being reckoned within this small Province of Elfsaz, (not including Sungow) 46 Cities and Towns begirt with Walls, besides Castles, Forts and Villages, almost innumerable; and amongst them more Free and Imperial Cities than in any one Province of the Empire, except Schwaben only.

The Southern part of Elfsaz, bordering on the Canton of Basil, is commonly called by the name of SUNGOW, in Latine Sungovia and Sungoia, but in former times the Dukedom of Pfirt, from Pfirt the chief Town of it, and the Duke's Seat. The Country is very plentiful in Corn and Wine, (as the rest of Elfsaz) affording good store of each to the neighbouring Switzers. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Mulhausen, on the River Ill, heretofore under the command of the Bishops of Straesburg, as were also Keisersberg and Colmar, but being taken in by Rodolph of Habsburg, after his advancement to the Empire, it was made Imperial, and is now confederate with the Switzers. 2. Bisfort, remarkable for a Collegiat Church there founded by the Earls of Pfirt, in which lie buried 13 Earls and as many Countesses. 3. Malspurg, so called from a Monastery of Nuns there Founded by Mase, a Prince of the old Almans. 4. Thann, a near Town, beautified with the fair Castle of Engelburg, mounted upon the top of a lofty Hill. 5. Mors-munster, so named of an ancient Monastery there founded by the Earls of Pfirt, most of them great Builders of Religious Houses. 6. Altirkirch, not far from the head of the River Ill. 7. Pfirt, itself, seated on the Ill, not far from Altirkirch, in a Country heretofore overgrown with Woods and Forests, whence it had the name, called by the French le Pais de Ferrette, (corruptly for le Pais de Forreft) by the Dutch moulded into Pfirt: by which which name (of the County of Ferraris) it is called by Philip de Comines and other French Writers; and by that name pawned by Sigismund the Archduke to Charles Duke of Burgundy, made by that means too near a neighbour to the Switzers, as it proved in fine.

Westward herof, betwixt it and the County of Burgundy, lyeth the Town and Earldom of MONT-BELGARD, (Montus Belgardus in the Latine) united by the Marriage of Henrica, Daughter and Heir of Henry the first Earl herof, Anno 1396, to the House of Wirtemberg. Chief Towns whereof are, 1. Clarewang, 2. Passwang, 3. Grans, all anciently beautified with Castles; and 4. Montbelgard, a Town of great strength, proud of a Castle-Royal on the top of a fair and lofty Mountain, whence it took that name: once the Seat of its proper Earls, as after of the Princes of the House of Wirtemberg; but now both Town and Castle in the power of the French, who after their good luck in the Dukedom of Lorraine, caused a good Garrison of their own to be put in to them, Anno 1633, under pretence of keeping them for the children of a Brother of the Duke of Wirtemberg, to whom the Inheritance belonged.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Tract were the Tribochi, with parts of the Nemetes and Rauraci; first conquered by the Romans, then subdued by the Alamans, after by the French, and by them made a part of the Kingdom of Lorraine; in the fall of which Kingdom it was reckoned for a Province of the German Empire. Governed for the Emperours by Provincial Earls, in the Dutch language called Lantgraves: at first officary only, and accountable to the Emperours under whom they served; in the end made hereditary, and successional unto their posterities. The first hereditary Lantgrave is said to be Theodorick in the Reign of Otho the third: after whose death the Empire being made elective, gave the Provincial Governours some opportunities to provide for themselves. In his Male-Issue it continued till the Reign of Frederick the 2. who began his Empire, An. 1212, and died An. 1250; during which interval this Estate was conveyed by Daughters to Albert the 2. Earl of Habsburg, Albert Earl of Habsburg, and Lewis Earl of Oettingen. Rodolph of Habsburg, Son of this Albert, afterwards Emperour of the Germans, marrying with Anne the Daughter of the Earl of Hohenloe, became possessed also of his part of the Country; which added to his own, made up the whole upper Elfsa, continued since that time in possession of the House of Austria, descended from him. The third part, comprehending all the Lower Alsacia, was not long after sold by the Earl of Oettingen to the Bishop of Strasbourg, whose Successors hold it to this day, assuming to themselves the title of the Lantgraves of Elfsa. But as for Sungow, or the County of Pfirt, that belonged anciently to the Princes of the House of Schwaben: in the expiring of which potent and illustrious Family, by the death of Conradine the last Duke, Anno 1268, that great Estate being scattered into many hands, it was made a distinct Earldom of it self. And so it continued till the year 1324, when Ulrich the last Earl dying without Issue-Male, left his Estate betwixt two Daughters: whereof the one, named Anne, conveyed her part in Marriage to Albert Duke of Austria, surnamed the short, Grandchild of Rodolph the Emperour before mentioned; the other, named Ursula, sold her moiety to the said Albert for 8000 Crowns. Since that it hath been always in the possession of the Dukes of Austria, (save only for the time in which it was pawned or mortgaged, together with Alsacia, to the Duke of Burgundy) governed in Civil matters, and points of Judicature by the Parliament or Court of Enschheim in the Upper Elfsa.

5. LORRAIN.

THE Dukedom of LORRAIN is bounded on the East with Elfsa, and that part of the lower Palatinate which passeth by the name of West-reich; on the West with the River Meuse, or Mos, with part of the Country of Barrois in France, (belonging to the Duke herof) and part of Champagne, on the North with Luxemburg and the Land of Triers; and on the South with the County of Burgundy, from which, and from the Province of Elfsa, it is parted by the Vogesus or Vange, wherewith it is encompassed on those sides. Assigned unto Lotharius, second son of Lotharius the Emperour, (who was eldest Son of Lewis the Godly) with the style of a Kingdom; from thence called Loth-reich by the Dutch, Loth-reigne by the French; from which the modern name of Lorraine, and the Latine Lotharingia are to fetch their Pedegree.

The Country is in length about four dayes journey, almost three in breadth; much overgrown with Forests, and swelled with Mountains, the spurs and branches of Vogesus, and the once vast Wilderness of Ardenne; yet so sufficiently stored with all manner of necessaries, that it needeth no supply out of other places. Some Lakes it hath which yield great quantity of Fish; one more especially 14 miles in compass, the Fish whereof yields to the Duke's Coffers 20000 l. yearly. It affordeth also divers Metals, as Silver, Copper, Tin, Iron, Lead, in some places Pearls: Chaldeonians also of such bigness, that whole Drinking-cups are made of them, and a matter of which they make the purest Glasses, not to be paralleld in Europe. They have also a goodly breed of Horses, equal to those of Barbary, or the Courser of Naples.

The people, by reason of their neighbourhood to and commerce with France, strive much to imitate the French in garb and fashion; but one may easily see that it is not natural: they have much in them also of the Dutch humour of Drinking, but far more moderately than the Dutch themselves. Generally they are a polittick and an hardy Nation; not otherwise able to have held their Estate so long against the French Kings, and the Princes of the House of Burgundy. They lived very happily in former times under their own Dukes, not being at all oppressed with Taxes; which made them very affectionate towards the Prince, and useful unto one another. Their Language is for the most part French, as in Artois, Luxemburg, Triers, and other of the bordering Provinces, members of the French Monarchy in former times: not so refined and elegant as is spoke in France, nor so corrupt and coarse as that of Montbelgard and the County of Burgundy.

I know that many, in respect of the French language, spoken here among them, account this Country among the Provinces of France, and usually describe it so in their Charts and Writings: but I have placed it with more reason (as I conceive) amongst those of Germany, first, in regard that a Duke herof is a Prince of the Empire; but especially because that, in the division of the Kingdom of Lorraine betwixt the Emperours of Germany and the Kings of France, whatsoever lay on the East-side of the River Meuse (as this Dukedom of Lorraine for the most part doth) was reckoned in the share or portion of the German Emperours.

The Rivers of chief note are, 1. Murta, or the Meurte, which receiving into it many Rivers, and passing with a swift stream by the walls of Nancie, glides along fairly for a good space within sight of the Moselle, into which at last it falls near Conde, 2. Mosa, the Meuse, or or Mas, whose spring and course hath been already described in Belgium. 3. Moselle, famous for the design which Lucius Verus, Governor for the Emperour Nero, had once upon it. For whereas it ariseth in the Mountain Vange, not far from the head of the River Saone, and disburtheneth it self into the Rhene at Confluentia, he intended to have cut a deep Channel from the head of this unto the other, so to have made a passage from the Ocean to the Mediterranean, the Saone emptying it self into the Rhodus, a chief River of France, as the Moselle doth into the Rhene. 4. Selle, which mingletle waters with the Moselle not far from Metz. 5. Sar, 6. Martane, 7. Voley, with others of less note: all of them plentiful of Salmans, Perches, Tenchies, and the best sorts of fish, as in their Lakes are great store of Carps, some of them three foot long, and of excellent tast.

Principal Cities in it are, 1. Metz, by Strabon called Divodurum, Metis and Civitas Mediomatricum by Antoninus, the chief City of the Mediomatrici, who possessed this Tract. It is seated in a pleasant Plain at the confluence of the Selle and Moselle; the Royal See, in former times of the French Kings of Austrasia, hence called Kings of Metz; long before that a Bishop's See, as it still continueth. 2. Toul, the Tullum of Strabon, the Civitas Lingorvm of Antoninus, so called from the Langis, the Inhabitants of it and the Tract about it, pleasantly seated on the Moselle, and anciently honoured with a See Episcopall. 3. Verdun, an ancient Episcopall See also, the Civitas Verodunensium of Antoninus, seated on the Meuse or Maas. The Town and Territory adjoining in preceeding times belonged to the great Princes of the House of Ardenne, at and before the time that they attained the Dukedom of Lorraine: but whether they had it in right of their Patrimonial Estate, as lying in the North part of this Country towards Luxemburg; as it well might be, or that it came to them in the right of Marriage with some Daughter of the house of Moselle, or other Heirs thereof, I have no where found. But howsoever it came to them, it gave unto this House the Title of Earls of Verdun, used in their Style, till swallowed with the rest in that of Lorraine. The Bishop whereof, as also those of Metz and Toul, (being the only ones of this Country of Lorraine) acknowledge the Archbishop of Triers for their Metropolitan. All of them were in the number (heretofore) of Imperial Cities, possessed of large and goodly Territories and of great Revenue; but taken by the French King Henry the 2. Anno 1552, during the Wars between Charles the fifth and the Protestant Princes of Germany, under colour of aiding them against the Emperour. And though Charles tried all ways to recover them to the Empire again, and to that end maintained a long and desperate Siege against the City of Metz; yet was the Town so gallantly defended by the Duke of Guisse, that he was fain to raise his Siege, and go off with dishonour. Since that, they have been always under the subjection of France; a Parliament being erected at Metz for the ease of the people, as in other Provinces of that Kingdom.

Of such Towns as immediately belong to the Duke of Lorraine, the principal are Nancie, not great, but of a pleasant and commodious site, well watered by the River Meurte or Marta, and fortified better than before, in the year 1587, on occasion of a great Army of the Germans passing into France to aid the Protestants, most commonly the Duke's Seat, and famous for the Discomfiture which Charles Duke of Burgundy here suffered, with the loss of his life. 2. S. Nicolas, a Town so populous, well seated, and neatly built, that when it walled, it would hardly yield precedence unto Nancie it self, so called from a Church here built to the honour of S. Nicolas, Bishop of

Myra in the lesser Asia, whose Body they pretend to be buried here, or at least some part or Relick of it to be here inshrined, occasioning a great resort of Pilgrims and other People. 3. Pont a Moson, about leagues from Nancie, so called from a Bridge on the River Maifon upon which it standeth, of especial note for a small University lately founded in it, and for giving the Title of a Marquis to the eldest Son of the Dukes of Lorraine, called commonly and contrarily Marquels du Pont, Marchio Musis-Pontanus by our modern Latinists. 4. Vaucouleur, the Birth-place of Jean the Virgin, to whose Miracles and Valour the French attribute the delivery of their Country from the power of the English. But being at last taken Prisoner, she was by the Duke of Bedford, then Regent of France, condemned and burnt for a Witch. Of which crime, I for my part do conceive her free. Nor can I otherwise conceive of her and her brave exploits, than as of a lusty Lass of Lorraine, tutored and trained up by the practice of the Earl of Dunois, commonly called the Bastard of Orleans, and so presented to Charles the seventh, French King, as if sent immediately from Heaven. A project carried on of purpose, (as the most intelligent of the French Writers say) pour faire venir la couronne aux Francois, to revive the drooping spirits of the beaten French, not to be raised again but by help of a Miracle. Upon the fight of her Sister on the Bridge of Orleans, a friend of mine did adventure on a Copy of Verses in her commendation, too long to be inserted here, but they ended thus,

She dy'd a Virgin: 'Twas because the earth
Bred not a man whose valour and whose birth
Might merit such a Blessing. But above
The Gods provided her an equal Love,
And gave her to Saint Denis. She with him
Protects the Lillies and their Diadem.
You then about whose Armies the doth watch,
Give her the honour due unto her Match:
And when in field your Standards you advance,
Cry loud, Saint Denis and Saint Jean for France;

Next these we have, 5. Vandemont, which gave the Title of an Earl to a younger Branch of the House of Ardenne, succeeding at the last in the Dukedom of Lorraine, in person of Duke René 2. and since a Title of the younger Son of the Dukes herof. 6. Nenf-Chastain, on the edge of the Country towards Barrois. 7. Amance, seven leagues on the South of Metz, sometimes the Chancery of Lorraine. 8. Riche Court, near the Lake called Garde-lake, out of which floweth a River which runs into the Meurte. 9. La Mothe, seated on a River which falls presently into the Moselle. 10. Charmes, seated on the Moselle, the place of Treaty between the Duke of Lorraine and the Cardinal Richelieu; the result whereof was the surrender of the Town of Nancie, and by consequence of all the Dukedom, into the hands of the French, September 1633. 11. Stenay, in the extrem North of all this Country, a well fortified Town, and of great consequence and importance to the Dukes herof; but whether properly belonging to the Dukedom of Lorraine, or wrested from the Sovereignty of Sedan, upon which it bordereth, (as Jamais near unto it was) I have no where found. Of less note there are, 1. Saint Die, 2. Saint Hippolyte, 3. Bouquignon, and 4. Saverden, the first Towns of this Dukedom taken by the Swedes, Anno 1633, in the War against Lorraine. 5. Saint Miel, 6. Oden Chastre, 7. Miricour; all taken the same year by the French, in the prosecution of that War, before the Treaty at Charmes, 8. Romberville, 9. Epinay, 10. Gerbeniliet, &c.

The old Inhabitants of this Country were the Mediomatrici and the Leuci spoken of before, together with the Viridunenses, all of them conquered by the Romans, under whom this Country and the District of Triers, made up the whole Province of Belgica prima. From them being taken by the French, with the rest of Gaul, it was made a Kingdom, the Provinces of Germania prima and secunda (containing all the parts of Germany before described, and so much of the Netherlands as lie on the West side of the Rhene) being added to it: called first, from the Eastern situation, by the name of Ostreich, or Austrasia; the portion of Theodorick, the fourth Son of Clovis, the first Christian King of the French, from the chief City of his Kingdom called the King of Metz, whose Successors follow in this order.

The Kings of AUSTRASIA, or METZ.

- 514 1. Theodorick, the base Son of Clovis the Great, vanquished the Thuringians, and extended his Kingdom as far as Helfia and Thuringia, as we call them now.
- 537 2. Theodebert, the Son of Theodorick, repulsed the Danes infesting the Coasts of the Lower Germany, and added Provence (taken from the Goths of Italy) unto his Estates.
- 548 3. Theobaldus, the Son of Theodebert, subdued the Almans, and added much of their Country to his own Dominions.
- 555 4. Clotaire, King of Soissons, the youngest Son of Clovis the Great, succeeded Theobald in this Kingdom, as afterwards his Brother Childebert in the Realm of France, Anno 560, uniting in his person the whole French Dominion.
- 565 5. Sigebert, the Son of Clotaire, vanquished the Hunnus, then falling into his Estates: killed in his Tent by the practices of Fredegonde, the Wife of Chilperick King of France.
- 577 6. Childebert, the Son of Sigebert, Successor to his Uncle Gunttram in the Realm of Orleans.
- 598 7. Theodebert the II. the Son of Childebert, vanquished and outed of his Kingdom by Clotaire the second of France, from whose eldest Son Sigebert descended the illustrious Family of the Earls of Habsburg.
- 617 8. Clotaire II. King of France, on the death of Theodebert King of Austrasia, and his Brother Theodorick King of Orleans, the sole King of the French.
9. Dagobert, in the life of his Father King of Metz, or Austrasia, whom he succeeded at his death in the Realm of France.
- 645 10. Sigebert II. the eldest Son of Dagobert, made choice of this Kingdom for his part of the whole French Empire; therein preferring it to West-France, or France it self, which he left to Clovis the 2. his younger Brother. He brought the Suevians to obedience, and subdued the Slaves.
- 656 11. Childebert II. Son of Grimoaldus, Maior of the Palace to Sigebert, was by the power of his Father made King of Metz, Dagobert the Son of Sigebert being slain a Monk, and sent into Scotland.
12. Clovis the 2. King of the French, having vanquished and beheaded Grimoald, dispossessed Childebert of the Kingdom, which he took to himself.
- 652 13. Childerick, the 2. Son of Clovis, after the death of Clotaire his elder Brother, succeeding in the Kingdom of France, united all the French Dominions into one Estate. In which condition it remained (but with some enlargement of the Bounds) till the Partition made by and amongst the Children of Lewis the Godly; the name of Austrasia, or East-France, being extended by Charles the Great over all Pannonia, and so much of Germany as was under the command of the French. In which division, Lewis the second Son, furnished the Ancient, being invested in the Kingdom of Germany, or so much of East-France or Austrasia as lay on the East side of the Rhene; Lotharius, the eldest Son, had for his share the Title of Emperor, and therewith Italy, Provence, Burgundy, and so much of Austrasia or East-France as lay on the French side of the River. Afterwards being subdivided into three Estates Italy, with the Title of Roman Emperor, was given to Lewis the eldest Son; to Charles, the youngest, Provence, with the Kingdom of Burgundy; and to Lothaire, the second Son, Austrasia on this side of the Rhene, from hence called Lothreich, Loth-reigne, and Lotharingia, as before was said. But Lothaire dying without issue, the Kingdom of Lorraine, containing all the Netherlands (except Flanders and Artois) and all the parts of Germany before described, became divided betwixt Charles the Bald Emperor and King of France, and Lewis furnished the Ancient, King of Germany, the one calling himself King of Lorraine on that side, the other King of Lorraine on this side of the Meuse; the River Meuse, or Meuse parting their Possessions. But this Partition held not long, amongst their Successors: For Lewis and Carloman King of France (the Sons of Ludovicus Balbus) resigning their part hereof to Charles the Great, Emperor of the Romans and King of Germany, the said Charles, Arnulph, Lewis and Conrad, successively Emperors of the Romans and Kings of Germany (together with Zwenobald the Bastard-Son of Arnulph interloping in the very middle of them) enjoyed it wholly to themselves. And so did also Charles the Simple King of France, on the death of Conrad, till, forced thereto by Henry the first, (who succeeded Conrad in the Empire and Kingdom of Germany) he gave way to the old Partition spoken of before: the Germans after that encroaching more and more on that part hereof which of right belonged unto the French, till in the end (after much vicissitude and interchangeableness of affairs) both Princes laid aside the Title of Kings of Lorraine, incorporating so much as they held thereof into the rest of their Estates; Otho the third of Germany and Lewis the fifth of France being the last that pleased themselves with that broken Title. In the mean time this Country of Lorraine it self, as it is now bounded, together with the Country of Luxemburg, a great part of Brabant, some parts of the Land of Triers, Colen, and as some say, the Country of Guilich also, (but in this of Guilich I demur, as before was said) being taken out of it, were by Otho the Second made a Dukedom, Anno 981, and by him given with the Title of Duke of Lorraine to Charles of France, Son of Gerberge his Aunt by Lewis the 4. of France surnamed Transmarine, Son of Charles the Simple. Charles thus advanced by his Cousin, and forgetting that he had been made Duke of Brabant not long before by Lothaire the French King, his Brother, shewed himself to alienated from the French, and wedded to the Germans, that the French, after the death of his Nephew Lewis the fifth, (whose next Heir he was) rejected him, and accepted Hugh Capet for their King. Otho, the Son of this Charles, dying without issue, left his Estate to Geoffrey Earl of Ardenne, Bonillon, and Vredun, his near Kinsman by the Mothers side, from whom the present Dukes of Lorraine do derive themselves. From Hermingrade, one one of the Daughters of this Charles, married to Albert (some call him Charles, and others Godfrey) Earl of Namur, by Alice their Daughter, married Baldwin the 5. of Hainault, descended Baldwin Earl of Flanders and Hainault, the Father of the Lady Isabel of Hainault, Wife of Philip the 2. King of France, thereby uniting the Blood of Peppin and Hugh Capet, to the great content of Lewis the 9. her Nephew: of whom it is said, that being a man of a tender Conscience, he never joyed in the Crown of France, till it was proved that he was lawfully descended by his Grandmother from Charles of Lorraine; whom Hugh Capet had so unjustly dispossessed. But to return again to the Dukes of Lorraine, I find not any great improvement made of the Estate by any of them, more than the accession of the remaining Patrimony of the Earls of Ardenne in the person of Godfrey or Geoffrey the 3d Duke hereof, and the adding of the Duchy of Bar in France by Rene Duke of Anjou, and titular King of Naples; but on the contrary, a great weakening and distraction of it by the Dukes hereof: Luxemburg and the Dukedom of Bonillon being sold unto the Bishops of Liege by Godfrey surnamed of Bonillon, after King of Hiernsalem, Brabant torn from it by Geoffrey Earl of Louvain, in the time of Baldwin Brother of Godfrey, and Guilich land by Ensface the Brother of Baldwin; the Bishop of Triers not being negligent all this while of the opportunity. Besides which, somewhat had been done by the Emperor Otho the 3. to the diminution of this Estate, seeing that Otho the Second Duke, Son of Charles of France, had no issue-male, and thinking this Estate, to be great enough without those Additions, and some other pieces on the Rhene, by him restored unto the Empire. The rest of this Estate was conferred on Godfrey of Ardenne, and not without good reason neither it being probable enough that as it was first given by Otho the II. unto Charles of France with reference to his Mother Gerberge that great Emperour's Aunt; so Otho of Lorraine Son of Charles might look on Godfrey of Ardenne as most capable of it, with reference to his Mother Matilda, the same Emperour's Daughter. And unto this he might be moved not only in a noble gratitude to the blood of Otho, from whom his Father had received a great benefit, but on the solicitation of the Emperour Henry II. (a Prince of the same House of Saxony) to whom the Alienation of it from the Daughters of Charles is ascribed by some. Which said, we have no more to do, but to present the Reader with the Catalogue of

The Dukes of LORRAINE.

- 1019 4. Gozelo of Bonillon, the Brother of Godfrey.
- 1044 5. Godfrey II. Son of Gozelo.
- 1070 6. Godfrey III.
- 1078 7. Godfrey IV. of Bonillon, Son of Ensface Earl of Boulogne in Picardie, and of Ida his Wife, the Daughter of Godfrey the 2. created King of Hiernsalem Anno 1099.
- 1100 8. Baldwin, Brother of Godfrey, Duke of Lorraine, and King of Hiernsalem.
- 1119 9. Thierrie, Son of William the Brother of Baldwin.
- 1128 10. Simon, Son of Thierrie.

- 1141 11. Matthew Son of Simon.
  - 1176 12. Simon II. Son of Matthew.
  - 1207 13. Frederick, Brother of Simon.

  - 1219 15. Matthew II. Son of Theobald, no great friend of the Popes.
  - 1259 16. Frederick II. Son of Matthew.
  - 1303 17. Theobald II. Son of Frederick.
  - 1311 18. Frederick III. Son of Theobald.
  - 1329 19. Rodolph Son of Frederick.
  - 1346 20. John, Son of Rodolph.
  - 1382 21. Charles, Son of John.
  - 1430 22. Rhene, Duke of Anjou and King of Naples, &c. in right of Isabel his Wife, the Daughter of Charles.
  - 1452 23. John II. Son of Rhene and Isabel, succeeded on the death of his Mother.
  - 1470 24. Nicholas, Son of John.
  - 1473 25. Rene II. Son of Frederick Earl of Vandemon, and of Violant or Toland, Daughter of Isabel and Rene the first, the Vanquisher of Charles of Burgundy at the Battel of Nancy.
  - 1508 26. Anthony, Son of Rene the 2.
  - 1544 27. Francis Son of Anthony.
  - 1545 28. Charles II. Son of Francis.
  29. Henry, Son of Charles, married Katharine, Sister to Henry the 4. of France.
  - 1624 30. Francis, Brother of Henry.
  - 1630 31. Charles, Nephew to Francis by his Brother the Earl of Vandemon, and Son-in-Law to him by the Marriage of his Daughter and Heir, succeeded by a mixt Title of Descent and Marriage. Being resolved to hold it in his own right, he put away his Wife the Daughter of Francis, and took another to his Bed, which he better fancied. Punished not long after by the loss of his whole Estate: For immediately he engaged himself in the Wars of Germany in behalf of Ferdinand and the 2. but being beaten by the Swedes at the Battel of Pfaffenhausen in the County of Hannau, he lost a great part of his Country to the Victors, who pursued him home. And on the other side, Lewis the 13. of France, picking a quarrel with him for receiving the Monsieur his Brother, and the Marriage of the Monsieur with the Lady Margaret the Duke's Sister, deprived him of the Duchy of Bar, and falling into Lorraine with a puissant Army at such time as the Swedes were there, compelled him to put into his hands the City of Nancy, and by consequence all the rest of his Estates, Septemb. 1633. Since which time the Duke hath never been restored thereto, nor hath any thing left him in it, for ought I can hear, but the Town of La Mothe, (if that) together with a good Cause, many hearts, and an invincible courage.
- The Revenues of this Prince are said to be 700000 Crowns; whereof 200000 arise from the Customs of the Salt made in his Country, and the other 500000 from his Coronet-lands. He is an absolute Prince, and giveth for his Device an armed hand coming as it were from Heaven, and grasping a naked Sword; to shew that he holdeth his Estate by no other Tenure than God and his Sword; the only hope at this time, of the present Duke. For though he be accounted a Prince of the Empire, and his Dukedom reckoned for a part of the fifth Circle thereof, which is called the Circle of the Rhene, yet he neither comes unto the Diet, nor holdeth himself bound by any of the Orders and Decrees which are made therein, as do the rest of the great Princes of Germany; his neighbourhood to the French formerly securing his Estate against any force which the Empire durst bring against him for those neglects.
- The Arms of Lorraine are O, a Bend Gules charged with 3 Larks Argent. But herein I find Bera, an old French Herald, to differ from Paradine, the most exact Genealogist of the French Nation. For Bera chargeth the Bend not with 3 Alouettes, Larks as Paradine doth, but with 3 Alerions, which are in Blazon small Birds wanting beaks, feet, and legs. Of this last opinion is the most worthy Antiquary Cambrey Clarenceux; who withall telleth us, that when Godfrey of Bouillon was at the Siege of Hierusalem, shooting at S. Davids Tower there, he broached three feathered birds called Alerions upon his Arrow, and thereupon assumed this Arms.

6. SUEVIA, or SCHWABEN.

THE Dukedom of SUEVIA or SCHWABEN, according to the ancient limits and extent thereof, was bounded on the North with Frankenland and the Lower Palatinate, on the South with Switzerland and the Alps of Tyrol, on the East with the River Leck, parting it from Bavaria, and on the West with the Rhene dividing it from Sungow and both Alsatia's. But now the Dukedom of Wittenberg, the Marquissate of Baden, and other lesser Estates being taken out of it, it is contracted and restrained within narrower Bounds, having on the East Bavaria, on the West the Dukedom of Wittenberg, and so much of the Rhene as serveth to divide it from Sungow and the Upper Elsat, on the North Franconia or Frankenland, and on the South a little of the Rhene, with some part of the Switzers.

The County for the most part is mountainous and hilly, overpread with some spurs of the Alps, and the woods of Negra Sylva or Swartzwald, composed notwithstanding with great plenty of Springs and Rivers (and amongst them the Neccar and the renowned Danubius) which do issue from them: which makes the Vales hereof to be very fruitful, sufficiently stored with all necessary provisions. Nor are the Woods and Mountains so unprofitable, but that besides the great plenty of Pewee and the pleasures of Hunting, they do afford some Mines of Iron and other Metals.

The people in regard of their mountainous situation are more fierce and warlike than the rest of the Germans, and so accompanied by Plutarch in former times; industrious in several Trades and Manufactures, especially in the weaving of Linen-cloth, which is made here in great abundance: and by reason they have so much in them of the South, they are supra modum in Venerem proni, as Aubanus tells me, at least more given to Venus than the other of the Germans are; the women also being said to be very forwards in this kind, as tractable and easy as the men could wish them.

The whole is generally divided into the Hegow lying next to the Lake of Constance; the Algow extending to Bavaria; Brifgow, upon the West of the River Rhene; and North Schwaben, on the Northern side of Danubius. Principal Cities in the HEGOW are, 1. Lindaw, situate like an Island in the Lake of Constance, encompassed almost with the waters thereof, but joined to it with a Causeway of 290 paces long; one of the Free or Imperial Cities, made so, for money, by the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa, Anno 1166. 2. Buborn, and 3. Uerlingen, on the same Lake, both Imperial also. 4. Scaffenhusen, seated on both sides of the Rhene, not far from the efflux thereof out of the Lake Cell, (so called from a Town of that name belonging to the Arch-dukes of Austria, but anciently known by the name of Lacus Venetus) and near those dreadful falls or Cataracts of that River no less than 100 Cubits downwards, with great noise and violence. For which cause all Vessels that go down the Rhene are faine to unlade themselves, and by Carts to carry their goods to this Town, where they im-bark them again. Which as it yieldeth great benefit unto the Town by Tolls and Imports, so doth it always keep it stored with abundance of Barks and other Vessels: whence it hath the name of Scaffen-hausen, that is to say, the house of Skiffs, or the Town of Skip-boats. The Town is conveniently seated amongst rich Pastures and sweet Groves on both sides of the River; not without some pleasant Hills, and those well planted with Vines, near adjoining to it: Imperial once, but now a Canton of the Switzers, as hath there been shewn. 5. Arbon, upon the Lake itself, (the Arbor Felix of Strabo) belonging to the Bishop of Constance. 6. Merspurg, the ordinary Seat and Residence of the Bishop of Constance, Lord of the most part of this Tract, on the same Lake also. 7. Constance it self, situate on both sides of the Rhene, where it issueth out of the Lake, called from hence the Lake of Constance, but by the Dutch Boden-see, from the Castle of Bodmen, by Plini and other Antients Lacus Arconius, and Briganinus; made by the Confluence of the Rhene, and some other Rivers falling out of Switzerland. The Town is Imperial, an Episcopall See, and a flourishing Emport: famous for the Council here holden Anno 1414. of great renown as well for the multitude & quality of the people which were there assembled, as for the importance of the matters which were therein handled. The people of most note there assembled were, Sigismund the Emperour, 4 Patriarchs, 29 Cardinals, 346 Archbishops and Bishops, 564 Abbats and Doctors, 10000 secular Princes and Noblemen, 450 comon Harlots, 1600 Barbers, and 320 Minstrels and Jesters. The business there handled was, first the pacifying of a Schism in the Church, there being at that time 3 Popes, (or rather Anti-Popes) viz. Gregory the 12. resident at Rome, John the 23. at Bononia, and Bennet the 13 in Spain; all three deposed by the Council, and Martin the 5. made sole Pope by the unanimous consent of the Council, declaring both by matter of fact, and by a publick Confutation here made and ratified, that a Council is above the Pope. The other main business was the proceeding against John Hus and Hierome of Prague (spoken of before) both which notwithstanding the Emperour's safe conduct, were here condemned of Heresie, degraded and burnt. Now the manner of degrading a Priest is this: (I hope to be excused for this Digression) The party to be degraded is attired in his Priestly Vestments, holding in the one hand a Chalice full of wine & water, and in the other a gilt plate (or Paten, as they call it) with a wafer. Then kneeling down, the Bishop's Deputy, 1. taking from him all those things commands him to say no more Masses for the quick and dead. 2. Scraping his Fingers ends with a piece of Glasse, he comandeth him from that time forwards not to hollow any thing. And 3. stripping him of his priestly Habit, he is clothed in a Lay attire, and so delivered over to the secular magistrature. But to return again to the City of Constance, being proscribed by Charles the 5. for refusing the Interim, and not able to withstand such Forces as were raised against them, they put themselves under the protection of Ferdinand, then King of the Romans, and Brother of Charles. But herein they fell out of the Frying pan into the Fire, as the saying is: For Ferdinand being possessed of the Town, seized on the common Treasury, and upon all Records and Writings which belonged unto them; set out an Edict, that all the Ministers within eight daies should depart the City; and that no Citizen from thenceforth should wear any Weapon. And so instead of a Protector he became their Master.

Chief Cities in the part hereof lying towards Bavaria which is called the ALGOW, are, 1. Buchan, on the Lake called Feder-see; a Town Imperial. 2. Ravensburg a Free City, seated amongst Mountains, whereof one hangeth over it, the River Ach running by it in a bed so narrow that not able to receive the waters which fall down from the Hills, it makes end amongst all the Country by frequent Land-floods. 3. Wangen, (the Nemavia of Antoninus) Imperial also. 4. Kempten, the Campodunum of Strabo, and 5. Memmingen, the Drusomagus of Ptolomy; both Imperial Cities, the last about 3 miles in circuit, populous, rich and very well traded. 6. Pfullendorf, 7. Zeu-kirk, 8. Bibrach, all three Imperial, the last supposed to be the Bragadurum of the Ancients. 9. Augsburg, on the River Lech, looking into Bavaria, first made a Roman Colony by Augustus Caesar, and by him called Augusta Vin-delicorum, the principal City in those times of the Vindelici, a potent People of this Tract. A City of great wealth and state, containing about 9 miles in circuit, and very strongly fortified by Nature on the East and North, where the ground lies low and under water, and on the West and South by Art. The Buildings for three parts of it are of Clay and Timber; but on the West part, seated on an Hill, built of Free-stone, six or seven Stories high, in which are many fair Houses of the principal Citizens, and many stately Palaces, which belong to the Fuggers, a Family of very great (almost princely) Revenues, possessed of many goodly dwellings both in the City and the Suburbs, and adjoining Territories; who though they have of late obtained the honour of Barons, in regard of their Wealth, still keep themselves (contrary to the custom of Germany, where Traffick is counted a disgrace to a Noble-man) to the trade of Merchandise. The publick Edifices of it are very decent, especially the Cathedral Church, a majestick Building; the other Churches, being ten in number, and the Religions Houses, correspondent to it. Of old time Ceres was here worshipped, from whence (or from the fruitfulness of the soil) the City gives a Sheaf of Corn for the Arms thereof. Since their Conversion unto Christianity it was made a Bishops See. Destroyed by Attila and his Huns, it was after built more beautifully than it had been formerly; at last made Imperial, and the Mistress of as large a Territory as most Cities of Germany, famous for the Confession of Faith exhibited in this place to Charles the 5. by the Protestant Princes, hence called Confessio Augustana, Anno 1530. 2. For the Interim, or mixt form of Doctrine, containing some Points of Protestantism, but most of Popery, they tendered to both parties by the said Emperour (but received by neither) to be subscribed to and observed till the Differences could be settled by a General Council. And 3. for the publick allowance here given by Decree of all the States of the Empire to the Protestant party, to profess openly their Religion without any impeachment. Anno 1555. A Limitation only laid on the Ecclesiasticks, that if they changed their Religion, they should lose their preferments; which were to be bestowed on others more addicted to the See of Rome.

In the third part hereof, called BRISGOW, lying on the East of the River Rhene, and the West of Wittenberg, and on the South closed in with the Canton of Basel. Places of most importance are, 1. Friburg, upon the Trieffe and other Streams descending from the Mountains of Swartzenwald, under which it lieth: founded by Berchthold the third, Earl or Duke of Zeringen, (the Castle of Zeringen, founded by Berchthold the first, Son of Gebiza, the youngest Son of Gunttram, the second Earl of Habiburg, once the chief Seat of these Princes, being then near adjoining to it) in the reign of Henry the Fifth Emperour, Anno 1112, or thereabouts. Famous in those days for Silver mines, now for an University here established Anno 1459, and being in present estimation the chief of the Country, of which more anon. 2. Offenbach, 3. Gengenbach, both upon the Kintzich and both Towns Imperial: the first so named from Offa an English Saxon, the Apostle of these parts of Germany. 4. Hochberg, which gives the Title of a Marquess to the Marquesses of Baden, who are Lords thereof. 5. Zell, once Imperial, but of late times belonging, as doth also 6. Badenwiler, to the Marquess of Baden; this last accruing to them by the Marriage of Rodolphus the sixth of that name, Marquess of Hochberg, with a Sister of John, Earl of Friburg, the then Lord thereof. 7. Waldseut, upon the Rhene, in a barren, cold and mountainous Country, but well stored with Woods. 8. Brifac, by Antonine called Mons Brisacus, a Garrison in his time against the encroaching Almans, and situate at that time on the French side of the Rhene, the course of the River being since turned on the other side, where now it runneth. It is built Castle-wise on the top of a round Hill, in which there is also a strong Tower or Fortress, raised by Berchthold the third for defence of the place; otherwise strong enough by its own natural situation, and might be made impregnable, but for want of water, which is all drawn from one deep Well in the heart of the Town, or brought with great charge and trouble from the Rhene which runs underneath it. The Town is fair, populous, and well built, once of most note in all the Country, from hence called Brifac-gow, or Brise-gow; but after the building of Friburg by Berchthold the 4. it grew by little and little to be less frequented, the other being seated more conveniently for Trade and business: Here also, not far off from the Castle of Zeringen, stood that of Kiburg, somewhat the ancients of the two; of such authority and repute in those elder times, that the Emperours do still retain the Title of Earls of Kiburg in the Style Imperial: defended on the House of Habiburg by the Marriage of Elizabeth, Daughter and Heir of Hariman the last Earl hereof, to Eberhard of Habiburg, Cousin-german to the Emperour Rodolphus on the expiring of which Line, Anno 1356, it fell, together with many fair Estates among the Switzers, to Albert Duke of Austria, surnamed the Short.

Finally, in the fourth and last part hereof, called NORTH-SCHWABEN, because on the North-side of the Danaw, the places most observable are, 1. Gemund, on the Rheems. 2. Dinschel-Spyel, on the Warmitz, two Imperial Towns; which with Uerlingen or Werlingen, (all three but mean in building, Territory, or estimation) (spoken of before, are the only three Imperial Cities in all Germany which totally adhere unto the Doctrines of the Church of Rome. 3. Bopfingen, on the Egra, an Imperial City. 4. Norlingen, on the same River, but in a low and moorish ground, yet of great resort, populous, and well traded, most memorable for the De-feat here given the Swedes by Ferdinand the third, now Emperour, at his first entrance on the Government; in which Bannier, one of the principal Commanders of that Nation, was slain on the place, Gustavus Horn, another of as great eminence, taken Prisoner, their whole Forces routed, and thereupon so strange an Alteration of the Affairs of Germany, which they had almost wholly conquered, (though not for themselves,) that the Palatinate, not long before restored to its proper Owner, was again possessed by the Spaniards, Frankendale by the Imperialists, and the remainder of the Swedes forced to withdraw into their Holds on the Baltick Seas, Anno 1637. 5. Kor-weil, not far from the head of the Neccar an Imperial City, and a Confederate of the Switzers. 6. Donaweri, seated on the Confluence of the Donaw and the Werde, whence it had the name, most commonly called only Werde, an Imperial Town, the habitation of John de Werde, once a Brewer herein, but afterwards a chief Commander of the Forces of the Duke of Bavaria in the late German Wars. 7. Villengen, on the Bregentz, a small River falling into the the Danow; a Town belonging to the Princes of the House of Austria. Not far from which stands 8. Furstenberg, an ancient Castle. The Earls hereof are Princes of the Empire, and Lords of a great part of the Country, descended lineally from Egino, of Eggen, the youngest Son of the Lady Judith, Sister and Heir of Berthold the fifth, the last Duke of Zeringen; and consequently a Branch of the illustrious House of Habsburg, exceedingly increased both in power and Patrimony, by the Marriage of Frederick Earl hereof (in the time of Charles the fifth, under whom he served in his Wars against the Protestants) with Anne the Daughter and Heir of Christopher the last Earl of Werdenberg, possessed of many fair Estates amongst the Switzers and the adjoining parts of Schwaben. In a Village of this Earl, called Den Elchingen, is the head of Danubius. 9. Ulm, an Imperial City, situate on the meeting of the Blave, the Iler, and the Danow, the principal City of North Schwaben; about six miles in compass, rich, populous, well fortified, and stored with an Armory for Ordnance and all manner of Ammunition, not inferior to any in Germany. The Town is but new taking its first rise from a Monastery here founded by Charles the Great, which after grew to be a great City; and took the name of Ulm from the Elms about it. At first it belonged unto the Monks, of whom having bought their Freedom in the time of Frederick the third, it became Imperial. The Danow hereabouts begins to be navigable, having so violent a Stream, that the Boats which go down the water use to be sold at the place where they land, it being both difficult and chargeable to bring them back again. Not far hence on the banks of the Danow lie the Suevian Alps; and amongst them the old Castle of Hohenberg; the Lord whereof, on the Ruine of the House of Schwaben, became possessed of a great Estate here and in Upper Elfsaß, sold afterwards to Rodolph of Habsburg, the Founder of the now Austrian Family.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were, the Bruxentes, Suanetes, Rugusci, and Calcones, who, together with the Vindilici (of whom more hereafter) and other Tribes of the Rhati, (of whom somewhat hath been said before in the Alpine Provinces) possessed themselves of that Country which lieth betwixt the River Inn and the head of the Rhene, East and West, Danubius and the Alps of Italy, North and South. Within which compass are the greatest part of the Grisons, the Dukedoms of Schwaben and Bavaria on this side the Danow, and part of the County of Tyrol, and not a few of the Cantons of Switzerland. Subdued by Drusus and Tiberius Nero, Sons in law of Augustus, they were made a Province of the Romans: divided into Rhetia prima, taking in all the Countries from the Rhene to the Leck or Lycus; and Rhetia secunda, lying betwixt the Leck and the River Inn, which by another name was called Vindelicia. By which account all Schwaben on the South side of the Danow was part of the Province of Rhetia prima, continuing so till vanquished and subdued by the Almans in the time of Valentinian the third, Emperor of the Western parts. As for the Almans who succeeded in possession hereof, they were originally some Tribes and Families of the Suevi, the most warlike Nation of the Germans, inhabiting upon the Banks of the River of Albis: who jealous of Cæsars great Successes, brought against him 430000 fighting men, of which 30000 were slain, and many drowned. They used to stay at home and go to the War by turns: they which stayed at home tilling the Land, to whom the rest returning brought the Spoil of the Enemies. But after this blow we hear little of them till the time of Cavacalla the Son of Suevius; during whose Reign, descending towards the Banks of the Rhene and the Danow, and mingling with other Nations as they passed along, they assumed first the name of Almans; either from that promiscuous mixture of all sorts of men, or (as I rather think) from Mannus the Son of Tuisco, one of the great and national Gods of the Germans. And though they were well beaten by him at their first coming down, near the River Mannus, and afterwards more broken by Dioclesian, who slew at least 60000 of them at one time in Gant; yet never left they to infest the Provinces of the Empire which lay nearest to them, till in the end following the track of the Huns who had gone before them, and beaten down many of the Forts and Garrisons which were in their way, they made themselves Masters of Rhetia prima, Germania prima, and part of Maxima Sequanorum, containing besides the Countries spoken of before, Alsatia, and so much of the Lower Palatinat as lies on the French side of the Rhene. But quarrelling with the French, their next neighbours, (of whose growth and greatness they began to be very sensible) they were first vanquished by Clovis the first Christian King of the French in that great and memorable Fight at Zulp near Colen, and afterwards made wholly subject to the Conqueror, who oppressed them with an heavy and lasting Servitude. About this time they returned again to their old name of Suevians, their Estate being erected into a Dukedom, called many times the Dukedom of Almain; and when so called, divided into the Upper Almain, comprehending the Country of the Grisons, with some parts of Switzerland and Tyrol, and the Lower or the proper Almain, which contained the rest of the Estates of the ancient Almans, called for the most part by the name of the Dukedom of Suevia or Schwaben, and finally transmitting that name to this Province only, the best part thereof. These Dukes were at first officary only, removable at the will of the Emperor, and accountable to him; not seldom many at one time, especially whilst under the command of the French, some of them being Dukes of the Upper, and others of the Lower Almain. So that there is no great certainty of their Succession, nor much care to be taken in searching after it, though otherwise men of great Authority and command in their several Times. The most remarkable amongst them was Rodolph, Earl of Reinfelden and Duke of Schwaben, descended from the Earls of Habsburg in the Reign of Henry the fourth, against whom he was chosen Emperor by the practice and procurement of Pope Hildebrand, but overcome and wounded at the Battle of Eysler, he died not long after of his wounds, with great repentance for rebelling against his Sovereign. After his death, some Provinces being dismembered from it, and other lesser Estates first erected out of it, it was made hereditary in the person of Frederick Baron of Hohenstauffen, surnamed the Ancient, by the munificence and bounty of the said Henry the fourth, whose Daughter Agnes he had married. His Successors follow in this order.

The Dukes of SCHWABEN.

1. Frederick the Ancient, the first hereditary Duke of Schwaben.
2. Frederick with one eye, Son of Frederick the Ancient.
3. Frederick III. surnamed Barbarossa, Son of Frederick with one eye, Duke of Schwaben, and Emperor: he succeeded the Emperor Henry the fifth in the Dukedom of Francia, and left the same unto his Successors.
4. Frederick IV. second Son of Barbarossa, his elder Brother Henry succeeding in the Empire by the name of Henry the sixth.
5. Conrade

5. Conrade, Brother of Frederick the fourth.
 6. Philip, Brother of Conrade, after the death of Henry the 6. elected Emperor.
 1207. 7. Frederick V. Son of Henry the sixth, elected Emperor by the name of Frederick the second, King of Naples and Sicily, also in the right of his Mother.
 1250. 8. Conrade II. Son of Frederick the fifth, King of Sicily, and Emperor of Germany, after the death of his Father, poisoned, as was supposed, by his base Brother Manfred, who succeeded in his Kingdom of Sicily.
 1254. 9. Charles, the Son of Conrade, pursuing his Right unto the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, was overcome and taken prisoner by Charles of Anjou, Successor unto Manfred in those Estates, and by his command beheaded at Naples Anno 1268. After whose death (being the last of that powerful and Imperial Family) this vast Estate was brought unto a second dismembering, and divided amongst the Bishops, Princes and Free Cities hereof: of which last there are more within the old Precincts of this Dukedom than in all Germany besides. So that beholding it in the first and second Dilapidation, we find many goodly Patrimonies and fair Estates (besides what belongeth to the Cities and Episcopal Sees) to have been raised out of the Ruines of this great Dukedom: that is to say, the Dukedoms of Zeringen and Wirttemberg, with the Marquisate of Baden, dismembered from it when conferred on Frederick of Hohenstauffen, the Earldoms of Pfirt, Hohenberg and Friburg, (besides a great improvement of the Earldom of Habsburg) advanced out of the second Ruine. How Pfirt and Hohenberg were united to the House of Austria hath been shewn already; and what becomes of Wirttemberg and Baden shall be shewn hereafter. Here it is only to be noted, that the Family of Zeringen, possessed of almost all Brigow and a great part of Switzerland, owe their Original to Berthold, the Son of Gebizo, a younger Son of Gunttram the 2. Earl of Habsburg, which being extinguished after a Succession of seven Princes only in the person of Berthold the fifth, (who died the same day in which the Emperor Rodolph of Habsburg was born) Anno 1218, the Rights hereof descended on the Earls of Friburg, the principal City of that Country: Cuno, the first that bare the Title of Earl of Friburg, being the eldest Son of Judith, Sister and Heir of Berthold the last Duke of Zeringen. Eggon, the last Earl of which House, being overlaid by his undutiful and rebellious Subjects, sold his Estate therein for 12000 Ducats to Albert and Leopold Dukes of Austria, Sons of Albert the Short, whose Successors enjoy all Brigow to this very day.

The Arms of Schwaben were Argent, 3 Leopards Sable, as is said by Bara: But Paradine will have them to be three Leopards Sable, crowned Gules, in a Field Or.

7. BAVARIA.

BAVARIA is bounded on the East with Austria, on the West with the River Leck or Lycus, which parts it from Schwaben, on the North with Norgoia, or the upper Palatinat, and on the South with the Earldom of Tyrol and Carinthia. It containeth the whole Province of Rhetia secunda, and so much of Noricum mediterraneum as now maketh up the Bishoprick of Salzburg; and by a distinct name was called Vindelicia, as being the ancient habitation of the Vindelici, so named from the two Rivers of Vindis and Lycus, (now the Werd and the Leck) upon which they lived. According whereunto it is thus verified by a German Poet.

*Repositus late fluvios Vindimurus Licumque
 Miscomus Vindis, et Lycum Litoris, unde
 Ausimiam Gentem populumque, Orbemque vocarunt Vindeliciam.*
In English thus,
*Under and Lycus, floods of noted Fame,
 He next beholds mingling their Streams and Name;
 To which the old Vindelici do own
 The name of both their Nation and their Town.*

Meaning by their Town, as I conceive, Augusta Vindelicorum, their Metropolis or Capital City. But after such time as the Boii or Boiarians had driven out the Romans, and got possession of this Country, the name of Vindelicia and Rhetia secunda grew into disuse, that of Boiaria succeeding in the place thereof, mollified or corrupted into Bavaria, the present name of the Country amongst the Latines; but by the Dutch called Bayeren, by the French Baviers.

The whole is divided into three parts: the Higher, lying towards the Alps of Tyrol, the Lower, extending all along the banks of the Danow; and the District of Salzburg, situate betwixt the Inn and the Dukedom of Austria; all three much over-spread with Woods and Forests, remainders of the  Hercynian Forest described before. But more particularly the Higher, lying towards the Alps, is cold and barren, affording no Wines, and but little Corn: the Lower being more fruitful, and better planted, for some parts (especially about Regensterg and Landshut) inferior unto none in Germany for Richness and pleasantness of the situation. Of the District of Salzburg we shall speak by itself, because by some not reckoned as a part hereof. In all there is great quantity of Fuel for the fire, and of Timber for Building; no less of Swine fattened in the Woods, and sent away by numerous Herds into other Countries.

The Christian Faith was first preached here amongst the Boiarians by Rupertus Bishop of Worms, driven from his See by Childebert King of the French, Anno 540, or thereabouts, and here made the first Bishop of Salzburg: corrupted at this time with the Leaven of the Church of Rome, to which this Country (setting aside the Imperial Cities) is more entirely devoted than any other in all Germany.

Principal Cities in the HIGHER are 1. Munchen, (in Latine Monachium) the Duke's Seat, seated on the Isar, or Isara, in a very sweet and delightful Soil, among Ponds and Groves, daintily interlaced with pretty Riverets, and enriched with many excellent Gardens; that of the Duke being hardly to be paralleled in all this Continent: first founded by Henry Duke hereof in the time of Ordo the first, Anno 972, now grown a large and populous City; the publick Buildings, as Churches, Turrets, Libraries, the Senate-House, or Guild hall, and common Market-place, of such excellent Structure, that they serve not only for Use and Ornament, but for Admiration. Amongst them none is more eminent than the Library in the Ducal Palace, wherein are conceived to be 11000 Volumes, the most part of them Manuscripts. A Town made choice of by Maximilian, the now Duke of Bavaria, to be the receptacle of the Spoils got by him in the Wars of Germany: here being found (at such time as the Town was taken by the King of Sweden) 140 Brafs Pieces (besides other great Guns) hidden under the ground, one of the which was charged, instead of Powder and Shot, with 30000 Crowns in Gold. 2. Landshut, upon the Leck or Lycus, near the Alps of Tyrol; once of great strength, because a Frontier towards Schwaben; but proving a dangerous neighbor to the Swed, its Garrisons planted in these parts, during that War against the Duke of Bavaria, was by them taken and dismantled, and is now an open Village only. 3. Marienthal, now a place of no note or beauty, heretofore the Innarrum of Ptolomy, seated near the Alpi. 4. Friedberg, well fortified, by Duke Ludowick or Lewis the second, for a Bulwark against those of Augustburg. 5. Here stood also the old Castle of Schyr, built by Arnolph 2. Son of Arnolph the first Duke of Bavaria, the Seat and honorary Title of his posterity. (Dynastia Schyrneses in the Latine) till Otho of Wittelsbach, by the favour of Frederick Barbarossa and his own good fortune did attain that Dukedom.

In the LOWER Bavaria there first offers it self to consideration the Town of Rain, seated on the Leck not far from the fall thereof into the Danow; memorable for the Skirmish near to it betwixt the Swedes and Bavarians at the first passing of the Swedish Forces over that River, in which John Earl of Tilly, so famous for his long and fortunate Conduct of the Imperial Armies, received his death's wound, of which he died at Ingolstadt within few weeks after. 2. Newburg, upon the Danow, not far from Rain; the first Town of Bavaria taken in by the Swedes after the said defeat of Tilly. 3. Ingolstadt, said to be built by a Tribe or Nation of the Suevi called Angeli, and thence called Angelostadum; or Angelsade; first made City by Ludowick of Bavaria Duke and Emperor, and in the year 1410 made an University, much privileged by Duke Lewis or Ludowick the fifth, and Pope Pius the second. A Town so strongly fortified both by Art and Nature, that it seems impregnable; and indeed proved so to Gustavus the late King of Sweden, who here found the first check to his prosperous Fortunes, being forced to raise his Siege without endangering it, and find work elsewhere. 4. Regensburg, (in Latine Ratisbona) on the Danow also, where it receives the River Regen, whence it hath its name: built in the place of Tiberina, or Augusta Tiberii, so called of a Colony brought hither by Tiberius Caesar about the time of our Saviours Passion, afterwards called Rheopolis, or the City of the Rhetians, the chief of Rhetia secunda. At this time it is a fair rich, and populous City, beautified with an infinite number of Churches and Religious Houses; anciently an Episcopal See, and of late made the ordinary place for the general Diets of the Empire. In former times it was the Seat of the Kings and first Dukes of Bavaria, then made Imperial, and now mixt, or both; for being still Imperial, at the least in name, it was seized on unexpectedly by the now Duke of Bavaria, when the Swedes first got footing within his Dominions; held by him with a very strong Garrison, after the loss of Manchen his chief place of Residence, till at last won from him by the Swedes, Anno 1633. 5. Passau, by the modern Latinists Paravia; but by some thought to be the Boiadurum of Ptolomy, then a Roman Garrison; seated on the Danow, where it meeteth with the Inn and the Ilz, by which it is divided into three Towns Passau, Insprad, and Ilzad; the whole Compositum being a rich, fair, and well traded City: a See Episcopal, and subject immediately to the Bishop as chief Lord thereof, who hath his dwelling in the Castle of Oberhausen, adjoining to that part hereof which is called Ilzad. A place remarkable for many Meetings and Consultations of the German Princes, especially for that of the year 1552, in which, all former Quarrels being laid aside, the Protestants were first permitted the free Exercise of their Religion, by the consent and Edit of Charles the fifth, who had most laboured to suppress it. More in the land is 6. Frising, on the swelling of a fine round Hill near the River Ambr, which runs beneath it, called anciently Fraxinum; conceived to be built by some of the Presidents or Lieutenants for the Roman Emperors, honoured with an Episcopal See about the year 710. One of the Bishops, whereof, commonly called Otho Frisingensis, was the best Historian of his time. 7. Landshut, upon the River of Iser, in the richest and most pleasant Country of all Bavaria; a beautiful and well built City, the work of Lewis Duke hereof, in the year 1208 adorned with a Church of most curious building for the service of God, and a magnificent Palace for the use of the Duke. 8. Freising, the only Imperial Town, (except Regensburg) in all this Dukedom. The whole number of Cities and great Towns in both Bavaria's is supposed to be 80; that is to say, 54 Cities, and 26 great Towns, of which these are the principal.

The Bishoprick, or District of SALTZBURG, being the third part of Bayeren or Bavaria; (according to our former division of it) extendeth from the Inn or Omn towards the Confines of Austria. The Soil hereof is rocky, dry, and barren, excepting some few Vallies only, as seated in the middle of the Julian Alps; the habitation heretofore of the Norici mediterranei, of whom more hereafter. The principal Town hereof is Saltzburg, seated upon the River Salzach, whence it had the name; raised of the Ruines of Juvavia, placed hereabouts by Antoninus, the Station of a Cohort of Roman Soldiers belonging to the First Legion. An Alpine City, strongly situate among the Mountains, but no less beautiful than many of the lower grounds. The Royal Seat of some of the Bavarian Kings, after the Archbishops hereof, the most powerful Prelates for Revenue or Jurisdiction of any in Germany. The See was first fixed here by Rupertus or Ruibertus, the first Apostle of these parts, spoken of before; whose Image or Impres is stamped to this day on the Coins of this Bishoprick. At the time when Luther first endeavoured a Reformation, Cardinal Matthæus Langius was Bishop here, who did ingeniously confess, that the Mass did not want its faults; that the Court of Rome was much corrupted, and the lives of Priests and Friars fit to be reformed: sed quod misellus Monachus omnia reformare non esse tolerabile; but that such a sorry fellow as Luther should attempt the work, was by no means to be endured. 2. Newkirch, on the same River, near the head thereof. 3. Rothenburg on the East side of the Inn, bordering on Bavaria. 4. Trann-Joheim, upon the Trann, rising out of the Lakes. 5. Wildesheim, one of the farthest Northwards, and 6. Bischofs-Hofe, one of the most Southern in all this Tract.

The first Inhabitants of Bavaria (excluding the District of Saltzburg) were the Vindelici, as aforesaid: a people so resolutely bent to maintain their Freedom against the incroachment of the Romans, that when Drausus, the Son in Law of Augustus, and Father of Germanicus Caesar, made War upon them, the very Women thereof took the Alarm; & deficientibus telis, Infantes in ora militum adversamiserunt; and when their Darts were spent, threw the young Infants (saith the Historian) at the heads of the Romans. After them, in the declining of the Empire, succeeded the Boiarii, some of the many Tribes of the Boii, the most diffused and multitudinous Nation of Gaul and Germany. Originally they were of Gaul, inhabiting the Dukedom of Bourbon, from whence some of them passed with the Senones and others of the Gauls to the farther side of the Alpi (in respect of them) where they took up the Country between the Appennine and the Po. Wearied with many Bickerings, at last with sharp and bitter Wars against the Romans, and by them deprived of half their Country, some of them passed into Germany, and mingled themselves with the Taurisci, then dwelling in those parts which we now call Siermark; others advancing further, thrust themselves into the Norici (of whom more anon,) and some retired themselves into the shelters and fast places of the Hercynian Forest.

Forest. Driven from this last by the Marcomanni, they fell into the Countries of the Heemunduri and Norici, (now the Upper Palatinat) who, mingled into one Nation with them, took the name of Boiarii; and were by that name first known in the time of Clodius the King of the French; by whose persuasion, in the 17 year of Anastasius Emperour of the East, they passed over the Danow, and possessed themselves of Vindobona for the second Rhetia, with some part of Noricum; to which they gave the name of Boiaria, as before was signified. They were governed first by Kings, (as all Nations were) of whom we meet with none but Aldigerius, (and he the last of that Race) slain fighting on the side of the Almani against the French, at the great Battel of Zulp near Colen. After which they were made subject to the Conquerors, as their neighbours and Confederates the Almani were; but suffered to live under the command and Government of their own Princes, by the name of Dukes. Of these, from Theodo the Son of Aldigerius, to Tassilo the last Duke, dated of his Birth and Honours by Charles the Great, for conspiring with the Lombards against him, are reckoned 15 Dukes in all; whose names (for their remembrance) little of them but the empty names we shall subjoin in the ensuing Catalogue of the Boiarii. 1. Theodo, Son of Aldigerius the last King, from whose younger Brother Theodo descended Pepin the Father of Charles the Great. 2. Theodo, Son of Theodo the Great, who married the daughter of Charles the Great. 3. Theodo, Son of Theodo the Great, who married the daughter of Charles the Great. 4. Theodo, Son of Theodo the Great, who married the daughter of Charles the Great. 5. Tassilo, Son of Theodo the Great, who married the daughter of Charles the Great. 6. Garibaldus, Son of Tassilo the Great, who married the daughter of Charles the Great. 7. Theodo IV, Son of Garibaldus, who married the daughter of Charles the Great. 8. Tassilo II, Son of Theodo IV, who married the daughter of Charles the Great. 9. Theodo, V, Son of Tassilo II, who married the daughter of Charles the Great. 10. Theodo II, Son of Theodo V, who married the daughter of Charles the Great. 11. Theodo VI, Son of Grimoldus, the Brother of Theodo II, who married the daughter of Charles the Great. 12. Grimold, Son of Theodo VI, who married the daughter of Charles the Great. 13. Hugobert, Brother of Grimold, who married the daughter of Charles the Great. 14. Uilo, Son of Hugobert, who married the daughter of Charles the Great. 15. Tassilo III, the last Duke of the Boiarii, of whom more anon.

Amongst these, few were of any note but 1. Theodo the first, Son of Aldigerius, who abandoning the name of King, because less pleasing to the French, who had newly conquered them, assumed that of Duke, and passing over the Danow, extorted the whole Province of Rhetia secunda, with part of Noricum from the Romans, Anno 508 or thereabouts. 2. Theodo the second, named the great, for his great and many Victories against the Romans, whom he outed of all Noricum and Vindicia, and whatsoever they held on the Dutch side of the Alpi. 3. Theodo the third of that name, and the fourth in number of the Dukes, converted with his people to the Christian Faith by the preaching of Rupertus before mentioned, Anno 580. 4. Tassilo the third of that name, and the last of their Dukes of the Race of Aldigerius, or of the old Boiarian blood; who being deposed by Charles the Great, the whole Country became immediately subject to the French, governed at first by their Lieutenants. Disinherited from the French Empire by Lewis the Godly, it was made a Kingdom, (Pannonia being added, and united to it) by whom it was conferred on Lotharius his eldest Son, who was afterwards Emperour of the Romans; after his death possessed by the Kings of Germany, but as a distinct Kingdom both in name and Title, till the decease of Lewis the Son of Arnolph, the last of the direct Line of Charles the Great. He being dead, and the Boiarii loth to be made a subject Province to the Kingdom of Germany, one Arnolph of the Issue of the said Charles, with the general liking of the Boiarii, took upon himself the Title of King; but being opposed thereby by Conrad the Brother of Lewis, Emperour and King of Germany, and also by Henry the first who succeeded, he changed the Title of King into that of Duke: the Founder of the present House of 1180 22. Otto of Wittelsbach, so called from the place of his birth or dwelling, descended lineally from Arnolph, the Lord of Seyrre in the Upper Bavaria, and 2. Son of Arnolph the first Duke hereof, advanced unto this honour by Frederick Barbarossa, sensible of the too great power of the former Dukes; the whole extent of this Estate being reduced by this time to the limits of the modern Bavaria, and the Palatinate of Norriburg.

Son of Lewis, who succeeded in the Dukedom of Bavaria, and the Electoral Dignity, descending in both of which to the eldest Son, the said Albrecht 1st Duke of Bavaria, and Election Prince of the Rhene. He was afterwards elected and crowned Emperor, known commonly by the name of Ludowick IV.
 1347 28. Stephen, the eldest Son of Ludowick, the Emperor, William and Albert, his two Brethren, successively enjoying the Earldoms of Hainault, Holland, &c. in right of their Mother.
 1375 29. Stephen II. Son of Stephen the first, his Brothers, Frederick and John, sharing with him the Estate.
 1413 30. Ludowick III. surnamed Barbary, deposed and imprisoned by his own Son Ludowick, who yet died before him without Issue.
 1447 31. Henry III. Son of Frederick, the second Brother of Stephen the 2. succeeded on the death of Ludowick Barbary.
 1450 32. Ludowick V. surnamed the Rich, the Son of Henry the 2. banished the Jews out of his Estates and seized their goods.
 1503 34. Albert III. Son of a former Albert, Nephew of John Munich by his Son Ernestus: which John was youngest Brother to Stephen the 2. who by the power and favour of Maximilian the Emperor, succeeded unto George the Rich: the cause of a long and unhappy War betwixt the Electors of the Rhene, and Dukes of Bavaria, the work whereof, besides the loss of this Estate, fell upon the Palatines, proscribed and outed of their Country, upon this quarrel; but, upon their Submission, restored again.

1508 35. William, the Son of Albert the 3.
 1577 36. Albert IV. a great Champion of the Doctrines and Traditions of the Church of Rome; and so extremely affected unto the Jesuits, that he built Colleges for them at Landshurg, Ingolstadt and Munich, his three principal Towns.
 1579 37. William II. Son of Albert the 4. as zealous as his Father in the cause of the Church of Rome, therein exceeded very much by 1588 38. Maximilian, eldest Son of William the 2. who chiefly out of the same zeal sided with Ferdinand the 2. in the Wars of Germany, An. 1620. and took upon him the conduct of the Armies of the said Emperor against Frederick Count and Election Palatine, chosen King of Bohemia: in which having done great service to the Imperial and Romish Interest: he was by the said Ferdinand invested in the Upper Palatinate, called anciently (but not more properly than now) the Palatinate of Bavaria, together with the Electoral Dignity. This last was conferred at first upon him but for term of life in the Diet at Regensburg, the Electors of Meitz, Saxony and Brandenburg then protesting against it; but afterwards, in the Diet at Prague, An. 1628, conferred upon him and his Heirs for ever, to the great prejudice of the Princes of the Palatine Family, who by reason of their simultaneous Investiture with the first of their House, are not to be deprived of their Estates and Dignities for the offence of their Fathers: the punishment not being to extend beyond the person of the offender, but notwithstanding their Pretensions and Allegations, the Duke is still possessed of the Title and Dignity, and confirmed therein by the Conclusion of the Treaty of Amster, a new Electorate being to be erected for the Palatine Princes.
 The Arms of this Duke are Lion and Azure, a Bend, Argent and Azure.

8. The Archdukedom of AUSTRIA.

THE Archdukedom of AUSTRIA, reckoning in the incorporated Provinces and the Members of it, is bounded on the East with Hungary and part of Sclavonia on the West with Bavaria, and some parts of the Swissers and the Grisons, on the North with Bohemia and Moravia, and on the South with Syria and some part of Friuli in Italy. Within which circuit are contained the several Provinces of Austria properly so called, Stiria, Carinthia, Carniola, and Tyrol. The quality of the whole will be best discerned by the Survey of particulars.

The ancient Inhabitants of the whole were the Norici of the Romans, parted into the lesser Tribes of the Sevaces, Alanni, Ambisauti, Ambili, and Ambidanni, subdued by Drusus, Son-in-law to Augustus Cesar, and made a Province of the Empire. After by Constantine the Great divided into Noricum, Agrediterraneum, comprehending the Countries of Carinthia, Carniola, Stiria, and some parts of Tyrol, with the Bishoprick or District of Salzburg, of which Salva was the Metropolis or capital City: and Noricum, Ripense, containing only Austria, and those parts of Bavaria which lie Eastward of the River Inn, extended all along on the banks of the Danow. It was known by no other names while possessed by the Romans, from whom being conquered by the Avars and other Nations, it gained those several names and appellations specified before.

1. AUSTRIA properly so called hath on the East the Kingdom of Hungary, on the West Bavaria, on the North the Bohemian Mountains towards the West, and on the other side the Tyre, which separates it from Moravia, on the South Syria, or Stiermark. It is called by the the Dutch Ostereich, and contractedly Ofrich, that is to say, the Eastern Kingdom, (a part assuming to it self the name of the whole) this being the extreme Province of East-France, or the Eastern Kingdom of the French, in the barbarous Latine of those times called by the name of Austrasia, whence the modern Austria.

The Air is generally very healthy, and the Earth as fruitful, yielding a plentiful increase without help of Compost or other Soiling, and of so easy a Tillage to the Husbandman, that on the North side of the Danow it is Ploughed and managed by one Horse only. Exceeding plentiful it is of Grain, and abundant in Wine; with which last it supplieth the defects of Bavaria; it hath great store of Saffron, some provision of Salt; and at the foot of the Mountains, not far from Haimburg, some Ginger also. Nor wants it Mines of Silver in a large proportion. It is divided by the River Danow into the Lower, and the Higher: that lying on the North side of the River, towards Bohemia and Moravia; this on the South side, towards Stiermark.

Places of most importance in the HIGHER AUSTRIA are, 1. Gmund seated on a Lake called Gmund-See, bordering on Bavaria, at the Efflux of the River Drann, which ariseth out of it. 2. Lintz, seated on the Confluence of the said Drann with the famous Danow; the Aedate of Ptolemy: a Town before the late Wars almost wholly Protestant, but then being put into the hands of the Duke of Bavaria, began to warp a little to the other side. 3. Walkenstein, on the Ens or Anisus, near the borders of Stiermark. 4. Ens, on the fall of that River into the Danow raised out of the Ruines of Laureacum sometimes the Metropolis of Noricum Ripense, the Station at that time of the 2. Legion; afterwards an Arch-bishop's See, made such in the first planting of Christianity amongst this people by S. Severine. An. 464. On the Reviver whereof (suppressed by the Hunns, Boiarians, and others of the barbarous Nations) by the diligence and preaching of S. Rupertus, the Metropolitane dignity was fixt at Salzburg. 5. Weidoboven, near the head of the River Ips. 6. Ips, seated at the Influx of that River, and from thence denominated; the Gefodunum of Ptolemy and other Ancients. 7. Newfide, on a great Lake so named. 8. Wels, on the main stream of the Danubius. 9. Haimburg, on the Confluence thereof and the River Markh. Near to which, at the foot of the Mountains now called Haimburgerberg, (from the Town adjoining) but antiently named Mons Cognamus, is some store of Ginger: a wonderful great rarity for these colder Countries. 10. Newstat, first called so from the newness of it, being built of late. 11. Vienna, by the Dutch Wien, the principal of all these parts, by Ptolemy called Iulibona, Vindebona, by Antonine; the Station in their times of the tenth Roman Legion, of whose being seated here there are many Monuments both within the City and without. Seated it is on the banks of Danubius, well built, both in regard of private and publick Edifices; each private house having such store of Cellarage for all occasions, that as much of the City seems to be under the ground as is above it. The Streets for the most part are spacious, and all paved with Stone, which makes them very clean and sweet in the midst of Winter. It is fenced with a mighty Wall, deep and precipitous Ditches on all parts of it, and many Bulwarks, Towers and Ramparts in all needfull places. The Walls hereof were first raised with some part of the money paid unto Leopold Duke of Austria, for the ransom of Richard the first of England, taken Prisoner by him as he passed homewards through this Country from the Holy Land: Esteemed to this day the strongest hold of Christendom against the Turks; and proved experimentally so to be in that most notable and famous Repulse here given them

An. 1526. at what time 200000 of them, under the conduct of Solyman the Magnificent, besieged this City; but by the valour of Frederick the second, Election Palatine of the Rhene, and other German Princes, were gallantly resisted and compelled to retire, with the loss of 80000 Souldiers. Nor doth the strength hereof so diminish the Beauties of it, but that it is one of the goodliest Towns in all the Empire; the Residence for these last Ages of the Emperours: made an University by the Emperor Frederick the second; revived and much advanced by Albert Duke of Austria, An. 1356. adorned with an Episcopal See, many magnificent Temples and stately Monasteries: but above all, with a most sumptuous and Princely Palace, wherein the Arch-dukes and Emperours use to keep their Courts; built by Ottacar, King of Bohemia during the little time he was Duke of Austria. In the middle Ages, as appears by Otto Frisingensis, it was called Fabiana; but being ruined by the Hunns, and again re-edified, was first called Biana, (the first syllable omitted by mistake or negligence) from whence the Dutch Wien, and the Latine Vienna.

We should now take a view of the Towns and Cities in the LOWER AUSTRIA, if there were any in it which were worth the looking after. The Country having never been in the hands of the Romans, hath no Town of any great Antiquity; nor many new ones built or beautified by the Austrian Princes, since it came into their possession: the only one of note being Cremis, or Cremia, on the left-hand shoar of Danubius, going down the waters. 2. Reck, on the River Teye, bordering on Moravia; and 3. Freistat, at the foot of the Mountains on the skirts of Bohemia.

2. STIRIA, or STIERMARK, is bounded on the North with Austria, on the South with Carniola on the East with Hungary, and on the West with Carinthia; extendeth in length 110. miles, but in breadth not above 60. or thereabout. For the most part mountainous and barren, as being overspread with the Spurs and branches of the Alps, and rich only in Minerals. The reason of the name we shall have anon.

Towns of most consequence are. 1. Graz, seated upon the River Mur, and the chief of the Province, from which the third Branch of the House of Austria (since the time of Ferdinand the first) was called de Graz, and had the Government of the Country for their part of that Patrimony. A Town once full of Protestants, and those so strong, that they could neither be forced out, nor hindered from the free exercise of their Religion, till the year 1598. in which Margaret the late Queen of Spain, Sister to the Archduke Ferdinand de Graz, was by the Citizens solemnly entertained; with whom entred so many Souldiers, that the City was taken, and 14 Ministers of the Reformed Religion presently banished. 2. Rackelsburg, and 3. Pruck both situate also on the Mur. 4. Stiebach, an Episcopal See, seated on the Dra or Dravus, a well-known River, not far from the fall of the Mur into it. 5. Petaw, the Petrovia of Antonine, seated somewhat higher upon the Dravus. 6. Lambach, the Ovilabis of Antonine, on the Dravus also. 7. Voitsberg, upon the River Kainach. 8. Celex, the Celeia of Pliny, of great antiquity, as appeareth by many Roman Inscriptions and other evident signs of Age which are upon it; for this cause thought by some to be that Celia, or built at least out of the Ruines of it, which Ptolemy placeth in this Tract. It is situate on the River Savus, and hath a large jurisdiction over the adjoining Countries. 9. Cavissa, seated in a Marsh on the edge of this Country: a place of great strength both by art and nature; once one of the strongest Bulwarks against the Turks; and proved experimentally so to be in them for many years, but taken by them at last. An. 1600. and never since regained by the Princes of the House of teen already. The old inhabitants of the other part are supposed to be the Quadi, in that part which lieth next to Bohemia; the Marcomanni, in those parts which are next Moravia: who intermingled with the Boii, and united with them into the name of Boiarii, won from the Romans the whole Province of the Second Rhetia, and so much of Noricum as lieth betwixt the Inn and the Enns, leaving the rest to the Avars, who possessed that and the two Pannonia's, extorted also from the Romans in the fall of that great and mighty Empire, as we shall shew more fully when we come to our description of Hungary.

But these Boiarii being conquered by Clovis the Great, and the Avars driven out of Pannonia by Charlemagne, both Provinces became members of the French Empire, till the subduing of Pannonia by the Hungarians. To oppose whom, and keep in peace and safety these remote parts, some Guardians, or Lords-Marchers, were appointed by the Kings and Emperors of Germany, with the Title of Marquesses of Ostreich; at first officary only, but at last hereditary, made so by the Emperour Henry the first, who gave this Province to one Leopold, firnamed the Illustrious, the Son of Henry Earl of Bamberg, of the House of Schwaben, and therewithal the Title of Marquess, Anno 980. This Marquisate was by Frederick Barbarossa raised to a Dukedom 1158; Henry being the first Duke, whose Nephew Leopold took Richard the first of England prisoner, in his return from Palestine, for whose Ransom he had so much money, that with it he bought Stiermark, together with the Counties of Neuburg and Lintz, and walled Vienna. His Son Fredericus, firnamed the Warlike, was made King of Austria by the Emperour Frederick the second, Anno 1225. Eleven years he continued in his Dignity, at the end of which he was spoiled of his Royal Ornaments by the same hand, for denying his appearance at the Emperours Summons, unto whom for some Outrages he had been complained of. Finally, he died in the year 1246, difcomfited and slain in Battel by the King of Hungary. Leaving no Issue of his body, this Estate of right should have descended on Frederick, Son of Hermannus, Marquess of Baden, and of Gertrude his Wife, the Niece of this Frederick the Warlike by his Brother Henry, who was afterwards beheaded at Naples by Charles of Valois, Anno 1268. But Ottocar, Son of Primislaus King of Bohemia, pretending to it in the right of Margaret his Wife, one of the Sisters of the said Frederick the Warlike, by a strong hand possessed himself of the Dukedom of Austria, which he increased by the addition of Carinthia and Trevigiana; all which he held, together with the Kingdom of Bohemia till the year 1278, in which he was vanquished and slain by Rodolphus of Habsburg, not long before advanced to the German Empire. Rodolphus thus possessed of these great Estates, conferred them on Albertus his Eldest Son, who had then married Elizabeth, Daughter of Mainard Earl of Tyrol by Elizabeth (or Agnes) his Wife, the Daughter of Gertrude, and Sister and sole Heir at last of Frederick, so cruelly murdered at Naples, as before was said; By means of which Marriage and Investiture Albert was quietly possessed of the Dukedom of Austria, Stiermark, Carinthia, Carniola, together with Marca Trevigiana, to which the Earldom of Tyrol and many other fair Estates in Schwaben and Alsatia were after added. By whom it was first raised to the Title of Archduke is not yet agreed. Some attribute it to Rodolphus of Habsburg, at the Investiture of his Son Albert into these Estates, Anno 1298. Other to Charles the fourth, advancing to that Honour Rodolph the Ingenious, Anno 1360. Some make it to be first given to Albert Duke hereof, in the year 1430: and others post it lower to the Marriage of Philip, Son of Maximilian of Austria and of the Lady Mary of Burgundy, with Joan Princess of Spain. But by whomsoever given at first, it is now the constant and hereditary Title of all this Family: the successive Princes whereof from the first Investiture follow in the ensuing Catalogue of

- 1177 9. Ludovick, Son of Henry, built Enns and Newstat; of great note in the Wars of the Holy-Land.

- 1283 13. Albert II. Son of Rodolph of Habsburg, by his Father made Duke of Austria, married Elizabeth, the lineal and direct Heir of Gertrude, one of the Nieces and (on the death of that Frederick, who was slain at Naples) the next Heir of Frederick King and Duke of Austria; after his Fathers death chosen Emperour also.

9. VETERAVIA

VETERAVIA or WETERAW, is bounded on the West with the Bishoprick of Cölen, on the East with Frankenland, on the North with Hassia and Westphalen, and on the South with the Lower Palatinat. It containeth a Combination of many small Estates, which being joined in a common League for defence of each other in the preservation of their Laws, Liberties and Religion; are called the Confederation of the Weteraw. The principal of the States which are thus confederated are the Earls of 1. Nassau, 2. Hanaw, and 3. Solms, & the Lords of Lichteberg, and the Imperial Cities of 5. Friburg, and 6. Weitzelaur.

The County of NASSAU (for fruitfulness of Soil and delightfulness of situation not inferior to most parts of France) lieth at the foot of the Mountains which divide Hassia from Engern and Westphalen, antiently called Melibocus; a branch of the long ridge of mountains which were called Abnobi. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Nassau, situate on the South-side of the River Lon, not far from the fall of it into the Rhene; the first Seat and honourary Title of this famous Family, and still in the possession of the Princes of Orange, the first branch hereof. 2. Dillenburg, the usual Seat of the Earls of Nassau before their settling in the Low Countries; whence they are named the Earls of Nassau of the House of Dillenburg, to difference them from others of the same Family. 3. Carzenelbogen, which gives the Title of an Earl to the owners of it; in Latin Castellum Melibocum, which shews the name to be compounded of the Castellum, antiently possessed of these parts of Germany, and the mountainous parts of Melibocus, then inhabited by them. The possession of this Town is much controverted between the Earls of Nassau and the Landgraves of Hassia. Concerning which we are to know, that Henry the second son of Lewis Landgrave of Hassia firnamed the Mild, married with Anne, Daughter and Heir of Philip the last Lord hereof, and by her had a Son called William, who died without Issue, and a Daughter named Elizabeth, married to John the third of Nassau, to whom the baronet Henry and William Earls of Nassau. Elizabeth on the death of her Brother William laid claim to the Estate, as the next Heir to him; followed in the pursuit thereof by William Count of Nassau, her surviving Son. Against which William the 2. of Hassia did alledge a grant or donation of it from his Cousin William, the Brother of Elizabeth, as before is said, and having Possession of the Town, and the members of it, was made thereby the better able to defend his Title. But at the last it was surrendered by Count William of Nassau (Father of William Prince of Orange) unto Philip the Landgrave in the time of Charles the fifth, for the sum of 600000 Crowns: the House of Nassau notwithstanding retaining it amongst their Titles. 3. Herborn, a small University, or Schola illustis, founded of late by the Earls of Nassau in which Piscator was Divinity-Reader, and Alstedius (both famous in their times) Professor for the Arts and Sciences. 4. Idstein, lying South to Carzenelbogen; and 5. Wiesbad, directly South to Idstein, betwixt that and the Maine: these being the Title and possessions of the second branch of this Family. 6. Weilburg, on the Lon, not far from Weitzelaur; which gives Title to the third branch of this House, called the Earls of Nassau in Sarbruck and Weilburg. As for the Princes of the House of Nassau, they are very antient; Otho of Nassau being made Earl of Gelderland in the year 1079. Another Otho of this House, but proceeding from a different Branch of it, died Anno 1190. the Founder of the present Family of the Princes of Orange.

- 1457 20. Frederick II. on the death of Ladislaus without Issue, succeeded into the Dukedom of Austria, as the direct Heir of Leopold the 6. one of the younger Sons of Albert the short; chosen also Emperour.
- 1493 21. Maximilian, Son of Frederick, enriched his House with the Marriage of the Heir of Burgundy.
- 1519 22. Ferdinand, Grandchild to Maximilian by his Son Philip King of Spain and Archduke of Austria, succeeded his Grandfather in this Dukedom, King of Hungary, Bohemia, and Emperour of Germany.
- 1565 23. Maximilian II. Son of Ferdinand.
- 1577 24. Rodolphus III. Son of Maximilian the 2.
- 1612 25. Matthias, Brother of Rodolphus.
- 1619 26. Ferdinand II. firnamed of Gratz, Son of Charles Duke of Austria, of the House of Gratz, the youngest Son of Ferdinand the 1. (the numerous Offspring of Maximilian the second being all dead without Issue) succeeded in the Estates of Austria, chosen Emperour also, King of Hungary, and Bohemia, &c.
27. Ferdinand III. Son of Ferdinand the second, now living Anno 1648, Archduke of Austria, King of Hungary and Bohemia, and Emperour of the Germans.

The Arms of these Earls when distinct from the House of Austria were Argent, an Eagle Sable, membered Or.

Thus have we seen by what means and under what Princes all these Provinces, belonging unto several Lords, became united and incorporated into one Estate. Besides which, there was added to it by Rodolph of Habsburg all the upper Elfsa, the Castle & Territory of Habsburg itself, with many fair Estates amongst the Switzers; by Albert the short, the Country of Sungoy; and by his sons, the Advocateship of Friburg, or the County of Brigam. So that these Princes are undoubtedly the greatest for Power and Patrimony of any in Germany; and would be of a great Revenue, if the ill neighbourhood of the Turks did not put them to continual Charges, & make the borders of the Country to be thinly planted, and not very thoroughly manured. Howsoever, it is thought that they may yield yearly two millions of Crowns and upwards to the Arch-duke's Coffers.

The Arms of these Princes are Gules, a Fels Argent; assumed by Marquess Leopold at the Siege of Acon or Protoplais in the Holy Land, because his whole Armour being covered with blood his belt only remained white. The Arms thereof in former times having been six Larks Or, in a Field Azure; supposed to have been taken by the first Marquess, because they possessed those six Provinces, for defence of which the Tenth Legion, called Alanda, had been fixed at Vienna.

And now we are to take our leave of the Roman Empire, which we shall meet withal no more till we come to Hungary; the Countries on the north-side of Danubius and the East-side of the Rhene being almost as soon abandoned as conquered by them. So that in our survey of these Northern Countries we are not like to find such matter of Antiquity as we have before; but must content our selves both with Towns and Villages of a later date, and a lesser continuance. In which we shall begin with those Countries which lie on the other side of the Rhene bordering on the Estates of Cleveland and the Bishops-Electors; and so proceed on Eastward till we come to the farthest parts of Germany, and the Confines of Hungary; afterwards turning to the North, till we meet with Dienmark; which is next of all to be considered.

Orange, and of the House Wisbad and Idstein, out of which descended Adolphus Earl of Nassau, chosen Emperor in the year 1292, by the Marriage of Engelbert, the seventh Earl of this House of Dillenburg, with Mary Daughter of Philip, Lord of Breda in Brabant, they came first to be possessed of Estates in the Netherlands: and by the Marriage of Henry, great Grand-child of this Engelbert, with Claude of Chalons, they got the Principality of Orange in France. A Family as much honoured for the personal Merit of the Princes of it as any other in Europe, of some of which although we have already given a Catalogue, (in the description and story of Provence) as princes of Orange, yet take here the whole Succession of them as

The Counts of NASSAU.

1. Orbo, the Son of Henry, and Nephew of Waleran, the first Earl of Nassau of this Line.
- 1190 2. Henry, the Son of Orbo, who added Dillenburg Wisbad and Idstein, unto his Estate; Grandfather, by Waldradus his 2. Son, to Adolphus the Emperor.
3. Orbo II. Son of Henry.
4. Henry II. Son of Orbo the 2.
5. Orbo III. Son of Henry the 2.
6. John, Son of Orbo the 3.
- 1362 7. Engelbert, the Son of John by Mary his wife, Daughter and Heir of Philip, Lord of Breda in Brabant, added that Town, with many other fair Estates in the Netherlands, to his former Patrimony.
8. John II. Son of Engelbert, Earle of Nassau, and Lord of Breda, &c.
- 1475 9. John III. Son of John the 2.
- 1516 10. Henry III. Son of John the 3. Knight of the Golden Fleece, married Claude of Chalons, Sister of Philibert Prince of Orange.
- 1536 11. Rene, Son of Henry the 3. and of Claude of Chalons, Successor to his Uncle Philibert in the Principality of Orange, Anno 1530, and to his Father in the Earldom of Nassau, Anno 1546.
- 1544 12. William, the Son of John the 3. by Elizabeth his Wife, Daughter of Henry Landgrave of Hassia, and of Anne Daughter and Heir of Philip Earl of Catzenbogen, reformed the Religion in this Country according to the Lutheran Doctrines.
- 1559 13. William II. Son of William the first succeeded Prince of Orange by the Will of Rene his Cousin-german, An. 1544. and Earl of Nassau by the death of his Father, Anno 1559. What else concerns this Prince, we have had before. I only add, that William the first besides this William had three other Sons: that is to say, Count John, the Father of William of Nassau, Governour of West Friesland, Count Ludowick, of great renown in the first Wars of the Netherlands, in the course whereof he lost his life, Anno 1574; and Count Adolphus, slain in the same Wars also, Anno 1568.
- 1584 14. Philip, eldest son of William the second and of Anne his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Maximilian of Egmond, Earl of Buren, succeeded Earl of Buren on the death of his Mother, Anno 1551, Prince of Orange and Count of Nassau by the death of his Father.
15. Maurice, Son of William the 2. and of Anne his Wife, Daughter of Maurice Duke-Elder of Saxony, Prince of Orange and Count of Nassau: at the age of 10 years made General of all the Forces of the United Netherlands, which place he managed for the space of 37 years both with great courage and success.

- 1625 16. Henry IV. Brother of Maurice (but by another Father, the Daughter of Gasper Coligny, Admiral of France) Count of Nassau, Prince of Orange, and General of the forces of the States United.
- 1648 17. William III. Son of Henry the 4. Successor to his Father in all his Honours and Commands. A Prince of great hopes and expectations.

The Arms of the Earls of Nassau are quarterly, 1. Azure, a Lion Or, Armed Gules; 2. Or, a Lion-Leopard Gules, Armed and Crowned Azure; 3. Gules, a Fels Argent; and 4. Gules two Leopards Or, Armed and Membered of the first.

Bordered on Franconia or Frankenland lieth the County of HANAW, so called from the chief Town of it: in which the places of most note are, 1. Hanaw it self, in Latine called Hanovia, honoured with a Schola illustis also, and much enriched by the trade of Printing, with which they use to furnish annually the Marts of Frankford, distant from hence about ten Dutch miles, 2. Pfaffenhofen, of no note formerly, but like to be remembered in the Stories of succeeding times, for the great Defeat there given to the Duke of Lorraine, July 31. 1633, who lost his whole Forces, all his Ordnance, Ammunition and Baggage, and which was worst of all, his Country; taken in part from him by the conquering Swedes, who followed him close unto his home; but wholly by the French King upon that advantage. 3. Lichteberg, which gives Title to a second Branch of the House of Hanaw, called the Lord of Lichteberg. A Family of good esteem, since the time that Orbo of Hanaw was ennobled with the Title of Earl: thereof which was about the year 1392. Before that, Princes of the Empire; and after that advanced unto great Fortunes, by the addition of the Barony of Mintzeberg in the person of Philip the first Earl; of the County of Rheinick in the person of another Philip, the third of that name, great Grandchild of the former Philip; and finally, of the Lordships and Estates of Lichteberg, accrewing to this House by the Marriage of a third Philip, the youngest Son of Reinard the third Earl hereof, with Anne the Daughter and Heir of Ludowick Lord of Lichteberg, the Title and possession of the second branch of the House of Hanaw, called Lords of Lichteberg and Hofchenstein, and Earls of Bischof: this last being an Estate in Lorraine accrewing to them by the Marriage of a fourth Philip, (the fifth in name and order of the House of Lichteberg) with Margaret sole Daughter and Heir of Ludowick the last Earl thereof.

Between the Countys of Nassau and Hanaw on both sides of the River Lon, lies the Earldom of SOLMS; the first Earl whereof (of whom there is any good Constancy) was Henry honoured with this Title, Anno 1220. But being I find them in the Catalogue of the Counts Imperial made before that time, I must conclude them to be ancients then the date aforesaid, though that be sufficient to ennoble a far greater Family. By the Marriage of Conrade the ninth from Henry, first with Elizabeth, one of the Daughters of William of Nassau, Prince of Orange, and after with the Widow of the Earl of Egmond, they came to be of such authority amongst the Netherlands, as to be privileged with a place and Suffrage in the Council of the States General: there seated at the present in their greatest honour, especially since the Marriage age of Henry of Nassau, Prince of Orange, with a Daughter of Earl Conrade by his second Wife, the Mother of William of Nassau, now Prince of Orange, and Husband to the Princess Mary, the eldest Daughter of Great Britain. But besides their Estate there, they are possessed in this Tract of 1. Braunfels, which gives Title to the first Branch of the House of Salm; 2. Croneberg, the possession of the second Branch of this Family; and 3. Salm on the North-side of the Lon, the Root of both.

Of the Imperial Cities in this Confederation, the first is Friburg called for distinction like Friburg in Weteraw, to difference it from another Town of that name in Brissgow, situate in the middle of delicious and most fruitful fields, and memorable for the stout resistance which it made to Adolphus of Nassau, at that time Emperour; who, when he could not get it by Force or Famine, obtained it by Fraud, and put to death no less then 40 of the chief Nobility, whom he found in the Castle. So hated he was for that bloody fact, that he was shortly after deprived of the Empire, and slain in fight by Albert of Austria, his Competitor. The second of the two is Wetzlar, seated on the Lon, where it meets with the Dille, which rising near Dillenburg, a Town of the Earl of Nassau's doth here lose its name into the greater. A Town Imperial, confederate with Friburg and the Princes before mentioned, for maintaining their common Liberties, and the Religion publicly professed amongst them, being that of the Reformed Churches of Calvin's Platform.

10. FRANCONIA.

FRANCONIA, or FRANKENLAND, is bounded on the East with the Upper Palatinate, and part of Voiland, on the West with the Confederates of Weteraw and part of the Rhene, on the North side with Hassia and Thuringia, on the South with the Palatinate of the Rhene and some part of Schwaben: So called from the French, Franci, or Francones, in whose possession it was when they were first known unto the Romans; the Residence of their Dukes or Princes in this noble Province appropriating the name unto it. Called also Francia Orientalis, to difference it from the Realm of France which lay more towards the West. At that time of a larger extent than it is at the present, comprehending so much of the Lower Palatinate as lieth on the same side of the Rhene; since subdued from it and made a Province of it self in these later Ages.

The Country, on the out-parts overgrown wholly in a manner with Woods and Forrests, and environed almost with Mountains; Part of the old Herzian Woods, is within pleasant, plain and fruitful, sufficiently plentiful both of Corn and Wines, but abundantly well stored with Rape and Licoras, and yielding good pasture for Cattel. So that we compare it to a fine piece of Cloth, wrought about with a coarse Lint; or an excellent fine piece of Lawn, with a Canvas Selvage.

Chief Rivers of it are, 1. The Maine, or Mennus, which running through the midst of it, is received into the Rhene below Frankfort. 2. The Sala, whence the adjoining French had the name of Salii, and Conrade, Emperour of the Germans, the surname of Salicus. 3. Radunia. 4. Sinna. 5. Tubero. 6. Elfus, &c.

The people of it are ingenious, patient of labour, strong of body, and very industrious, not suffering any to be idle that can earn his living, of what sort soever. The offspring of the ancient French, who, having over-mastered Gaul and the parts adjoining, left here the seminary of their strength, and a stock of their ancient Princes; Mar- comir, Brother of Pharamond the first King of the French, governing in these parts as Duke, and leaving the Estate and Title unto his Posterity. The Catalogue of which Princes take in order thus.

The Princes of the FRANKS, and Dukes of FRANCONIA, of the old French Race.

- A. Ch.
- 326 1. Genebaldus, the Son of Dagobert, descended from the old Regal stock of the Sicambri, united with other Dutch Nations about 60 or 70 years before, in the name of Franks, having subdued those parts which lay towards the River Mennus, became the first Prince of the Eastern Franks, or Lord of Francia Orientalis.
- 356 2. Dagobert, the Son of Genebaldus, who added the District of Triers unto his Estates.
- 377 3. Gladovanus, or Ludowicus, the Son of Dagobert.
- 398 4. Marcomir, the Son of Gladovanus, who extended his Dominion Eastwards towards Bavaria and Bohemia.
- 402 5. Pharamond, or Waramond, the Son of Marcomir, the first of this Line which took upon himself the Title of King of the French: on the assuming whereof (aiming at matters of more importance) he left Francia, or East-France, with the Title of Duke, to his Brother Marcomir.
- 419 6. Marcomir the Brother of Pharamond.
- 423 7. Prunmesser, by some called Prianus the Son of Marcomir.
- 435 8. Genebaldus II. the Son of Prunmesser.
- 455 9. Sunno, the Son of Genebald the second.
- 478 10. Clodomirus, or Luitemarus, the Son of Sunno.
- 515 11. Hygobaldus, the Son of Clodomirus, who became a Christian and added Wormes and Mentz unto his Estates.
- 541 12. Helmus, by some called Hermericus, a Christian also, who passing over the Rhene, subdued that Tract bordering between Triers and Lorraine, which the Dutch call West-reich.
- 571 13. Gotsfridus, the Son of Helmus, a Christian also, but not able to persuade his people to the same belief.
- 595 14. Genebaldus III. the Son of Gotsfride.
- 615 15. Clodomir II. the Son of Genebald the third.
- 638 16. Heribert, the Nephew of Clodomir the second.
- 668 17. Clodovans, or Clevis II. the Cousin-german of Heribert.
- 680 18. Gosberius II. the Son of Clevis the second.
- 706 19. Gosbertus II. Son of Gosber the first.
- 720 20. Hetanus, the Son of Gosbert the second, the last Duke of Francia of this Line. He dying without Issue-male, Anno 740, bequeathed it at his death to Pepin, who afterwards was King of France, Father of Charles the Great, according to a former Contract made between those Princes. And Charles no sooner had it in his possession, but he bestowed the greatest part of it on Burchard, the first Bishop of Wurzburg Anno 752. made Bishop of that City by Boniface, Arch-bishop of Mentz (the first Apostle of this People), but a year before. The Bishop of Wurzburg by this Grant were possessed hereof as long as any of the House of Charles the Great did possess the Empire: But his posterity sterity failing in the person of Conrade, Anno 910. Otho the first (who next but one succeeded Conrade) invested Conrade, Husband to Luigardis his Daughter, with this Country, giving him withal the Title of Duke of Franconia. Four Princes of this House possessed it; that is to say, this Conrade, surnamed Salicus; and after him three Henries, Father, Son, and Nephew, successively enjoying the Imperial Dignity, by the names of Henry the third, fourth, and fifth. This Henry, the last Prince of the male Line of Conrade, dying without Issue, Franconia fell to Frederick Barbarossa, Duke of Schwaben, as next Heir to Henry by the Lady Agnes his Sister, married to Frederick the Antient, Duke of Schwaben, the Grandfather of Barbarossa. But that House being also extinct in the person of Conradine, Anno 1268, and no one Heir pretending to the Rights thereof, the Bishop of Wurtzburg challenged it on the former Grant; content to let some great ones have a part of the spoil, that he and his Successors might enjoy the rest. By means whereof it came to be divided betwixt the Bishops of Wurtzburg, Bamberg, Meitz, the Elector Palatine of the Rhene, (for antiently so much of the Palatinate and the Bishoprick of Meitz, as lay on the Dutch side of the Rhene were but parts of Frankenland) the Marquess of Onaldsbach, the Earls of Swartzburg, Henneberg, and Hohenlohe, and as many of the Free or Imperial Cities as are seated in it. Thus every one did gather sticks when the great Oak fell: the Title of the Duke of Franconia remaining notwithstanding to the Bishops of Wurtzburg.

1. WURTZBURG, the Metropolis of Franconia, the Seat and Residence of the Bishop, who is Titular Duke hereof, is situate on the Maine, or Moenus, in a pleasant Plain environed with Meadows, Gardens, and fruitful Mountains; and very well fenced with Walls, Trenches, Bulwarks, and other Arts of modern Fortification; well peopled, and for the most part handsomely and neatly built. Passing over the Bridge built of Free-stone on many large and spacious Arches, you come unto a fair and pompous (though antient) Castle: the ordinary dwelling of the Bishop; and yet so strong, that the many vain attempts of the Boors and Citizens, apt to pick quarrels with their Prince, made it thought impregnable, so which the Situation of it on the top of an Hill added some advantage: but it proved otherwise when besieged by the King of Sweden, Anno 1631, who after a short, but stout resistance, took it by assault. Other Towns of most note which belong to the Bishops of Wurtzburg are, 2. Forcheim, where it is said, that Pontius Pilate was born. 3. Gemund, at the meeting of the Alpine and the Salza, or Sala. 4. Bretta upon the Salza, or Sala; not far from Gemund, remarkable enough, if for nothing else, for being the Birth-place of Metanichyon that renowned Scholar, the Phoenix of Germany, as some call him, and that not unjustly. 5. Coburnach. 6. Saffelsheim. 7. Huckbad, of which little memorable.

But to return unto the Bishop as chief Lord of all. He is called in the refined Latine of these times Hieropolitanus, but commonly Wurtzburgensis; differing in sound, but not in sense: for Wurtzburg is no other than a Town of Wurtz, situate among plants and Gardens, as before is said; and Hieropolis, made up out of several languages, doth signify no more than a City of Herbs. By whom the Episcopal See was here first erected, and how the Bishops hereof came to be entituled unto their Estates hath been shewn already. The manner how the new Bishop is admitted, and the old interred, may be worth our knowledge. On the decease of the former Bishop, the Lord Elect attended with a great train of horse, is to make his entrance. As soon as he comes within the Gates, he a-lights of his horse, and putteth off his Rides, and being attired in a poor and despicable Habit, height about with a Rope, bare-headed, also and bare-footed, he is conducted by the Earls of Henneberg, Castel, Werthaim, and Rheineck, to S. Saviour's Church, being his Cathedral. The Dean and Canons there meeting him, ask him what he would have; to which he modestly replieth, that, though unworthily, he is come to discharge the Office unto which he is called. Then the Dean thus, I admit thee in the name of this Chapter, committing to thy care this Church of Saint Saviour's, and the Dukedom thereunto belonging, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Which done, he putteth on his Episcopal Habit, sayeth Mass, and from thence passeth to the Castle, where he gives entertainment to all the Company. The living Bishop thus invested, proceed we next to the Burial of the dead: whose Body, being imbowelled, is kept in the Chapel of his Castle, his Heart preserved in a vessel of Glais. The next day he is carried to the Monastery of Saint James, holding a Crozier-Staffe in his right hand, and a Sword in his left; buried with them the next day after in the Church of S. Saviour. As for the Revenue of the Bishop, they must needs be great; The Bishop hereof in the time of Charles the fifth compounding for his peace with Albert, Marquess of Brandenburg, at the price of 220000 Crowns in ready money, and entering into a Bond to pay all his Debts, which amounted to 350000 Crowns more. By which we may partly guess at the richness of his Exchequer, and partly at the greatness of his Intrado.

2. The second great Lord of Franconia is the Bishop of BAMBERG, a City seated on the Maine, not far from Wurtzburg, the little River Rednitz falling there into it: supposed by Mercator to be the Bravarianum of Ptolemy, and to have took this new name from the Hill Baba (so called from Baba, Daughter of Otho Duke of Saxony, and Wife of Albert once Earl hereof (upon which it is situate, the right name being Babenberg) remember that Berg in Dutch signifieth a Hill) and contractedly Bamberg. A City delightfully seated amongst Mountains and pleasant Gardens, and in a soil exceeding fruitful, in all necessities, and yielding Lycoras in great plenty: the Birth place of Joachimus Camerarius, one of the great Lights of Germany; and a See Episcopal, the Bishop of which is exempt from the power of the Metropolitan, subject immediately to the Pope, and Lord of many fair Towns and Territories in this Country; But much diminished since the time of Charles the fifth: the Bishoprick thereof then being given to Marquess Albert, above-mentioned, for a Cession from Arms, An. 1530. no less than 60 of his Lordships, (most of which fall unto the share of the Marquess of Onaldsbach (besides the Tutelage or Guardianship of his Wards and Clients. Of those, which are remaining in the hands of the Bishops the principal are, 1. Bravingiac. 2. Schleisslat.

3. The third great Lord to be considered is the Marquess of ONALDSBACH, or Onsbach, who is Master of no small part of this Country; but his Estate (as those of the other German Princes) confused and intermixed with his Neighbours. His chief Towns, 1. Onaldsbach, or Onsbach, the usual Residence of these Marquesses, and the Birth-place of most of their Children. Hailbrun, on the edge of Wurttemberg, walled in about the year 1085, and honoured with some publick Schools there founded by Marquess George Frederick, An. 1482. 3. Plensfurt, not far from Nuremberg. Such places as they held in Woitland, we shall meet with there.

These Marquesses are of the puissant Family of Brandenburg, by whom this fair Estate was wrestled from the female Heirs of Wolframius, the last Lord hereof. The first first who did enjoy this Estate and Title was Marquess George Frederick, the Son of Albert Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg, called the Abbilles of Germany, the Father of Albert the first Duke of Prussia, and of George the first Marquess of Jagerndorff, and the Grandfather of that Marquess Albert who in the days of Charles the fifth so harassed this Country. But his Male-issue by Casimir his eldest Son failing in that Albert, Anno 1557 it returned to the Electoral House; and by Sigismund, a late Elector was given to Joachim Ernestus, one of his younger Brethren, who by the Princes of the Union for defence of the Palatine was made chief Commander of their Forces, Anno 1620. A charge in which it was supposed that he carried himself neither so faithfully nor so valiantly as he should have done, being much condemned for suffering Spinola with his Army to pass by unfought with, when he had all advantages that could be wished for to impede his march: the greatest part of the Palatine being lost immediately upon that Neglect, and by degrees the rest of the United Princes either taken off from their Engagement, or ruined for adhering to it with too great a constancy. To him succeeded his Son Christian, now possessed hereof.

As for the other secular Princes which have any considerable Estates in this Country, they are the Earls of Henneberg, Hohenlohe, Rheineck, Castel, Werthaim, Horpach, and Swartzburg, together with the Lords of Limbach and Rheichsburg, all of them named so from the chief Town of their Estates, and all those Towns enriched with some suitable Territory. Of these the Earls of Henneberg, Rheineck, Castel, and Werthaim, are Homagers to the Bishop of Wurtzburg, and are to do him service at his Inthronization: the Earldom of Rheineck being now united to that of Hanau, as was shewn before, and that of Henneberg most famous, in that one of the Earls hereof was Father of that incredible increase of Children, (as many as there be days in the year) produced at one birth by the Lady Margaret his Wife, Sister of William Earl of Holland, and King of the Romans. A Family of as great Antiquity as most in Germany fetching their Pedigree as high as to Charles the Great, without help of the Heralds. But they of greatest power and Parentage amongst them are the Earls of Swartzburg, deriving themselves from one Wittikindus of the House of Saxony, who fighting for his Country against the French, An. 779, was taken prisoner, carried into France, and there baptized, at the perswasion of Lewys the Godly, Son of Charles the Great. Wittikindus, his Son and Successor, being baptized at the same time also by the name of Charles, was the first Earl of Swartzburg, a Castle of his own building on the edge of Thuringia, An. 796, whose posterity do still hold the same, but much improved in their Estates by Marriages and other accretments. A race of Princes which have yielded many of great influence in the affairs of Germany: amongst them Gunter Earl of Swartzburg, elected Emperor of the Romans against Charles the fourth, by Rodolph Elector Palatine, Ericus Duke of Saxony, Ludovick Marquess of Brandenburg, and Henry Archbishop of Meitz. By which last he was solemnly inaugurated at Aken (or Aquisgrane) Anno 1349. But being unworthily poisoned by his Competitor, though he died not of it, yet he was made so weak and unfit for action, that he was forced to surrender his pretensions to his mortal enemy, receiving in compensation for his charges 22000 marks in Silver, and some Towns in Thuringia.

Of the Imperial Cities, which share amongst them the remainders of Frankenland, the principal are, 1. Francford on the Maine, so called from its situation on the River Maine, so difference it from Francford in the Country of Brandenburg. It is divided by the River into two parts, joined together by a Bridge of Stone: the lesser part, situate on the right-hand shore of the River, being called Saxen-hausen; the greater part, properly called Francford, seated on the other. Both are under one Magistrat, and both together make up a fair, rich, populous, and well traded Town; both of great riches and repute by reason of the famous Marts here held in the midst of Leut and September yearly, and the Election of the Emperor or King of the Romans, as occasion is. The City is of a round form, compassed with a double Wall, beautified with some Walks without the Town on the banks of the River, amongst Vineyards, Meadows, and sweet Groves: called thus as some say, from Francus the Son of Marcomir, supposed to be the Founder of it; or a Francorum vado, as the Foord of the Frank, before the building of the Bridge. 2. Schweinfurt, on the Maine also, in a fruitful Soil. 3. Rothenburg, on the River Tauber. 4. Wunsheim. Here is also the Town of 5. Coburg, which belongeth to the House of Saxony, and gives Title to some of the younger Princes of it, called from hence Dukes of Saxon Coburg. And hereto may be added 6. the fair City of Nuremberg, conceived by most to be within the Upper Palatinate; but by the Emperor Maximilian made a member of the Circle of Franconia, in regard most of the Estates and Possessions of it lie within this Country. Of which indeed they have so plentiful a share, that when Maurice Elector of Saxony and his Confederates had driven Charles the fifth out of Germany, Marquess Albert, before mentioned, (whose Sword was his best Revenue) picking a quarrel with this City, burnt no less than an hundred Villages belonging to it, seventy Mannors and Farm-houses appertaining to the wealthier Citizens, 3000 Acres of their Wood; and after all this havoc made of their Estate, compelled them to compound with him for 200000 Crowns in Money, and six pieces of Ordnance. But being the City it self seems rather to belong to the other Palatinate, we shall there meet with it.

Amongst these Prelates, Princes, and Imperial Cities is the great Dukedom of Franconia at this time divided; the Title still remaining in the Bishop of Wurtzburg, and some part of the Country; but both the Country and the Title of Duke of Franconia not long since otherwise disposed of. For the Swedes having taken Wurtzburg Anno 1631, as before is said, together with the City of Bamberg, and all the Towns and Territories appertaining to them, conferred them upon Bernard Duke of Saxon-Weymer, with the style and Title of Duke of Franconia. He was inaugurated therein in the Cathedral Church of Wurtzburg, July 19. 1633, the Nobility and Gentry of the County doing Homage to him, and all the Magistrates and Officers of the several Cities taking the Oaths of Allegiance: the new Duke also making Oath, that he would carefully maintain them in their Rights and Privileges. In the solemnities of which day, the first great Gun discharged in the way of Triumph broke in the going off, without any hurt done, but the wounding of one Souldier only. An Omen that all this Solemn Act would prove but a Pageant, and break in pieces at the first giving fire unto it. And so accordingly it did: the Victory at Norlingen, which followed not long after this, putting the Bishops once more into their possessions, and leaving nothing to the new Duke but an hungry Title. And therefore leaving both the old and new titular Dukes, we will here add the Catalogue of those who were Dukes indeed, and had, together with the Title, the full Possession of the Country.

Dukes of FRANCONIA of the Dutch or German Race.

- 974 1. Couradus, surnamed Salicus, created Duke of Franconia by Otho the first, whose Daughter Luigardis he had married: after the death of Henry the second elected Emperour, by the name of Conrade the second, Anno 1025.
- 1040 2. Henry, the Son of Conrade, Duke of Franconia and Emperour, by the name of Henry the third.
- 1056 3. Henry II. of Franconia and IV. of the Empire.
- 1106 4. Henry III. of Franconia, and V. of the Empire.
- 1125 5. Frederick II. (surnamed Barbarossa) Duke of Schwaben, Nephew of Frederick the Ancient, Duke of Suevia, and of Agnes his Wife, the Sister and next Heir of Henry, succeeded in the Empire after the death of Conrade the 3. his Uncle, Anno 1153.
- 1190 6. Frederick II. the Second Son of Barbarossa, Duke of Franconia and Schwaben.
7. Conrade II. Brother of Frederick the second succeeded in both Estates.
8. Philip, the younger Brother of Conrade, succeeded in both Dukedoms after his decease, and on the death of Henry the sixth his eldest Brother was elected Emperour, Anno 1198.
- 1207 9. Frederick III. of Franconia, and the V. of Suevia, Son of the Emperour Henry the sixth, whom he succeeded in the Kingdom of Naples and Sicily, Anno 1202, and on the death of Otho the fourth, Anno 1212, was elected Emperour, of that name the second.
- 1250 10. Conrade III. of Franconia, the II. of Schwaben, and the IV. of the Empire, the Son of Frederick the third, whom he succeeded in all his Titles and Estates.
- 1254 11. Conradine, Son of Conrade the third, Duke of Franconia and Schwaben, dispossessed of his Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily by Manfred the base Brother of his Father, and finally beheaded by Charles of Anjou, who succeeded Manfred in those Kingdoms. Anno 1268: After whose death this Royal House being quite extinguished, the Bishop of Wurtzburg did again resume the Title of Duke of Franconia; content to let some of the greater Lords and Prelates, which lived near unto him, to share in the possession of it, as before was noted.

The Arms of the ancient Dukes of Franconia, before they were incorporated with the House of Schwaben, were Azure, a Lion Barry of eight pieces Argent and Gules, crowned Or: which, why it is now born by the Landgraves of Hassia, we shall tell you there.

11. WIRTEMBERG, and 12. BADEN.

These I have joined together, though distinct Estates, because both of them were taken out of the great Dukedom of Schwaben, erected both about one time, and lie very close, in a round together: bounded upon the East and South with Schwaben properly so called, on the North with the Lower Palatinate, on the West with the Rhene, and that part of Schwaben which is called Brisingow, parted asunder by the mountainous ridge of Hills called Swartzwald, Wirtenberg lying on the East-side thereof, and Baden betwixt it and the Rhene.

And first for WIRTEMBERG. The Air thereof is very healthy, neither too hot in Summer, nor too cold in Winter: the Soil near Swartzwald lying on the West, and the Alps of Suevia on the South, of it self barren and unprofitable; but in some places, by the industry of the Plough-man, made to yield good Corn. But in the middle parts thereof, which lie towards the Neccar, little inferior for fruitfulness both of Corn and Wine unto any in Germany, besides some Silver-mines near Wiltberg, and about Puellach, a small Town, such abundance of Brags, that the Foundations of the Houses seem to be laid upon it.

It took this name from the Castle of Wirtenberg, the first Seat of the Princes of it; as that did from the Intuergeri, inhabiting the Dutch-side of the Rhene, or from the Virtungis, as Beatus Rhenanus thinketh, mentioned by Trobellius Gallio in the life of Aurelianus; to which the word Berg, being added for a termination, made it first Theruginberg, or Virtuniberg, and after Wirtenberg.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Stutgard, the Duke's Seat, a fair, rich, and populous Town, and the chief of the Dukedom; seated in a pleasant and fruitful Plain, not far from the Neccar, yielding a quantity of Wine almost incredible. 2. Tubingen; on both sides of the Neccar, united into one with a fair Stone-bridge. A Town well built, situate in a very rich Soil, and finally adorned with an University here founded by Eberhard the first Duke of Wirtenberg, Anno 1477, in which Leonardus Fuchsius that great Herbalist and Restaurator of Physick, was once a Professor of that Faculty. 3. Cannstatt, upon the Neccar also; not far from which, on the Top of an Hill, stands the old Castle of Wirtenberg before mentioned. 4. Wiltberg, of great esteem for its Mines of Silver. 5. Archingen, inhabited chiefly by Jews. 6. Schorn-dorf, upon the Rheini, much resorted to by reason of the hot Baths there; as is also 7. Nennburg, on the Enz. 8. Haidenheim, 9. Greiningen, 10. Marbach, of which little memorable. There are also within the limits of this Dukedom many Towns Imperial. As 1. Wimpfen, and 2. Hailbrun, on the Neccar. 3. Gepping, upon the River Vils. 4. Weil. 5. Reutling, on the Neccar also, made Imperial, by Frederick the 2. Anno 1240, otherwise of no great note but for the Paper-mills. 6. Eßling.

The first Inhabitants hereof were the Cheritini of Proletmy, and part of the Intuergeri spoken of before. It was made subject with the rest of these parts to the Almans, after to the French, and finally a member of the great Dukedom of Schwaben. From which dismembered in the time of Henry 4. after the dangerous War raised against him by Duke Rodolphus, advanced by the practice of Pope Hildebrand to the Throne Imperial, it came to have Princes of its own: the first Earl being Conrade, in the year 1100, by the grace and favour of the said Emperour Henry. Increased by the addition of the Earldom of Montshelgard and many other Accruments, it was made a Dukedom in the person of Eberhard the 6. by Maximilian the 1. A. 1495. The Earls and Dukes follow thus in order.

The Earls and Dukes of WIRTEMBERG.

- 1100 1. Conrade, the first Earl.
2. Ulric, Son of Conrade.
3. John Son of Ulric.
4. Lewis, Son of John.
5. Henry, Son of Lewis.
6. Eberhard, Son of Henry.
7. Ulric II. Son of Eberhard.
8. Eberhard II. Son of Ulric.
1325 9. Ulric III. Son of Eberhard.

1344 10.

- 1344 10. Eberhard III. Son of Ulric.
1394 11. Ulric VI. Son of Eberhard.
1394 12. Eberhard IV. Son of Ulric.
1417 13. Eberhard V. Son of Eberhard the 4. by his Marriage with Henrica, or Henrietta, Daughter of Henry Earl of Montbelgard, added that Earldom to his House.
1419 14. Lewis or Lodovick II. Son of Eberhard the 5.
1456 15. Eberhard VI. Son of Lewis, Founder of the University of Tubingen, created by Maximilian the first, the first Duke of Wirtenberg, Anno 1495. He deceased without Issue, Anno 1496.
1496 16. Eberhard VII. Son of Ulric the younger Brother of Lewis the 2. succeeded on the death of Eberhard his Cousin-german.
1504 17. Henry II. the Brother of Eberhard the 7.
1519 18. Ulric V. Son of Henry 2. expelled out of his Dukedom by Charles the 5. for the sake of Remling an Imperial City, and his Estate conferred on Ferdinand of Austria, the Brother of Charles: but after 15 years Exile, restored to his Dukedom by Philip Landgrave of Hassia, he Reformed Religion, and Liberally endowed the University of Tubingen. 31.
1550 19. Christopher, the Son of Ulric the 5. a follower of his Father's Steps in Reformation of the Church, and advancement of Learning.
1568 20. Lodovick or Lewis III. Son of Christopher.
21. Frederick Son of George Earl of Montbelgard, the Brother of Ulric the 5. made Knight of the Garter by Queen Elizabeth, Anno 1597.
22. John-Frederick, Son of Frederick the first.
23. John-Eberhard, eldest Son of the former Duke, now living, Anno 1648.

The Revenues of this Duke are supposed to be equal unto those of the Electors Palatine, spoken of before; and were it not for the Silver-mines in Saxony, little inferior to those of that Duke. But for provisions of War, (excepting Powder only) he is meanly furnished. A main defect, considering the ill terms he stands in with the Imperial Cities, betwixt whom and the House of Wirtenberg there have been always open Wars, or secret Jealousies.

His Arms are Or, 3 Attires of a Stag born Paliebarrie, Sable.

As for the Marquissate of BADEN lying on the West-side of Schwartzenwald, betwixt it and the Rhene, it is for the most part, except towards those Woods, a very pleasant and fruitful Country, and much of the same nature with the rest of Wirtenberg; so called from Baden, a neat Town, where the Marquess keeps his Seat in Winter; and that so named from the hot Baths there, as is also Baden (called for distinction sake, the Upper Baden amongst the Switzers), in which respect the City of Bath in Somersetshire had anciently the name of Caer-Baden also. Of these Baths it is supposed that there are in this City at least 300, profitable for many Diseases and excruciate Sores, drawing a great resort of people from the neighbouring Countries. This is the chief Town of this Marquissate, from whence the Princes have the Title of Marquesses of Baden. The next to this is, 2. Durlach, or Turlach, which gives Title to a second Branch of this House, called also sometimes Marquesses of Durlach only, but commonly the Marquesses of Baden-Durlach: 3. Liebenzell, amongst the Hills of Schwartzenwald, famous for hot medicinal Springs. 4. Liechtenau, remarkable for a Monastery, the Burial-place of the first Marquesses. 5. Gersbach, in the very heart of that Mountainous tract. 6. Pfortzheim, adjoining to the Wood Hagencheis, a branch of Schwartzenwald. 7. Rotelen. 8. Badenweiler, and 9. Susenburg, all seated in the Upper Baden, being that part hereof which lies next to Brisingow. 10. Milberg, beautified with a fair Castle, the usual Retiring-place of these Princes in the heats of Summer.

This Marquissate, being also taken out of the great Dukedom of Schwaben, was founded in the person of Herman of Verona in Italy, who deserving well of the Emperour Henry the V. was by him settled in some Lands about these parts, Anno 1120, and after marrying with the Daughter of an Earl of Baden, was by the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa created the first Marquess of Baden, Anno 1155. The Estate was after much encreased by the addition of the Earldom of Hochberg and the Appendices thereof in Schwaben, into which Christopher the 13. Marquess hereof, succeeded on the death of his Cousin Philip, the last Earl of Hochberg: both princes descending originally from two Brothers, of which the eldest, in right of the Lady Judith his Wife, was Earl of Hochberg; the second by the favour of the said Frederick Barbarossa, was made Marquess of Baden. They were Masters also of many fair Estates in the Lower Palatinate; which the Palatines of the Rhene (as was there said) are since possessed of. Other particulars shall be shewn (if occasion be) in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Marquesses of BADEN.

- 1155 1. Herman, the first Marquess.
2. Herman II.
3. Horman III.
4. Herman IV.
1281 5. Rodolph, Son of Herman the 4.
1295 6. Herman V. Son of Rodolph.
7. Rodolph II. Son of Herman the 5.
1356 8. Frederick, Son of Rodolph the 2.
9. Rodolph III. Son of Frederick.
1372 10. Bernard, Son of Rodolph the 3.
1431 11. James, Son of Bernard.
1453 12. Charles, Son of James, the first of these Marquesses which was possessed of the County of Spanheim in the Lower Palatinate, descending on this House by Matild Wife of Rodolph the 2.
1457 13. Christopher, Son of Charles, who after the death of Philip, the last Marquess of Hochberg, succeeded also in that Estate.
1515 14. Bernard Son of Christopher, his Brother Ernest succeeding in that of Hochberg.
15. Christopher II. Son of Bernard, his elder Brother Philibert and Philip Son of Philibert, dying in the life of Bernard.
16. Edward, Son of Christopher, intending the sale of his Estate to pay his Debts, was forcibly deprived of all by
17. Ernest, Marquess of Hochberg, Nephew of Ernest above mentioned, who by that means not only preserved the Marquissate of Baden; but united that of Hochberg again unto it, and removed his ordinary Seat to Durlach.
18. George, Brother of Ernest, Marquess of Baden and Hochberg.
19. Frederick, the Son of George, born in the year 1594, succeeded his Father in both Estates; and (if living) hath a Son called also Frederick, to enjoy them after his decease.

13. NORTH.

13. NORTHGOLA, or the UPPER PALATINATE.

THE Country of NORTHGOLA, so called from the Northern situation of it in regard of Bavaria, is sometimes also called the Palatinate of Bavaria, because anciently belonging to that Estate; but generally Ober Pfaltz, or the upper Palatinate, to distinguish it from the Lower. It is bounded on the East with Bohemia, on the West with Franconia and part of Schwaben, on the North with Voiland, and on the South with Bavaria. The Country is for the most part somewhat rough and mountainous, rich principally in Mines of Iron, which it yieldeth in most places, and some of Silver about Amberg; extended from Haimburg, to the edge of Bohemia, 80 miles; and from the Hill Fichtelberg in the edge of Voiland, to Weissenburg near the banks of the Danow, 68. miles.

Observervable things touching this Province are chiefly two. First, that out of the Mountain Fichtelberg, before mentioned arise 4 Rivers running to the four Quarters of the world; that is to say, the Egra towards the East, the Maine or Menns towards the West, the Sala or Salza to the North, and the Nab or Nabus to the South; so that it may be probably thought to be the highest Hill in all Germany. 2 That in the South-west corner of it are two little Rivers, the one called Altmul, which falleth into the Danow, and the other Rednitz, which runs into the Maine, and finally into the Rhene; between the Heads whereof, being not much distant, Charles the Great once began to dig a Channel, for making a passage out of the Rhene into the Danow: In which work he employed many thousand men. But partly by excess of Rain, and partly by some strange Affrightments, (all which they did in the day being undone in the night) he was fain to desist. Some parts of the intended Water-course are to be seen near Weissenburg, spoken of before, which standeth in the middle-way betwixt both Rivers.

Chief places of this Country which belong to the Electoral Family are, 1. Amberg, on the River Vils, enriched chiefly by the commodity of Iron, digged out of the neighbouring Hills, here fashioned into all sorts of Utensils, and hence conveyed in great abundance to the parts adjoining; but prouder of its Mines of Silver than those veins of Iron, affording to the Prince's Coffers 600000 Crowns yearly. 2. Nanheim, in the midst of a fruitful Valley, near a Wood of Juniper. 3. Newburg, upon the River Swartzach which gives Title to the second branch of the Palatine House, called the Counts Palatines of Newburg, Competitors with the Marquels of Brandenburg for the whole Dukedom of Clevealand, and finally possessed of Gulick and the Members of it. 4. Kehlheim, at the meeting of the Danow with the River Altmul. 5. Cham, on the edge of Bohemia, near the River Regen; which passing thence falleth into the Danow near the City of Regensburg. 6. Castel, where the Electors for the most part hold their Residence, when they are in this Country. 7. Awerbach, 8. Salzbach, 9. Weiden, 10. Neumarkt.

There are also in this Country some Towns belonging to the Lantgraves of Luchtenberg, one of the four old Lantgraves of the Empire; the other three being Düringen, Hassia and Alsacia: so called from Luchtenberg, an old Castle, situate on a lofty Hill not far from Pfreimt, the chief Town and ordinary Seat of these Lantgraves, seated on the River Nab. 2. Gransfelden, 3. Schonhoffen, an ordinary pass and baiting-place in the way from Prague to Nuremberg.

But the chief City of this Country, and perhaps of Germany, is Nuremberg it self, Norimberga in the modern, but Norica in the ancient Latine. So called from an ancient Castle called Castrum Noricum the Ruines of which are still remaining, encompassed with a deep, but dry Ditch, now of no use nor ornament to the City at all, but revered for its antiquity, as the Mother of Nuremberg. The Castle is said by some to be built in the time of Claudius Caesar. More probably by some of the Norici, who terrified with the Invasion of Attila, in the Decline and wane of the Roman Empire, relinquished Bavaria, where before they dwelt, and passed over the Danow, there to provide themselves of a safer dwelling. Conquered by the Bavarians, it became, together with their Conquerours, subject to the French. In the time of Lewis the 3. it became Imperial, and was walled and fortified during the reign of Charles the 4. From that time it increased to fast both in Wealth and Beauty, that it is counted the greatest and wealthiest City in all this Continent, there being reckoned in it 11 Stone-bridges for Passage over the Pegnitz, which runneth through it, 12 Conduits of fresh water, 13 common Baths, 116 publick Wells, and 128 Streets. Of figure it is square, environed with a triple Wall of 8 miles in circuit, and plentifully stored with all sorts of Ammunition. The Marqueses of Brandenburg in former times were the Burgraves of it; an Office of great power and jurisdiction, but sold for a good summe of money by Frederick the 3. Anno 1414. Albert his Son, attempting to recover the old Office again, besieged the Town, having no less than 17 Princes on his side, and yet could not force it: that for an Argument of its strength. A proof and evidence of the Wealth of it we have seen before, in that great havoc made of their Towns and Villages, and the great Ransom they were put to by another Albert spoken of in Franconia. And it adds much unto the commendation of the people that this great Wealth is gotten by their indefatigable Industry; the Town being situate on a barren and sandy Soil, and destitute of those Helps which commonly a navigable River brings unto a City; those great Possessions which belong unto the State herof being gotten out of the fire, as the saying is, by their continual working of Iron and other Manufactures, occasioning a resort hither of Merchants from all parts of Germany.

Other Towns of chief note within this Palatinate are, 1. Altorff, where the Nurembergers founded an University for the study of all Arts and Sciences, Anno 1575. 2. Herspruck, a great Town and well seated, belonging to the State of Nuremberg also. 3. Eysset, (Aichstadium in the Latine) an Episcopal See, situate on the River Altmul. 4. Weissenburg, an Imperial City on the Borders of Schwaben. Here was also in this Province (if not still remaining) the Town Winberg, memorable for the Piety and gallantry of the Women of it. For the Town being besieged and distressed by the Emperour Conrade the 3. for siding against him with the Guelphs then Dukes of Bavaria, no other conditions could be gotten at the surrendry of it, but that the Women might have leave to depart in safety, and carry all their Jewels with them. Which being obtained, they took their Husbands on their backs and so left the Town: and by that noble act so moved the affections and compassions of the angry Prince, that he spared the Town, and gave them all a general Pardon. It is said by some, that the odious names of Guelphs and Gibelines (with which the peace of Christendom was so long distracted) took their beginning at this Siege: the first so called from Guelpho, Brother of Henry the Proud, Duke of Bavaria, in whose cause they fought; the other from Veibling the (French and Italians speak it Gueibling) a Town of Franckland, in which that Emperour was born. Another original hereof we had in our description of the State of Florence: but I take this to be the more probable of the two, though neither certain.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Narisci of Tacitus. Afterwards some of the Norici fearful or grown impatient of the Roman yoke, came over the Danubius to them, and built that famous Castle called Castrum Noricum, where now stands Nuremberg. Overpowered by the Boii, and uniting with them in the name of Boiarians, they followed the fortunes of Bavaria till the year 1339, when Ludovick the Emperour and Duke of Bavaria, on the partition of the Estate betwixt him and Rodolphus his elder Brother, relinquished it for ever to the House of the Palatines. Returned for the present to the Dukes of Bavaria, on whom it was conferred, together with the Electoral Dignity, by the Emperour Ferdinand the 2. in recompence of the great service done him by Maximilian the now Duke thereof in the war of Bohemia, and the great charge he had been at in the reduction of that Kingdom to the House of Austria. How long it will continue thus is known only to God, the Disposer of all things. Yet neither the Bavarians formerly, nor the Palatines since, have been so fully Masters of it, but that the Lantgrave of Luchtenberg and the City of Nuremberg have put in for a share.

The Arms of which great and puissant City are Azure, an Harpye displayed, crowned, crined and armed, Or.

14. The Kingdom of BOHEMIA,

THE Kingdom of BOHEMIA, containing Bohemia it self with the incorporate Provinces, is bounded on the East with Poland and Hungary, on the West with the Upper Palatinate, Voiland and Misnia, on the North with the Marquisate of Brandenburg and some part of Misnia, and on the South with Austria and Bavaria. It comprehends in it, besides Bohemia it self, the Marquisate of Moravia, with the Dukedoms of Silesia and Lusatia.

1. BOHEMIA, encompassed about with woody Mountains, part of the Hercynian, is bounded on the East with Moravia on the West with the Upper Palatinate and Voiland, the North with Misnia, Lusatia and some part of Silesia, on the South with parts of Bavaria and Austria.

It took this name from the Bemi, or Boiemi, the old Inhabitants hereof; by Pomponius Mela called Bemi, with the addition of Gens magna, by Tacitus, Boiemi, who make them the Descendants of the Boii, a Galick Nation, who to avoid the Servitude which they feared from Rome, put the selves into these Hercynian Desarts, which from them was named Boiobemum, by which name it occurth in Pellerius Paterculius. And though the Marcomanni first, and the Sclaves and Croatian afterwards, became Masters of it, these last continuing their possession to this very day: yet it retaineth still the name of Bohemia amongst the Latines, as that Behemerland amongst the Dutch.

It contains in compass about 550 English miles. The Soil is indifferently fruitful, and enriched with Mines of all sorts, except of Gold. Tin they have here in good plenty, the Mines whereof were first found out by a Cornish man, banished out of England, Anno 1240. which discovery of Tin in these parts was, as faith my Authour, in magnam iacturam Richardi Comitis Cornubiæ, (he meant that Richard which was afterwards King of the Romans: (and no marvel, for in those times there was no Tin in all Europe but in England. Wood they have here good store, and in some of their Forests a Beast called Lemie, which hath hanging under its neck a Bladder full of scalding water with which, when she is hunted, she tortureth the Dogs, that she easily escapeth them. Of Corn they have sufficient for their own use, and sometimes also an increase above their spending, wherewith they do supply their neighbours of the Upper Palatinate; but they want Wine, the Air being too sharp and piercing to produce a good Vintage. And it yields also store of Saffron, no-where to be bettered; with plenty of medicinal Drugs.

The principal Rivers hereof are, 1. the Elbe, or Albit, having here its spring, of whose course we have spoken elsewhere. 2. Egra, 3. the Muldaw or Multavins, and 4. the Warz, all three exonerating themselves into the Elbe, which runneth through the midst of the Country.

The Kingdom is not (as others) divided into Counties and Provinces, but into the Territories and possessions of several Lords, who have great authority and command over their Vassals. The figure of the whole is in a manner Circular, the Diameter whereof reacheth every way some 200 miles, containing in that compass 700 Cities, walled Towns and Castles, and (as some say) 30000 villages. It is inhabited by a people given to Drink and Gluttony, and yet valiant and with sense of Honour: this last belonging to the Nobility and Gentry, the former to the common people; but more moderately than most others of the German Nations. All of them, Princes or Plebeians, rich, poor, noble and base, use the Sclavonian Language, as their Mother-tongue.

The chief Bohemian Captain that ever I read of was Zisca, who, in eleven Battels fought in the defence of the Hussites, against the Pope and his Confederates, prevailed and went away victorious: insomuch that at his death he willed the Bohemians to slay him, and make a Drum of his Skin, persuading himself, if they so did, they could never be overcome. A fancy like to that of Scipio African, and Vortimer K. of Britain, spoken of before. Scholars of most note, John Hus and Hierom of Prague, two eminent Divines, of whom more anon.

The Christian Faith was first here preached by S. Methodius the first Bishop and Apostle of the Moravians; Anno 900 or thereabouts Bořivoius (whom some call Borjnow) the 8. Duke from Crocus, being the first Christian Prince and next to him Wenceslaus the 2. This last was most cruelly murdered by Boleslaus his Brother at the instigation of Drahomira, an obstinate Heathen, Mother to them both: who having caused the Ministers of the Lord to be butchered, and their bodies to lie unburied for two years together, was swallowed Coach and all, in that very place where their Bodies lay. Confirmed by this Prodigy, they continued constant in the Faith to this very day, though not without the intermixture of some notable Vanity. For one Picardus, coming out of the Low Countries, drew a great sort of men and women unto him, pretending to bring them to the same state of Perfection that Adam was in before his Fall, from whence they were called Picards and Adamites. They had no respect unto Marriage; yet could they not accompany any Woman, until the Man coming to Adam, said unto him, Father Adam, I am inflamed towards this Woman, and Adam made answer, Increase and multiply. They lived in an Island which they called Paradise, and went stark naked: but they continued not long; for Zisca hearing of them, entered their Fools Paradise, and put them all to the sword, Anno 1416. But to make amends for this Folly, they were exceedingly zealous of the Reformation. For much about the same time the Works of Wickliff were brought into into Bohemia by a certain Scholar who had been Student in the University of Oxford, which hapning into the hands of John Huss and Hierom of Prague, (two men whereof this Country doth much boast) wrought in their hearts a desire to reform the Church. A business which they prosecuted so earnestly, that being summoned to the Council of Constance, they were there condemned for Hereticks and burnt, Anno 1414: yet had their Doctrine such deep root in the hearts of the people, that it could never be destroyed by the Tyrannies of War or Persecution (though both were used) to this very day; multitudes of the Professors of it living in this Kingdom under the names of Calistini and Subiurague, as before is said) but much both strengthened and increased by the Writings of Luther, Melanchthon, Calvin, and such other of the Protestant Doctors as travelled in the Work of Reformation. But this increase of strength and number proved their greatest weakening. For growing insolent upon the sense of their strength and power, they formed themselves into a party, got many of the Romish Catholics to adhere unto them, under colour of asserting their Civil Rights, and in the heat of some disputes, caused certain of the Emperor's Council to be thrown out of the Windows of the Council-chamber; and finally about the latter end of the Reign and Empire of Matthias, they broke out into open Arms. In the course whereof the Calvinians being of most power, and having got a King of their own Opinions, so disoblged the Lutherans and more moderate Papists, who had concurred with them at the first, that being invaded on the one side with a Lutheran Army under the command of the Duke of Saxony, and a Popish Army on the other by the Duke of Bavaria, they were in fine utterly suppressed and made inconsideable: the conquering and successful Emperor (Ferdinand the 2.) taking this occasion to extirpate the Protestant Religion out of his Dominions.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Budweis, (conceived to be the Marobudum of Ptolemy) a Town towards Austria. 2. Auss, near the head of the Elb. 3. Tabor, a strong Town built by Ziska, to be a Retreat for the Hussites. 4. Jaromir, and 5. Melnick, both upon the Elb. 6. Litomissel, an Episcopal See, bordering on Moravia. 7. Pilsen, the last Town of this Kingdom which yielded to the prevailing Imperialists in the late War about that Crown: and then also was it betrayed to Count Tilly for a sum of money, by some of the Souldiers of Count Mansfield, who was then absent, and had so long defended it against the Enemy. 8. Elnbogen, much esteemed for the hot medicinal Bathes; situate on the River Egra. 9. Egra, so called of the same River, on which (near to the borders of the Upper Palatinate) it is strongly situate: a large, fair City, containing three miles in compass. Imperial once, but sold by the Emperor Ludovicus Bavarius to John King of Bohemia, for 400000 marks of Silver: in compass less; for Sweetness of the place, Elegancy of the buildings, Pleasantness of site, and Richness of soil, superiour far to Prague it self. 10. Prague, the Metropolis of the Kingdom, situate in the midst thereof, on the River Muldau; consisting of four several Towns, each of which hath its several Customs, Laws, and Magistrates. The principal is called the Old Town, adorned with many goodly Buildings, a spacious Market-place, and a stately Council-house. The second, called the New-Town, is separated from the Old by a Ditch of great depth and wideness. The third, called the Little Town, is divided from the Old by the River Muldau, joined to it by a beautiful Bridge, consisting of 24 Arches. And in this part thereof is the Hill Rachina, on the sides of which are many fair and stately Houses belonging to the Nobility, over-looked by the strong Castle of S. Wenceslaus, (situate on the top thereof) a magnificent Palace, wherein the Bohemian Kings and the later Emperours have kept their Residence. The 4th Town is that of the Jews, who have here five Synagogues, and live according to their own Law. The whole City is rather large than fair, the Streets being in Winter very dirty, of ill smell in the Summer; the Buildings for the most part of Clay and Timber clapt up together without Art, and of little beauty. And though encompassed with Walls and Ditches, it is conceived to be but an open Town, (so poor and weak are the Defences,) inasmuch that whosoever is master of the Field, will be master of the City also. And yet besides the honour of being the Royal Seat, it hath also of long time been an Archbishop's See, and was by Charles the fourth, Emperor and King of Bohemia, made an University. Near unto this Town was fought that memorable Battle between the Duke of Bavaria and Count Bucquoy, Lieutenant for the Emperor Ferdinand the second, with 50000 men, on the one side; and Frederick, newly elected King of Bohemia, which the Prince of Anhalt, the Count of Thurn, and 30000 men, on the other side. It was fought on the eighth of November style novo, wherein (such was the unsearchable Will of God) the Victory fell unto the Imperialists; the young Prince of Anhalt, Thurn, and Saxon-Weimar, with divers others, being taken prisoners; the Bohemian Ordinance all surprised, Prague forced to yield unto the Victor, and King Frederick with the Queen compelled to flee unto Silesia. A most lamentable and unfortunate Loss, not to this people only, but to the whole cause of the reformed Religion. Yet it is not unworthy of our observation, that this great Battle was fought upon a Sunday, the 8. of November, about the time of Morning-prayer, in the Gospel appointed for which day (being then the 23. after Trinity-Sunday) is that famous passage, Reddite CÆSARI, quæ sunt CÆSARIS; i.e. Render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsars; which seemed to judge the Quarrel on the Emperor's side.

But whether of the two Pretendents had the juster Cause, may best be seen by canvassing the Records of that State and Nation, (for the success of War is no standing Rule for measuring the Equity and Justness of the Causes of it;) by which it will be clearly seen, that since the erecting of that Kingdom by the Slaves or Croati, it hath been evermore disposed at the Will of the Emperor, or by Election of the States and People. But I intend not at present to dispute that Point, but only lay down the Story of the Kings and People, as in other places, since the first coming of the Slavi. A Nation not known by that name till the time of Iustinian; at what time they inhabited on the Banks of the Ister, but on the farther side thereof, opposite to Illyricum and Thrace, Imperial Provinces. Grown famous by their good Successes against that Empire, their name was taken up by the rest of the Sarmatians of Europe, who either wanting room, or not liking of their colder Countries, passed on more Westward, and by degrees possessed themselves of those parts of Germany which formerly had been inhabited by the Almani, Burgundians and Boiarians; but were then either quite forsaken, or but ill inhabited by the drawing down of those people to the Roman Provinces, which they better liked. They were divided at, or after their coming thus far West, into four main Bodies: that is to say, the Winithi, possessed of the (now) Marquises of Brandenburg, Misnia, and Lusatia, as also of the Dukedoms of Mecklenburg and Pomerania; the Moravians, inhabiting in Moravia, the Lower Austria, and the Upper Hungary; the Poles, possessed of Poland, and the Dukedom of Silesia; and finally the Bohemian Slaves confined within the limits of that Kingdom only. Under what what form of Government they lived at their first coming hither, is not certainly known. But being settled in these Countries of Poland and Bohemia, it was not long before they were erected into several Kingdoms; occasioned by the coming of a new body of Slaves, Croati, and others of those scattered Nations, under the conduct of Zechius, a great Prince amongst them, who about the year 640, together with his Brother Leches was banished Croatia, for a Murderer. He being very acceptable to the Slaves of Bohemia, who looked upon him as a Prince of their own original Extraction, one of the same Language, Laws or Customs that themselves were of, they admitted him to be their Chief or supreme Governour, by whatsoever name he was called at first: in honour and memory of whom, the Bohemians in their own Language do call themselves Zechians. After his death, the State relapsed again into a confused Anarchy, till the year 670; at what time, not respecting the Progeny of Zechius, the Founder of their Commonwealth and first Estate, they fastned upon Crocos, a man of good esteem amongst them, and Elected him to be their Duke. Crocos vir justus, & magne apud Bohemos opinionis, Princeps electus est, as Bertholdus telleth us. Crocos being dead, the Bohemians elected Libussa, his youngest Daughter; and of her Government soon wearied, they made choice of Primislaus for their Prince, and made him Husband to Libussa. A man taken from the Plough (as the Stories tell us) to espouse the Princess: it being ordered and agreed on by her many Suitors, that he (whosoever he was) before whom an Horse, purposely let loose, did first make a stand, should be the Husband of the Lady, and have the Government of the State. The Horse first makes a stand before Primislaus, being then at Plough (having perhaps some Mare in his Team;) and he accordingly is received and admitted their Prince. These, with the other Dukes from the time of Crocos, the first Legislator of the Bohemians, take in order thus.

The Dukes of BOHEMIA.

The Kings and Dukes of BOHEMIA.

1086. 1. Vratislav, the Brother of Sbitignaus, Duke of Bohemia, was by Henry the 4. at Mentz created King.
  2. Conrade, Brother to Vratislav; notwithstanding that his Brother had three Sons, was elected Duke of Bohemia.
  3. Breicislaus, Son to Vratislav, the two Sons of Conrade being rejected, is by the Bohemians chosen Duke.
  1100. 4. Borivoius, the 4. Son of Breicislaus, is chosen by the Bohemians his eldest Brothers then all living.

  1159. 8. Vladislaus III. Son to Vladislaus the 2. (the four Sons of Sobeslaus omitted) is chosen and crowned the second King of Bohemia by Frederick the Emperor; but deposed by the States, because he was not by them formerly elected, according to their Privileges and Customs.
  9. Uldericus, the third Son of Sobeslaus, his elder Brethren yet living, was by the people elected in the room of Vladislaus and his Son Frederick, whom the Emperor Frederick had by force established in the Throne.
  10. Sobeslaus II. second Son of Sobeslaus, was by Frederick above named expelled; and he also by the Bohemians.
  11. Conrade, Grandchild to Otho, the Brother of Sutopulcus; elected by the Bohemians in place of Frederick; between which two Princes there was continual War.
  12. Wenceslaus, Uncle unto Conrade, and Son of Otho aforesaid, was preferred before many nearer the Succession. Him Primislaus expelled, but fearing his return, quitted Prague.
  13. Henry, Bishop of Prague, a Stranger to the Blood, was by a general consent elected Duke.
  14. Vladislaus IV. Brother to Primislaus, the Son of Wenceslaus being put by, succeeded Henry, and soon after resigned.
  1199. 15. Primislaus, elected by the Bohemians, and by the Emperor Philip crowned the 3. King of Bohemia at Mentz, was Brother to Vladislaus the 4.
  1248. 16. Ottacarus, notwithstanding that Wenceslaus his elder Brother had been crowned in his Father's life time, was acknowledged King. He was slain in Battle by Rodolphus the Emperor near the Marb, a River of Moravia, Anno 1278.
  1278. 17. Wenceslaus II. Son to Ottacarus.
  1284. 18. Wenceslaus III. Son to Wenceslaus the II. the the last of the Bohemian Princes of the masculine race.

- 1304 19. Rodolphus, Son to the Emperor Albertus, is by the Potency of his Father, and the election of the States, seated on the Throne, being otherwise a stranger to the Blood-royal of Bohemia.
- 1305 20. Henry, Duke of Carinthia, the Son of Meinard, Earl of Tyrol, and Husband to Anne, the second Daughter of Wenceslaus the 2. is chosen by the Bohemians: but being weary of his Government, they elect John Earl of Luxemburg. Finally Henry was murdered by one of his Nephews.
- 1311 21. John, Earl of Luxemburg, Son to Henry the seventh Emperor, and Husband to Elizabeth, youngest Daughter to Wenceslaus the 2. is elected, the Lady Anne yet living.
- 1346 22. Charles, Son to John, and Emperor, of that name the fourth, the Author of the Golden Bull.
- 1362 23. Wenceslaus IV. Emperor also, in whose time the Troubles of the Hussites and the Valour Ziska was famous.
- 1418 24. Sigismund, Brother to Wenceslaus, maketh himself King by force; and at his death commendeth Albertus, Duke of Austria, the Husband of his Daughter Elizabeth, unto the States of the Kingdom.
- 1437 25. Albertus, Duke of Austria, elected upon the commendation of Sigismund by the Bohemian Lords.
- 1440 26. Ladislaws, Son to Albert, who being the Brother of two Sisters, commended yet one George Pogibrachius unto the States, as fittest to succeed him.
- 1458 27. George Pogibrachius, neither by Affinity or Consanguinity of the blood, succeeded. And he, though he had three Sons, yet, for the benefit of his Country, advised the Nobles, after his death to elect their King from Poland.
- 1471 28. Ladislaws II. Son to Casmire King of Poland, and to Elizabeth the younger Daughter of Albertus Duke of Austria, the Issue of Anne the Elder Sister still living, elected King of Bohemia.
- 1516 29. Ludovicus, Son to Ladislaws, elected and Crowned by the means of his Father, then living King of Hungary also.
- 1526 30. Ferdinand, Archduke of Austria, Brother to Charles the 5. and Husband to Anne, Sister to Ludovicus, by his Letters reversal acknowledged that he was chosen King of Bohemia not of any right, but of meer free will according to the Liberties of that Kingdom.
- 1565 31. Maximilian, eldest Son of Ferdinand, was in his Father's life time, and at his suit, elected King, Anno 1540, into which he actually succeeded on his Father's death.
- 1575 32. Rodolphus, Emperor of Germany, and the eldest Son to Maximilian, elected King.
- 1610 33. Matthias, Brother of Rodolphus, was at the joint suit of them both nominated and appointed King of Bohemia, by the general consent of the States, during his Brother's life-time, viz. An. 1610, which nomination they both protest in their Letters reversal should not be to the prejudice of the Liberties and ancient Customs of that Kingdom.
- 1618 34. Ferdinand II. Archduke of Austria and of the House of Gretz, was by Matthias adopted for his Son, and declared Successor to the Crown of Bohemia, but never formally and legally elected: for which cause, amongst others, he was by the States rejected, in like case as Ladislaws the 3. had formerly been.

- 1619 35. Frederick, Elector Palatine, the strongest German Prince of the Calvinists; and most potent by his great Alliances, was elected King of Bohemia, and Crowned at Prague, together with his wife, on the fifth day of November. This Prince derived his descent from the Lady Sophia, Sister to Ladislaws the 2. King of Poland and Bohemia; and married Elizabeth, Daughter to James King of Great Britain and Anne of Denmark, which Anne descended from the Lady Anne, Daughter of Albertus of Austria, and elder Sister to Elizabeth, Mother to Ladislaws the 2. above-named, from whom the Claim of Austria is derived.
- 1621 36. Ferdinand III. Son of Ferdinand the II. elected King of Bohemia during the life both of his Father and of Frederick the Prince Elector also; after whose death he succeeded in this Kingdom both in right and fact; King of Hungary also Archduke of Austria, and Emperor of Germany, now living, Anno 1648; more moderate in his Councils than his Father Ferdinand, and more inclinable to Peace, (though honoured with a more signal Victory against the Swedes, in the Battle of Norlingen, than his Father was in all his life) which the Conclusions made at Munster are sufficient proof of.

Of the Revenues, Arms, and other things which concern this Kingdom, we shall speak hereafter, when we have took a view of the rest of the Provinces which are incorporated into it.

2. MORAVIA is bounded on the East with Hungary, on the West with Bohemia, on the North with Silesia, and on the South with the Lower Austria and the River Teya: fenced on the west by the Woods and Mountains of Bohemia, part of the Herzogn-an Forrest; on the North, by some Spurs or Branches of it, called Archeburgius by Ptolemy; on the two other sides open like a Half-moon or Semicircle. It is the most fruitful place of Corn in all Germany, and hath no small store of Frankincense, which contrary to the nature of it, groweth not on a Tree, but out of the Earth; and that too (which adds much to the Miracle, if Dubravins do report it rightly) in the shape and figure of those parts which men and women do most endeavour to conceal.

The former Inhabitants of this Province were the Marcomanni and part of the Quadi, against whom when M. Antoninus the Emperor made War, he had unawares run himself into such a Streight, that his Army was environed with Mountains one way, and Enemies the other. To this (as Calamities seldom go alone) was added the extraordinary heat and drought then being. The Emperor thus put to his plunges, came the Captain of his Guard, telling him, that he had in his Army a Legion of Christians (Melites he calleth them) which by Prayer to their own God could obtain any thing. The Emperor sendeth for them, desiring them to make supplication for the Army; which they did, and God Almighty that never turneth a deaf ear to the prayer of his Servants, when when they are either for his Glory, the Churches or their own good, scattered and vanquished the Quadi with Thunder-shot and Artillery from Heaven, and refreshed the faint and dying Romans with many a gentle and pleasant Shower. This Miracle purchased to that Legion the surname of καταβροχάου, i. e. the Thunderer, and induced the Emperor to honour men of that holy profession, and to make an end of the Fourth Persecution, An. Ch. 174. Thus Xiphilinus hath it in his Dion: which coming from the Pen of an Heathen, as this Author was, is of more credit in a matter of such concernment unto Christianity, than if it had proceeded from Socrates, Sozomen, or any other Ecclesiastical Writer.

Places of most note herein are, 1. Olmutz, on the River Maab (or Morava) the chief Town of the Country, and a small University; near which, out of the Hill Odenburg bordering on Silesia, springeth the great River of Odera, whose course we have before prescribed. 2. Brin, on the River Swarra, the Seat of the ancient Marquesses. 3. Hradisch, and 4. Cremser, both upon the Maab or Morava. 5. Znaim, on the Teya. 6. Niclasberg, (Mons Nicolai in the Latine) bordering on the Lower Austria. 7. Iglav. 8. Newburg. 9. Weiskirchen. 10. Boleslitz, of which little memorable. 11. Cradisco, near to which (and in this place only) the Frankincense is found to grow in the shape and form before mentioned.

The old Inhabitants hereof (as before is said) were the Marcomanni and the Quadi: after them that Tribe or Nation of the Slaves, who, from their habitation on the River Morava, called themselves Moravians, and the Country which they dwell in by the name of Moravia, (the Dutch call it Merheren). They were extended at that time over all the Lower Austria, to the banks of the Danubius on the South, and as far as to the River Tibiscus (over-spreading a great part of the Upper Hungary) towards the East. Governed at the first by their own Kings, the first whose name occurs being Rastai, in the time of the Emperor Lewis the Godly; by him taken Prisoner, and his Realm made tributary to the Empire. After him succeeded Harmodurus, and then Suentopulcus; in whose time the Moravians and other Nations of the Slaves received the Gospel by the preaching of Cyryll and Methodius, two Græcian Doctors; officiating all Divine Services in the Slavonian or vulgar Language. For which when they made suit to the Pope then being, to whose Authority (as Patriarch of the Western Empire) they were made obnoxious, and that the Pope and Cardinals delaid the business; a voice was heard, as if it had come from Heaven, saying these words, Omnis Spiritus laudet Dominum, & omnis Lingua confiteatur ei. Upon which Miracle their Suit was granted at the last, and a Letter Decretal sent unto that effect from Pope John the 8. to Suentopulcus (or Sfentopulcher, as some call him) above mentioned. A Privilege by them enjoyed full 200 years, and then reversed by Gregory 7. commonly called Pope Hildebrand, in his Letters to Fratislaus the first King of Bohemia, An. 1086.

But to return unto the Story Suatobegius, Son to Suentopulcus, succeeded next, deposed, or rather beaten out of his Country, by the Emperor Arnulph, for denying the accustomed Tribute. A Prince of great spirit, and of as great command; having at one time under him not Moravia only, according to the largest limits; but Silesia, Bohemia, and Polonia also. Arnulph not able otherwise to effect his purpose, called in the Hungarians (though at that time Pagans) by whose help the Moravian was subdued, and his Kingdom shattered into pieces, seized on by the Hungarians, Poles, and other Nations, and finally reduced to the present Limits. Afterwards it was made a Marquise, (but by whom we find not,) one of the Marquesses hereof being Jodocus Barburus elected Emperor An. 1410. After whose death, Sigismund his next Heir, Emperor and King of Bohemia, gave it to his Son-in-law Albert Duke of Austria, Anno 1417, who in the end succeeded him in all his Estates; since which time it hath always gone along with the Crown of Bohemia.

The Arms of the old Dukes or Princes of it were Azure, an Eagle chequered Or and Gules, membered and langued of the same.

3. SILESIA, (or SCHLESIE, as the Dutch call it) is bounded on the East with Poland, on the West with Luſatia, on the North with Brandenburg, and on the South with Moravia. Wholly encompassed with Mountains, except towards the North, which lets in a sharp Air upon them: the mid-land part being full of Woods, but without of Minerals.

Chief Cities are, 1. Agendorff, or Jegerndorff, of late the Patrimony of John Georgius of the Family of Brandenburg, commonly called the Marquess of Agendorff. The Lands and Estates in his possession were first given by Ladislaws King of Bohemia to George surnamed Timo one of the sons of Frederick of Brandenburg, the first Marquess of Onpach of this House, for the many good services he had done him. But his posterity being extinct, they fell to the said John Georgius, Brother to Sigismund, the Elector; proscripted by Ferdinand the second, for adhering to the party of Frederick Prince Elector Palatine: A Prince of great note and activeness in the beginning of the late German and Bohemian Wars. 2. Munſterberg, which gives the title of Duke to the posterity of George Pogibrachius, once King of Bohemia, advanced by him unto this Honour and a fair Estate. 3. Glatz, or Gletz, the last Town of Bohemia which held out for Frederick the Elector against that Emperor. 4. Glogaw, a strong Town on the River Oder. 5. Neisse, on a River so named, an Episcopate. 6. Breslau, in Latine Fratislavia, so called from Fratislaus the Founder of it, once one of the Dukes of this Province; by whose procurement it was made an Episcopate, An. 970, or thereabouts; it is situate on the River Oder, all the water whereof could not save it from being burnt down to the ground, Anno 1341, but it was presently re-edified with a fair Free-stone, and is now one of the prettiest Cities (for the bigness of it) in all Germany; fair, populous, and well contrived with open and even Streets, the chief of the Country. 7. Oppelen, on the Oder also, well fortified both by Art and Nature, barricaded by the River on the West, and on the East with good Out-works, strong Walls, and a fair Castle. 8. Stryten. 9. Reichenbach, both made Towns of War since the beginning of the Bohemian Troubles.

There are also within this Province the two Seignouries of Prignitz and Crossen, so called from the chief Towns thereof, belonging to the Elector of Brandenburg; the two Dukedoms of Oswitz and Zator, appertaining to the Crown of Poland; and also the Dukedom of Lignitz and Sweinitz, all of them bearing the names of their principal Towns: of which two last, Sweinitz is in the immediate possession of the Kings of Bohemia; and Lignitz hath a Duke of its own, but an Homager and Tributary of that King.

The first Inhabitants hereof were the Masigni, Burii, Gothini, and some part of the Quadi. In the partition of the Eastern parts of Germany amongst the Slaves, it was laid unto the Dukedom or Kingdom of Poland, continuing a part thereof till the time of Fratislaus the 2. who, being driven out of his Kingdom by his Brethren, was by the mediation of Frederick Barbarossa elected in this Country, to be held under the Sovereignty of the King of Poland. Divided betwixt his 3 Sons, and afterwards subdivided amongst their posterities, according to the ill Custom of Germany, it became broke at last into 14 Dukedoms, of 1. Brisslaw, 2. Oppelen, 3. Ratibor, 4. Cestlin, 5. Beithom, 6. Glogaw, 7. Sagan, 8. Olenitz, 9. Steinaw, 10. Falkenburg, 11. Sweinitz, 12. Lignitz, 13. Oswitz, and 14. Zator. Of all which only the two last do remain to Poland, the 5 first being made subject to the Kings of Bohemia by Wenceslaus the II, the five next by King John of Luxemburg; Lignitz remaining in the possession of a Proprietary Duke: (as before was said) and Sweinitz given to Charles the IV, Emperor and King of Bohemia, by the Will and Testament of Bolleslaus the last Duke: all Silesia by this means (except the Dukedoms of Oswitz, Silesia, and Zator) being added to the Crown of Bohemia, of which it is rather an incorporate than subject Province.

4. LOUSATIA, by the Dutch called Lausnitz, is bounded on the East with Silesia, on the West with Misnia, on the North with Brandenburg, and on the South with Bohemia. The Country is rough and full of Woods, yet plentiful enough of Corn; and of such Fruits as naturally arise out of the Earth: so populous and thick set with People, that though it be but a little Province, it is able to arm 20000 Foot as good as any in Germany. Most commonly it is divided into the Higher and the Lower; the first confining on Bohemia, the last on Brandenburg.

Places of most note in the Higher Lausnitz are, 1. Bautzen, (Badisium the Latins call it) the first Town attempted and taken in by the Duke of Saxony; when he took upon him the execution of the Emperor's Ban against Frederick Elector Palatine, then newly chosen King of Bohemia. The poor Prince in the mean time was in an ill condition, the Saxon being the head of the Lutheran, and the Bavarian chief of the Papish party, arming both against him. So jealous are both sides of the active and restless Calvinian spirit, as to leave no means untried for the suppressing of it. Seated it is upon the Spre, and for the most part is the Seat of the Governour for the King of Bohemia. 2. Gorlitz, upon the River Neisse, which gave the Title of Duke to John, Brother of Sigismund, Emperor and King of Bohemia, and Father of Elizabeth, the last Dutchess of Luxemburg, before it fell into the hands of the Dukes of Burgundy. A fine neat Town, well frequented, and strongly fortified; founded about the year 1231, and not long after so consumed by a merciless Fire, An. 1301, ut ne unica domus remanserit, as my Author hath it, that there was not one House left of the old foundation. But it was presently re-built in a more beautiful form, and of more strong materials, than before it was, both publick and private Buildings very neat and elegant. 3. Zittaw, on the same River, bordering on Bohemia. 4. Lawben, 5. Lubben, 6. Camitz, of which little memorable, but that together with the former they may make up those six Towns which are confederate together in a stricter League for the mutual Defence and preservation, but under the Protection, and with the approbation, of the Kings of Bohemia. Then in the Lower Lusatia there is 7. Spremburg, so named from its situation on the River Spre; which runneth through the whole Country, and in ancient times was called Suevus; supposed by some (and not improbably) either to give name to the Suevians, or to take it from them; that potent Nation inhabiting originally betwixt this and the Elbe. 8. Tribel, upon the Neisse. 9. Cottbus, upon the Spre, or Suevus, which, together with some parts of the Lower Lusatia, belongs unto the Marquesses of Brandenburg.

The first Inhabitants hereof are by some supposed (and but supposed) to be the Benones of Tacitus; in the partition of these parts of Germany amongst the Slaves, made subject to the Winthi or Venedi, the greatest and most spreading Nation of all these People. When and by whom first made a Marquissate, I am not able to say for certain; but sure I am, it hath been very much given to the change of Masters. It had first a Marquess of its own; Conrad the Marquess hereof, who died in the year 1156, being by the Emperor Henry the fifth made Marquess of Misnia, added it unto that Estate: and it remained for some time united to it. After, being seized on by the Poles, it was sold to Frederick the 2, Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg; who, keeping Cottbus and some other Towns bordering next upon him in his own possession, surrendered the rest on Composition to George King of Bohemia, claiming it from a Grant made by Henry the 4 to Vratislav the first Bohemian King, An. 1087. A Grant on which no Possession followed; unless it were the Homage and acknowledgment of the Princes of it, holding it afterwards of that Crown as the Lord in chief.

Thus have we brought these four Provinces into the power and possession of the Kings of Bohemia, remaining still distinct in their Laws and Governments, (as several limbs of the great Body of the Slaves made up into one Estate) though joined together in the person of one supreme Governour, who is severally admitted and acknowledged by each Province distinctly for it self, and not by any one of them in the name of the rest. Out of all which so laid together there may be raised the sum of three millions of Crowns yearly for the King's Revenues; towards the defrayment of all Charges.

The Arms of this Kingdom are Mars, a Lion with a forked Tail Luna, crowned Sol. Which Arms was first given by Frederick Barbarossa to Vladislav the third, made by him King of Bohemia, in regard of the good Service he had done him at the Siege of Milain. And though Vladislav was deposed by the States of that Kingdom; because never formally and legally elected by them; yet his Successors keep those Arms to this very day.

15. BRANDENBURG.

THE Marquissate of BRANDENBURG is bounded on the East with the Kingdom of Poland, on the West with the Dukedom of Saxony, on the North with Pomerania and part of Mecklenburg, and on the South with Misnia, Lusatia and Silesia. So called from Brandenburg, the chief Town of it, and because once the Marches of the Empire against the Slaves: divided afterwards into the Old, the New, and the Middle Marches, according as they were extended farther towards Poland by little and little, as the Emperours were able to get ground of those potent people.

The Country containeth in length from East to West 60 Dutch, or 240 Italian miles, and is of correspondent breadth; the whole compass making up 540 miles of the last account. Within which Tract are comprehended 55 Cities and walled Towns, 80 Towns of trade, (Mark-Steten, or Market-Towns, as they commonly call them) 38 Castles or Mansion-houses of Noblemen, 17 Monasteries, and 10 Parks well stored with Beasts of game: the Country otherwise (considering the Extent thereof, being but thinly inhabited, nor well provided of necessaries, excepting Corn, of which these North-East Counties afford very great plenty.

The Religion of this Country is for the most part according to the form and Doctrine of Luther; first introduced and authorized by Marquess Joachim the first. In which estate it continued till the Breach betwixt George, William the Father of the present Elector, and the Palatine of Newburg. At which time the Palatine, having married married a Daughter of Bavaria, the most potent Prince of the Papish party, reconciled himself to the Church of Rome, the better to assure himself of the Aid of Spain: and this Elector, having married a Sister of Frederick the fifth, Prince Elector Palatine, the most Potent Prince of the Calvinians, declared himself to be of that party and Opinion, the better to assure himself to the Aid of Holland, Anno 1614. But when on the persuasion of his Wife he set out an Edict for suppressing the Lutheran Forms, and authorizing the Calvinian only throughout his Dominions, (which was the year 1615.) the people of this Marquissate rose in Arms against him: the difference being thus composed, that the Lutheran Forms only should be used in all the Churches of the Marquissate of Brandenburg, for the contentation of the people; and that the Marquissate should have the exercise of his new Religion for himself, his Lady, and those of their Opinion; in his private Chappels.

1. ALTE-MARCK, or the OLD MARCK, so called because the ancient Marches of the Empire against the Slaves, lieth betwixt *Lunenber*g and the Elb, with which it is bounded on the East. The chief Towns thereof are, 1. Tangermund, on the Elb, where it receives the River Tanagra or Angra, honoured sometimes with the Residence of Charles the fourth. 2. Steindall, the chief of these Old Marches. 3. Soltwedel divided into the Towns, the old and the new. 4. Gardeleben, fortified with the strong Castle of Eisbimp. 5. Osterburg, 6. Senhusen, said by some, but falsely, to be so called from the Senones, whom they would make the old Inhabitants of this Country, (by all good Writers made to be originally a Gallick Nation.) 7. Werb, of which little memorable.

In the MIDDLE MARCHES or UPPER-MARCK, lying betwixt the Elb and the River Oder, the Towns of most note are, 1. Butzaw, a Commendatory of the Temples in former times. 2. Spandaw upon the Spre, a well-fortified piece. 3. Oderburg, called so from that River, on which it is situate, remarkable for a strong Castle built by Marquess Albert the second, at which all Passengers by water are to pay their Toll. 4. Brandenburg, on the River Havel, a Bishop's See, the Seat of the Lords Marchers in former times, taking name from hence: by some said to be built by Brennus, Captain of the Gauls; more truly by one Brando, a Prince of the Francians, Anno Ch. 140. 5. Frankford for distinction sake) named ad Oderam, on which River it is situate; the Soil about it being so plentifully stored with Corn and Wines that it is not easy to affirm whether Bacchus or Ceres be most enamoured of it. It was made an University by Marquess Joachim, An. 1506. and it is also a flourishing and famous Empory, though not comparable to that of the other Frankford, seated on the Maine. 6. Berlin the ordinary Residence of the Marquess, situate on the River Spre, (or Suevus) which, rising in Lusatia, falleth into the Albis. 7. Havelsburg, on the River Havel, a Bishop's See, who acknowledgeth the Arch-Bishop of Magdeburg for his Metropolitan.

3. In the NEW-MARCK, extended from the Ober to the Borders of Poland, and called so because last conquered, and added to the account of the German Empire, there is Custrin, a very strong and defensible Town, seated on the two Rivers Warra and Odera, fortified with great charge by John, Son of Marquess Joachim, and by him intended for his Seat. 2. Summenberg, and 3. Land-sparg, both upon the Warra. 4. Soldin in former times the chief of this Marck. 5. Berlinch, or New Berlin: and 6. Falkenburg, a strong Town, and fortified with as strong a Castle, towards Pomerania.

The first Inhabitants of this Country were the Varini and Marbours, parts of the great Nations of the Suevians; and after them the Flepydi, Woliti, Teirani, and other Tribes of the Winthi, the greatest Nation of the Slaves, who possessed themselves of it. But Brandenburg being won from them by the Emperor Henry the first, An. 620, (at what time the Gospel was first preached amongst them) the Country hereabouts was given by him to Sigefride Earl of Rengelsheim, (eldest Son of Theodorick, the second Earl of Oldenburg, a valiant Gentleman with the Title of Marquess or Lord Marcher, Anno 627, upon condition that he should defend those Marches (the Old Mark, as they now call it) against the Slaves. These Marquesses were at the first Officers, at the appointment of the Emperor, and to him accountable. Sigard, the fourth from Sigefride, governing here for Orto the third, was the first Elector of these Marquesses, and Udo the second of that name, and third from Sigard, the last that held this Honour at the Emperor's pleasure; that Dignity after his decease being made hereditary in the person of Albert of Anhalt, surnamed Wryus, by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa. Which Albert having very much enlarged his Border by the conquest and extermination of the Slaves, caused the unpeopled Country to be planted with the new Dutch Colonies out of Holland, Zeland, Flanders, and those parts of the Netherlands. The House of this Albert being extinct in John the fourth, it was given by the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria to Lewis his Son; by Orto the Brother of that Lewis, sold for 200000 Ducats unto Charles the fourth; by Sigismund, the Son of Charles, to Jodocus Marquess of Moravia: but afterwards being redeemed again, it was by the said Sigismund conferred on Frederick Burgrave of Nuremberg, in recompence of his faithful Service in the Wars of Hungary and Bohemia. In his posterity it remaineth, but much increased in power and Patrimony by the additions of the Dukedom of Prussia, Cleve, Gulick and Berg, the Marquissates of Osnaburg and Jagerndorf, the Earldom of Marck in Westphalen, now a part of Cleveland, the Lordships of Prignitz and Crossen in Silesia, the Towns of Hoff and Culmbach in Vonland, with the County of Raphin, and the Town and Territory of Cottbus in the Lower Lusatia, Inasmuch that this is now the most powerful family in all Germany, The Marquesses hereof from Sigefride to Albert, the Son of Udo, &c. follow in this order.

25. Sigismund, Brother of Wenceslaus, Emperour of the Romans, King of Hungary and Bohemia, Earl of Luxemburg, who sold this Marquissate to Jodocus Marquess of Moravia, and having afterwards redeemed it, conferred the same on
- 1417 26. Frederick, Burgrave of Nuremberg, solemnly invested herein at the Council of Worms An. 1414, for which Investiture he paid unto the Emperour the sum of 400000 Crowns.

- 1470 28. Albert, Brother of Frederick the 2. called the Achilles of Germany, relinquished to Bugislaus the 10. the possession of Pomerania; but his Successors ever since have retained the Title and kept on foot their Pretensions to it. From Frederick his second Son descended Albert the first Duke of Prussia, Frederick the first Marquess of Onstach, George the first Marquess of Jagerndorf, and Albert called the Alcibiades of Germany; who so harassed Francia in the days of Charles the fifth.
- 1486 29. John, Son of Albert.

- 1571 32. John George, Son of Joachim the second.

34. John-Sigismund, Son of Joachim-Frederick, who had to Wife the Lady Anne, Daughter of Albert-Frederick the second Duke of Prussia, and of Mary-Eleonor his Wife, eldest Daughter of William the first, Duke of Cleves.

1620 35. George-William, Son of John Sigismund and the Lady Anne, claiming in her right the Dukedom of Cleves, Gulick and Berg, the Earldoms of Mark and Ravensburg, and the Seignior of Ravensstein; which he possessed a while, divided with his Cousin Wolfgangus Palatine of Newburg, Son of Magdalen the younger Sister of Mary-Eleonor. But falling out about their Partage, the Palatine of Newburg called in the Spaniards, and the Father of this Marquess, in behalf of his Son, called in the Confederate States of the Netherlands, to assert their Titles. After the death of Bugislaus the last Duke of Pomerania, he was to have succeeded also in that Estate, then possessed by the Swedes. Of the Agreement made between them, and the great Accrument thereby following to the House of Brandenburg, we shall speak more there.

36. Frederick-William, Son of George-William, now Elector of Brandenburg.

The Territories of this Family are the greatest, as before is said, of any in Germany, but a great part thereof is very barren, and his Subjects in those parts as poor as the Country; much of his new accessions yielding little but the Titles only. So that neither in Revenue or Power he is able to keep rank with the Duke of Saxony: his ordinary Revenue hardly amounting at the utmost to 200000 l. per annum, which is but half of the Receipts of the Duke of Saxony.

The Arms hereof are Argent, an Eagle Gules, membered and beaked Or.

16. POMERANIA.

POMERANIA is bounded on the East with Prussia, from which it is parted by the River Weyssel, or Vistula; on the West with Mecklenburg, divided from it by the River Bartz; on the North with the Baltick Sea, extended on the Coast hereof for the space of 200 English miles; and on the South with the Marquissate of Brandenburg. So named from the Pomortzi, or Pomerani, a Nation of the Slaves, to whose share it fell, or from the situation of it on the Sea-shore, as the word in the Slavonian doth seem to import.

The Country is for the most part plain, abundantly fruitful in Corn, carried hence to Dantzick, and transported thence to all parts of Christendom in their times of Scarcity: yielding also good store of Pasturage, and great Herds of Cattel, with plenty of Butter, Cheese, Honey, and some reasonable quantities of Flax. Populous it is, and those people of very strong Constitution, as living under a sharp and piercing Air. The whole is divided into the Continent, and the Islands: the Continent into 1. the Upper Pomerania, bordering upon Mecklenburg, extended from the Bartz to the River Oder; 2. the Lower, reaching from the Oder to that part hereof which is now called 3. Pomerellia, betwixt it and Prussia, subject of long time to the Crown of Poland, and there we shall hear farther of it.

Chief places in the UPPER are, 1. Bard, at the mouth of the River Bartz, taking name from thence; a well-traded Town, and many times the Seat of the Dukes of this hitherto Pomerania. 2. Wolgast, upon the Baltick Sea, over against the Isle of Usedom, the chief of this part of Pomerania, from whence the Dukes hereof are called the Dukes of Pomerania Wolgast; the first Town taken in by Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, in his famous War for relief of Germany, Anno 1630. 3. Straalsund, a Town of great Trading and much resort, seated upon the same Sea also, opposite to the Isle of Rugen; a Town of great name in the course of the German Wars. 4. Gripsholm, on the same Sea, betwixt Wolgast and Straalsund, made an University, Anno 1456. 5. Anklam, upon the River Pose. 6. Tribsees, situate on a Lake out of which the said River hath its course.

Then in the LOWER Pomerania there is 7. Camin, an Episcopal See, situate on the Baltick Shore, over against the Isle of Wollin. 8. Colberg, a strong Town on the same Shore also, at the fall of the Perant into the Sea. 9. Cöslin, the last Sea-Town of this Tract lying towards Prussia. 10. Stargard, on the Ina, more within the Land; as is also 11. Gripenberg upon the Rega, and 12. Stetin on the Oder, once a poor Fish-Town, now the Metropolis of this part of the Country; rising to this greatness (after the embracing of Christianity) by the fall of Vineta, formerly the chief Mart-Town of all these parts; the ordinary Seat of the Dukes of the Lower Pomerania, the Dukes of Pomerania-Stetin, as for distinction fake they are used to call them.

The Islands hereunto pertaining are those of Rugen, Wollin, Usedom, touched upon before, but now more punctually to be handled. That of most note is RUGEN, over against Straalsund, from which it is divided only by a narrow Strait, in length seven Dutch miles, and as much in breadth; so that the Compass of it, if it were exactly round, would amount to 20 German, or 100 Italian miles; and yet it was once bigger than it is. But in the year 1309, by the force of an outrageous Tempest, a great part of it, lying towards the South-east, as far as to the Isle of Ruden, (then conjunct hereto) was torn away, and sunk so deep into the bottom of the Sea, that now the greatest Ships that be sail over it. The Island is plentiful of Corn, the Granary of Straalsund, as they call it commonly; and reasonably well stored with Cattel; full of Bays, Creeks, and winding Shores, with many and vast Promontories thrusting into the Sea, which gives them great increase of Fishing. Anciently it belonged to the Crown of Denmark, till given by Waldemar the third to Bugislaus and Barnimus Dukes of Pomerania; continuing ever since part of that Estate. The chief Town of it is called Bergen, situate in the midst of the Island, but not containing above 400 Families. Others of less note and estimation being, 1. Sogart. 2. Wick. 3. Bingst, &c. small Towns compared with Villages upon the Continent, but the best they have. And yet so populous is the Island, that they are able to arm 7000 good fighting men if there be occasion.

The second of the three, in repute and bigness, is that of WOLLIN, situate over against Camin; so called from Wollin the chief Town, (whence it is called in Latine) made an Episcopal See by Wartislaus, the first Christian Prince of this Nation, which on the Sackage of this City was removed to Camin. A Town which once so flourished in Traffick, that it gave place to none but Constantinople: the Russians, Danes, Saxons, Vandals, &c. having here their particular Streets. But being miserably sacked by Waldemar King of Denmark, Anno 1170, most of the Trade hereof was removed to Lubeck, since which time it never could come near its former glories.

The last in reputation is that of USEDOM, seated betwixt both, not far from Wolgast; so called from Usedom the chief Town in it, of which little observable. All three were the Habitation of the ancient Kugii, who under Odoacer K. of the Hermuli subverted the Western Empire, conquered Italy, and made themselves Masters of it, till subdued by the Goths. Those which remained in these Islands became after subject to the Slaves, and had once Kings of their own: the first whose name occurs in Story being Crito, the Son of Razea, a puissant Prince, extending his Dominions into Holfstein, Ditmarsh, and the City of Lubeck, which he built about the year 1100, afterwards beautified and enlarged by Adolph the 2. Earl of Holfstein, by some esteemed the Founder of it. But his Issue male failing in the year 1326, it fell by Compact made between them to the Dukes of Pomerania, to whom these Islands ever since have continued subject.

And as for Pomerania itself, the old Inhabitants thereof were part of the Rugii before mentioned, the Rendigni, Longi-Nani, and Longi-Didani, with parts of the Perni and Burgundians; into whose void rooms the Pomortzi and other Tribes of the Winitibi (the most potent Nation of the Slaves) did in fine succeed, extending their Dominions to the Banks of the Vistula, the parts adjoining unto which, to difference them from Pomerania, were called Pomerellia. But that part of it being given by Mezovinus, the last Prince thereof, dying without Issue, An. 1295, to Primislaus Duke of Poland; the name and power of the Princes or Dukes of Pomerania became confined within narrower Bounds than at first they had. The first Prince of it whom we meet with on good record was one Barnimus, of the noble Gryphonian Family, An. 933, whose Grandson Snatiborus commanded over all this Tract. But his Dominions being parted betwixt his Sons, Bugislaus, who had Pomerellia, retained the Language and old Customs of the Slavonians; Wartislaus, who possessed the residue, conformed himself to the Laws and Language of the Saxons: the Country being by that means accounted for a part of Germany, and added unto the Empire an account thereof in the time of Frederick Barbarossa, by whom Bugislaus and Casimir, Sons of Wartislaus were made Princes of the Empire and Dukes of Pomerania. The Estate being afterwards divided betwixt Bugislaus and Otto, Sons of Barnimus the first, and the House of Otto failing in the person of Otto the third, that part hereof was given by the Emperour Frederick the third to Frederick the 2. Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg, the cause of much Contention amongst these Marquesses and the other House of the Dukes of Pomerania, which was thus agreed at last, That both Princes should continue the Arms and Title, the Possession of it to be yielded to the Duke of Pomerania, on the failing of whose Issue male it should descend upon the Heirs of the House of Brandenburg. The Succession of these Princes follow in this order.

- 1394 9. Barnimus III. 1374 4. Suantiborus Brother of Casimir the 2.
 1405 10. Wartislaw III. 1413 5. Casimir III. Son of Suantiborus.
 1456 11. Ericus, Son of Wartislaw. 1433 6. Joachim, Son of Casimir the 3.
 12. Bugislaw III. commonly called the tenth, the younger Princes of both Houses making up the tale, succeeded the third in that part of Pomerania, uniting to the whole into one Estate.
 1523 13. George, Son of Bugislaw the tenth.
 1531 14. Philip, Son of George, in whose time the Reformation made by Luther was admitted into Pomerania.
 1583 15. Bugislaw IV. but the 12. in the Dutch account, Son of Philip; his younger Brother Ernestus-Ludovicus, having that of Stetin for his share.
 16. Bugislaw V. and 14. Son of Bugislaw the 4. born in the year 1580, succeeded in Pomerania of Wolgast; as Philip-Julius, Son of Ernestus-Ludovicus, did in that of Stetin. After Ludovicus, did in that of Stetin.

whose death Bugislaw became Lord of all Pomerania; in a fair way to have lost all to the prevailing Imperialists, had not the timely coming in of the King of Sweden stopped their violent Progress. But Bugislaw dying without Issue in the time of the War, and in him the Male-Issue of the House of Bugislaw, the tenth being quite extinguished, George-William, Marquis and Elector of Brandenburg, put in his claim for the Estate, according to the compact and Agreement spoken of before. Betwixt the Duke had possessed themselves of all the strongest places in the Country it was accorded and concluded at the Treaty of Munster, that all the Higher Pomerania, with the Isles of Rugen and Wollin, and the Town of Stetin should from thenceforth belong to the Crown of Sweden: Lower Pomerania to be enjoyed by the House of Brandenburg, so long as the male-Issue lasteth; on default whereof, that also to be added unto that Crown: the Arms and Titles to be used by both promiscuously. And in regard the Marquis of Brandenburg, was to part with the Upper Pomerania for the Contentation of the Swedes, (with-out which no firm Peace could be made in Germany,) it was also there agreed upon, that the Temporal Estates of the Bishoprick of Halberstadt, Minden and Cammin, together with that of Magdeburg, (after the decease of the present Bishop) should be for ever added to the possessions of that House; the Marquesses and Electors of it to be thenceforth intitled Dukes of Magdeburg, Princes of Halberstadt and Minden. But what will be the issue of these Conclusions future Times must shew.

The Arms of Pomerania are a Gryphon.

17. MECKLENBURG.

THE Dukedom of MECKLENBURG is bounded on the East with Pomerania, on the West with Holstein, a Province of the Kingdom of Denmark, on the North with the Baltick Sea, and on the South with Brandenburg and Saxon Lauenburg. So called from Mecklenburg or Medagopolis, (both names in the several Languages of the Dutch and Greeks, signifying a great City) great Town of that name here being in the time of the Heruli and the Vandals, (the old inhabitants of these parts), whose chief City it was; but on their leaving of this Country, decayed to nothing. The Country is of the same nature as Pomerania, and as rich in Corn.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Wismar, a noted Port on a Creek or Bay of the Baltick Sea, raised out of the Ruines of old Mecklenburg here mentioned, about the year 1240. The Haven hereof is capable of the greatest Vessels, to which it gives a safe and assured Station, whence the name of Wismar, the word signifying, in the Slavonian Language, idem ac certum mare, (as my Author hath it) as much as a quiet or safe Sea. Now one of the Hanse-Towns, and being it lies conveniently for the use of the Swedes, allotted to that Crown by the Treaty of Munster; the Duke of Mecklenburg being in recompence thereof to have the Temporalities of the Bishopricks of Swerin and Ratzenburg. 2. Swerin, seated upon the South-side of the Lake so named; an Episcopal See, and honoured with giving the Title of a Barony to the Dukes of Mecklenburg. 3. Malchow, first walled by Niclot Prince of the Vandals, Anno 1270. 4. Ratzenburg, an Episcopal See, spoken of before. 5. Ratzenburg, the next in reputation of all the Hanse-Towns to Lubeck and Danzick, large, rich, and much frequented by all sorts of Merchants; in compass almost six English miles, situate on the River Warn, near the fall thereof into the Baltick, honoured with an University, here founded by John Duke of Mecklenburg, Anno 1419, the first Professors in it being brought from Erfurt in Saxony. 6. Stargard, which once gave the Title of Duke to the younger Princes of this House. 7. Saravine, memorable for a Nunnery there founded by Duke Magnus the second. 8. Laußnitz and fortified by Duke Henry the second, as an Outwork to Rostock, which he had lately bought of Christopher then King of Denmark. 9. Steruberg, of which little memorable. 10. Fridland, on the edge of Pomerania, not far from Stargard, which gave the Title of Duke to Albert of Wallenstein, after that called Duke of Fridland, that eminent and prosperous Commander of the Imperial Forces in the late Wars of Germany, who was miserably murdered after all his Services by command of the Emperor. 11. Fischel, both pleasantly and strongly seated on the edge of a Lake. 12. Danmin a strong Town on the Marches of Brandenburg.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Country were the Vandals, with the rest of the Heruli and Burgundians. But the Burgundians, being reckoned as a part of the Vandals, were not much took notice of, till their Irruptions on the Borders of the Roman Empire made them more considerable: the Princes of these Nations using no other Title than Kings of the Heruli and Vandals. Of these the first is said to be one Anthyrus, Son of an Amazonian Lady, who learned his first Rudiments of Warfare under Alexander the Great. Out of his Loins descended a long Race of Kings, amongst whom Rhadagast, who together with Alarick the Goth invaded Italy, (I know not by what warrant) is accounted one. Gunderick, the seventeenth of these Kings, weary of so cold a Dwelling, passed towards the South; and, having harassed Gaul and Spain, shipped himself over the Straights of Gibraltar, and erected the Kingdom of the Vandals in Africa; whose Successors we shall meet with there. By Vitalian, the youngest Son of Gensericus, the Son of Gunderick, the Line of these Princes is continued; who after mingling with the Othoriti and other of the Slaves, succeeding into the void places of the Vandals, left off the Title of Kings of the Vandals, and called themselves Kings of the Heruli and Othoriti, continuing it to Pribislaw or Primislaw the second, who wrote himself, Pribislaw Dei gratia, Herulorum, Wagriorum, Circipanonum, Palumbovum, Othoritorum, Kissinorum, Vandolorumque Rex, making here in a general Muster of these Tribes of the Slaves and Heruli which remained under his command. But he being quished by Henry surnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, the Title of King was laid aside; his Successors contenting themselves with that of Princes. The Estate was divided betwixt Henry and Niclot, the Nephews of Pribislaw by his Son Henry, into two Estates, Henry assuming to himself the Title of Prince of the Othoriti, and Niclot that of Prince of the Vandals. But the posterity of Niclot failing in William the last of that Line, Anno 1430, his Title with the Lands thereunto belonging fell to Henry the Fat, the fourth Duke of Mecklenburg, to which Honour Albert and John, the Sons of Henry the fourth, descended from the elder House, had been advanced by the Emperor Charles the fourth at Prague, Anno 1348. The Succession of which Family from Pribislaw take in order thus:

The Princes of the HERULI, and Dukes of MECKLENBURG.

- 1158 1. Pribislaw, the last King and first Prince of the Heruli, after their Subjection to the Saxons, restored to this Title and his former Estate by the bountiful Conquerours, to be held under the Right and Homage of the House of Saxony.
 1179 2. Henry, Son of Pribislaw, baptised with all his people in his Father's life-time, by the persuasion of Hen. Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, by whom they were restored to their Estates.
 1228 3. Henry II. Son of the former Henry, dividing the Estate with his Brother Niclot.
 1260 4. John, surnamed the Divine, so called because created Doctor of Divinity in the University of Paris, whither he was sent by his Father to learn good Arts.
 1302 5. Henry III. surnamed of Hierusalem, because of his Expedition thither against the Saracens.
 1319 6. Henry IV. surnamed the Lion, for his Valour and undaunted Contancy.
 1380 7. Albert and John, the Sons of Henry, going to Prague with a Princely Train to attend on the Emperor Charles the fourth, were by him created Princes of the Empire, and Dukes of Mecklenburg, Anno 1348.
 1384 8. Magnus, Son of Albert.
 1423 9. John, Son of Magnus, the Founder of the University of Rostock, Anno 1419.
 1447 10. Henry V. surnamed the Fat, who, on the death of William the last Prince of the Vandals, succeeded into his Estate.
 1503 11. Magnus II. Son of Henry, Founder of the Cathedral Church of Rostock.
 1547 12. Albert II. Son of Magnus the second.
 1578 13. John Albert, Son of Albert the second, endowed the University of Rostock with the Lands of some dissolved Monasteries, and authorized in his Estates the Reformation of Religion begun by Luther.
 1592 14. John III. Son of John Albert.
 1592 15. Adolph Frederick and John Albert, Sons of John the third, dispossessed hereof by the Emperor Ferdinand the second, Anno 1628, their Estates, with the Title of Duke of Mecklenburg, being conferred on Albert of Wallenstein, Duke of Fridland, who had not long enjoyed the Title, when Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, the Assister of the Liberties of Germany, restored it to the proper Owners. The Heir to whose Estates is Gustavus Adolphus, the only Son and Heir of John Albert; the other of these two Brothers dying without Issue.

18. The Dukedom and Estates of SAXONY.

THE Dukedom and Estates of SAXONY (not reckoning those which now pass under other Names, and shall hereafter be described in their several places) are bounded on the East with Bohemia, Lusatia, and part of Brandenburg, on the West with Hassia, Brunswick, and parts of Lunenbourg and Holstein, on the North with other parts of Brandenburg, and part of Mecklenburg; and on the South with Franconia, and some parts of the Upper Palatinat.

It is (we see) an aggregate Body, consisting of two general Limbs; 1. the Dukedom of Saxony, 2. the Estates of Saxony, or Saxony properly so called: the first containing the whole Provinces of 1. Ober-Sax, or the Upper Saxony, the proper Seat of the Duke Elector. 2. Misnia, 3. Poitland, and 4. Thuringia; the other the 5. of 1. Anhalt, 2. Mansfield, 3. Meysburg, and 4. Lauenburg. And as it is an aggregate Body, so it is comprehensive of all those honourary Titles by which the Princes of Germany are distinguished from one another; that is to say, the Electorship of Saxony, the Dukedom of Lauenburg, the Bishoprick of Meysburg, the Principality of Anhalt, the Marquisate of Misnia, the Landgravedom of Thuringia, the Earldom of Mansfield, and the Seigniorry or Lordship of Poitland. Of these eight Provinces, the 4 first mentioned are wholly situate without the Limits and Precincts of the ancient Saxony; and yet now are, and have been called long before, the Dukedom of Saxony, because they make up the whole Patrimony and Estate of the Dukes Electors, who since the Proscription and Deprivation of Duke Henry, surnamed the Lion, Anno 1180, in some or other of these Countries have had their fixed Seat and Habitation. The four last, being parts of the ancient Saxony, and heretofore in the possession of the Dukes hereof, do still pass under the account and name of Saxony, though in the hands of several Owners, all which do acknowledge a Superiority in the Duke Elector, if not some great Relation to him and Dependence on him: so that we have an heterogeneous Body to discourse upon, and therefore must consider severally of the parts thereof, but so, that either first or last we shall find them all in the Succession and affairs of the Dukes of Saxony. 1. then,

The DUKEDOM of Saxony is bounded on the East with Bohemia, Lusatia, and part of Brandenburg, on the West with Hassia, and part of the proper Saxony; on the North with the proper Saxony only, and on the South with Franconia, and the Upper Palatinat. So called, because the proper Seat and Patrimony of the Duke Elector: of very different nature both for Air and Soil, but the last especially, as we shall see by looking over the particular Provinces of 1. Ober-Sax, 2. Misnia, or Meissen, 3. Poitland, 4. Thuringia, by the Dutch called Duringen.

1. OBER-SAX, or the Upper Saxony, is bounded on the East with the Marches of Brandenburg, on the West with Mansfield, from which it is parted by the River Saale, on the North with Meysburg, on the South with Misnia. The reason of the name we shall see anon. The Air hereof is somewhat sharp and piercing, the Soil sufficiently fruitful, but therein not to be compared with Misnia, and much less with Duringen, being both of them of a richer and more liberal nature.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Torgau, by some placed in Misnia, but by Mercator in this Province, built on the West side of the Elbe, in form orbicular, and falling every way from the sides of a Mountain, beautified with a stately and pleasant Castle belonging to the Elector of Saxony, who is Lord hereof, built by John-Frederick the Elector, Anno 1535. Near to the City is a Lake of a mile in compass, for which the Citizens pay yearly to the Duke 500 Guildens. 2. Worlitz, upon the Elbe, once a Commandery of the Templars. 3. Weissenburg, lying towards Brunswick. 4. Kemberg, on the Elbe. 5. Bitterfeld, betwixt the Elbe and the Mulda. And 6. Wittenberg, on the Elbe, in an open Plain, but strongly fenced with Walls, Ramparts, and deep Ditches. The chief beauty of it lieth in one fair Street, extending the whole length of the City: in the midst thereof is the Cathedral Church, a large Market-place, and the Common-Council-house. In former times it was the Seat of the Dukes Electors, till the Electoral Dignity was conferred on the House of Meissen, who, liking better their own Country, kept their Courts at Dresden, but so, that Wittenberg is still acknowledged for the Head City of the Electorate; and was made an University for Divines by Duke Frederick, Anno 1508. It was called Wittenberg, as some conjecture, from Wittkindus, once Lord of Saxony, when the extent thereof was greatest: famous for the Sepulchres of Luther and Melanchthon, but chiefly for that here were the Walls of Popery first broken down, and the Reformation of Religion begun by Luther, of the wonderful success whereof we have spoke already.

Of the Affairs of this little Country we can say but little, more than the means by which it came into the hands of the Dukes of Saxony, and consequently to the name which it still retains. Concerning which we are to know, that on the Deprivation of Duke Henry, furnished the Lion, whose Greatness was grown formidable even to the Emperours themselves, the Dukedom of Saxony was dismembered into many parcels; Brunswick and Lunenburgh being given unto the Children of the Duke deprived, the lower Parts of Westphalen seized on by Philip Archbishop of Cologne, the parts thereof about the Weser by the Bishop of Paderborn, Herman the Landgrave of Thuringia laying hold of that part of this Estate which was nearest to him, Lubeck and many other of the principal Cities made Imperial, or governing themselves as Free Estates, the Ancestors of the Princes of Anhalt and the Barls of Mansfeld endowed with large Possessions also out of this great Patrimony; the Emperour not only conniving at it, but willingly consenting to that Dilapidation, the better to reward and content those Princes who had assisted him in his Wars against the Duke. By which means there was nothing left of the ancient Saxony to be elevated upon Bernard of Anhalt, whom Frederick Barbarossa had created Duke Elector in the room of Henry so deprived. And though Duke Bernard for his many good Services to the Empire had been before gratified with the City of Wittenberg by Conrade the 3. and had conquered from Duke Henry the whole Country of Lauenburg; yet all being found too little to maintain the Port of a Duke Elector, it pleased the Emperour Frederick to bestow upon him all those Lands and Territories which lay between the Sala and the Elbe, on the North of Misnia, to make Wittenberg the Electoral City, and give unto the County thus united to it the name of Lower-Sax or Upper Saxony, which it continueth to this day.

2. MISNIA, or Meissen, is bounded on the East with Lusatia, on the West with Duringen, on the North with Saxony specially so called and some part of Brandenburg, on the South with Voitland and some part of Bohemia. The Country was once overpread with Woods, and full of Bogs, rendering the Air unwholsom, and the Soil unprofitable; both rectified by the care and industry of the people; now yielding some Mines of Silver, and great plenty both of Corn and Pasturage, well watered with the Rivers Sala, Pfisse, Elster, and Mulda.

Places of most observation in it are, 1. Dresden, seated on the Albis, having continually on her Walls and Bulwarks 150 Pieces of Ordnance; in it a Stable of the Duke's, in which are 128 Horses of service, and a Magazine, out of which 30000 Horses and Foot may be armed at a day's warning. The Town it self is situate on both sides of the River, by which it is divided into the Old Town and the New, joined into one by a Bridge of 800 paces in length. The Country round about it is very rich and pleasant, able to sustain great multitudes. For that cause it was made the ordinary Seat of the Dukes of Saxony, who have here a strong and stately Castle. 2. Naumburg, 3. Mersburg, both seated on the River Sala, two Episcopal Sees. 4. Leipzig, as famous an University for Philosophers as Jene in Lorraine is for Physicians. It seemeth the Scholars and Citizens will not suffer their Beer to perish, of which here is so much drunk and exported, that the very Custom of it due unto the Duke amounteth to 20000 pounds yearly; yet is this Town of no more than two Churches; but wealthy, populous, and built for the most part of fair Free-stone, and honoured with the Courts of Justice for all the Country. Though seated on the meeting of Pfisse, Parde, and Elster, 3 Rivers which lie almost on all sides of it; yet it is not strong, having been thrice taken by the Imperialists in less than 2 years during the late German Wars. Sufficiently famous (if for nothing else) for the great Battle fought near it between the late King of Sweden and the Count of Tilly: the honour whereof falling to the Swedes and Saxons, (with the death of 15000 on both sides, and the loss of all the Baggage, Arms and Ammunition of the Imperialists) freed all these parts of Germany from that civil and spiritual Bondage which was intended by the Emperour to be put upon them. 5. Mulberg, on the Elbe, where John-Frederick the Elector was discomfited and taken prisoner by Charles the fifth, and by him deprived not long after of his Estate and Dignity. 6. Meissen, on the West-side of the same River, in a hilly and uneven ground, built by the Emperour Henry the first for defence of the Empire against the Slaves: a Bishops See, and the first Seat of the Marquesses of this Country, both which, together with the Burgrave of the Town, had their Palaces or Mansion-houses standing close together on the top of a Hill overlooking both the Town and Country. From this Town the whole Province had the name of Meissen. 7. Friberg, near the Mountains of Bohemia, rich in Mines of Silver. 8. Reclite, not far from which are rich mines of Tin, discovered first in these parts by a Cornish-man spoken of before.

The first Inhabitants hereof were the Hermanduri and Suardones, subdued or outed by the Sorabi, a great Tribe of the Slaves surnamed Winithi: first conquered by the Emperour Henry the first, who built the strong Town of Meissen to keep them under, and to impede the neighbouring Slaves from any incroachments on the Empire. Being thus added to the Empire and account of Germany, it was a while governed by such Officers as by the Emperours were appointed to guard these Marches: the first proprietary Marquess being one Eckard, Son of the Earl of Ostland, (descended from a younger Son of Witkind, the last King of the Saxons) by the munificence of Otho the third, not made hereditary till the time of Henry the fifth, who gave it in Fee to Conrade Marquess of Landsparg and Lusatia, whose Nephew Theoderick by his Son Otho, furnished the Rich, married Jadith, Daughter of Herman Landgrave of Duringen; by which match Du- gen accrued to the House of Meissen, Henry their Son succeeding in both Estates. To this Henry succeeded Albert his Son, and after him successively four Fredericks; the last whereof, on the tailour of the House of Anhalt, was by the Emperour Sigismund created Elector and Duke of Saxony, either because descended from the House of Witkindus, or as most able to pay for the Investiture, or else best able to sustain the Estate and Dignity of a Duke-Elector, which had but weakly been supported by the former Family. In his posterity these Honours and Estates do as yet continue; but neither all nor always in the possession of the Dukes-Electors. For in the Partage made between Ernestus and Albert, the Sons of Frederick (according to the ill custom of Germany) this Country, or the greatest part of it, was assigned to Albert, succeeded in the same by George and Henry his two Sons: which Henry was Father of that Maurice, who, being settled and confirmed herein by the Duke John-Frederick, did after most unworthily take up Arms against him, supplant him, and finally possessed himself of this whole Electorate; of which more anon.

3. VOITLAND is bound on the East with Bohemia, on the West with Frankenland, on the North with Misnia or Meissen, on the South with the Upper Palatinat. So called, as some say, from the Voites or Vites, (some of that People, who, together with the Saxons and Angles, conquered Britain) of whom it had the name of Viteland, that is to say, the Land or Country of the Vites. But being I find not that the Saxons did spread so far Eastward, I rather think that this name was given it by the Slaves, who finding it deserted, or but thinly peopled, at their coming thither, might call it by the name of Voidland; from which the alteration unto Voitland is both plain and obvious. It is the smallest Province of all Germany, and never of such repute as to have any particular Prince, as most others had; but always reckoned as an accessory to some greater Estate. Nor hath it any Town or Cities of great estimation: the chief of those which are, being 1. Olfnitz, 2. Words, 3. Cornab, 4. Schneberg, near the Mountains called Sudeti by Protony, famed for Silver-Mines. 5. Goisberg, 6. Culmbach, and 7. Hoffe, not much remarkable, but only for the Princes of it of the House of Brandenburg; called formerly Curia Pegniana.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were parts of the Nervetates and Danduti, succeeded to by the French and Slaves, as they severally descended Southwards into warmer Countries. Possessed and planted by the Slaves it obtained this name. But being a small Nation and a small Estate, it never had the honour of a particular Prince; but did most probably belong to the Lords of Meissen, upon which it bordereth, and now, in their right, to the Duke of Saxony. But so that the Duke of Saxony is not the sole Lord hereof: the Marquesses of Onspach of the House of Brandenburg possessing the Towns of Hoffe and Culmbach, and some other parts of it: the Patrimony at present of Christian, Son of Joachim-Ernest the late Marquess of Onspach, who now enjoyeth them, with the Title of Marquess of Culmbach.

4. THURINGIA is bounded on the East with Misnia and the River Sala, on the West with Hassia, on the North with the Wood Hartz, and the proper Saxony, on the South with the mountainous Forest of Duringenwald, by it parted from Frankenland: the Forest and the Country both so called from the Thuringians, the ancient Inhabitants hereof, communicating their name to the place they dwell in.

The Country is environed round about with woody

Mountains; but within those Mountains plain and pleasant, fruitful in Corn, and very plentiful of Woods, which yield great profit to the people, not without some Mines of Gold and Silver, and rich past of Salt, able to furnish out a Feast, but for wine only, which is the greatest want hereof. The whole length of it is not above 120 miles, and the breadth no more, yet is so populous and well planted, that there are said to be in it 14 Baridoms, and many Abbies, 144 Cities, and many Market-Towns, 150 Castles, and 2000 Villages.

The principal of these are 1. Jena, on the River Saale, bordering upon Meisnia, an University chiefly of Physicians, founded in the year 1557, by the Sons of John-Frederick the Elector, taken Prisoner and deprived by Charles the fifth. 2. Erfurt, on the River Oera, out of which are cut so many Channels, that every Street almost hath the benefit of it. A rich populous, and well built City, accounted amongst the best of Germany, and made an University in the time of the Emperour Maximilian, Anno 1382. Many times burnt, but still reviving, as the Phoenix out of the Ashes, into greater glory. It was at first immediately subject to the Archbishops and Electors of Mentz, the first Founders of it, as being built by Willelmus, Son of the Emperour Otho the first, and then Archbishop of that City, of whom more anon; but having freed themselves from him, they have since governed themselves as a Free Estate, and are one of the Imperial Towns, not subject to the Duke of Saxony as their Lord, but their Patron and good Neighbour only. 3. Mulhausen, and 4. Norhausen, two Imperial Cities, but else not observable. 5. Smalcald, famous for the League here made Anno 1530, between all the Princes and Cities which maintained the Doctrine of Luther, for defence thereof, and of one another in the pursuance of that work; by which famous Confederacy Luther not only kept his head on his shoulders, but the Religion by him reformed grew to that strength, that no force or policy could ever root it up. 6. Kala, or Halt, on the River Falsa, of great resort for the exceeding quantity of Salt there made, and vended in other places, at which Town Philip the Landgrave was treacherously taken Prisoner, as you shall hear anon. 7. Weymar, a Town which, together with the Castle of Gotha, were assigned for the Estate and maintenance of that religious, though unfortunate, Prince John-Frederick Duke of Saxony, after his Discomfiture and Imprisonment by Charles the 5. the ordinary Seat of the Dukes of Saxony Weymar, who live here in a stately and magnificent Castle made of polished Stone, most artificially contrived, and beautified with Orchards, Gardens, and other pleasures, but made more pleasant by the watering of the River Ilma, upon which it standeth. 8. Gotha, upon the River Ilma, said by Rathaimerus to be built by the Goths, and by them thus named. A place not long since of great importance, and fortified with a very strong Castle, called Grunbachstein, that being made the Retiring-place of one Grunbachius and other seditious persons under the Protection of John-Frederick, one of the Sons of the deprived Electors. It was taken after a long Siege by Augustus the Elector of Saxony, (to whom the strength of this piece being in the hands of the injured Family was a great Eye-sore) and by the command of the Estates of the Empire at the Diet at Regensburg, Anno 1567, demolished, and levelled with the ground.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Chafuarni of Tacitus, and after them the Thuringi, who, with the Hernli, under the Conduct of Odoacer, conquered Italy; called by some Thuringingi, by others supposed to be the Tirangeta of Protony. Not heard of in this Country till the Reign of Childerich the fourth King of the French, then taking taking up the whole Provinces of Holfia and Thuringia, under one Biffinia their King. Their Arms were at that time, and long after, Azure, a Lion Barrie Argent and Guile, armed and crowned Or. Being overcome at the great Battle of Zulp near Colen, where they joined with the Alamans, they were afterwards totally subdued by Theodoric the French King of Alema, their King Hermanfrid taken and most perfidiously slain; part of their Country taken from them, and given to the Saxons, (who assisted in that War against them) becoming Subject for the rest to the Kings of France; but so that for some time after they had Kings of their own, Baderick and Hermanfrid, two Brothers, Kings hereof successively being Uncles to Rudolph, a Prince of great Piety, the Wife of Clotaire King of France, Anno 559. In following times it was united to the Empire by Henry the first, conferred not long after by Otho the first (the Son of Henry) on William, one of his younger Sons, then Archbishop of Metz, which he left to his Successors; in that See governed by their Vicaries and Provincial Officers, till the time of Conradus Salicus, when Lindovicus Barbarossa, one of these Vicaries (or Vicdomines) made himself the Proprietary of it, and left the same to his Children after his decease. But in the time of Conrad the 2. the Site of this Lindovicus either failing or dispossessed, it was by the Emperor conferred on Lewis of Orleans, Son to a Sister of his Emperors; the Title of Lantgrave being given to them of this Family for their greater Honour. Under eight Princes of this Line, whereof five successively had the name of Lewis; this Estate continued; next falling to Herman, a Brother of the fifth Lewis, who, by contributing to the Ruine of Henry Duke of Saxony, furnished the Lion, in favour of Frederick Barbarossa, had for his share (in the dividing of the Spoil) those parts of his Estates which lay nearest to him, called then the Palatinatus of Saxony; recovered for the most part afterward by the Dukes of Brunswick, the right Heirs of Henry. He being dead, this Country fell to a sixth Lewis, and last of all to Henry the Brother of that Lewis, in whom the Male-issue failed, having continued for the space of 252 years. To please all parties interested in the Succession, the Estate, before entire, was divided into two Parts or Provinces: of which this now called Duringen, or Thuringia, was allotted to Henry Marquis of Misnia, Son of Judith, the Daughter of Herman; the Western part thereof, with the Title of the Lantgravedom of Hessen, adjudged to Henry Duke of Brabant, in right of Sophia his Wife, Daughter of Lewis the sixth: in the description of which Countries we shall hear more of them. United thus to the House of Meissen in the person of Henry the then Marquis, Anno 1263, it flourished in long Peace and Happiness under the Princes of that House. Finally, it much increased both in Power and Dignity by the addition of Ober-Sax and the Electorship of Saxony, conferred on Frederick the Fourth, Marquis and Lantgrave of these Countries, Anno 1423, in which Estate it still continueth, the fourth and fairest of all these Provinces which now make up the Dukedom of Saxony, (as for the reasons above mentioned it hath long been called) though none of them, nor any part or parcel of them, within the Bounds and Limits of the ancient Saxony, as before was said.

2. SAXONY properly so called, or the Proper SAXONY, is bounded on the South with Duringen and the great Wood Hartz, part of the old Hercynian Forest, and from thence so named, on the East with part of Misnia, Ober-Sax, and the Marches of Brandenburg; upon the North with the Dukedom of Mecklenburg; and on the West with those of Brunswick, Lunenbourg, and part of Holfstein. So called from the Saxons, once the Lords hereof, (of whom more anon) and the sole part of all their great and many Conquests which retains their name.

The Air hereof is somewhat sharp, but healthy; the Soil in the South-west parts hilly and uneven, chiefly rich in Minerals, elsewhere sufficiently fruitful. It is divided into 4 Estates; that is to say, 1. the Principality of Anhalt, 2. the Barldom of Mansfeld, 3. the Bishoprick of Meysburg, 4. the Dukedom of Lunenbourg.

1. The Principate of ANHALT is bounded on the South with Duringen and the Wood called Hartz, on the West and North with the County of Mansfeld, on the East with Misnia; much shaded, if not too much over-grown, with Woods, part of the Hartz, or old Hercynian Forest, whence it had the name; Holt in the Dutch signifying a Wood or Forest; and the Princes of this House being erected to this Dignity by the Style of Principes Hercynia in Anhalt. Chief Towns of it are; 1. Bernburg, the Dynastic and usual Title of this house before they were created Princes of Anhalt. 2. Ballenstedt, part of the ancient Patrimony of the first Princes hereof. 3. Dessau, the birth-place of some, and the Burial-place of others, of this Family, beautified with a strong Castle, built by Prince Albert the 2. Anno 1341. 4. Stervest, the usual place of the Prince's Residence. 5. Cutzen, a well fortified place, in vain besieged by the joint Forces of the Archbishop of Meysburg and the Earl of Swartzenwald. 6. Candt. Here sometimes also stood the old Castle of Ascandt, the first Seat of these Princes, but long since destroyed, now only to be visited in Records and Histories.

We shall be sent no higher than the first besieging of the Roman Capitol by the ancient Gauls, to find out the Pedigree and Descent of the Earls of Lippe; but we must go as high as the Ark for the Princes of Anhalt; some fetching them from Arkenaz, the Son of Gomer, and Nephew of Japhet, from whom, and no other, this Ascanian Family (for by that name it is called) are to fetch their Pedigree. But to content our selves with more sober thoughts, we are to know, that when Theodoric King of Meiz undertook the Conquest of the Thuringians, he was therein aided by the Saxons with 9000 men, under the conduct of one Bernwald, or Bernthold, a man of great power and rank amongst them. The Saxons were recompensed for that service with such parts of the conquered Country as lay nearest to them, and Bernthold himself rewarded with the Towns of Ascandt, Ballenstedt, and the Lands adjoining, Anno 524, to be holden by them under the Sovereignty of the French. From which Town and the Castle of Ascandt afterwards razed to the ground by Pepin King of the French, (for denying the accustomed Tributes) Anno 747, most probable it is that the name of the Ascanian Family was assumed by them. So that we may behold it as a Family of as great antiquity as the most in Europe, little inferior to any of the greatest Monarchs. His Successors were for the most part busied in Wars against their neighbours of Misnia; but rather upon hope of Spoil and plunder, than in way of Conquest; their Power and Patrimony being very little improved till the time of Albert surnamed Ursus, defended by a long succession of Princes from Bernwald or Bernthold, before remembered. This Albert having done many signal services unto Conrad the 3. and his Son Frederick Barbarossa, (especially in taking the Cities of Breme and Lunenbourg) was by the last created Marquis and Elector of Brandenburg, Anno 1153, the Father of that Bernard who, by the munificence and bounty of the same Emperor, was created Duke-Elector of Saxony in the room of Duke Henry surnamed the Lion, Anno 1180, becoming so the Stem of the two greatest Princes of all the Empire. Henry the 2. Son of this Bernard, was by the same Emperor not long after enriched with much of the Lands and Territories lying nearest to him, which had before belonged to Duke Henry the Lion, and created the first Prince of Anhalt, the first of all this ancient and illustrious Family which had been honoured with that Title, both Lands and Title continuing in his Race to this very day; the two Electorates of Saxony and Brandenburg being in the mean while translated unto other Families. The most considerable of which Princes, though all men of Ensignance, were 1. Rodolph, General of the Forces of the Emperor Maximilian the first against the Venetians, whom he twice overcame in Battle. 2. George the Divine, a great Reformer of the Church by his diligent Preaching; whose Sermons and other Tractates (learned for the Times he lived in) are still extant. 3. Christian, born in the year 1568, Commander of the Forces of Frederick, Prince Elector Palatine, in the Wars of Bohemia.

Stem

2. The Earldom of MANSFIELD is bounded on the East with the River Sala, parting it from Ober-Sax; on the West with the River Wieper, which divides it from Brunswick; on the North with the Bishoprick of Meysburg, and on the South with Anhalt and part of Duringen. So called from Mansfeld, once the chief Town of it, situate on the River Wieper, but now much decayed: the other Towns of note herein being 2. Ilseben, more in the middle of the Country; for that cause more convenient for the Seats of Justice, first settled here by Earl Voldradus, Anno 1448, and by that means made the Metropolis of this Earldom: By some affirmed to have took this name from the Goddess Ipsi, who, after the death of her Husband, (as is said by Tacitus) visited these parts. Famous more certainly for the Birth of Luther, transplanted hence for the study of good Arts to Meysburg, and chosen thence to be Divinity-Reader in Wittenberg, where he hammered out that great Work of the Reformation, as before was said; born here in the year 1483, and here deceasing in the house of the Earl of Mansfeld, Anno 1546. 3. Wieper, (or Wipra) so called of the River on which it standeth. 4. Quernfort, the honourary Title of the Ancestors of the Earls of Mansfeld. 5. Rosenberg, 6. Alsted, 7. Helderning, bought of the Earls of Holfstein.

Some, who delineate the Pedigree of these Earls of Mansfeld, fetch it out as high as from one Heger, one of King Arthur's Knights of the Round-Table, born at Mansfeld in Nottinghamshire, who, settling himself in Germany, gave that name to his House: a military original, and very futable to such an active and warlike Family. But those that do not soar so high derive them from the Earls of Quernfort, men of authority in these parts; made more considerable by Lotharius Emperor and Duke of Saxony, but most of all by Frederick Barbarossa, who conferred many goodly Lordships lying hereabout (once part of the Estate of Duke Henry the Lion) on Burchard the fifth Earl thereof, a constant Follower of his, not only in his Wars against Duke Henry before named, but in those also which he managed in the Holy Land, in the course whereof he died at Antioch Anno 1189. His Nephew Burchard, by a Son of the same name, was the first of this Family that had the Title of Earl of Mansfeld, about the year 1209, continued ever since unto his posterity, (but under some Acknowledgment to the Electors of Saxony.) Of these the most eminent were 1. Waleradus, one of the Council of Estate to the Emperor Sigismund, Anno 1411, a great improver of the Patrimony of the Earls hereof. 2. John George, Lord Deputy or Lieutenant of Saxony under Duke Augustus, 3. Peter-Ernest, Governour of Luxemburg under Charles the 5. and Philip the 2. by them much exercised and employed in their Wars with France and their Belgick Rebels. 4. Albert, a constant Friend of Luther, and a faithful Follower of John Frederick, the deprived Elector; in whose Quarrel being outed of his Estate, he retired to Meysburg, which he most gallantly defended against the Emperor. And 5. Ernestus, Nephew of that Albert by his Son John, so famous for the War which he maintained in most parts of Germany against Ferdinand the 2. in behalf of Frederick Prince Elector Palatine and the States of Bohemia, with so great constancy and courage.

3. On the North of Mansfeld and Ober-Sax lieth the Bishoprick of MEYDEBURG, having on the West parts of Brunswick and Lunenbourg, and on the North and the East the Marches of Brandenburg: So called from the Episcopal See founded in Magdeburg the chief City, by some called Meysburg and Meydenburg, whence by a Greek name Parthenopolis and Virginopolis by a mungrel word made of Greek and Latine. A City seated on the Elve, divided into three parts, but all strongly fortified, begirt with high Walls, deep Ditches, and almost unconquerable Bulwarks; yet very beautiful withal, (before the last Defolation of it) of elegant Buildings, fair Streets, and magnificent Temples. It was built in the form of a Crescent by the Emperor Otho the first, the Founder of it, who, having translated hither the Archiepiscopal See, for the greater honour of the place built the Cathedral of S. Maurice, where his Wife lies buried, Anno 948, testified by the Inscription: to be the Daughter of Edmund King of England. A Town which hath long flourished in a great deal of Glory, and tasted of as much Affliction as any other in Germany. For refusing to receive the Interim, it was out-lawed by the Emperor Charles the fifth, and given to him that could first take it. It was first hereupon attempted by the Duke of Mecklenburg, but he was in a Camisado taken Prisoner, his Army routed, his Nobles made captive, and 260 Horse brought into the City. Next, it was besieged by Duke Maurice of Saxony, who on honourable terms was after a long Siege received into it, Anno 1550, when it had stood on its own Guard the space of three years. Which long Opposition of one Town taught the German Princes what Constancy could do; it held up to the coals of Rebellion in Germany; and indeed proved to be the Fire which burned the Emperor's Trophies. For here Duke Maurice coming acquainted with Baron Hedeck, hatched that Confederacy by which not long after this great Emperor was driven out of Germany. At last it yielded to Duke Maurice, under the protection of whose Successors it hath since enjoyed a long course of Felicity, till the year 1631, in which it was most miserably burnt and sacked by the Earl of Tilly, of whom it is observed, that after that Fact he never prospered, being shortly after totally routed at the Battle of Leipzig, and wounded to the death not long after that near the River Leck. Other places of note in this Bishoprick are, 2. Wormstedt, beautified with a fair Castle, not far from Magdeburg, the ordinary Seat or Retiring-place of the Bishop. 3. Graben, upon the River Struma. 4. Mockren, on the same River. 5. Barleben, beneath Meysburg, on the Elve. 6. Lounburg, betwixt the Elve and the Struma, not much observable.

The Archiepiscopal See being translated hither from Valerius and Vrese (places too obscure for so great a dignity) by Otho the first, and by him endowed with great Revenues and a goodly Territory round about it, the Archbishop hereof was also by his procurement made the Primate of Germany, acknowledged so by all but the Bishop of Salisburg and the three Spiritual Electors. For the Administration of Justice in matters Criminal and Civil, the said Ordo did ordain an Officer, whom they called the Burggrave; conferring that Office first on Oero Marquess of Lusatia. Through many hands it came at last to Burchard Lord of Querfurt, and the Earls of Mansfeld, many of which enjoyed this Honour, settled at last by the Emperor Rodolphus of Habsburg on the Dukes of Saxony, who by this means came to have great command and influence on the whole Estate. The Archbishops notwithstanding continued Lords of it; and the whole Territory or District adjoining to it, till the Reformation of Religion; when the Revenues, separated from the Jurisdiction, were given to Lay-Princes. (For the most part of the House of Brandenburg with the Title of Administrator. Finally, by the Pacification made at Munster, this fair Estate is to be seised for ever on the Electors of that House, to be possessed by them, and their Heirs and Successors; by the Title of the Dukes of Magdeburg, the better to content them for the Concession which they made to the Crown of Sweden of a great part of their right and Title to the Dukedom of Pomerania.

Arch-

4. On the North-west of Magdeburg, and on both sides also of the Elbe, lieth the Dukedom of LAWENBURG, bounded on the North with Mecklenburg, on the West with part of Holstein, and on the South with the River Elbe and part of Lunenbourg; so called of Lauenburg the chief Town thereof; and the seat of the Dukes. The Town was first built, as some conceive, by Henry Duke of Saxony, surnamed the Lion; the better to assure his Conquests on that side of the River; by whom it was called Leopoldus, or Leoburgum, and Lauenburg for the same reasons by the Dutch or Germans: on the Proscription of which Prince, the Country being wasted and the Towns destroyed, Bernhard of Anhalt, designed his Successor in the Dukedom of Saxony, liking the situation of it, caused it to be re-edified in stronger manner than before, a great part of the materials of the Town of Erdenburg being carried cross the Water to enlarge this place. Afterwards being razed by the said Duke Henry in the course of that War it was re-built again by D. Bernard, the new Elector, who is therefore by some Writers made the Founder of it. Other places of note herein are, 2. Erdenburg, a well-fortified place, opposite to Lauenburg, on the higher-side of the Elbe; not so large now as heretofore, the Town of Lauenburg being made greater by the lessening of this. 3. Ratzeburg, an Episcopal See, founded here by Duke Henry surnamed the Lion, upon his gaining of the Slaves to the Christian Faith, and of late times the Sepulture of this Ducal Family. 4. Molne, on the farther side of the Elbe, not far from Lauenburg, the cause of much Contentment betwixt the Dukes hereof, and the Town of Hamburg, who pretend a Title thereunto.

This Country being for the most part under the Command of the Slaves, was from them conquered (together with the whole Country of Mecklenburg) by Duke Henry the Lion, and by his care converted to the Christian Faith; but he being proscribed, and this Seignoury extorted from him by Duke Bernard of Anhalt, his Successor in the Electoral Dignity, it was by Albert, Son of this Bernard, conferred on his second Son, from whom the Dukes of Saxony, commonly called Dukes of Saxon-Lauenburg, do derive themselves; who being pretermitted by the Emperor Sigismund at the death of Albert the 3. the last of the direct Line of Bernard, or else not caring for a Title which carried with it so great a Sail for so small a Vessel as the Estate of the Elector at the present was, have since contented themselves with their ancient Patrimony.

It is now time we should proceed to the Story of Saxony, the ancient Inhabitants of which Tract were the Longobardi or Lombards of Magdeburg, and part of the Cherusci about Mansfeld and Wittenberg. Overcome by the prevailing Saxons, they became part of their name and Country; which in the full extent thereof was once far greater than now it is, containing all the Countries betwixt the Rhene and the River Eyder in the Cimbrick-Chersonese, and from the River Sala to the German and Baltick Oceans. These are said by some to be a People of Asia, and there called the Saca, who finding that small Territory (now a part of Tartaria) too narrow for them; forsook their Country, and at last fixed themselves in the Cimbrick-Chersonese; where they first took the names of Sacasons (or Sacsons); that is to say, the Sons of the Saca. The improbability of this we have there disputed. Omitting therefore that and the like Originations of them, I conceive them (for my part) to be natural Germans; some Tribe of that most populous and potent People of the Suevi; but for the reason of the name, let every man enjoy the pleasure of his own opinion. Certain I am that in Ptolemy's time they were possessed of those parts beyond the Elbe; and thence extended to the Eyder, part of which Tract is now known by the name of Holstein; and were accounted in that time to be no New-comers. Afterwards, as they grew in number, they enlarged their quarters, and passing over the Elbe, in the time of the latter Roman Emperours, possessed themselves of the void places which were left by the French, then busied in the Conquest of more fruitful Countries; communicating their name to all the Nations which they overcame, as the French had formerly done before them. So that in fine they stretch themselves from the River Sala on the East, to the German Ocean on the West, and took up the now Dukedom of Holstein, Lunenbourg, and Brunswick, the Bishopsricks of Bremen, Verden, Hildesheim, Habersbadi, and Magdeburg, the Marches of Brandenburg, the Earl-dom of Mansfeld, Westphalen, both Friesland, Over-Isse, with as much of Gelderland and Holland as lay on that side of the Rhene. By which account the present Electoral Family hath not one foot of the old Saxony in their possession; the Seat and Patrimony of the Electors being removed into other Countries, upon the Alterations and Changes which have happened in that Estate; the name and Title of Saxony being given to the Country about Wittenberg, for no other reason but because it was the chief Seat of the Dukes-Electors. But to proceed, a stout and valiant Nation questionless they were, the Conquerors of the Isle of Britain; and the last People of the Germans which yielded up their Country unto Charles the Great, by his means gained unto the Gospel Anno 785. Their last King was called Wittikindus, from whom descend the Kings of France, since the time of Hugh Capet, the present Kings of Denmark, of the house of Oldenburg, the Dukes of Burgundy and Savoie, the Marquesses of Montferrat, besides many other noble and illustrious Families though of lesser note. The right or direct Line of the Male-Issue of Wittikind (whom Charles the Great created, of a King, the first Duke of Saxony) determining in the person of Ordo the third, Emperor of Germany, it was by him conferred on Bernard Lord of Lunenbourg, (but the precise time I find not) Henry, surnamed the Saint, who succeeded this Ordo in the Empire, the next in the collateral Line, being pretermitted, either because at that time settled in the great Dukedom of Bavaria, or because there was no hope of Posterity by him, or for some other private grudge, which I read not of. And it continued in this Line till, on the Forfeiture incurred by his posterity, in the person of Duke

Henry

Henry the Lion, it was bestowed by Frederick Barbarossa upon Bernard of Anhalt, Anno 1180; whose Issue in the right Line failing, it was finally everted by the Emperor Sigismund on Frederick Landgrave of Thuringia and Marquess of Misnia, Anno 1423. In his Family it hath since continued, but not without a manifest breach in the course of the Succession: which happened when John-Frederick being deprived of the Electoral Dignity and Estate, his Cousin Duke Maurice was invested in them by Charles the fifth. For that religious, but unfortunate, Prince (if he may justly have the Title of unfortunate who suffered in so good a Cause, for so good a Conscience) being discomfited and taken prisoner at the Battel of Mulberg before mentioned, was the next day condemned to die; but pardoned at the last, upon the intercession of some powerful Friends, upon condition that he should resign the Electoral Dignity, and all the rest of his Estates, into the power of the Emperor: Which done, the Emperor gave him back again of his own accord the Castle of Gotha and the Town of Weymar, with all the Lands and Territories thereunto adjoining; from which last place his Posterity are now called Dukes of Saxon-Weymar. It was also much insisted on, that he should relinquish his Religion, and reconcile himself to the Church of Rome; but thereto he opposed with such Christian stoutness, that in the end it was omitted. These matters being thus transacted, the Emperor (with the general consent of the Electors) invested Maurice, Cousin-german to the Duke deprived, in the Electoral dignity, and all the Lands, Honours and Estates (the Signiories of Gotha and Weymar excepted only) which formerly had belonged to him: which though it were a great wrong both to the Person and Posterity of the Duke John-Frederick, yet it is observed by some grave Writers to have fallen out not unhappily for the advancement of the Reformation then contended for. 1. In regard of John-Frederick, whose Christian Patience and Magnanimity during the whole time of his Imprisonment added great reputation to the Cause for which he suffered. 2. In respect of Duke Maurice, who was a man of far greater parts to advance the work and every way as zealous in pursuing of it as the other was. And 3. in relation to the Children of the deprived Duke, men not to be relied on in a matter of such weight and moment; inasmuch as it was said of him after his decease, Quod filios reliqueris sui dissimilimos. It is now time we should proceed to the Investiture of the new Elector. And because these Transactions of State be not ordinary, I will briefly relate the Cerimonies thereof used as I have collected them out of Steidan. There were at Wittenberg Scaffolds erected, on which sate the Emperor and the Princes Electors in their Robes. On the back-side of the State were placed the Trumpeters; right against it standeth Duke Maurice with two bands of Horfemen: The first in a full career run their Horfes up to the Pavillion; out of the second issued Henry Duke of Brunswick, Wolfgang Prince of Bipont, and Albert Duke of Bavaria. These, when they had in like manner coursed their Horfes about, alighted, ascended to the Throne, and humbly requested the Emperor, that for the common good he would advance Duke Maurice to the Electorship. He consulted with the Electors, made answer by the Bishop of Mentz, that he was content, so Duke Maurice would in person come and desire it. Then came forth Duke Maurice with the whole Troop: before him were born ten Ensigns bearing the Arms of as many Regions wherein he desired to be invested. When he came before the Throne, he kneeled down on his knees, and humbly desired the Emperor to bestow on him the Electorship of Saxony, and all the Lands of John-Frederick, late Elector. His Petition was granted.

Then the Bishop of Mentz, read unto him the Oath by which the Electors are bound unto the Empire: which Oath when Duke Maurice had taken; the Emperor delivered unto him a Sword, which was a sign of his perfect Investiture. Duke Maurice, now the Elector of Saxony, arose, gave the Emperor thanks, promised his Fidelity, made Obedience, and took his place amongst the Electors. This Solemnity was on the 24. day of Febr. Anno 1548. Which said, we now proceed unto the Catalogue of 35. John George, Brother of Christian the second, who first sided with the Emperor Ferdinand the second against the Elector Palatine, and after with the King of Sweden against the Emperor.

The Revenues of this Duke are thought to be the greatest of any one Prince of Germany, (the Imperial Family excepted) amounting in the least to 400000 l. per annum, though in multitude of Vassals and greatness of Territory he come short of some of them. And to make up this (some or perhaps a greater) it is conceived that the profit which ariseth to him out of Silver-mines is no less than 130000 yearly; the Impost laid on Beer in Leipsick only, a City but of two Parish-Churches, (by which conjecture at the rest) being farmed at 20000 l. per annum. Then hath he the Tenth of all sort of Increase, as of Corn, Wine, &c. The Salt-houses at Hall and some other places, very fair lands belonging unto his Domain; and besides this, a standing and perpetual Tax laid upon the Subject towards the maintenance of the War against the Turks; granted at first in times of Danger and hostility, but gathered ever since in the times of Peace (as to that Enemy) under colour of being ready and prepared against him. According to the quantity of his Intrado so he keeps his State, well served, and better attended than any other of the Electors: there being at one time in the Court of Christian, the Father of the present Duke, three Dukes, three Earls, and five Barons of other Nations, (besides the Nobility of his own) all Pensioners and Servants to him; one of the Princes of Anhalt and one of the Earles of Manisfeld, both Homagers unto the Saxons, being two of the number.

The Arms of Saxony, are Barre-wise of six pieces Sable and Or; a Bend-floured Verr. Which Bend was added to the Coat by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa, when he confirmed Bernard of Anhalt in this Dukedom, for Bernard desiring of the Emperor to have some difference added to the Ducal Coat, (being before only Barry Sable and Or) to distinguish him and his Successors from those of the former House; the Emperor took a Chaplet of Rue, which he had then upon his head, and threw it cross his Buckler or Escutcheon of Arms, which was presently painted on the same.

19. BRUNSWICK and 20. LUNENBURG.

THE Dukedom of BRUNSWICK and LUNENBURG, being both originally taken out of this great Dukedom of Saxony extracted both from the same Root, and many times united in the person of the same one Prince, shall be joined together in the Story, though severed in the Chorography or description of them; bounded on the East with Magdeburg and Mansfeld in the upper Saxony, on the West with Westphalia, on the North with Denmark, on the South with Hassia. The Air in all parts hereof is very cold and comfortable, but found and healthful: the Soil towards the old Marches of Brandenburg but meanly fertile, towards Duringen and Hassia mountainous and woody, in other parts very plentiful of Corn, and well provided also of such other Commodities as usually do grow in those colder Climates.

But to take the Chorography of them severally, BRUNSWICK is bounded on the East with the Earldom of Mansfeld, on the West with Westphalen, on the North with Lunenburg, on the South with Hassia. So called from Brunswick the chief City, and the Head of this Dikedom.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Goslar, upon the River Gose, whence it had the name; of a poor Village made a City by Henry the first, much beautified and enlarged by Henry the third, who founded here two Churches and a stately Palace; now one of the Imperial Cities. 2. Helmstedt, in the middle way betwixt Brunswick and Magdeburg; first fortified by Charles, Son of Charles the Great, for a Bridle to the neighboring Sclaves; and being after given to the Abbots of Verden, was by them sold to William the Duke of Brunswick. 3. Quedlenburg, built also by Henry the first, much increased since by the neighbourhood of a very rich Nunnery, the Abbess whereof had formerly the Privileges of a Prince of the Empire. 4. Hildesheim, an ancient City, honoured with an Episcopal See by Charles the Great at the first conversion of the Saxons. 5. Grubenhagen, which gave Title to a younger branch of the House of Brunswick; a Principality, and a Member of the Empire. 6. Hannover, on the River Lein, well built, very strongly fortified, and not meanly traded. 7. Brunswick, upon the River Onatra, which passeth through it, passed over by many handfom Bridges; the Metropolis of the ancient Saxony, and at this time the chief of this Dukedom, though of it self Imperial, and one of the Hanse. The City is of a quadrangular form seated in the midst of a Plain very fruitful of Corn, in compass about two Dutch, or eight English miles, somewhat larger than Nuremberg, and less than Erfurt; containing in that compass not above twelve Churches whereof two have Steeples covered with Lead, a third with Brass, all the rest with Tile. It is rich, populous, and strongly fortified, on some sides with a double, on others with a treble Wall; within which walls are five Cities, distinguished by Privileges, but united by Laws; The whole first built by Bruno, Son to Lodolphus Duke

Duke of Saxony, and Uncle to the Emperor Henry the first, about the year 861; from whence it had the name of Brunswick or Brunonis Vicus, by the more elegant Latinists Brunopolis. 8. Hamelen, on the East-side of the Wefer or Vijurgis, encompassed with a deep Moat, (occasioned by a stream cut out of the River) round about which are divers Fortifications, and planted with Ordnance. Nigh unto this Town is the Mountain called also Hamelen, unto which the Py'd Piper (as they call him) led the Children of Halberstadt, where they all sunk, and were never more seen. But of this Story more hereafter, when we come to Transylvania. 9. Wolfenbütten, or Wolfenbittel, where the Duke doth keep his Court. For though Brunswick giveth him his Title, yet will it not yield him any Obedience, but repeth it self amongst the Hanse-Towns; for which cause there have been great Wars between the Dukes and the Citizens. 10. Halberstadt, a Bishop's See, the late Bishop (or Administrator of the Bishoprick) being Christian Duke of Brunswick, that noble young Souldier, who had vowed his life and fortune to the service of Elizabeth Queen of Bohemia, his Cousin-german; created by King Jamies one of the Knights of the Garter. A Bishoprick of great Revenue, and a very large Territory; since the alteration of Religion, given with the Title of Administrator to the Sons of Brunswick; but now, by the Conclusions at Munster, assigned over to the Elector of Brandenburg, with the Title of Prince of Halberstadt, the Family of Brunswick being to be recompensed with an alternate Succession in the Bishoprick of Osnabrugge, and some other additional. 11. Hersfeld, the Seat sometimes of the old Palatines of Saxony, but not else observable. 12. Amelungsbame, another Town of the said Palatines, by one of which, called Sigefridus, it was beautified with a very fair Abby: the principal Towns (in those days) of this Palatinate, which, bordering on that part of the Thuringians which is now called Hassia, was taken in by Herman, one of the Landgraves of that Country, on the Proscription of Duke Henry surnamed the Lion; but on the failure of his Line, recovered for the most part by the Dukes of Brunswick, the right Heirs of Henry.

The Dukedom of LUNENBURG hath on the East the Docese of Magdeburg, on the West the Diocese of Bremen and part of Westphalia, on the North the Elb, and on the South the Dukedom of Brunswick. So called from Lunenburg the chief City, once the Seat of the Dukes. Places of most observation in it are, 1. Lunenburg it self, situate on the River Elmenaw, an Imperial City, and one of the principal of the Hanse; so called from the Moon here worshipped in the times of Idolatry. Of a round form it is, and seated in a pleasant Valley, but with Mountains near it: on one of which, called Calberg, is a very strong Castle, of right belonging to the Duke, but in the power of the Citizens, who without this Fort could not be masters of their Liberties. The walls about it are of Earth, high and broad, and the Ditches deep: the Buildings generally fair, (for the most part of Brick) the chief whereof is the Common-Council-House, the Streets broad and long, with two spacious Market-places, but of no very pleasing smell: the whole about a mile and an half in length, half a mile in breadth, containing six Parish-Churches. But the thing most considerable in it is the Fountain of Salt, the greatest riches of this City) and the House in which the Salt is boiled, containing 52 Rooms, and in each Room 8 Leadan Pans, in which are boiled daily 8 Tuns of Salt, every Tun being sold for 8 Flemish shillings, bought by the Hamburgers, Lubeckers, and other Merchants; some part of the profits of it belonging to the Duke, some to the City, the rest to the Adventurers who employ their Stocks on it. 2. Celle, the Seat of the Duke of Lunenburg. 3. Gerbern, of no great bigness or estimation, but for a strong Castle of the Dukes. 4. Oldendorp, situate betwixt the Venaw and the River Esse, memorable for the great Battle fought neare unto it, Anno 1533, betwixt the Imperialists and the Swedes, who killed upon the place 5000 of the Enemy, besides such as were found dead in the fields, and high-ways, all covered over with dead bodies, took 1500 of them prisoners, and got into their hands 13 pieces of Ordnance, good store of Ammunition, and three Males laden with Silver for the pay of the Army: the reputation of this Victory drawing in Hamelen and other places of importance which stood out before. 5. Verden, an Episcopal See, but made a Lay-see, as most other Bishopricks amongst the Lutherans; the Profits thereof being received commonly by a Son of Denmark with the Title of Administrator, and lastly, by the Treaty of Munster appropriated for ever to the Crown of Sweden, the Kings whereof to be entituled Dukes of Verden. 6. Rodenburg, the chief Seat of the Bishops of Verden.

The ancient Inhabitants of these Dukedoms were the Dugublini of Tacitus, with some parts of the Chauci and Cherusci: these last of most fame for the Blow they gave to Quintilius Varus, Lieutenant in Germany after Drusus for Augustus Caesar, who, behaving himself with great Insolency towards the Natives, was set upon by these Cherusci and their Confederates, under the Conduct of Arminius, a great Prince amongst them; himself slain, and his whole Army, consisting of three Legions, miserably cut off and despoitfully used: which Loss, and the Shame thereof, so distracted the Emperor, (not formerly accustomed to the like Misfortunes) that he was many times observed to tear his Beard, knock his Head against the Posts and cry out in the bitterness of his Passion, Redde mihi Legionis, Quintili Varo. Having long time after this maintained their Liberty, (for the Romans kept themselves from that time forwards on the French side of the Rhene) they were at last subdued by the Saxons, continuing part of that great Dukedom till the time of the 3 Othos, Emperours of the Romans and Dukes of Saxony; who, looking on the Empire as a State of Inheritance, diminished both the Grandeur and Revenue of their ancient Patrimony, partly by the Donation or Endowment of many Bishopricks, and partly by the erection of many petty Seigniories to be holden under them as chief Lords of all. Amongst which that of Lunenburg was none of the least, continuing as a State distinct, till such time as Bernard Lord of Lunenburg was by the Emperor Otho the third made Duke of Saxony, and created the first Duke-Elector, whereby again it was united to the rest of that Dukedom, the greatest part whereof he held in his actual possession, together with a Superiority or Jurisdiction over all the residue, (the great Bishopricks excepted only) which had been parcelled out, as before is said: and it continued thus united till the Proscription of Henry, surnamed the Lion, spoken of before, whose Reconciliation being made by means of Henry the second of England, whose Daughter Maud he had formerly married, the Emperor Barbarossa restored to him again the Cities of Brunswick and Lunenburg, with their several Territories, of which his two Sons Henry and William were first created Earls, then Dukes, the one of Brunswick, and the other of Lunenburg, by the Emperor Frederick the second. Which Honours and Estates do still remain unto their Posterity. Before I come to the Successions of these Princes, I shall crave leave to speak of the Original of the Guelphian Family, Dukes at the same time of Bavaria and Saxony, of which they are at this time the sole remainder. A Family derived from one Guelphus, (whence it had the name) the Son of Ifenberdus, Earl of Altorf in Schwaben; whose Wife, called Fermintrude, having accused a poor woman of Adultery, and caused her to be grievously punished for having 12 Children at a Birth, was afterwards delivered of the like number, and all of them Sons. Her Husband being absent at the time of her Delivery, she commanded the Nurse to kill a 11 of them; fearing, it seems, the like shame and punishment as by her infatigation was inflicted on the other Womans. The Nurse going to perform this ungodly command was met by the old Earl then returning homewards, who asked her what she had in her Apron. She made answer, Whelps. He desired to see them: she denied him. Angry at this refusal, he opened her Apron, and there found eleven of his own Sons, pretty sweet Babes, and of most promising Countenances. Examining the matter, he found out the truth, and injoining the old Trot to be secret in it, he put the Children out to Nurse. Six years expired, the Earl invited to a Feast most of his own and his Ladies Kindred, and attiring the young Boys all alike, presented them unto their Mother, who suspecting, by the number of them, what the matter was, confessed her offence, is pardoned by the good old Earl, and carefully educates her children: whom the Father commanded to be called by the name of Guelphs, alluding to the Whelps or Puppies which the Nurse told him she had in her Apron. From the eldest of these Guelphs or Guelps succeeded that Henry-Guelph, Son of Robert Earl of Altorf, whom Conrade the second made Duke of Bavaria; many of whose posterity enjoyed that Dukedom: increased at last by the addition of the Dukedom of Saxony, in the person of Duke Henry surnamed the Proud, Father of Henry called the Lion, and Grandfather of Henry and William the first Dukes of Brunswick and Lunenburg, whose Succession followeth in this Order.

The Dukes of BRUNSWICK and LUNENBURG.

But these of Lunenburg have added three Coats more unto it: the whole bearing being quarterly, 1. Gules, two Lions Or, Armed Azure; 2. Azure, Seme of Hearts Gules, a Lion of the first, Armed and Crowned Or; 3. Azure, a Lion Argent, Crowned Gules; and 4. Gules, within a Border Compounie Or and Azure, a Lion of the second, Armed of the third.

20. HASSIA.

HASSIA is bounded on the North with Brunswick, on the South with Vettravia or the State of Wetterau, on the East with Thuringia, and on the West with Westphalia. So called from the Hessi, who, having vanquished the Chatti, the old Inhabitants of this Country, possessed themselves of it.

The Christian Faith was first preached here by Boniface, or Winefride, an English-Saxon, (afterwards Archbishop of Mentz) Anno 730, or thereabouts. Of whom I find this memorable Apophthegm, That in old times there were golden Prelates and wooden Chalmes; but in his time wooden Prelates and golden Chalmes. Not much unlike to which I have read another, but of later date, viz. That once the Christians had blind Churches, and lightfom hearts; but now they have lightfom Churches, and blind hearts.

The Country is very fruitful of Corn, and affordeth good Pasturage for the feeding of Cattel, of which they have great Doves and Herds in many places; with great abundance of Stags and other Deer for the pleasures of Hunting, harboured in the Woods hereof, with which in many parts of it it is very much shaded. It breedeth also on the Downs good store of Sheep, enriched with the finest Fleece of any in Germany; the Staple-Commodity of this Country; and in the mountainous parts hereof there want not rich Mines of Brass, Lead, and other Metals, which yield great profit to the people.

Chief Towns herein are, 1. Alendorf, on the Weiser, (or Vijurgis) of much esteem for the Springs or Fountains of Salt which are thereabouts. 2. Fritzlar, upon 1554 13. Henry III. Son of Orto the 3.

1532 14. Orto IV. Son of Henry the 3.

15. Ernest, the Brother of Orto, succeeded in his Brother's life time, surrendering his Estate for an Annual Pension.

1546 16. Henry IV. Son of Ernest.

1590 17. Ernest II. Son of Henry the 4.

18. Wolfgangus, the Brother of Ernest the 4. and Uncle of Ernestus the 2. now Duke of Lunenburg, Anno 1648.

upon the Eder, well walled, and situate in a fruitful and pleasant Soil, belonging to the Archbishop and Elector of Mentz, but, in regard of the convenient Situation of it much aimed at, many times attempted, and sometimes forcibly possessed, both by the Lantgraves of Hassia and Dukes of Saxony. 3. Fulda, on a River of that name, remarkable for the Monastery there founded by Boniface, Archbishop of Mentz, by the name of Saint Savin, the Abbat of which is a Prince of the Empire, Chancellor of the Empire, and Lord of a goodly Territory in this Country, called from hence Stiff Fulda. 4. Frankenberg, on the Eder also, so called from the French, who encamped there in their Wars against the Saxons; first founded by Theodorick the French King, Anno 520, but much enlarged by Charles the Great about the year 804. 5. Eschwege, on the brow of an Hill, near the River Werra; of great trading for Wood, of which the Fields adjoining yield a rich increase. Being destroyed by the Hungarians it was re-edified and enlarged by the Emperor Henry the 2. and having suffered much misery in the long War between Adolph Archbishop of Mentz and the Lantgraves of Hassia, it fell at last into the possession of the Lantgrave, Anno 1387. 6. Melsingen, on the River Fuld. 7. Darmstadt, lately, if not at the present, the Seat and Inheritance of Count Ludowick, of the younger House of the Lantgraves, taken prisoner by Count Mansfeld, Anno 1622, and his whole Country exposed unto spoil and rapine, because (besides many other ill offices) he was the chief persuader of the Princes of the Union to disband their Forces; provided for defence of themselves and the Palatinate, and to reconcile themselves to the Emperor. 8. Marburg, the seat of the second House of the Lantgraves, descending from that Philip who was Lantgrave in the time of Charles the fifth, whom he so valiantly withstood; pleasantly seated on the Lon, amongst Vine Downs and shady mountains; honoured with an University, founded here by Lewis Bishop of Munster, Anno 1426, and beautified with a magnificent Castle (the ordinary dwelling of those Princes) situate on an high Hill somewhat out of the Town, which gives it a very gallant Prospect over the Town and Country. 9. Geissen, a Town belonging to the Lantgraves of Cassels, and a small University also. 10. Dietz, upon the River Lon, belonging also to the House of Cassels. 11. Cassels, the chief Town and ordinary Residence of the Lantgraves of the elder House, who are hence sometimes called the Lantgraves of Cassels: commodiously seated in a pleasant and fruitful Soil, and well fortified with strong earthen Walls and deep Ditches; but the Houses in it of no great beauty, being composed for the most part of Wood, Thatch and Clay.

Within the Limits of this Province is the County of WALDECK, not subject to the Lantgraves of Hassia, though included within the Bounds of it before laid down, taking up the Western parts thereof, where it meets with Westphalia: in figure very near a square, each side of which is of the length of six ordinary Duitsch, or twenty four English miles. The Soil is much of the same nature with the rest of Hassia, save that it hath some veins of Quick-silver and inexhaustible Mines of Coal, which the other wanteth; these last in great plenty about Wildung and the strong Castle of Eisenberg, two of the best Towns and places of it. Others of chief note are, 3. Waldeck itself, on the River Eder, the first Seat of the Earls hereof, who have here an ancient Castle, from whence the whole Country takes its name. 4. Münsterberg, in a fair Castle: wherof live the present Earls; 5. Wittenberg, in a pleasant and fruitful Soil, betwixt the Rivers Twische and Abra. 6. Corbach, famous in the times of Albertus Magnus for its Golden Mines, yielding great profit to these Earls. The Pedigree of which Earls is fetched from one Wittikind Earl of Snalberg, whom Charles the Great made advocate or Patron of the Church of Paderborn in Westphalia, being an Office in those times of great Jurisdiction. By Wittikind the second, one of his Successors: this Office was surrendered into the Hands of the Chapter, for the sum of 300 marks in Silver; and to cut off all farther Claims, Henry, the Nephew of this Wittikind by his Son Orto, was by the Chapter gratified with the Town of Waldeck, of which he was the first Earl; whose Nephew Henry, surnamed Ferrens, subdued Corbach, Anno 1366, and added it to his Estate. By a third Henry Grandchild of this Ferrens, or Man of Iron, this Earldom, formerly held in Fee of the Church of Paderborn, was first under the Patronage and Protection of the Lantgraves of Hassia, Anno 1428, as it continueth to this day. The Earls hereof content with their own Estates, and more added to the Book than unto the Sword, have added little in the Wars to improve their Fortunes.

The ancient Inhabitants of the whole, both Waldeck and the rest of Hassia, and also of the Country of Nassau in Vettravia near adjoining, were the Catti or Chatti, mentioned by the Ancients. It was first conquered (after the withdrawing of the Roman Forces) by the Hessi, and both subdued not long after by the Thuringians: subject unto the Lantgraves of Duringen, till the death of Henry the last of the Male-issue of Lewis of Orleans. In the division of whose Estate, the Western moiety of Duringen fell to the share of Henry Duke of Brabant, one of the Competitors who leaving the Title of Lantgrave of Duringen to the Marquess of Mishia, took to himself the Title of the Lantgrave of Hessen, in memory of the Hessi spoken of before. Of his Successors the most puissant was that Philip who in the time of Charles the fifth much swayed the Affairs of Germany, Anno 1520, he discomfited King Ferdinand, and restored Ulric to the Dukedom of Wittenberg. Anno 1530, he united all the Protestant Princes and Cities of Germany in common League at Smalcald, for the defence of the Protestant Religion. Anno 1545, he undertook the Cause of Goslar against the Duke of Brunswick, whom in a set Battle he took prisoner, together with his Son, and possessed his Country. Anno 1548, he united all the Princes and Cities of Germany in an offensive and defensive League against Charles the fifth. But that War succeeded not prosperously. For the Duke of Saxony, his perpetual Confederate, being taken prisoner, he submitted himself to the Emperor at Kala, or Hale in Duringen; his sons-in-Law, Duke Maurice, the Marquess of Brandenburg, and Wolfgang Prince of Deuxponts, having given their Bonds for his return. The Condition of his Pardon were first, that he should dismantle all his Towns, except Cassels. 2. that he should yield up unto the Emperor all his Munition. 3. That he should pay unto the Emperor 150000 Crowns the same night he was by the Duke of Alva invited to Supper, his Sons-in-Law of Saxony and Brandenburg accompanying him. After Supper he was contrary to the Laws of Hospitality and the Emperor's exact Promise; detained Prisoner. The fallacy stood thus: In the Emperor's Compact with the three Princes the words were, that the Lantgrave should be kept, Nicht in einig gefengnes, that is, not in any Prison; which the Emperor's Secretary, by a small dash of his Pen turned into Nicht in ewig gefengnes, that is, Not in everlasting prison. Well in prison he staid five years, which being expired, he was again set at large by Duke Narrice the Overthrower thrower and Restorer of the German Liberty. The residue of these Lantgraves in their several times occur in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Lantgraves of HASSIA.

- 1263 1. Henry of Brabant, Son of Henry Duke of Brabant, and of Sophia his Wife, Daughter of Lewis the sixth, Lantgrave of Thuringia, after a nine years War betwixt him and the Marquess of Misnia, divided the Estate, and took unto himself the Title of Lantgrave of Hessen.
  - 1308 2. Otho and John, Sons of Henry.
  - 1323 3. Henry II. and Lewis, Sons of Otho.
  - 1376 4. Herman, the Son of Lewis.
  - 1414 5. Lewis III. Son of Herman, furnished the Mild.
  - 1458 6. Lewis III. Son of Lewis the Mild.
  7. William, the eldest Son of Lewis the third, dispossessed of his Estate by
  8. William II. his youngest Brother.
  - 1509 9. Philip, the famous Lantgrave spoken of before, Son of William the second.
  - 1567 10. William III. eldest Son of Philip, succeeded in one moiety of the Estate, and resided at Cassell, the other moiety being divided betwixt his Brethren, Ludowick of Marburg, and George of Darmstadt, Father of Ludowick of Darmstadt before mentioned.
  - 1590 11. Maurice, eldest Son of William the third.
  12. William IV. Son of Maurice, now living, 1648.
- The Arms of these Lantgraves are Azure, a Lion Barry of Eight pieces, Argent and Gules crowned Or, Which being properly and originally the Arms of the ancient Dukes of Franconia, were given by Conradus Salicus, Duke of Franconia, and Emperour, to Lewis of Orleans, at such time as he invested him in the Lantgravedom of Thuringia: on the expiration of whose line they were challenged and born by the Lantgraves of Hassia, as the direct Heirs of Lewis the 6. and his Brother Henry, the last male Princes of that House.

21. WESTPHALIA.

WESTPHALIA is bounded on the East with Hassia, Brunswick, and part of Lunenbourg; on the West with the Bishoprick of Colen, Cleve, Over-Iffel, West and East-Friesland, and the German Ocean; on the North with the Elb, and the Dukedom of Holstein; and on the South with Weteravia, and some part of Hassia.

It was thus called of the Walpburg, a Tribe or Division of the Saxons, distinguished heretofore into the Transalbinos, inhabiting beyond the Elb or Albis, in the County of Holstein, now a part of Denmark; the Oostphali, betwixt the Elb, the Ocean, with the River of Sala and the Wefer taking up the Bishopricks of Breme, Vreden, Hildesheim, Halberstadt and Meysdeburg, with the Dukedoms of Lunenbourg and Brunswick; the Angriwarians, taking up the North-west part of the modern Westphalen, betwixt the Bishoprick of Breme and the Earldom of Oldenburg; and finally, the Westphali or Western Saxons, inhabiting the rest of the modern Westphalen with the Earldoms of Mark, Berg, Zuphen, the Seignioury of Over-Iffel, and some parts of Gelderland and Holland. But the Saxons being subjugated by the power of the French, and several new Estates erected out of that old Stock; the remnant of the Westphali and Angriwarians (the Bishoprick of Breme being added unto the account) were comprehend and united in the name of WESTPHALIA.

The Soil according to the several parts of it, is of different figures; the parts adjoining to the Wefer being defert and barren; those towards the Earldoms of Mark and Berg mountainous and full of Woods; the Bishoprick of Bremen, except towards the Elb, full of dry Sands Heaths and unfruitful Thickets, like the wilde parts of Windsor Forrest betwixt Stanes and Fernham. In other parts it is exceeding plentiful of Corn, and of excellent Pasturage; stored with great plenty of wild Fruits, and (by reason of the many Woods) abundance of Acorns; with infinite Herds of Swine (which they breed up with those natural helps) of so good a relish, that a Gamon of Westphalie Bacon is reckoned for a principal Dish at a great man's Table.

The old Inhabitants heretofore were the Chanci majores about Bremen; the Chamavi, Angriwarii and Bructeri, inhabiting about Munster, Osnaburg, and so towards the Land of Colen; and part of the Cherusci (before spoken of) taking up those parts which lie nearest unto Brunswick and Lunenbourg. All of them were vanquished by Drusus the Son-in-Law of Augustus, but soon restored to their former Liberty by the great Overthrow given by the Cherusci and their Associates to Quintilius Varus. Afterwards uniting into one name with the French, they expelled the Romans out of Gaul, leaving their forsaken and ill inhabited Seats to be taken by the Saxons, with whom the remainders of them did incorporate themselves both in Name and Nation. Of that great Body it continued a considerable Member, (both when a Kingdom and a Dukedom) till the Proscription and Deprivation of Duke Henry the Lion: at what time the parts beyond the Wefer were usurped by Bernard Bishop of Paderborn; those betwixt the Wefer and the Rhene, by Philip Archbishop of Colen, whose Successors still hold the Title of Dukes of Westphalen; the Bishopricks of Breme, Munster, Paderborn and Minden, having been formerly endowed with goodly Territories, had some accretions also out of this Estate, every one catching hold of that which lay nearest to him. But not to make too many Subdivisions of it, we will divide it only into these two parts, viz. 1. Westphalen specially so called, and 2. the Bishoprick of Bremen.

1. In WESTPHALIA specially so called, which is that part heretofore which lieth next to Cleve, the places of most observation are, 1. Gefche a Town of good repute;
2. Brals a Village of great beauty;
3. Arnsberg and 4. Fredeborch, honoured with the Title of Prefectures.
5. Wadenborch: 6. Homburg, Lordship it over fair and spacious Territories. All which with two Lordships and eight Prefectures, more dispersed from the Dukedom of Engern and County of Sarland, belonging unto the Bishop of Colen, the titular Duke of Westphalen, and really of Angriwaria, (Engern) as he styles himself: the Title and possession of Duke of Engern being acquired unto this See by Bruno Archbishop heretofore, Son of Henry the first, Emperour and King of Germany, furnished the Fowler, with the consent of Otho the first, his elder Brother.
7. Mountabour, (perhaps Mont-Tabor) seated in that part heretofore which is called Westerwald; a Town of consequence, belonging to the Elector of Triers.
8. Rhenen, 9. Schamlat, and 10. Beckem; reasonable good Towns; all of the Bishoprick of Munster.
11. Munster it self famous for the Treaty, and Conclusions made upon that Treaty for the peace of Germany, seated upon the River Em, and so called from a Monastery here founded by Charles the great, which gave beginning to the Town; supposed to be that Mediolanum which Ptolemy placeth in this Tract. A beautiful and well fortified City, and the See of a Bishop, who is also the Temporal Lord of it famous for the woful Tragedies here acted by a lawless

crue of Anabaptists, who chose themselves a King (that famous Tailor, John of Leyden) whom they called King of Sion, as they named the City New Jerusalem, proclaimed a Community both of Goods and Women, cut off the heads of all that opposed their doings; and, after many fanatical and desperate actions, were by the care and industry of the Bishop and his Confederates brought to condign punishment. The Story is to be seen at large in Sleiden, Mr. Hooker's Preface, and some modern Pamphlets, wherein, as in a Mirrour, we may plainly see the face of the present Times. 12. Osnaburg, first built, as some say, by Julius Caesar, as others, by the Earls of Engern, but neither so ancient as the one, nor of so late a standing as the others make it. Here is an Episcopal See, founded by Charles the Great, who gave it all the Privileges of an University; liberally endowed at the first erection of the same, and since so well improved both in Power and Patrimony, that an alternate Succession in it by the Dukes of Brunswick hath been concluded on in the Treaty of Munster, as a fit Compensation for the Bishoprick of Halberstadt, (otherwise disposed of by that Treaty) of late enjoyed wholly by that Family 13. Quakenburg, on the River Hase. 14. Warendorp, and 15. Wildenhausen; Towns of that Bishoprick. 16. Paderborn an Episcopal See also, founded by Charles the Great at the first Conversion of the Saxons, more ancient than strong, yet more strong than beautiful. 17. Ringelstein, and 18. Ossendorf; belonging to the Bishop of Paderborn. 19. Minden, upon the Wefer, another of the Episcopal Sees founded by Charles the Great, and by him liberally endowed with a goodly Patrimony: converted to Lay-uses since the Reformation, under colour of Administration of the Goods of the Bishoprick, and now, by the Conclusions at Munster, settled for ever on the Electors of Brandenburg, with the Title of Prince of Minden. 20. Rinzen, a strong Town, conveniently seated on the Wefer, not far from Minden, to the Bishop whereof it doth belong.

Hitherto one would think that Westphalen had formerly been a part of S. Peter's Patrimony, belonging wholly to the Clergy: but there are some Free Cities, and Secular Princes which have shares therein. As 1. Warburg, a neat Town, but seated on an uneven piece of ground, near the River Dimula; a Town which tradeth much in good Ale, brewed here, and sold in all parts of the Country: heretofore a County of it self under the Earls heretofore, now governed in the nature of a Free Estate, and reckoned an Imperial City. 2. Brakel, accounted of as Imperial also. 3. Harvorden, a Town of good strength and note, governed by its own Laws and Magistrates, under the Protection of Colen. 4. Lemgow, belonging heretofore to the Earls of Lippe; but by them so well privileged and enfranchised, that now it governeth it self as a Free Estate. Here is also 5. the Town and County of Ravenberg, belonging anciently to the Dukes of Cleve, and now in the Right of that House to the Elector of Brandenburg; as also 6. the Town and County of Lippe, lying on the West side of the Wefer; the Pedigree of the Earls whereof some fetch from that St. Marlinus who defended the Roman Capitol against the Gauls, (they might as well derive it from the Geefe which preserved that Capitol;) others with greater modesty look no higher for it than to the time of Charles the Great; one of the noble Families of the ancient Saxons. 7. Here also stands the Town and Castle of Aremberg, commanding over a large and goodly Patrimony, thereunto adjoining, which being much increased by the accession of Sedan in the neighbouring Belgium, was by the Heir-general of this House conveyed in Marriage to Engelbert, the 9. Earl of Mark, whose second Son, called Eberhard, (but the only one he had by this Enter) succeeded in his Mother's Estates and Honours, which were kept undivided, till Eberhard, the 6. Lord thereof of the House of Mark, contenting himself with the Titles and Estates of Aremberg, left Sedan and the pieces which belonged unto it to his younger brother Robert. The great Grandchild of this Eberhard, called also Robert, created the first Earl of Aremberg, left his Estates and Titles to his Sister Margaret, married to John Lord of Brabant, a person of great note and power in the Belgick Provinces, and faithful to the last in the Cause and Quarrel of King Philip the 2. in which finally he lost his life, Anno 1568, leaving both his Estates and Title unto Charles his Son, frequently mentioned by the name of Charles Earl of Aremberg in the Stories of the Belgick Wars, in which he was no less considerable for his eminent Valour, than his singular Fidelity to his Lord and Master. Some other Lords and Earls here are, but these most considerable: all of them Homagers of the Empire, but their Acknowledgments heretofore little more than titular; though since in danger of performing more real Services; the Emperour Ferdinand the 2. after the Surprise of Holstein and some part of Denmark, Anno 1627, gaining so far upon this Country, that had not the King of Sweden come in so seasonably, he had made himself absolute Master of it, and, by the opportunity of the situation of it, on the back of the Netherlands, forced the United States to some great Extremities. As for the Title of Duke of Westphalen and Engern, it hath been long used (as before was said) by the Bishops of Colen; as also (but with better Right as to that of Westphalen) by the House of Lunenbourg, descended from the ancient Electoral Family, writing themselves in that regard Dukes of Saxony, Westphalen, and Angriwaria or Engern.

2. The Bishoprick of BREME lieth on the other side of the Wefer, extending as far as to the Elb and the German Ocean. So called of 1. Breme, the principal City, seated on the Wefer, there broad and navigable; the City by that means well traded, populous, and rich, beautified with fair and even Streets, and very strongly fortified against all Invasions both by Art and Nature, the Town being so seated amongst Fens, occasioned by the Over-flowings of the River, that it may be easily drowned on all sides, to keep off an Enemy, adorned also with a spacious market-place, a fair Council-house, and a large Cathedral, the See of the Archbishop, who is the Temporal Lord of the Town and Territory. Other Towns of special note are 2. Osnaburg, not far from Byeme, from whence great quantity of Linnen is brought yearly to England and other places. 3. Wunsten, on the Wefer also. 4. Osterendorp, on the River Bolla, not far from the fall thereof into the Ocean. 5. Roxstehude, on the Elb, not far from Hamburg, but on the hither side of the water. 6. Stode, Stade, or Spalding, seated on the River Zwinge, near the fall thereof into the Elb; accounted the ancientest Town of all Saxony, and one of the first which was enrolled amongst the Hanse, and by special Privilege had the pre-emption of all the Rhenish Wine that passed by them, and the Right also of Coining money. But being over-topped by the Power and Trade of Hamburg, (5 Dutch miles from it) it grew at length so poor and in such decay, that their yearly Revenues came but to 90 liper annum, so that they were fain to sell their Privileges to the Town of Hamburg, and put themselves under the Protection of the Bishops of Breme. It revived again upon the coming thither of the English Merchants, who finding some hard measure from the Hamburgers, fixed their Staple hereby means whereof the Citizens in short time grew exceeding wealthy, the Buildings fair and and beautiful, the Town strongly fortified. It is situate in a place so easily overwhelmed with water, that the people in ostentation of their Strength and Security, used to have Ordnance of Stone planted over their Gates. But the late German Wars have made them sensible of their folly; when, notwithstanding their new Works, and an English Garrison under Sir Charles Morgan, they were compelled to submit themselves to the Earl of Tilly. An. 1627, recovered after by the Swedes, in the course of their Victories.

As for the Bishoprick of Bremen, it was first founded by Charles the Great, in the person of Willibrodus an English Saxon, one of the first Preachers of the Gospel in these parts of this Country. The Town, before that time a poor Village only, being made an Archiepiscopal See, and the Metropolitan of all the Churches of the North, quickly grew up into esteem, as the Bishop did in Power and Patrimony, till they became Lords of this Tract. It was governed since the Reformation of Religion by Lay-Bishops, or Administrators of the Rents of the Bishoprick, which under that Title they inverted to their proper use. And now of late, by the Conclusions made at Munster, is seized as an Inheritance on the Crown of Sweden, to be enjoyed, together with the Bishoprick of Verden, by the Kings thereof, with the Title of Dukes of Bremen and Verden: the ancient Liberties of those Cities, formerly granted by their Bishops, being still preserved.

12. EAST-FRIESLAND.

EAST-FRIESLAND is bounded on the East with the River Wefer, by it parted from Westphalia, on the West with the River Ems, which parteth it from Groeningen and the rest of West-Friesland, on the North with the German Ocean, and on the South with the Earldom of Marck and part of Cleveland. So called from the Frisi, who, casting out the old Inhabitants, possessed themselves of it, and called it by their own name, Friesland: divided by the Ems, or Amisus, into the Western, spoken of amongst the Netherlands, and the Eastern or East-Friesland, in which now we are.

The nature of the Soil we shall see anon, when we come to the Subdivisions of it. The chief Rivers (besides those of 1. Ems, and 2. Wefer, spoken of elsewhere) are 3. Jade, which falleth into a great Bay or Arm of the Ocean, called from hence De Jade. 4. Dollart, on which standeth the City of Emden: 5. Delm, and 6. Honn; neigbouring by Duisenhorst and Oldenburg, Towns of this Country. The whole is divided into 1. The County of Emden, or East-Friesland, properly so called; and 2. The Earldom of Oldenburg.

1. EAST-FRIESLAND—specially so called hath on the West the River Ems, on the North the Ocean, on the East and South the Earldom of Oldenburg: called also the County of EMDEN, from the fair Town of Emden, the chief City of it. The Soil hereof is very fruitful both in Corn and Pasturage, tending great store of Oxen, Horses, Wool, Swine, Butter, Cheese, and all sorts of Grain into other Countries; all of them excellent in their kind, not easily to be bettered (if equalled) in any place whatsoever. Chief Towns here are 1. Emden: so called from the Ems, on which it standeth, Dollart a small River falling hereinto it: a noted and well-traded Town, beautified with a Haven so deep and large, that the greatest Ships with full Sail are admitted into it. The people are richly furnished to have 60 ships of 200 tons apiece, and 600 lesser Barks, of their own; besides 700 Busses and Filter-boats, maintained for the most part by their Harking-fishing on the Coasts of England. The Buildings are generally fair, both private and publick, especially the Church, the Town-Hall, and Earl's Palace: This last is a strong and stately Castle, situate at the mouth of the Haven, and on all sides encompassed by the Sea, and yet not strong enough to preserve the Townsmen in their due Obedience: who in the year 1595, taking advantage of the Absence of the Earl, kept him out of their Town, because he seemed not to approve the Calvinist humour; and have since governed in the nature of a Commonwealth, confederate with the States of the United Provinces, for their better Establishment and support. So easily is Religion made a mask to disguise Rebellion. 2. Amrick, by some called Ansling, seated in the Islands, rich and well walled, of great resort by reason of the pleasure of Hunting, afforded very liberally in the Forests and Woods adjoining, drawing hither the Nobility and Gentry in great abundance. 3. Efen, on the Sea-shore, which gives the Title of an Earl to the Lord thereof; as doth also, 4. Fever, situate on the West of the River Jade; but both Baris subject to the Earl of East-Friesland. 5. Uredburg, (that is to say, the Free Village) so called from some Immunities granted by the Earls; possessed a while by those of Brunswick, who feared and garrisoned it for themselves, but in the end recovered by Ezard the 2. Earl. 6. Broock, the Seat and proper Government of the Ancestors of these Earls; from whence the parts adjoining are called Broockshierland. 7. Norden, another Prefecture or Captainship of the said Ancestors. 8. Dunort, a strong Castle and Retiring-place of the Earls. 9. Lingen, upon the Emr, a strong Town well fortified, and as well garrisoned; being long to the King of Spain, as Vicar to the Empire over all Friesland, even to Dinmarsh and the Confines of Denmark: A Dignity procured by Maximilian, Grandfather to Charles the 5. of the Emperor Frederick the 3. It is right whereof the King of Spain, as Heir of the House of Burgundy, hath some pre-eminence over Emden of little use to him since the falling off of the Belgick Provinces. More Towns of note I find not in it, but of Castles, stately Dwelling-houses, and well-built Villages, an incredible number, standing so thick, that in many places they join together: some of them being withal so large, so well peopled, and of Streets so spacious, that they may compare with many Cities in Germany. Of all which the most City-like is named Leer.

The ancient Inhabitant hereof were the Chauci minor, described by Pliny, to be so barbarous a people, and so destitute of all necessary Provision for the life of man, that they had no drink but Rain water, preserved in great Troughs before the doors of their Cottages. These were ousted or subdued by the Frisi, a neighbouring People, possessing Norrb Holland and the District of Utrecht, with the Countries of Grubing and West-Friesland, who, having once passed over the Ems, extending their Dominions as far as Denmark; governed by Kings, but intermingled with and over-powered by the Saxons, till the time of Charles the Great, by whom the last King Ribbold overcame in fight was perfwaded to receive the Sacrament of Holy Baptism: but being told that his Friends and Kinsfolks were in Hell; because no Christians, Neither will I (saith he) be of that Profession, for I love to hold along by my Kindred. After this, Friesland was a member of the French Kingdom, till the erecting of the Earldom of Holland by Charles the Bald, An. 853, at which time all of Friesland on the West side of the Ems was conferred upon him; possessed, but not without much War and Bloodshed, by his Successors, the Frisi, ever and anon rebellious against them, and killing divers of them in the open field. Those parts of it on the other side of the Emr remained unto the German Empire: governed by Deputies, Lieutenants, and Provincial Earls, accountable to the Emperors for the Administration, till the year 1453, in which Ulrick, Governour hereof for the Emperor Frederick, having got the Town of Emden out of the hands of the Hamburgers, was made Earl of East-Friesland, transmitting the Estate and Title unto his Posterity.

Earls of EAST-FRIESLAND.

- 1453 1. Ulrick, Son of Enno, the Son of Ezardus, Captains or Governours for the Empire in Broock and Norden, made the first Earl of East-Friesland by the Emperour Frederick.
- 1466 2. Ezard, the Son of Ulrick, who got Vredeburg from the Citizens of Brunswick.
- 1528 3. Enno, the Son of Ezard, who regained Greetzyl, formerly usurped by the Dukes of Geldres.
- 1540 4. Ezard II. Son of Enno, who married Katharine, Daughter to Gastavus the first of Sweden.
5. Enno II. Son of Ezard the 2. and the Lady Katherine.
- 1586 6. Rodolphus Christianus, Son of Enno the 2. who, being well affected to the Lutheran Forms, (first introduced in the time of Enno the first) was by a Calvinian party grown up in Emden, dispossessed of that City, Anno 1595.
- 1608 7. Enno-Ladovicus, Son of Rodolphus Christianus, succeeded in this Earldom on the death of his Father, and is still living, for ought I can hear unto the contrary.

The Arms of the Earls of East-Friesland are Argent, four Bendlets Azure, charged with ten Hearts Or, 4, 3, 2, 1.

2. The Earldom of OLDENBURG containeth that part of this Country which lieth on the West-side of the Wefer, betwixt the Bishoprick of Munster and East-Friesland specially so called, and so extending Northwards to the German Ocean. So called from Oldenburg, the chief City of it, and the Head of this Earldom.

The Soil hereof is exceeding rich, but in Pastures specially, which breed them infinite Herds of Cattel, and furnish not this Country only, but some of their German Neighbours, and many of the more Northern Nations, with Horses, Beeves, Sheep, Swine, Butter, Cheese. Here is also good store of Pulse, Barley and Oats; plenty of Fruits, and Trees of all sorts; large Woods, and those well stored with Venison, which yield unto the Gentry the delights of Hunting. But the Air is cold and foggy in some extremity; especially in Winter, and nigh the Sea.

Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Oldenburg, on the River Honn, repaired, if not built, by Orho the Great, who founded the Church of S. John Baptist. A Town of no great state or beauty, the Houses being generally of Clay, but the Castle (the Dwelling-place of the Earls) of well-hewn Stones; of an orbicular form, with deep Ditches of water, the Town and Castle both being strongly fortified. 2. Delmenhorst, on the River Delm, a strong place and of great importance, built in the year 1247 by Orho, Brother of Earl Christian the 2. and having been 65 years in possession of the Bishops of Munster, was suddenly surprized on Palm-Sunday morning by Anthony Earl of Oldenburg, Anno 1547, continuing ever since part of this Estate. 3. Beckhusen, on a River which falleth not far off into the great Bay or Arm of the Sea which is called De Jade. 4. Egnard. 5. Ovelgard; both seated on a long Languet or Demy-Iland betwixt the said De Jade and the River Wefer, called Buriada: both taken and the last well fortified by John Earl of Oldenburg, Anno 1520, belonging formerly to the Prefecture of East-Friesland, but never brought under the command of the Earls thereof. 6. Westerberg, the chief Town, of a spacious Territory. 7. Vriejade, a strong piece on the River Jade, built by Earl Christiern, one of the younger Branches of the House of Oldenburg, about the year 1400. 8. Mellum: 9. Jadelle, places of principal importance; the one on the River Jade, the other near the Ocean. Here is also within this Earldom the Province of Amerlander, supposed by some to have been the Seat of the Ambrones, who accompanied the Cimbri and Teniones in their Expedition towards the Roman Provinces, and were slain by Marins.

As for the Earls of Oldenburg, they derive themselves from Walpert, one of the Nephews of Witikind, the last King and first Duke of the Saxons, who having about the year 850, built a strong Castle on the Borders of Bremen, in the honour of his Wife Alteburg, (whom he dearly loved) called it Alteburgum, so called by the Latinists to this day, by the Germans Oldenborch. But his Male-Issue failing in Frederick the 7. Earl, it came to one Elimar, the Son of Haino, a Nobleman of the Frisian blood, who had married Richsa, the Daughter of John, the fifth Earl of this Family. From him in a direct Line descended Christian or Christiern, eldest Son of Theodorick (who, being fortunately advanced to the Crown of Denmark, An. 1448, left his Estate in this Earldom (but reserving the Title, according to the fashion of Germany) to his Brother Gerrard, the better to take him off from his Pretensions to the Dukedom of Slewick and the Earldom of Holslein, in which he did pretend a share. The Patrimony of it was much improved by the additions of the Countries of Rustringen, Olfringen, and Wangerland, all lying on the German Sea, bequeathed by the last Will and Testament of the Lady Mary, Countess of Fever in East-Friesland, to John Earl of Oldenburg, the third from Gerrard. The Succession of these Earls, in regard the Royal Line of Denmark, and by consequence of Great Britain, is descended from them, I have here subjoined in this ensuing Catalogue of

The Earls of OLDENBURG.

- 850 1. Walpert, of the Race of Witikind, the first Earl of Oldenburg.
- 856 2. Theodorick, the Son of Walpert.
3. Theodorick II., the Son of Theodorick the 1.
4. Orho, Son of Theodorick the 2.
5. John, the Son of Orho, accompanied the Emperour Henry the 2. in his Wars against the Greeks and Sarazens, Anno 1007.
6. Haino, surnamed the Glorious, Son of John.
7. Frederick, Son of Haino, fortunate in his Wars against the Frisians; the last of the Male-line of this House.
8. Elimarus, the Son of Haino, a Nobleman of the Frisian blood, and of Richsa his Wife, the Daughter of John the fifth Earl.
9. Elimarus II. Son to Elimar the first.
10. Christianus, Son of Elimar the 2. surnamed the Courageous, or the Warlike; a professed Enemy of Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony, from whom he took the City of Breme.
11. Maurice, the Son of Christian, an Associate of Arnolph Earl of Holslein in his Wars with Denmark.
12. Christian II. Son of Maurice.
13. John II. Son of Christian the 2.
14. John III. Son of John the 2.
15. Conrade, the Son of John the third.
16. Christian III. Son of Conrade, a Student in Cos- len, where he was initiated into holy Orders, which he relinquished, much against the will of his brother Maurice, on the death of his Father.

17. Theodorick, Son of Christian the 3. the first Earl of Delmenhorst of this Line; which fell to him at the death of Nicolas Archbishop of Breme, descended from a younger Son of John the second.
- 1440 18. Christian IV. Son of Theodorick, and of Hedwig, Sister and Heir of Gerrard and Adolphus, Dukes of Selwick and Earls of Holstein, elected on the commendation of his Uncle Adolphus to the Crown of Denmark, Anno 1448.
- 1448 19. Gerrard, the Brother of Christian the 4. a Prince of an unquiet spirit, always in Wars, and always worsted. He lost the Town of Delmenhorst to the Bishop of Munster.
- 1500 20. John IV. Son of Gerrard, repaired the Ruines of his Estate, and seded the Distractions of it in the time of his Father, being then in Exile; and after very much enlarged it by the reduction of Buitada.
- 1526 21. Anthony, the Son of John the 4. by a sudden Surprise recovered Delmenhorst from the Bishop of Munster, Anno 1547, which he strongly fortified.
- 1573 22. John V. Son of Anthony, enlarged this Earldom with the Provinces of Rustringen, Oosfringen, and Wangerland, bequeathed to him by the last Will of the Countess of Fever, in East-Friesland.
23. Anthony II. Brother of John the 5. in whose life-time he was Earl of Delmenhorst, and after his death of Oldenburg also: still living, Anno 1648, for ought I can learn unto the contrary.

And thus we see the present estate of Germany, distracted and divided amongst many Princes, Prelates, and Incorporated Towns, the chief of which are herein mentioned and described. But besides these there are many others of less note and smaller Territories, which yet are absolute and free: innumerable that in one day riding a Traveller may twice or thrice meet with divers Laws and divers Coins; every Free Prince and Free City (whose Laws the Emperours are sworn to keep inviolable) having power to make what Laws and coin what Money they will. And hence, in the Censure of Kingdoms, the King of Spain is said to be Rex hominum, because of his Subjects reasonable Obedience; the King of France, Rex Asinorum, because of their infinite Taxes and Impositions; the King of England, Rex Diabolorum, because of his Subjects often Insurrection against and Deposition of their Princes: but the Emperour of Germany is called Rex Regum, because there is such a number of Reguli or Free Princes which live under his Command; or rather at their own Command, (for they do even what they list) as the Emperour Maximilian the first well noted.

And, to say truth, the publick Government thereof is nothing less than Monarchical; the Emperour being accompanied amongst the Princes but as the chief Officer of the Empire; not reckoned of, by Bodin and others of our great Statists and Civilians, as an absolute Monarch, such as the King of England, France and Spain, are confessed to be. For the Privileges of the Free Cities being made perpetual, the great Estates Hereditary, and the Empire Eligible; the Emperours were brought at last to such low condition, as to be made accountable to the States of the Empire; who if they were perfwaded in their Consciences, or but think they be so, that he is likely by his Male-administration to destroy the Empire, or that he will not hearken unto good Advice, ab Electorum Collegio Casarea majestate private potest, (as may Author hath it) he may be deprived by the Electors, and a more fit and able man chosen into the place, and that too, as the Emperour Jodocus Barbanus hath declared in one of his Constitutions, An. 1410, sine Insidelitatis vel Rebellionis crimine, without incurring the crimes of Treason or Disloyalty. So that the supreme Power and Majesty of the Empire seems to reside especially and contractedly in the Electoral Colledge; diffusedly, in the Imperial Diets; by way of Execution, in the chamber of Spire, and other the supreme Courts of the several Circles. But that which makes that Body which they call the Empire, is the Assembly of the Prelates, Princes and Commissioners of the Free Cities in their Diets or Parliaments, the Emperour presiding in them: whom he that saw adorned in his Royal Robes, with the Imperial Crown and Scepter, with the Titles of Cesar and Augustus given at every word, would think that the whole Action did take life from him; whereas, indeed, he hath not so much Privilege as a Negative voice, but is to put in execution such Decrees and Sanctions as these Estates assembled have thought fit to make; not able to do any act by his own Authority, which may speak him Emperour. But, on the other side, the Princes take power unto themselves of making Laws for, and imposing Taxes on, their Subjects; and of raising War upon one another, or against a third; and doing many other acts of supreme Authority, which in the Emperour would be counted matter of Male-administration. Such Points as these, together with the appointing of Judges and the like chief Magistrates, (as they relate unto the Empire) are not to be concluded of but in general Diets; which may be summoned by or without the Emperour, as occasion serveth. And to this weakening of the Majesty and Power Imperial the neighbouring Princes have afforded their best assistance, jealous of their own Interests and decrease of Power, if that vast Body so well limbed should be strongly jointed, and all the several Members of it united under the command of one supreme Head. Clear proof whereof we have in those solemn Leagues and Confederations made in their several times against Charles the fifth and the late Emperour Ferdinand the 2. as soon as they began to be in some possibility of setting the Imperial Majesty in its proper Splendour, and bringing down the Princes of it to a lower pitch.

As for the means by which the Empire is attained, it is, and hath of long time been, by the way of Election, as before was noted. The business was first projected in the Court of Rome by Gregory the first, then Pope, who, being a Native of this Country, thought it the most expedient course to continue the Imperial Title among those of his Nation. But whatsoever was pretended, the Design of it chiefly was to make the Emperours less powerful, and distract the Germans (whom they feared) into Parts and Factions, that so the Poles might have the better opportunity to grow great in Italy. And that the Emperour might be such as the Pope should like of, the matter was so ordered, that the one half of the Electors should be always of the Ecclesiasticks, who, being obnoxious to the Poles, and for the most part driving on their Interest, were very like to serve him on all occasions. The Electors only fix in number: that is to say, 1. The Archbishop of Mentz, Chancellour of the Empire, 2. The Archbishop of Colen, Chancellour of Italy, 3. The Archbishop of Triers, Chancellour of France, 4. The Count-Palatine of the Rhene, Arch-Sewer, 5. The Duke of Saxony, Lord Marshal, and 6. the Marquess of Brandenburg, Lord Chamberlain. Upon equality of Voices the Duke of Bohemia (now King) was to come in for a Seventh; who by Office is to be chief Cup-bearer in all great Solemnities. For upon days of great Solemnities, as Elections, Inaugurations, the first days of the Imperial Diets, and the like to these, these Offices are performed only; and then performed in this manner following, either in person or by Proxy. Before the Palace-Gate stands a heap of Oats, so high that it reacheth to the breast of the Horse on which the Duke of Saxony rideth, having in his hand a silver Wand and a silver Measure, both which together are to weigh 200 Marks. The Duke, still sitting on his Horse, filleth up the Measure with Oats, then sticks his Wand in the remainder of the heap, delivereth the measure of Oats unto some of his Servants who stand nearest unto him, and so attends the Emperour into the Court. The Emperour being entered and fate down at the Table, the three Spiritual Electors, standing orderly together, say the Grace before him. Then cometh the Marquess of Brandenburg on Horse-back also, with a Basin of Water in his hand, (the Basin being of the weight of 12 Marks of Silver) and a fine clean Towel on his Arm; which, lighting from his Horse, he holds to the Emperour till he wash. Next comes the Palatine of the Rhene mounted on his Horse, with four Silver Platters full of Meat, every one of the weight of three Marks of Silver; which, defending from his Horse, after due reverence made, he carrieth and placeth on the Table. And finally the Duke (or King) of Bohemia, entering the great Hall on Horse-back as the others did, with a Napkin on his Arm, and a covered Cup in his Hand of the weight of 12 Marks in Silver, alighteth from his Horse, and presenteth the Cup unto the Emperour. But we must know, that of late times these Offices are seldom or never performed by the Electors in their own persons. It is enough if they send their Ambassadors, or substitute some one or other of the Emperour's Court to do it for them.

The Election is usually celebrated at Francford on the Maine, to which place the Electors or their Deputies are to make repair on the day appointed by the Archbishop of Mentz, whose Office it is (as being Chancellour of the Empire) to issue out the Summons for this Assembly. In their passage unto Francford they are to be sufficiently guarded by every Prince through whose Territories or Dominions they are to travel; their Attendants not to exceed the number of 200 Horse, of which 50 only to be armed. When they are met, they go into S. Bartholomew's Church, the most Capacious of that City; where, after the High-Mass is said, the three Spiritual Electors laying their Hands upon their Breasts, and the Temporal Princes on the Book, make Oath to chuse a fit Temporal Head for the People of Christendom. Upon equality of Voices, as it sometimes happeneth, the Bohemian hath the casting Voice, and concludes the business. If in the space of 30 days they have not agreed upon a man, then must they have no other allowance but of Bread and Water, nor be suffered to go out of the City, till that necessity compelleth them unto some Agreement. Which being at the last resolved on, and declared accordingly, the Prince so elected is presently saluted by the Title of King of the Romans; the Title of Emperour being not properly to be given unto him, until he have received the Imperial Crown at the hands of the Pope: though since the time of Charles the fifth, without any such trouble to themselves or the Popes of Rome, the Title of both Emperour and Imperial Majesty is usually conferred upon them from their first Election. The Election being finished, and signified to the party chosen, the Inauguration was held anciently at three several places: viz. 1. at Aquisgrane, or Aken, in the Land of Gulick, where he received the Silver Crown, for the Kingdom of Germany; 2. at Millain, by the Archbishop whereof he was crowned with the Iron Crown, for Lombardy, or the Realm of Italy; 3. at Rome, where, at the hands of the Pope himself, he was crowned with a Golden Crown, for the Roman Empire. But since, those Journeys unto Rome and Millain have been long laid by; the Emperours holding their Elections to be strong enough to make good their Title to that Dignity, being merely titular, and their Inauguration at Aken to be as effectual as if they had also visited the two other Cities. The form of which Elections, the Privileges of the Electors, and other fundamental Constitutions of the German Empire, we find summed up together in the Golden Bull of Charles the 4. by him first promulgated, An. 1359. But we must know that, since the publishing of that Bull, the business of Election hath received some change as to the number and the persons of the Parties interested. For, it pleased the Emperour Ferdinand the 2. on the Proscription of Frederick the first Elector Palatine, to transfer the Electoral Dignity, with the Office of Arch-dapifer, or Arch-Sewer, from that House to the Duke of Bavaria, the Title of Elector of Bavaria, with all the Powers and Privileges which belonged unto it, to be infeofed upon him and his Heirs for ever. Which action of the Emperour being protested against by some of the Electors, in favour of the Palatine Family, and in due care unto themselves, in not admitting such a dangerous precedent for the time to come, it was at last concluded and agreed on by the Pacification made at Munster, Anno 1648, That the Duke of Bavaria and his Heirs enjoying the said Electoral Dignity with the Upper Palatinate, according to the Translation of it from the Palatine Family spoken of before; an Eighth Electorate should be added to the former number, to be enjoyed together with the Lower Palatinate by Charles Ludowick, the now Prince Elector Palatine, and his Heirs, who also, on the failure of the Line of Bavaria, are to be repossessed of their ancient Rights, the Title of Arch-Treasurer being given unto them at the present instead of that of Arch-dapifer, or Arch-Sewer, which they had before.

Now as a Step unto the Empire, and for the better assurance of the Imperial Dignity to the Austrian Family, it was cunningly projected by Charles the fifth, (having received the Imperial Crown from Pope Clement the 7.) that his Brother Ferdinand should be chosen King of the Romans whilst himself was living, and by that means be the more certain of the Empire after his decease. Which Policy being followed by all his Successors, the Title of Rex Romanorum, or King of the Romans, is grown to be the Title of the Heir apparent, or designed Successor, in the present Empire of the Germans; as that of Cesar was from the time of Adrian, in the Empire of the ancient Romans. Inasmuch as Rex Romanorum is now defined to be one who is already so far elevated in the Empire, that on the Death, Deprivation, or Resignation of the present Emperour, he is immediately to succeed. And so accordingly it hath happened since this Act of Charles; who though he laboured under-hand to leave the Empire unto Philip his Son and Heir, whom he found capable enough of so high an Honour; yet he could not do it: it being thought by many understanding men, that on notice of this under-hand practice, his Brother Ferdinand, who had the like mind to transmit the Empire to his own Posterity, did secretly lend Duke Maurice his helping hand to drive him out of Germany, as in brief he did. As for the reasons, or, to say better, the pretences, upon which Charles did institute this Rex Romanorum, (for questionless the true reason of it was to perpetuate the Empire in the Austrian Family) they were these that follow. 1. Because that, having the command of many Nations, he could not always personally attend the Affairs of Germany. 2. The troubled Estate of Christendom, of the Empire especially, occasioned by the Preachings and Works of Luther. 3. The late rural War raised by the Boors of that Country, on the coming out of these new Doctrines, and not yet thoroughly extinct. 4. The violent power of the Turk, who, by his Conquest of a great part of Hungary, was grown too near a neighbour to them. And 5. the imminent Disobedience in all parts of the Empire. All which conjunctly seemed to require some Prince both of Power and Title to assist him in the bearing of so great a Burthen. And by these and the like suggestions he effected his Design herein, though thereby he changed in a manner the Imperial Style. For whereas the first Emperours of the House of Charles the Great were Emperours of the Romans, and Kings of Germany; the later Emperours of the House of Charles the fifth may not improperly be called Emperours of Germany, and Kings of the Romans. It is true indeed, that the wife and understanding Duke of Saxony saw farther through these Pretences than the rest of the Electors either did or would, and that the main Plot was no other, than to make Germany (as Galba said in his Oration unto Piso of the Empire of Rome) unius quasi Familiae Hereditatem, hereditary in times following to the House of Austria; and thereupon did openly deny his suffrage to the said Election. But finding that the major part of the Electors were resolved upon it, he moved for an Act to pass, prohibiting the continuance of the Imperial Title in any one Family more than three Successions. In which not able to prevail, (as the Game was played) he left the Electors to themselves, by whom Ferdinand was chosen King of the Romans, and not long after crowned at Aken with the usual Rites, Jan. 16. An. 1531. The same course was followed by this Ferdinand, when possessed of the Empire, in causing his Son Maximilian to be elected Rex Romanorum, whilst himself was living; and so by all the rest since then, as before is said.

As for the Forces of the Empire, for by that name we are to measure the Abilities and Power of Germany, we may discern them by those Levies which have been raised upon particular occasions, or by the joint consent of the Free Estates assembled in the Imperial Diets. First, for particular Levies made by private persons, we find 12000 Foot and 8000 Horse raised by the Prince Palatine of Zweibruck, for Aid of the French Hugonots against their King; and, on the other side, no fewer than 7000 Horse, under the Conduct of the Duke of Ansal and the Earl of Mansfield, for the service of that King against the Hugonots. And as for Levies made by consent of the States, we find that Charles the 5. had under his Ensigns at *Vien*na, 90000 Foot, and 35000 Horse; Maximilian the 2. at Javarin in Hungary, 34000 Horse, and full 100000 Foot; and finally, that in the War betwixt Charles the 5. and the Protestant Princes, there were no less than 150000 men on both sides: which numbers no one Country in Europe is able to equal. In a word, it is generally conceived that the Empire is able to raise 200000 Horse and Foot, with Arms, Cannon, and Ammunition of all sorts proportionable; which the instances before brought do most plainly evidence.

Touching the Revenues of the Empire, I find them estimated by Boterus, and some others since, at seven millions of Crowns yearly. Which may be true enough, taking the Kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia with the hereditary Estates of Austria into the account. But since they are not so united unto the Empire but they may at some time or other be disjoined again, no reason they should come into the reckoning, unless it be as the Revenue of the Emperour, though not of the Empire. But as for the Revenue of the Empire it self, taken abstractedly from the personal and Patrimonial Estate of the Emperour, whosoever he be, it can amount to no such sum: the Tribute paid by the Free or Imperial Cities (at least 60 in number) amounting to no more per ann. than 15000 Florens, or 1500 l. English: and what is that, but like a Peppercorn for a Quit-rent, in that mighty Continent? By this we may conjecture what the rest may come to. And though, in the way of saving Charges, (which may be reckoned as a part of his Income also) the Princes and Free Cities be bound to aid him in the time of War against the Turk with 3842 Horse, and 18200 Foot, which he may challenge without troubling the Diets for it: yet War is such a great devourer, that if the Diets do not grant him greater helps, he is like to be but a sorry Gainer by the undertaking; besides the finalness of those Forces confided with the numbers they are able to raise, and the puillance of the enemy whom they are to encounter.

Finally, for the Arms of the Empire, they are Sul, an Eagle displayed with two Heads Saturn, armed and crowned Mars: the two Heads signifying (as some think) the Eastern and the Western Empires. Cuspinian, a learned German, conceives rather that these Arms are two Eagles conjoined, and not one Eagle with two Heads: and that they were taken up by the German Nation, in memory of the three Legions of Quintilius Varus discomfitted by them; at what time they seized on two of the Roman Eagles, (the Military Ensign of that People) the third being cast into the Fens by the Standard-bearer. But whether it be one or two, certain it is that the one Head is quite pulled off, and the whole Body quite stripped of all its Feathers; the Imperial Dignity being little more than titular, despoiled and stript of all authority appertaining to it.

There are in Germany.

OF DENMARK.

THE Kingdom of DENMARK, or DANEMARK, reckoning in the Additions of the Dukedom of Holftein and the great Continent of Norway, with the Isles thereof, now all united and incorporated into one Estate, is bounded on the East with the Baltick Sea, and some part of Sweden, on the West with the main Western Ocean, on the North-East with a part of Sweden, full North with the main Frozen Seas, and on the South with Germany, from which it is divided on the South-west by the River Albis, and on the South-east by the Trave; a little Isthmus or Neck of Land uniting it to that Continent.

It took this name from the Danes, of long time the Inhabitants and Possessors of it; so called quasi Danorum Tractum, five Regio, (as Mercator hath it,) because the Country of that People: but rather quasi Danorum limites, the Bounds or Marches of the Danes, bordering close upon the Dutch, from whom it hath the name of Danemarch.

As for the Situation of it in regard of the Heavens, it lieth partly in the Northern temperate Zone, and partly within the Arctic Circle; extending from the middle Parallel of the tenth Clime, or 55. Degree of Latitude, where it joineth with Germany, as far as the 71. Degree, where it hath no other bound but the Frozen Ocean. By which account, the longest Day in the most Southern parts hereof is 17 hours and a quarter: but in the parts extremely North, they have no Night for two whole months, three weeks, one day, and some seven hours over; as on the other side, no Day for the like quantity of time, when the Sun is most remote from them, in the other Tropick. The Air hereof by consequence must be sharp and bitter, even in the very warmest places. Of which, and of the nature of the Soil, we shall speak more punctually in the Description and Survey of the several Parts.

The Inhabitants generally are of good Stature, clear of Complexion, well coloured, for the most part healthful and long-lived; for though they eat and drink beyond measure, they have good Digestions. In Manners they are very severe, crafty and provident in the managing of their Affairs, but proud withal, and (as the Historian said of another person) Omnium quæ dixerant fecerant ostentatores, great Vaunters of whatsoever they do or say, highly opinionated of their own Actions, and peremptory in maintaining their own Opinions: religious, observers of their Words and Contracts, and strict in executing Justice, especially in punishing of Thieves and Pirates. Such of them as do follow the Wars prove reasonable good Souldiers, both by Sea and Land, but fitter for the Sea, than Field-service. The Magistrate is wise rather by experience than study, though they love Learning, and easily attain all Languages which they give their minds to. The old men are covetous, the young men thrifty, and the Merchant ambitious. The Nobility and Gentry are generally of as ancient Families as most in Christendom; here being some of those Houses still remaining which were present at the Pacification made betwixt Charles the Great and Hemmingus King of the Danes: and, which adds much unto their Honour, they keep their Blood unmixt with Marriages with the Vulgar sort, and reckon it for an high disgrace to change their Arms, or make any addition thereunto. The Women are fair, discreet, and courteous, and knew well how to govern their Households; exceeding fruitful in bearing of Children, but delivered of them with great difficulty. Both Sexes speak the Dutch, or German, common (but with some difference in the pronunciation) to all the Northern Nations in Norway and Swethland.

Of no great note for men of Learning in the former time, it hath been fortunate in these last for 1. Tycho Brahe, that renowned Astronomer; 2. Hemmingus, a well-known Divine; 3. Bartholinus, a Physician and Philosopher of good esteem; 4. John Cluverius, the Historian, &c. More famous for great Captains and men of War; especially for 1. Godfrey, or Gotticm, who settled the Government of this Kingdom, and endangered the great Realm of France. 2. Sveno, and 3. Cannus, the fortunate Conquerors of England. 4. Waldemar the 3. a right valiant Prince; but successful in his Wars against the Hanse-Towns, then newly entred into League. 5. Christiern the II. a great Commander in the Wars, but of greater Cruelty. 6. Christiern the IV. little inferior unto many of his Predecessors. To whom we may subjoin though of different Sex) Q. Margaret, the Semiramis of these Northern Countries; a Lady of a masculine Spirit, and not more fortunate than daring in all Enterprises, as she declared in the Conquest of Swethland, and Subjection of Norway; by her united to this Crown.

The Christian Faith was first preached to those of Holftein (the next-neighbouring Country unto Germany) by S. Angarim, Bishop of Bremen, the general Apostle of those Northern parts, in the year 826. Lewis the Godly then being Emperour of the West. In whose time Harald King of Denmark, being expelled his Kingdoms by the Sons of Godfrey or Getricm, was baptised at Mentz, with a great number of that people which attended on him, by the hands of Ebbo Archbishop of Rhemes, employed by the Emperour in that service; the Conversion of the whole Nation following not long after, by the power and diligence of the Emperour Otho the first, assigned by the Ministry of one Poppo the first Bishop of Arhusen; Sveno, or Swain, then reigning amongst the Danes. The Norwegians came not in till after, converted in the reign of Olaf the third, Anno 1055, or thereabouts: the English assisting in the work, and the good King so zealous in it, that he was canonized a Saint after his decease. Relapsing for the most part to their ancient Gentilism, they were finally regained unto Christianity by the means of Pope Adrian the fourth, an English-man, about the year 1156, before his assuming of the Popedom called Nicolaus Breakpear. But by whomsoever first converted, the Popes of Rome would needs pretend some Power and Jurisdiction over them. Which when they began to exercise with too much Authority, Waldemar the third is said to have returned this Answer, Naturam habemus à Deo, Regnum à Subditis, Divitias à Parentibus, Religionem à Romana Ecclesia; quam, si nobis invideret, renunciamus pot præsentem: that is to say, We hold our Life from God, our Crown from our Subjects, our Riches from our Ancestors, our Religion from the Church of Rome; which if you envy us, we do here remit it by these presents. But this Renunciation, though then threatened, was not made till afterwards; when the whole mass of Popery was abolished by King Frederick the first, using therein the Ministry of Bugenhage, a Divine of Pomeran, by whom they were reformed according to the Doctrine of the Lutheran Churches.

As for the Government of the Church since that Reformation, it continueth as before it was, by Archbishops and Bishops in number as before, but much abridged of their Revenues, and a great part of their Power. For Frederick, though he found it necessary to remove the old Bishops, (not one of which would be periwaded to the change of Religion) yet he substituted others in their places, allowing them a convenient Maintenance, with a power of Prebendancy in all Church-Assemblies, where they are to take the Advice of other Presbyters along with them; and out of such Assemblies to receive Complaints, to provide remedy against Scandals, and to order all matters, as peculiar Inspectors, which concern the Church. So that in all the Kings Dominions there are two Archbishops and thirteen Bishops: that is to say, the Archbishop of Lunden, the Bishops of Roskilde, Odensee, Ripen, Wiborch, Arhusen, Sleswick, and Hadersleve, for the Kingdom of Denmark, the Archbishop of Nidaros, the Bishops of Bergen, Anglo, Staffanger, and Hammar, for the Realm of Norway, and the Bishops of Halar and Schalhel, for the Isle of Iceland: the Churches of Holstein (formerly under the Bishops of Hamburg and Lubeck) being governed by Superintendents, as the rest of the Lutherans.

The whole Body of the Estate (as appears by this) consisteth chiefly of three Membets: viz. 1. the Dukedom of Holstein; containing Wagerland, Ditmarsch, Stormaria, and Holstein, specially so called. 2. the Kingdom of Denmark, comprehending both Jutlands, part of Scandia, and the Hemodes, or Baltic Islands: and 3. the Kingdom of Norway, consisting of Norway itself, and the Islands of the Northern Ocean. Which parts we shall survey in order, as before laid down; premising first a word or two of the Cimbrick Chersonese, in which the Dukedom of Holstein and the two Jutlands are contained.

The CIMBRICK CHERSONESE.

THE CIMBRICK CHERSONESE hath on the East the Baltic Sea, on the West the main German Ocean, on the North a part of the Ocean bending into the narrow Streight or Fretum which they call the Sund, on the South-west the great River of Albis, on the South-East the small River of Trave, betwixt which is the Neck or Isthmus which unites it to Germany. I know that some contract it into narrower bounds, and limit it upon the South with the River Eyder: but I have drawn it down to the Elbe and the Trave, which give it more resemblance to a Chersonese or Demy-Island than the other doth, dissenting in this point from the common Opinion. It had the name of Chersonesus,  $\chi\epsilon\rho\sigma\omicron\nu\sigma\epsilon\varsigma$   $\kappa\alpha\iota$   $\nu\eta\varsigma$ , a Terra & Insula, it being the same with a Peninsula in the Latine. Of which name there are 5. most famous: that is to say, 1. Peloponnesus, in Greece, which is now called Morea; 2. Thracia Chersonesus, in Thracia, near the Sea Propontus; 3. Taurica Chersonesus, in the Euxine Sea, now a part of Tartary; 4. Aurea Chersonesus, in India, which we now call Malacca, (of all which we shall speak in their proper places;) and 5. Cimbrica Chersonesus, where now we are. This last was so called from the Cimbrs, the first Inhabitants hereof, originally descended from Gomer, the son of Japhet; thence called Gomerii and Cimmerici, by contraction Cimbrs. Leaving the Plains of Phrygia as too narrow for them, they sought out new Dwellings, and are said to have first dwelt on the banks of Palus Maotis; where they gave name to the Bosphorus Cimmericus there being. Being overcome by the Scythians, they removed their Seats more Northward, into a Country bounded according to Plutarch, by the great Ocean on the one side, and the Forest of Hercynia on the other: within which Bounds is the Peninsula or Country where we now are. They were a people of extraordinary big Stature, having blew and red Eyes, and lived most upon Theft: so that, for their sakes,  $\kappa\iota\mu\beta\rho\iota\kappa\omicron\varsigma$   $\nu\omicron\upsilon\omicron\alpha\iota\sigma\tau\omicron\varsigma$   $\nu\eta\varsigma$   $\chi\epsilon\rho\sigma\omicron\nu\sigma\epsilon\varsigma$ , the Germans called all Thieves Cimbers. It happened that the Ocean overflowing a great part of their Country, compelled them to seek new Seats: whereupon in great multitudes abandoning their Dwellings, they petitioned the Romans, then lordling over a great part of the World, for some place to settle in. This Request being denied, they proceeded in another manner, winning with their Swords what their Petitions could not obtain. Marcius, Sillanus, and Capis, all Roman Consuls, perished by them, so that now (saith Florus)  $\alpha\lambda\lambda\eta\lambda\omicron\iota\varsigma$   $\epsilon\sigma\tau\epsilon\iota$   $\delta\epsilon$   $\mu\epsilon\tau\epsilon\mu\epsilon\tau\epsilon\iota\sigma\tau\omicron\varsigma$   $\iota\lambda\lambda\iota$   $\sigma\epsilon\kappa\upsilon\lambda\omicron$   $\mu\alpha\tau\epsilon\varsigma$   $\kappa\omicron\iota\gamma\iota\sigma\tau\epsilon\iota$ : for he, as we have elsewhere told you, utterly overthrew them. The next Inhabitants hereof were the Saxons, Jutes, and Angles; upon whose Removal into Britain, the greatest part of it was peopled by the Danes, who still possess it.

It containeth in length about 100 Italian miles, and 80 of the same miles in breadth; and comprehendeth in that tract or extent of ground 30 walled Towns, 6 Episcopall Sees, (besides those of Hamburg and Lubeck, which are under the Archbishop of Bremen) and 20 Royal Castles and Palaces, as well for the reception of the Nobles and great men of the Country, as the private Retirements of the King. The Soil is naturally more fit for Pasturage than Tillage, feeding such multitudes of Oxen, that from hence no fewer than 50000 are sent yearly to Germany. Divided at present into the Dukedom of Holstein, and the Province of Jutland.

1. The Dukedom of HOLSTEIN.

THE Dukedom of HOLSTEIN taketh up the Southern part of the Cimbrick Chersonese where it joins to Germany, extending as far North as the River Eyder, which divides it from Jutland. So called from the Dutch word Holt, which signifies a Wood or Forest, according to the nature of it; the Country being low, marshy, and full of Woods, as it continueth to this day. It contains in it these four Provinces; 1. Wagerland, 2. Stormaria, 3. Ditmarsch, and 4. Holst or Holstein specially so called.

1. WAGERLAND is that part of Holstein which lies on the South-east of this Chersonese, bounded on the East with Mecklenburg and the Baltic Sea, on the West with Holstein specially so called, on the North with the Baltic Sea also, on the South with some part of Mecklenburg. So called from the Wagrii, a Tribe or Nation of the Slaves, who possessed this Tract; from whence the name of Wagrii in our Latine Writers.

Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Lubeck, pleasantly seated on the Confluence of the Trave and the Billow, near the fall thereof into the Baltic from which it is distant 5 Italian miles. The River is capable of ships of a 1000 tun which commonly they unlade at Travemund, the Port-Town to the City, seated upon the very brink of the Sea, where the united Rivers have their fall into it. It was first built by Adolph the second Earl of Holstein, Anno 1143; but so well privileged by him and his next Successors, that in short time it bid defiance to its Founders, (the cause of many Differences betwixt it and those Princes) and and was made a Dukedom of it self. By Frederick the first it was united to the Empire, after whose death they chose themselves another Duke; who, having governed them five years, was subdued by the Danes, and the City made subject to that Kingdom, remaining so till delivered by the Emperor Frederick the second; by whom again once enfranchised, it became Imperial; afterwards lifted amongst the Hanse-Towns, and the first in estimation of all the company, having above 600 Ships of all sorts (some of a thousand Tun and upwards) which belong unto it. But being their Trade is for the most part on the Baltic Seas, which are generally free from Pirates, they are most of them built for Burthen, and are flow of sail, and little serviceable, if at all, for a fight at Sea. But to return unto the City: It is built upon all the sides of a rising Hill, on the top whereof standeth the Church of Saint Mary, (once the Cathedral of the City, for it was Episcopall) whence is a Descent to all the Gates of the City, affording to the Eye a most pleasing prospect. The Buildings are very beautiful, and all of brick; the Streets straight and even; the Churches (ten in number) in good repair, adorned with excellent Imagery, and much admired even by Skillful Workmen: and unto every private House a Pipe of water is conveyed from the Publick Conduit, according to the Pattern whereof, it hath been observed that the Conduits were first made in London and other places. In a word there is not any City of Germany or the more Northern Countries which can equallize it, either for the Beauty and Uniformity of the Houses, the pleasant Gardens, fair Streets, delightful walks without the Walls; or for the Citizens themselves, who are much commended for their civility to Strangers, and strict execution of Justice without partiality. The whole in compass is about six miles, fortified with a double Wall, deep Ditches, and unfordable Rivers. 2. Segeberg, on the River Trave, four Dutch miles from Lubeck, and near the head of that River. 3. Oldesh, on the same River, in the midst betwixt both. 4. Grönneberg, and 5. Newkirk, on the Baltic Shore: and 6. Steindorp, more within the Land, near the edge of a Lake, out of which runs the River Suentin.

2. South-west of Wagerland lieth STORMARIA, betwixt the Elb and two less Rivers called the Bille and the Stoer: from which last, and the Marshiness of the situation, or from that River and the Marf, once the Inhabitants hereof, comes the name of Stormarsh. Places of most importance are, 1. Cremen, on a little River so named, which falls not far off into the Stoer, and both together not much farther into the Elb. A Town well fortified by Christiern, the fourth, and reckoned one of the Keys of the Kingdom; as well appears by the Resistance which it made to the Duke of Frisland, against whom it held out 13 months, and yielded at the last upon good Conditions, Anno 1628. 2. Tychemberg, (Tychapolis my Author calls it) a Dutch mile from Cremen, but on the very Bank of the River Elb, where it receives the Rhine, a small River: upon which it is seated: first built and afterward well fortified by Christiern the fourth, of purpose to command the Elb, and put a stronger Bridle to the mouths of the Hamburgers, Anno 1603: now held to be the strongest piece of all his Dominions; the only Town of all this Dukedom which yielded not to the prevailing Imperialists in their late Wars against the Danes, Anno 1628. 3. Bredekerob, a strong Town belonging to the Ratzeburgs; one of the best pieces of the Kingdom, remarkable for the stout resistance which it made to Wallenstein (Duke of Frisland in the War aforesaid: who at last taking it by Assault, put all the Souldiers to the Sword. 4. Pinnenberg, another strong place and of very great consequence. 5. Jerscho, or Jersbo, on the River Stoer. 6. Glückstadt, upon a Creek or Bay of the German Ocean, repaired and fortified by the said Christiern, the fourth (who much delighted in the place) to command the passage up the Elb. 7. Stoer, 8. Hamburg, upon the Bille, where it falls into the Elb, an ancient City, built in the time of the Saxons, repaired by Charles the Great, and walled by the Emperor Henry the fourth. Accounted since that time an Imperial City, and made one of the Hanse, upon the first incorporating of those Towns. Which notwithstanding, on a Controversie arising about that time betwixt the Earl of Holstein and the people hereof, it was adjudged to belong to the Earls of Holstein; and that determination ratified by Charles the fourth, Anno 1374. In pursuance whereof the Hamburgers took the Oath of Allegiance to Christiern Earl of Oldenburg, the first King of Denmark of that House, as Earl of Holstein, acknowledging him and his Successors for their Lawful Lords: though since they have endeavoured to shake off that Yoke, presuming very much on their power at Sea, and the assistance which they are assured of upon all occasions from the rest of the Hanse-Towns. As for the Town itself, it is seated in a large Plain, with fat and rich Pastures round about it, well fortified by Art and Nature, the Haven being shut up with a strong Iron Chain. The Buildings for the most part are of Brick but more beautiful than well contrived; and the Streets somewhat of the narrowest. The publick Structures are very fair; especially the Council-house, adorned with the Statues of the Nine Worthies, carved with very great Art, the Exchange, or Meeting-place for Merchants, and nine large Churches. The Citizens are generally rich, Masters of many as great Ships as Sail on the Ocean, some of them 1200 Tun in Burthen, which bring in great profit, besides the great resort of Merchants and their Factors from most places else: sometimes the Staple Town for the Cloth of England, removed on some Difficulties to Stade, and from thence to Holland. It is observed, that there were in this Town at one time 177 Brewers, and but 40 Bakers; nor more than one Lawyer and one Physician. The reason of which disproportion was, that a Cup of Nimir was their only Physick; their Differences sooner ended over a Can than by order of Law; Bread being accounted but a Binder, and so not to be used but in case of necessity.

3. Betwixt the Rivers Stoer and Eyder, coasting along the German Ocean, lies the Province of DITMARSH, most properly called Tuichmarsh, from the Marshiness of the ground and the Dutch Inhabitants, or from a mixture of those People with the Marf, spoken of before. The people, being naturally of the Saxon Race, retain much of the stomach and animosity of the ancient Saxons, never brought under the command of the Earls of Holstein (as Wagerland and Stormaria were) till Holstein itself was joined to the Crown of Denmark. And though it was alienated from the Empire by Frederick the third, and given in Fee to Christiern Earl of Oldenburg, the first King of that House, Anno 1474; yet would they not submit unto his Authority, but held it out against him and some of his Successors, whom in the year 1500 they vanquished in the open Field; till broken and made subject by the valour and good fortitude of King Frederick the second, Anno 1550. Chief places in it are, 1. Meldorf, upon the Ocean, the Chief Town of the Province, the Inhabitants of which are so wealthy, that many of them cover their Houses with Copper. 2. Lunden, opposite to a Peninsula or Demy-Island called Eyderhede, on the West side whereof it standeth. 3. Heinnickshede, and 4. Telickshede; of which nothing memorable.

4. And as for HOLLSTEIN, it is self the fourth and last member of this Estate, though the first in power and reputation, it taketh up the Island parts, betwixt Stormaria maria and Jutland, save that it hath an Outlet into the Baltic on the North West of Wagerland. Chief places in it are, 1. Kiøl, (Chiloniam in Latino) seated upon a navigable Arm of the Baltic Sea, parting Wagerland from the Dukedom of Sleswick: a Town well traded, and having a capacious Haven; seldom without good store of Shipping from Germany, Liefland, Sweden, and the rest of Denmark. 2. Rensburg, the best fortified piece in all this Province. 3. Nimnister, on the North west of the Stoer, not far from the head of it. 4. Wilsfær, on a small River so called. 5. Bramsede, 6. Borholm, not much observable; but for a Monastery in which Henry one of the Earls hereof (of a younger House) turned Monk and died, Anno 1241.

The ancient Inhabitants of this and the other three were the Saxons, Sigalens, and Subalingi, placed here by Ptolomy, whom I conceive to be no other than some Tribes of the Cimbri of whom this Chersonese took name; the two last of which passing into the name of the first, and in the Declination of the Roman Empire marching over the Elb and spreading all along the Coasts of the German Ocean, molested with their Piracies and Depredations, the Shores of Britain, known by that means unto the Britains, they were invited to assist them against the Scots and Picts. Which action, with the Aid of the Frisians and Angli (Inhabitants together with them of the Cimbri Chersonese) they performed so honestly, as to make themselves Masters of the best part of the Island. Such as remained behind, not being able to defend their own against the Slaves, were fain to quit the parts lying next to Aleschenburg, which being peopled by the Vagrii, took the name of Wagerland. But the Saxons being vanquished by Charles the Great, these on the North-side of the Elb became a part of the great Dukedom of Saxony; and so continued till dismembered by Lotharius, both Duke and Emperor, who gave the proper Nols (or Holstein specially so called) with the Province of Stormaria to Adolph Earl of Schaumburg, who had deserved well of him in his Wars, with the Title of Earl of Holstein, Anno 1114. By Adolph the second, his Successor, it was settled in this House, who having made a full Conquest of it, caused it to be planted with Colonies of Dutch or German from Holland, Westphalen, and Friesland; by which means the name of Slaves was at last worn out. By Gerrard the fifth the Dukedom of Sleswick was also added: conferred upon him by the bounty of Margaret Queen of Denmark, in whose Wars he served. Adolph the last Earl of this House dying without Issue, the whole Estate fell on Christiern, Son of Theoderick Earl of Oldenburg, and of Hedwigis his Wife, Sister and Heir to Adolph before mentioned; who, being called to the Crown of Denmark compounded with his Brother Gerrard for the sum of 50000 Marks; and having gotten Dimmarf also of the Emperor Frederick the third, prevailed so far as to have the whole Estate erected into a Dukedom, Anno 1214, to be held by him and his Successors of the Sacred Empire. Which said, we will next add the Catalogue of

The Earls and Dukes of HOLSTEIN.

- 1114 1. Adolph of Schaumburg, by Lotharius, Emperor and Duke of Saxony, made the first Earl of Holstein.
- 1137 2. Adolph II. Son of Adolph the first.
- 1164 3. Adolph III. Son of Adolph the 2<sup>d</sup>, vanquished by Cannus King of the Danes, lost himself and his Country.
- 1232 4. Adolph IV. in his Fathers life-time recovered his Estate from Waldemar the Successor of Cannus, overcome by him in a well fought Battle, Anno 1226; his Father then Prisoner to the Danes.

- 1261 5. Gerrard, the 2. Son of Adolph the fourth, his elder Brother John making choise of Wagerland succeeded in Holstein.
- 1281 6. Henry the Son of Gerrard, the first that set up a Custom-house at Hamburg, for receipt of his Tolls and Taxes.
- 1310 7. Gerrard II. Son of Henry, slain treacherously by the Danes.
- 1339 8. Henry II. Son of Gerrard the second.
- 1381 9. Gerrard III. Son of Henry the second, created the first Duke of Sleswick by Queen Margaret of Denmark.
- 1404 10. Henry III. Son of Gerrard the third.
- 1427 11. Adolphus V. commonly called the XII. (those of the younger Houses being reckoned in the last Earl of this House).
- 1459 12. Christiern of Oldenburg, King of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, Son of Theoderick Earl of Oldenburg, and of his Wife Hedwigis, Sister of Henry and Adolphus the two last Earls, succeeded in the Earldom of Holstein, enlarged with the addition of Dimmarf, and erected into a Dukedom by the Emperor Frederick the third, Anno 1474. But seeing that Otho Earl of Schaumburg pretended a Right unto the whole, as the next Heir-male, according to the Constitutions of the Empire, of which it was holden; and Gerrard the Brother of Christiern put in for his Share, according to the ill Custom of Germany, of which it was then counted part: he was fain to buy his peace of both; giving to Otho 43000 Florens in ready money, with the Towns of Pinnenburg, Malschburg, and Bramsede, the ancient possessions of the Earls of Schaumburg and 50000 Marks to his Brother Gerrard, besides his whole Interest in the Earldom of Oldenburg, as before was said. By this means Holstein, was united to the Crown of Denmark the Kings thereof, as Dukes of Holstein, being counted Princes of the Empire; but neither send unto the Diets, nor contribute any thing at all to the publick Taxes, nor acknowledge any kind of Subjection to it more than merely titular. Only it was ordained at the request of the Subjects, when first they were incorporated into that Kingdom, that in case of any grievance or unjust sentence in the ordinary Courts of Justice, wherein they found no remedy in the supreme Council of the Province, it might be lawful for them to appeal to the Imperial Chamber, as they had done formerly. Which as it was granted to content them at the present time, on sufficient Caution; so hath it seldom or never been put in practise; the very Grant or Privilege (if such it were) being in a manner worn out of memory. But since this uniting of these two Estates, the Title of Duke of Holstein and a good part of the Country was given unto Adolphus Brother of Christiern the 2<sup>d</sup>. (created by Queen Elizabeth one of the Knights of the Garter, Anno 1560) who governed it interchangeably with the King in their severall turns: after whose death, and the death of all his Children dying without Issue-male, the Title of it was conferred on Ulrick, Son of Frederick the second, and Brother of Christiern, the fourth, created Knight of the Garter by King James, Anno 1605, in whose posterity it remains till this present time.

2. The Kingdom of DENMARK.

IN which 1. JUTLAND containeth all the rest of the Cimbri Chersonese, divided from the Dukedom of Holstein by the River Eyder, the ancient Boundary betwixt the Saxons and the Danes; but principally by a long Trench and Wall from one Sea to the other, of such breadth, that a Chariot or two Horse-men a-bread might ride upon it. First built in imitation of the Picts Wall in England, by Godfrey King of Denmark, in the time of Charles the Great; either to hinder the daily Incurfions of the Saxons, as some, or to stop the current of the Victories of the said Charles, as others think. The Tract thereof, still very easie to be seen, is called Dennewerk (or the Danes Work) to this very day.

It was so called from the Frisians, who, together with the Angli and neighbouring Saxons, made a Conquest of the best part of Britain. The Country so aboundeth in Cattel, that it sendeth yearly into Germany 50000 Oxen, besides great store of Butter, Cheese, Tallow, Hides, and Horfes: divided commonly into North Jutland, and South Jutland, or Jutland specially so called; and the Dukedom of Sleswick.

SOUTH-JUTLAND, or the Dukedom of SLESWICK, is that part of the Cimbrian Chersonese which lies next to Holstein; called South-Jutland, from the Southern situation of it; and Sleswick, from the chief Town of it, and the Head of this Dukedom. The Country, for the most part, is plain, little swelled with Mountains; the Fields whereof do interchangeably yield both Fish and Corn. For during one three years they sow it constantly, and reap the Fruits of it, and for the next three let the Pools overflow the Land, to the end the Fish may eat up the Grasse, (whom they catch as often as they please) and the Mud which is left behind enrich the Soil. But besides their Pools, they have also on the Baltic Shores many goodly Bays; not only commodious for Merchants, but well stored with Fish, and with Salmons especially.

Chief Towns herein are, 1. Flensborch, seated among very high Mountains on the Shore of the Baltic Sea, where there is a Port so deep, so safe, and so commodious, that all the Inhabitants thereof in a manner may lade and unlade their Ships close to their houses. 2. Hufem, or Hufsum, upon the German Ocean, not far from the mouth of the River Eyder. 3. Hadersleve, a Bishop's See, if not rather some Town or Manor of the Bishop's of Sleswick, situate on a navigable In-let of the Baltic Sea, wherewith it is almost encompassed; beautified with the fair Castle of Hansburg, begun by John the eldest Son of King Christiern the first, then Duke of Holstein, but finished by Frederick the second, King of Denmark. 4. Londenberg, in the Peninsula called Eyderfede, over against De Strandt, an Island of the German Ocean. 5. Sternberg, the ordinary Residence of the Governour for the King of Denmark. 6. Gottorp, a strong Fort or Castle of the Duke of Sleswick's, at the end of a large Bay or In-let of the Baltic also; remarkable for the Toll-booth or Custom-house there erected, at which there is Toll paid one year with another for 50000 Oxen sent out of the North-Jutland into Germany. 7. Sleswick, originally by the Danes called Hydebum, built, as they say, by Heide a Queen of that Nation; but by the Saxons called Sleswick, as the Town upon the River Sley, there running into the Baltic, and giving to the Town a fair and commodious Haven. This of long time hath been accounted the chief Town of this Province, honoured with an Episcopal See, and made the Head of the Dukedom, so giving name unto the whole. A Dukedom first erected by King Henry of Denmark, who gave it to Waldemar, great Grandchild of Abel a former King, Anno 1280, to be held by him under the Right and Sovereignty of the Kings thereof. But the Male-issue failing, it returned to the Crown, and was by Margaret Queen of Denmark conferred on Gerrard Earl of Holstein, as before was said, Anno 1386. Repenting afterwards of that Act, he extorted it out of the hands of the Widow of Gerrard; but it was again recovered by the Valour and good fortune of his Son Adolphus. After whose death it fell, together with Holstein, upon Christiern of Oldenburg King of Denmark, as before related, by whom it was incorporated with that Crown, never since aliened, but assigned sometimes in Portion for the younger Princes; the Patrimony at this time of the Sons of Alexander, surname of Sunderborg, (the place of his Nativity) Son of John, one of the younger Sons of King Christiern the third.

NORTH-JUTLAND, the most Northern part of all the Chersonese, hath on the South the Dukedom of Sleswick, but on all other parts the Sea. Divided commonly, according to the number of the Bishopricks, into four Dioceses or Districts; that is to say,

1. The Diocese of RIP or RIPEN, bordering next to Sleswick, containing 30 Prefectures or Herets, (as they use to call them) seven Cities or walled Towns, and ten Castles. The chief of which are, 1. Ripen, the Episcopal See, situate near the German Ocean. 2. Kolding, on a Creek of the Baltic Sea; where Dorothy the Dowager of Christiern the third built a publick School, (one of my Authors calls it an University.)

2. The Diocese of ARHUSEN, lying on the North of Ripen, but more towards the Baltic, containeth 31 Herets or Prefectures, seven Cities or walled Towns, and five Castles. The chief whereof are, 1. Arhusen, the Episcopal See, seated on the Baltic, enjoying a commodious Port and well frequented; the first Bishop hereof being that Poppo who converted this Nation, Christianity and Episcopacy going for the most part hand in hand together. 2. Schaenderborg, on the South of Arhusen. 3. Kalø, a strong Castle of the Kings, seated in the inmost part of a large Bay, occasioned by the Promontory or Cape of Hilleus, extending hence two Dutch miles to the high Hill of Ellesmanberg, Opposite whereunto, and pertaining to this Jurisdiction, lie the Islands of 1. Samsoe, 2. Hilølm, 3. Tuen, 4. Hiarner, (perhaps Gerno) 5. Hilgenes, and others.

3. The Dioceses of WIBORCH, on the North of Arhusen, containeth sixteen Herets, the Islands of 1. Tegen, 2. Hansholm, 3. Ofholm, 4. Cisland, 5. Egholm, and 6. Bodum; three Cities or walled Towns, and as many Castles. The principal of which is Wiborch, the Episcopal See, an Inland City, but situate on a Water which runneth into the Bay of Limfjort. The ordinary Seat of Judicature for both the Jutlands, for all Causes, as well Criminal as Civil: the Court continually sitting from one day to another, unless perhaps the Judges do sometimes adjourn it for their own Refreshments.

4. The Diocese of BURG LAVE, or Vandalia, lying farther North, is commonly subdivided into four Parts or Members: that is to say, 1. Thyland, lying South of the Bay of Limfjort, on the Baltic side, whose chief Town is Alborch, the ordinary Seat and Residence of the Bishop of Vandalia, from hence many times stiled Albargensis, situate on the Bay aforesaid, which, opening into the Baltic Sea, extendeth through the main Land Westward almost as far as the German Ocean. 2. Morsee, lying on the Ocean, and containing three Prefectures or Herets, the Town of Niciping, the Castle of Lunsted, and the Isle of Ageroe. 3. Hanbereit, on the North-west of the Bay of Limfjort, containing four Herets, the Town of Thylsted, where Christiern the third founded a publick School, or such another University as that of Kolding the Castle of Orum, and the Islands of Olund and Oxholm. There is in this part also the high Rock called Skaringslini, a noted Sea-mark, duly serving to give notice to the Sailour of the quick sands which lie underneath it and about this Coast. 4. Wenigst, Wenstia, or Wenslie, that is (as Mercator doth expound it) Vandalorum fides; the Seat of the Vandals, taken up all the rest of the North of of Switland, containing six Prefectures, the Islands of 1. Großholm, 2. Hertzholm, and 3. Tidstholm, three Towns, and one Castle: the most remarkable of which is Schagen, within the most Northerly point of all this Cherfonselle. In this part is a very high Mountain called Mount Alberg, in which are found some marks and remainders of the ancient Giants, as the Inhabitants believe, and report accordingly.

The Inhabitants of both Switlands, in the time of Ptolemy and before, were the Cobandi, Chali, Phundusi, Charudes, and in the most Northern Tracts the Cimbri, of whom the four first were but Tribes or Nations. These moving toward the South in that great Expedition against Spain, made by the neighbouring Vandals on the Roman Empire, occasioned the Swites and Angli to enlarge or shift their Dwellings, each taking up the parts which lay nearest to them. The Swites, or Guta, being a People of Scandia, and there placed by Ptolemy, took up the Northern parts thereof, from them named Switland: the other being a People of the Suevi, dwelling on the South of the Elb, possessed themselves of those parts which lay next the Saxons, their old Friends and Confederates, (their chief Town being Sleswick) where Angelen, now an obscure Village, once of greater note, doth preserve their memory. But these uniting with the Saxons in the Conquest of Britain, and leaving none behind which were fit for action, or not enough to keep possession of the Country against the new Invaders, gave opportunity to the Danes to come in upon them; by whom the Country being conquered as far as to the River Eyder, were planted by Colonies of Danes, and made a part of that Kingdom: of whom we shall say more in the close of all; first taking a survey of the Baltick Islands, and such Provinces on the main Land of Scandia as properly make up the Kingdom of Denmark.

2. THE BALTICK ISLANDS are in number 35, and are so called, because they lie dispersed in the Baltick Ocean. At this day it is called by the Germans De Oost Zee; anciently by some Mare Suevicum, by Pomponius Mela Sinus Codanus, by Strabo Sinus Venedicus; but generally Mare Balticum, because the great Peninsula of Scandia, within which it is, was by some Writers of the middle and darker Time called Balthia. It begetteth at the narrow passage called the Sound; and interlacing the Countries of Denmark, Sweden, Germany, and Poland, extendeth even to Livonia and Lithuania. The reasons why this Sea, being so large, doth not ebb and flow, are, 1. the Narrowness of the Streight by which the Ocean is let into it; and 2. the Northern situation of it, whereby the Celestial Influences have lesser power upon it. The principal of this great shoal of Islands are, 1. Seland, 2. Funen, or Fionia, 3. Langland, 4. Lawland, 5. Falst, 6. Aria, 7. Alsen, 8. Tusling, 9. Ween, 10. Femera, and 11. Bornholm. Some others of less note we shall only name, and so pass them over.

1. SELAND, the greatest Island of the Baltick Seas, is situate near the main Land of Scandia, parted from it by a narrow Streight or Fretum, not above a Dutch mile in breadth, commonly called by the name of the Sund or Sound. A Streight through which all Ships which have any trading to or from the Baltick must of necessity take their course; all other Passages being barred up with impassable Rocks, or otherwise prohibited by the Kings of Denmark, upon Fortitude of all their Goods. So that being the only safe Passage which these Seas afford, one may sometimes see two or three hundred Ships in a day pass through it: all which pay a Toll or Imposition to the King, according to their Bills of Lading. And to secure this Passage, and command all Passengers, there are two strong Castles, the one in Scandia, called Helsingburg, whereof more anon; the other in this Island, which is called Cronenburg.

But before we come to this Castle, we must view the other parts of the Island, being in length two days journey, and almost as much in breadth: the Soil so fertile, that, without any manuring or charge at all, it yieldeth plenty of all Necessaries for the life of man. It was anciently called Codanonia, and containeth in it fifteen Cities or walled Towns, and twelve Royal Castles. The principal whereof are, 1. Haffen, or Hafnia, the Metropolis of the Islands, by the Dutch called Copenhagen, or the Haven of Merchants; situate near the Sea, with an handfom Port; the Isle of Amager, which lieth on the East-side of the Town, making a very safe Road for all kinds of Shipping. The Town is of an orbicular form, and reasonably well fortified; but the Buildings mean, for the most part of Clay and Timber, only to be commended for a spacious Market-place. Yet herein, as the chief Town of all the Kingdom, and situate in the heart of those Dominions, is the Palace-Royal; built of Free-Stone, in form of a Quadrangle, but of no great Beauty or Magnificence. Most memorable for the University here founded by Henry, or Erius the ninth, but perfected by King Christiern the first, by him and the succeeding Princes liberally endowed. 2. Fredericksborg, amongst Woods of Beech, built for a place of Pleasure by Frederick the second, where the King hath a fine House, and a little Park, in which (amongst other foreign Beasts) are some Fallow-Deer transported hither out of England in the 24. year of Queen Elizabeth. 3. Roskilde, not walled but counted for a City, as a See Episcopal; the Bishops whereof have anciently had the honour of Crowning and Inaugurating the Kings of Denmark. In the Cathedral Church hereof are to be seen the Tombs of many of the Danish Kings; some of them very fair and sumptuous, the most mean and ordinary. 4. Sora, of old times beautified with a goodly Monastery, the Revenues whereof, at the alteration of Religion, were converted to the maintenance of a Free-School built here by Frederick the first. But in the year 1623, Christiern the fourth, adding hereunto the Revenues of two other dissolved Monasteries, the one in the Isle of Lawland and the other in Switland, founded here a new University, for the better supply of learned Ministers for the Churches of Denmark and Norway, (which before could not be provided for out of Copenhagen) and furnished it with men of eminence in all Arts and Sciences for its first Professors. 5. Ellenore, or Helsingore, a Village only, but much frequented by Seafaring men as their Ships pass by the Sound, upon which it is. Near unto which is 6. the strong and magnificent Castle of Cronenburg, built with incredible charge and pains by King Frederick the second; the foundation of it being laid on huge Stones sunk into the Sea, and so fastned together, that no Storm or Tempest, how violent soever, is able to shake it; well fortified as well as founded, and mixt of a Palace and a Fort, being since the first building of it the most constant Residence of the Kings of Denmark, who from hence may easily discern each Ship which sails through the Sund, each of which addeth more or less unto his Revenues. A profitable and pleasing Prospect. By the Commodity of this and the opposite Castle, the King doth not only secure his Customs, but very much strengthen his Estate: the Castles being so near, and the Streight so narrow, that, by the addition of some few Ships, he may keep the greatest Navy that is from passing by him.

Unto the Government and Jurisdiction of this Island belong many others; the principal whereof are, 1. Amager, magria, Amager, or Amack, which helps to make up the Port or Road of Copenhagen, spoken of before; planted with Hollanders brought hither by the procurement of Christiern the second. 2. Mund, or Moen-land, the chief Town whereof is called Stekke. 3. (2) HUENE, or WEEN, a little South of Cronenburg Castle; a Dutch mile in length, but not quite so broad; remarkable only for the Studies of that famous Astronomer Tycha Brabe, to whom Frederick the second gave this Island, that living in a private and solitary place, removed from all company but his own Family only, he might with more convenience attend his Books. At this day most observable for the Castle of Uranopolis, or Orenborg, where the greatest part of his Mathematical Instruments are preserved in safety.

3. FIONIA, or FUNEN, the second Island of account in all the Baltick, is situate betwixt Seland and Switland, from which last it is parted by a Streight called Middelfar Sund, so narrow, and of so small a Sea, that the Island and the Cherfonselle seem joined together. A Country of a pleasant and delightful Situation, and as fruitful withal; containing 12 Dutch miles in length, and four in breadth; and therein 24 Herets or Prefectures, 16 Towns, and 6 Royal Castles, besides many goodly Villages, and Gentlemens Houses. The chief whereof are, 1. Odenfee, or Othenche (called in Latine Othonia) an Episcopal See, founded here, at the first conversion of this People, by Otho the Great, whence it had the name. The Town is not large, but beautified with two fair Churches, the one dedicated to Saint Anne, the other to Saint Francis: situate in the midst of the Island, from which the residue of the Towns are almost equally distant; and so commodiously seated for Trade and Merchandise, as they do not only traffick in the Baltick Sea, but in Sweden, Norway, Russia, Flanders, and Germany. 2. Nyborch, 3. Foborch, 4. Swynborch, 5. Middelfar, whence the Streight is so named, 6. Bowens, and 7. Kartemunde; all seated on some Haven, or convenient Creek. The principal of the Castles are, 1. Newborg, 2. Hagenschow, 3. Efcheborg, 4. Hingsagel, 5. the Court of Rugard. In this Island, not far from the Castle of Hagenschow, is the Mountain of Ossenborg, where John Ranzovius, An. 1430. discomfited the great Army of Christopher, the Brother of Anthony, Earl of Oldenburg, coming in those unsettled times to invade the Kingdom, under colour of restoring Christiern the second formerly deposed: in which Fight the Earls of Hoye and Teckelborg were both slain in the place, and the Kingdom after that in quiet from the like Pretenders.

South of Fionia, and under the Government hereof, are about 90 lesser Islands, most of them inhabited: the chief of which are.

4. LANGLAND, seven Dutch miles in length, in which, besides many Villages and Gentlemens Houses, we have the Town of Rudkoping, and the Castle of Franker.

5. LAWLAND, disjoined from Seland by a little narrow Streight called Grono-sund; so plentiful of Corn and Chestnuts, that Ships full freighted with them are sent yearly hence. An Island which, besides many Castles, Villages and Manion-houses of the Gentry, hath five good Towns, viz. 1. Nyftadt, 2. Nafco, 3. Togrop, 4. Richus, and 5. Mariboane; in which last anciently was a very rich Monastery, the Revenues whereof are now employed for the endowment of the new University of Sora, founded by Christiern the fourth, as before was noted.

6. FALSTRE, four German miles in length, affording plenty of Corn yearly to some neighbouring Islands. Chief Towns herein are, 1. Nicopen, which for the Elegancy of the place and Pleasants of the Situation is called the Naples of Denmark. 2. Staboeppen, from whence there is the ordinary passage into Germany, seven Dutch miles hence.

7. TUSING, not far from Swynborch or Swineborg, a Town of Fionia, a Dutch mile in length, situate in a dangerous and troublesome Sea, from whence is no safe passage either to Seland, Funen, or Switland, though much distant from neither. Chief places in it are, 1. Assens, towards Switland; 2. Niburg, towards Seland; and 3. the Court of Keltorp, belonging to the noble Family of Refenerantz.

8. FEMERA, or FEMEREN, a fruitful and well-peopled Island, having in it the Towns of 1. Derborsch, 2. Stabul, and 3. Pitterdorp. A place of great importance to the Crown of Denmark, not so much in danger of being made subject to the Imperialists by the taking of Holstein and both Switland, as by planting a strong Garrison in this small Island: and therefore with all diligence recovered by the King again, and better fortified than before, against all Invasions, Anno 1628. Of the remaining Islands which pertain unto Fionia, we find the names of 1. Aroe, 2. Romfo, 3. Endelo, 4. Ebelo, 5. Bokoy, 6. Brando, 7. Zoroe, 8. Agernis, 9. Kellenis, 10. Jerdo, 11. Birkholm, of which nothing memorable.

Amongst these Islands, but not subordinate to Fionia, are, 9. ARIA, belonging to the Dukedom of Sleswick, consisting of 3. Parishes, some Gentlemens Houses, and the Town and Castle of Koping: supposed to be the habitation of the Arli, spoken of by Tacitus; but a Colony rather of them, as I suppose. And not far off,

10. ALSEN, another little Island, but of more repute called in Latine Elyfia, opposite to the Gulf or Bay of Flensborg in the Dukedom of Sleswick, to which it also appertaineth. Well stored it is with Beasts for profit, and Game for pleasure; so populous, that some thousands of men may be easily and suddenly raised in it; consisting of 13 Parishes and 4 Towns: that is to say, 1. Gammelgard, 2. Offerholm, 3. Norderborg, and 4. the good Town and Castle of Sunderborg, one of the ordinary Residences of the Dukes of Sleswick, and honoured with the Birth of many of their Princes of the Royal Family. Some think it was the Habitation anciently of the Elyfi, spoken of by Tacitus, and by him placed next unto the Angli: But being the Angli in those times dwelt about the Elb, I rather think, that when some Colonies of the Angli seated themselves in the Cimbrick Cherfonselle, as before was said, some of the Arli and Elyfi might go along for company, and plant themselves near them and these Islands.

11. BORNHOLM, the last of all the Baltick which belong to Denmark, is situate more Eastward, opposite to that part of Scandia which is called Bleking, betwixt it and Pomerania. An Isle of excellent Pasturage, breeding plenty of Cattel, wherewith, as also with Butter, Cheese, Wool, Hides, and some Rore of Fruits, they supply the wants of some of their neighbours, besides good quantities of powdered Beef and Mutton, which they barrel up and sell to Marriners. It containeth many good Towns and wealthy Villages; the chief whereof is Bornholm, which gives name to the Island. Both Town and Island were pawned by some former Kings unto those of Lubeck; from them redeemed by King Frederick the second for a great sum of money, after it had been in their possession about 50 years.

These Islands in the time of Pomponius Mela were by one general name called the Hemodis, in number reckoned to be seven; the residue either not inhabited, or not taken notice of, are now where mentioned in the Angients. Of these seven; the greatest and best peopled was called Codanonia, (supposed to be Seland), in which the said Author placeth the Turoni. By Ptolemy it is called

Scandia Minor, with reference to the great Peninsula of Scandia, supposed by him to be an Island. From this, or from the Sea adjoining, called Sinus Codanus, the people of these Islands and the next Eastern Continent took the name of Danes; spreading the name afterwards, as they did their Conquests; of which more anon. In the mean time we must cross over the Sound, and take notice of such other parts of this Kingdom as lie on the other side thereof, in the vast Continent or Demy-Island (which you will) of Scandia: of which somewhat must be first premised, in regard that not only some parts of Denmark, but the whole Country of Norway (the Northern Islands excepted) are contained in it.

3. SCANDIA, by Pliny and Solinus called Scandinavia, by Jornandes Scanzia, hath on the East that Bay or Branch of the Baltick which is called the Finnisch and Boadner Seas, on the North and West the main Ocean, on the South, where it points towards Germany, the Baltick or Ost Zee; as the Dutch call it, joined to the main Continent of Sarmatia by an Isthmus, or Neck of Land, at the bottom of the Boadner Zee, not far from Wardhus. In regard of so great Seas on all parts thereof, it was generally by the Ancients thought to be an Island, but incomperita magnitudinis, of an unknown greatness, as both Pytheas and Xenophon Lampiscenus do affirm in Pliny: by one of which it is called Baltia, by the other Baltia; from whence the name of Baltick to the Sea adjoining. But later Navigations and Experience have confuted that opinion, by which it is found to be no Island, but a part of the Continent and a great one too; containing the whole Kingdom of Norway, the greatest part of the Kingdom of Sweden, and some part of Denmark. That part hereof which belongs to Denmark is situate in the South of this great Peninsula, and divided into the three Provinces of Hallandia, Scania, and Bleking: and in them are 23 Herets or Prefectures, and 15 Cities.

1. HALLANDIA, or HALLAND, hath on the East the wild Woods which part it from Gothland, on the West the intervening Sea betwixt it and Funland, on the North Sweden properly and specially so called, on the South Scandia or Schoonen. A Country which for the healthfulness of the Air, plainness of the Soil, commodiousness of Havens, plenty of Fish, pleasure of Hunting, for inexhaustible Mines of Brass and Lead, (with some veins of Silver) frequency of well-peopled Towns and Villages, and Civility of the Inhabitants, is not inferior to any. Places of most importance in it are, 1. Laholm, 2. Halmstad, 3. Falkenberg: all of them on the Sea, at the mouth of navigable Streams, whose names I find not. 4. Warisberg, upon the Sea-side also, but fortified with a very strong Castle on the top of an Hill; taken and garrisoned by the Swedes, Anno 1569, and not without great difficulty recovered by the Danes again, Anno 1569.

2. SCANIA, or SCHONEN, hath on the East Blesida or Bleking, on the West the Sound, running along the shore hereof for the space of twenty German miles, on the North Halland, on the South the Baltick or Ost Zee. The Country is of the same nature with Halland, as before described; the Character of that pertaining to all the three, this having over and above as peculiar to it, that the Sea-shores are stored with such Sholes of Herrings, that sometimes Ships are scarce able with wind and oar to break through them, and row off the Harbour. It is in length 72 miles, 48 in breadth. Chief Towns in which are, 1. Lunden, an Archbishop's See, the Metropolitan of Denmark and Norway; advanced unto that honour by the means and mediation of Ericus the first, who purposely made a journey to Rome to effect that business; the Church of Denmark being before that time subject to the Archbishops of Breme. This was about the year 1100. It is situate somewhat within the Land, but the Cathedral easily discernible by Mariners as they sail along. The City is but mean, and were it not for the Cathedral, of no beauty at all. But that indeed is affirmed to be a work of much Magnificence and Art, especially for the Clock, the Dial, and some outward adjuncts. For in the Dial curiously set out with divers Colours are to be seen distinctly the Year, Month, Week-day, and Hour of every day throughout the year; with the Feasts, both moveable and fixed; together with the Motion of the Sun and Moon, and their passage through each Degree of the Zodiac. Then for the Clock, it is so framed by artificial Engines, that whensoever it is to strike, two horsemens encounter one another, giving as many blows a-piece as the Bell sounds hours: and on the opening of a door there appears a Theatre, the Virgin Mary on a Throne with Christ in her Arms, and the three Kings or Magi (with their several Trains) marching in order, doing humble reverence, and presenting severally their Gifts; two Trumpeters sounding all the while, to adorn the Pomp of that Profession. 2. Malmoe, or Elbogen, (called by both names) at the very Southern point hereof, just opposite to Copenhagen in Seland, a well-traded Port, the Birth-place of Galpar Bartholinus, otherwise called Malmogius Danus, that great Mathematician, supposed to be the Author of the Clock and Dial before described. 3. Trelleborg, on the North of Elbogen, 4. Landferon, on the Sea-side, of great strength and consequence, 5. Helsingborg, a mean Town, but fortified with an impregnable Castle, just opposite to Helsingore and Cronenburg in Seland; the other of the two Keys which openeth into the Sound. 6. Ryssenby, a Frontier-town bordering on Verendia, a Province of Swethland; 7. Christiana, or Christiendorp, a strong piece built by Christiern the fourth, Anno 1604, compassed by the Sea, and fortified by Fens and Marishes, thought to be impregnable.

3. BLESIDA, or BLEKING, is bounded on the East and South with the Baltick Sea, on the North with Verendia, a Province of Swethland, on the West with Scania or Schoonen; more mountainous and barren than either, but yet partaking somewhat of the former Character which we had of Halland. Chief Towns hereof are 1. Ustede, on the mouth of a River falling into the Baltick; 2. Christiernsburg, in Latine Christianopolis, on the borders of Swethland; raised out of the ground by Christiern the fourth, to defend his Kingdom on that side, Anno 1604, but not long after by a warlike stratagem surprized by the Swedes, in the late War betwixt those Kingdoms in the year 1611; destroyed and dispeopled by that Nation, who looked upon it as a dangerous and unpleasant Object, but since repaired and replenished. 3. Abus, upon the River which divides the Kingdoms not far from Christiernsburg.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Guta and Danones, taking up the South-parts of this great Peninsula. Meridionalia tenent Guta & Danones, as we find in Ptolemy, Geogr. l. 2. c. 11, which in all probability must be meant of these Provinces. Of these the Gutes, passing over into the Cimbrick Cherfone, possessed themselves of the North parts of it, since from them called Funland. The rest, uniting with the people of those many Islands which lye together in the Bay or Gulf called Sinus Codanus, (now the Baltick Sea) took the name of Danes; and not from Dan, I know not what King thereof above 1000 years before the Birth of our Saviour. First taken notice of by that name in Jornandes de rebus Geticis, who lived about the time of Justinian the first; about which time, or not long after, it is conceived that they made them-themselves Mattes of so much of the Cimbrick Cherfone as had been formerly possessed by the Jutes and Angli, whose forsaken or ill-peopled Seats they possessed themselves of. After this we hear little of them till the time of Charles the Great, living in a confused estate, sometimes made subject to the Norwegians, sometimes to the Swedes, but always without Law and Order; till by the King Godfrey or Gotricus they were regulated by Laws, and reduced to an orderly kind of life, Anno 797. About this time they first began to infect the Coasts of England, invaded Friseland with a Fleet of 200 Sail; and had much weakened and endangered the great Empire of France, if the unseasonable death of Godfrey, and the Quarrels which arose about the Succession after his decease, had not kept them off. Their Affairs at home being again well settled, they employed their whole Forces against England, as the weaker Enemy: over which they tyrannized 250 years, and reigned 26, under three Kings of that Nation. Outed of that, and the terror of their name being over, they have been most busied with their Neighbours of Sweden and Germany; improving their Estate, but rather by Marriages and civil Contracts, than by force of Arms, with the addition of the Kingdom of Norway and the Dukedom of Holftein: their pretensions to, and for a time the possession of, the Crown of Sweden getting them nothing in conclusion but Blows and Losses. So that we have no more to do then to fume up a Catalogue of the Kings hereof, till the uniting of the two Crowns of Denmark and Norway, leaving the rest that follow to another place.

1150 28. Sueno III. Son of Ericus the third, and Canutus the fifth, Grandchild of Nicolas, both Kings, the first reigning in Scandia, the other in Funland; both died without Issue; Canutus being slain by Sueno, and he by Waldemar.
1157 29. Waldemar, Son of Canutus, the lawful Son of Ericus the second, after the interposition of so many Bastards, succeeded at the last in the Throne of his Fathers. By his means the Ru-gians and Vandals embraced the Gospel.

1260 35. Ericus VI. (VIII.) Son of Christopher.
1287 36. Ericus VII. (IX.) younger Son of Ericus, sup- planted his eldest Brother Christopher.
1327 37. Christopher II. eldest Son of Ericus, at first dis- possessed of his Birth-right by his Brother Ericus; after whose death he succeeded in the Crown, by the help of his Half-brother, the Earl of Holftein.
1334 38. Waldemar III. Son of Christopher the second against whom and his Encroachments the Sea-towns, commonly called the Hanse, did first confederate, and vanquished him in many Battels.
1376 39. Margaret, Daughter and Heir of Waldemar the third, married with Aquin King of Norway, so uniting the Kingdoms: of whom and their Successors we shall speak hereafter, when we have took a view also of the Kingdom of Norway, and the Appendices thereof.

3. NORWAT.

NORWAT is bounded on the East with Swethland, from which it is parted by a perpetual Ridge of rough and wild Mountains, called the Dofrine Hills; on all other parts by the Sea: that is to say, by the Frozen Sea upon the North, the German or Norwegian Ocean upon the West; and on the South with the Danish Sea.

Sea, interposing betwixt it and the Cimbrick Cherfonese, being in breadth from Schagen, the most Northern point of Frithland, to Congel, the most Southerly Town of Norway, no less than 250 miles.

It is called Norway quasi Tractum seu Via Septentrionalis, from the Northern situation of it, containing in length 1300 miles, in breadth not above half so much, inhabited by a People given to Hospitality, Plain-dealing, and abhorring Theft. Anciently they were great Warriors, and became terrible to all the more Southern Nations; by whom they were called Normans; (that is to say, Homines Boreales), or North-men, as Willielmus Gemeticensis rightly hath it) being at that time a Mixture of all the Northern Nations together, or of the Norwegians and Swethlanders, apart from the Danes; whose Steps they followed in their frequent, or rather continual, Piracies on the Coasts of England, France and Ireland. By Helmoldus in the same sense they are called Nordludi, a name made into Latine out of the Dutch word Nord, and the French word Lien, signifying men of a Northern Place or Nation.

Of the Position of it in regard of the Heavens we have spoke already; but more particularly it reacheth from the first Parallel of the twelfth Clime, where the Pole is elevated 58 Degrees, 26 Minutes, as far as to the 71. Degree of Latitude. By which account the longest Day in the Southern point is but 18 hours; whereas at Wardhuy, being situate farthest North of all this Country, they have no Night for almost three whole months together.

The Country is for the most part rocky, mountainous and barren, full of vast Woods, extreme cold, and but ill inhabited. In the best parts thereof it affords little Corn, and in the most Northern none at all: infomuch that the common sort of people are fain to use dried Fish (that which we commonly call Stock-Fish) in stead of Bread; but the better (that is, the richer) sort buy Corn of such Merchants as come to traffick with them. Their chief Commodities are Stock-fish, rich Furs, Train-oil, Pitch, and Tackling for Ships, as Masts, Cables, Deal-boards, and the like; which the Inhabitants exchange for Corn, Wine, Fruits, Beer, and other necessities for man's life. The Country is exceedingly troubled with certain little Beasts which they call Lemmings. They are about the bigness of a Field-Mouse, and are by the Inhabitants said to drop out of the Clouds in tempestuous weather. They devour, like the Locusts, every green thing on the earth; and at a certain time die all in heaps (as it were) together, and with their stench so poison the Air, that the poor people are long after troubled with the Jaundies and with a Giddiness in the Head. But these Beasts come not so often to infect the Land, as the Whales do to terrify and molest the shores; the Western Seas being very deep, and therefore a fit habitation for those great Leviathans: against whose violence and fury the Mariners and people of the Sea-coast have found a Remedy, which is by casting out some water intermixed with the Oyl of Castor; the smell whereof doth force them to retire immediately. Without this help there were no Fishing on these Coasts, which is the greatest Staple-commodity (besides materials for Shipping) which the Country yieldeth.

The Towns here are exceeding thin, and in them the Houses for the most part very poor and miserable, commonly patched up of Dirt and Hurdles, not much unlike our ordinary Cottage-houses in the Fen-Countries. It is distributed into five Prefectures or Governments, according to the number of the Castles which command the same. Of these,

1. The first most towards the South is the Castle of BAHUTS: to which are subject the Towns of 1. Marstrand, seated in a Demi-Island begirt with Rocks; of most note for the infinite quantity of Herrings caught hereabouts. 2. Congel, upon the Sea, a Town of Merchandise, opposite to Schagen in Denmark. 3. Oddevald.

2. AGGERHUTS, the second of the five Royal Castles, hath under its Command the Towns of 1. Anslo, or Aflosa, on a Bay or Gullet opposite to Frithland, an Episcopal See, and of most esteem of all the Country, by reason of the Courts of Judicature which are therein held. 2. Tonsberg, or Koningsberg, that is to say, the King's or the Kingly Mountain, formerly a retiring-place of the Kings of Norway. 3. Frederickstad, built by one of the Fredericks, Kings of Denmark. 4. Schin or Schon, remarkable for its Mines of Iron and Copper. 5. Saltzburg. 6. Hammar the greater, and 7. Hammar the less, divided by the interposing of the Bay called Sinus Mesianus, in former times the See of a Bishop, since removed to Aflosa, or rather thereunto united in these latter times, as many poor Bishopsricks be in Ireland.

3. BERGERHUIS is the third Castle of Command herein. Subordinate whereunto are, 1. Bergen, the principal Town of the Country, an Episcopal See, and the ordinary Residence of the Governour for the Kings of Denmark, situate amongst high Mountains, at the bottom of a deep Creek or Arm of the Ocean called Carmefjunt. A noted Port, and much resorted to by Merchants of most foreign Nations, bringing in Corn, Meal, Bread, Beer, Wine, and Aqua-Vita, to supply the natural wants and defects hereof; and in exchange transporting hence Fish, Furs, Cordage, and other materials for Shipping. In which regard it was accounted formerly one of the four chief Staple-Towns of the Dutch Merchants of the Hanse: the other three being London in England, Novogrod in Muscovie, and Bruges in Flanders. But of late time this Bergen hath lost most of its Trade, removed hence to Wardhuy, nearer unto Muscovie: as the great Town of Novogrod, by reason of the change of Navigation from the Baltick into that of the Northern passage, hath given way to S. Nicolas; and Bruges was deprived of her Traffick by Antwerp, from whence it is removed to Amsterdam. For the Hollanders, by blocking up the Haven, but especially by keeping Bergen op Zoon, have such a command over the River, that no Vessel can pass or repass without their license. 2. Staffenger, an Episcopal See also, but not else observable.

4. The Castle of TRONDHEIM is the fourth, situate in the Town of Trondheim, or Drontheim, formerly called Tronden, and in Latine Nidrosia; the See of an Archbishop, who is the Metropolitan of Norway. A beautiful City heretofore, but since the Subjection of this Country unto the Danes reduced to a Burrough. So called of the River Nider, upon which it is seated, and Rosa, the name then of the principal Church; which in time gave place to the Cathedral for greatness and neatness of the Fabrick, all of polished Stone, not giving place to any in Europe; about the year 1530 much defaced with Fire, which began at the Altar, the damage done by it being estimated at 7000 Crowns; a great sum of money in those times, and so poor a Country. So that, by casting up our reckoning, we find in Norway one Archbishop and four Bishops; that is to say, the Archbishop of Trondheim or Nidrosia, the Bishops of Bergen, Anslo, Staffangor, and Hammar: of the same Power, Jurisdiction and Revenue, since the Reformation, as those of Denmark were of, and of the first Conversion of this People to the Christian Faith, we have spoke already.

5. The fifth and last Castle which commands this Country is that of WARDHUTS, so called of the Town

Town of Wardhuy, as that is from the Isle Ward, in which it is seated. A small Castle, and the Town in former times but mean and poor, situate in the extreme North-point of all this Kingdom; but in those times accounted (as easily it might) for the chief of this Prefecture, and honoured in the Summer time with the Seat and Residence of the Governour, retiring more Southwards in the Winter, at what time, by reason of the extremity of the Cold, and long absence of the Sun for some months together (the Town lying within the Arctic Circle) it is hardly habitable. But of late time it is much improved both in Wealth and Building, by reason of the removal of the English Trading from Novogrod, near the Baltick Sea, to the Town of S. Nicolas, not far from hence; drawing by that means the Trade of Muscovie and Norway more near together. So that now it is not only useful unto the Danes; in regard that it somewhat aweth the neighbouring Lappians, and commandeth the Natives, for that cause fortified very strongly by King Frederick the second; but made very profitable to him also, by the resort of Dutch and English, who must of necessity touch at it (if they make no stay there) in their way to Muscovie. Other Towns in these two last Prefectures are not worth looking after.

And so much for the Continent or Main-land of Norway: let us next look upon the Islands in the Northern Ocean which belong unto it.

The ISLANDS in the Northern Ocean.

THE Northern Sea, so named from its Northern situation, is by some called Mare Scythicum, because it coasted along the Shores of Scythia; by Juvencal Oceanus Glacialis, because often frozen; by Pliny, in the same sense, Mare Amalechium, the word in the Scythick Language signifying frozen, or congealed; by the Russes or Muscovites Myrmorskoj More; by the Cimbrians, in their Tongue, Marimorska, that is to say, the Dead Sea, because of the slowness of its motion, often clogged with Ice; and, in the same sense, Mare pigrum, by Tacitus. This Tacitus doth best describe, from whom take it thus. "Trans Sueones Mare aliud pigrum & prope immotum, &c. Beyond the Swedes there is another Sea, so flow and almost immovable, that many think it to be the Bounds which compass the whole World. Some are persuaded that the Sound of the Sun is heard as he ariseth out of this Sea; and that many shapes of Gods are seen, and the Beams of his Head. Illuc usque (& sama vera) tantum Natura; at this Sea (the Report is credible) is the end of Nature and the World. The English were the first of all civil people who adventured to open and discover the Passages of it, under the conduct of Richard Chancellour, arriving by this way in Russia, An. 1553. and tracing out the way; which others of that Nation, together with the Flemmings, Hollanders, and some Towns of the Hanse, have since followed. Of which more in Muscovie. The principal Islands dispersed in it are, 1. Groenland. 2. Island. 3. Freeze-land, belonging to the Crown of Norway, to be surveyed at the present: Nova Zemla and Sir Hugh Willoughbie's Island, appertaining (if to any) to the Kueez, or great Duke of Muscovie, of which more hereafter.

1. ISELAND is situate under the Arctic Circle, in length 144 German miles, 65 in breadth. So called from the abundance of Ice in it and about it, frozen continually for the space of 8 months, and so vehemently chilled with the Northern Winds, that it yieldeth neither Corn nor Trees, except Juniper only: yet there is Grass in such abundance, that the people are of opinion, that if they do not sometimes keep their Cattel from feeding, they are in danger to surfeit and die with fullness. Beasts for Labour here are both Horses and Oxen; the Oxen and Kine without Horus, but the Sheep not so: and they have also here a fine breed of little Dogs, known amongst us by the name of Iceland Dogs, the delight of Ladies; as also white Falcons and white Ravens, Eagles with white Tails, with Hares and Bears of the same colour. By reason of their want of Corn, the people eat Stock-fish (as in Norway) in stead of Bread: yet notwithstanding, by reason of the benefit of the Sea and access of Strangers, they have all things necessary brought unto them, (even to Wood and Timber) of which the richer sort make use, giving the Merchant in return sometimes the flesh of Bees and Mutton, but ordinarily Butter, Skins, Horses, Hawks, Brimstone, and Fish especially, the Staple Commodity of the Country; of which they have such plenty, and of so good condition, that a piece of Iceland Lard is counted with us as a fit Dish for a Nobleman's Table.

The people for the most part are of a plain and simple nature, living (as in the Golden Age) on that which Nature gives them, without help of Art, more than that of making Cheese and Butter: the Mountains serving them for Towns, and the Rivers for Drink, and their lodging is all under one roof with their Horses and Oxen. They use neither Physick nor Physicians, yet live so long (and probably the longer for it) that many of them attain to the age of 150 years and more. The Women are exceeding fair, but they know not how to attire themselves; nor is there any difference in Apparel betwixt the Sexes, so that it is not easy to know one from another. Few of them but have some familiar Spirit to do them service: and notwithstanding the endeavour of the Ministers to purge them from this Impiety, yet it is so grafted in them that they cannot leave it.

It is observable, that notwithstanding the cold condition of this Island, yet in many places it is full of Heats and Fire under the ground: which, by the Antiperistasis of the cold Air stopping the Pores of the Earth, and taking from it the liberty of Evaporation, doth burn more vehemently: infomuch that there are three high Mountains whose Tops are always covered with Snow, and yet continually burning. The names of them are Hecla, Helga, and La-Croix, but the first the principal, by some called Heclafort; which sometimes casts out Fire, sometimes flaming Water, then Black Ashes and Pumice-stones, in so great abundance that it darkneth the Sun, and makes the Country for six miles round about it to be uninhabited. Stranger things are not spoken of Ætna than of these three Mountains: and here the Superstitious people have the same opinion which they have in Sicily, viz. That underneath must needs be Hell, and the habitations of the damned. But to judicious men the natural reason of these Flames is plain and obvious; occasioned by those veins of Brimstone (great quantity whereof they send into foreign parts) on which the foundation of the Hills is laid: here being many Bathes and Fountains of hot water, which have Sulphur swimming at the top.

At the first planting of this Island, the people did not trouble themselves with building Towns, but every one seated himself where he thought convenient, dwelling in Cells and Caverns digged in the bottom of the Rocks. By means whereof the Inland parts have not many Houses: but the Sea-coasts, since the coming of so many Strangers to them; begin to be built in many places, the Buildings for the most part being of Timber, roofed with Flags with an Hole on the sides of the roof to let in the Light. So that we are not to expect many fine Towns or Cities: the principal of them which are being, 1. Halar, in the North,

North, and 2. Schalholt, in the Southern part; both Bishops Sees, having petty Schools, consisting of 24 Scholars apiece, to whom the Latine Tongue is taught at the charge of the Bishops. 3. Haffenford, an Haven Town, where under Tents the Dutch Merchants barter their Commodities. And 4. Besfede, a Castle, the ordinary Residence of the Governour for the Kings of Denmark.

It hath been generally conceived that this Island is that Thule which the Poets so often speak of: as Tibi serviat ultima Thule, in Virgil; Nec sit servis ultima Thule, in Seneca the Tragedian. Nor did there want some reason to persuade them to this opinion; this being indeed the farthest part of the old known World. But greater reasons are against it. For when Solinus saith, Multa sunt circa Britannicum Insula, à quibus Thule ultima; I hope Thule must be one of the British Isles. And when Tacitus saith of Agricola, Insulas quas Orcades vocant demuit, despecta est & Thule; I am sure that Island is so far from being kenne'd by any one of the Orcades, that it is at least eight Degrees distant. So that Thule must be sought for in another place, and where that is hath been shewed already. As for Island, it was so far from being known unto the Ancients, that it was hardly known unto those of Norway till the year 874, when some of the Norwegians were driven out of their Country by Harald the first, who first suppressing the many Petty Kings of the Norwegians, made many of them seek new Dwellings; of which some few arrived here, where finding room enough to plant in, and no great loss (if any) by change of their Dwelling, they invited many of their Friends and Countrymen to come unto them. An. 1070, they were converted to the Gospel by some Preachers sent hither from Adelbert the Archbishop of Breme. By whose persuasion and procurement they founded two Episcopal Sees; adding thereto in tract of time eight Religious Houses: that is to say, the Monasteries of Pingore, Kemefede, Modur and Monkeniere, under the Government and Jurisdiction of the Bishop of Halar; and those of Vide; Fernebar, Kirckebar, and Skjade, under the Bishop of Schalholt. In the year 1260, it was first brought under the Crown of Norway, following since that the Fortunes of it in all Changes both of Church and State; made subject with it to the Kings of Denmark, together with it reformed in matters of Religion according to the Confession of Augsburg, retaining still their Bishops, with a limited power, and turning the Revenues of their Monasteries unto other uses, as there they did, according to the will and pleasure of their Lords of Denmark.

2. South-west of Island lies another, and as cold an Isle, commonly called by the name of FREESLAND, from the continual Frosts unto which it is subject. By the Latines it is called Frislandia, to distinguish it from Frisia or Friesland in Germany. It is situate under the North Frigid Zone; but not so much within the Arctic as Island is, the longest Day here in the height of Summer not exceeding 20 hours: and yet the Soil is so cold and barren, that it beareth neither Corn nor Fruit, the Inhabitants living most on Fish, which as it is their only Food, so is it also their chief Commodity wherewith to entertain or invite the Merchant. And hereof there is such abundance caught upon their Coasts, that they are never without the company of Hanse-men, Scots, Hollanders, Danes and English; by which last it hath been so frequented in these later times, that it hath been called by some the Western England. For quantity it is somewhat bigger than Island, but by reason of the bitter Air, and the Defects above mentioned, very thinly inhabited. The chief Town of it is called Freesland, by the name of the Island; situate on the Eastern Shore of it. Besides which, there are some others set down in the Maps; as 2. Sa- mesco. 3. Andefort. 4. Sorand; but not much observable. Westward whereof, as Zieglerus (and out of him Magnus) telleth us, is a less Island called Icarus, giving the name of Mare Icarium to the Sea adjoining: so called (by his mistake or translation of the Fable) from Icarus the Son of Dadalus, a King of Scotland, who did once (but no body knows when) Lord it over these Islands.

III. GROENLAND, so called, as some say, from the Greenness of it in the Summer; as others say, by Antiphrasis, because never green, by reason of the sharpness of Winter. But the former Etymology is more agreeable to the state of the Country. For though it be continually covered with Snow, except in June, July and August, (inasmuch that though the people be always clad with Furs and Skins, yet they feel no heat) yet in those months it is exceeding fresh and green, and affords good Pasture. It is situate for the greatest part within the Arctic, between the 65. and 77. Degrees of Northern Latitude: so that the longest Day in the Southern part is 21 hours and a half; and in the most Northern they have no Night for three months and two weeks. The known length of it is affirmed to be 600 miles, and may be much longer than so for ought that any body knows: there being no perfect discovery made of it hitherto, though much frequented by the English and Hollanders (two great Seafaring Nations) for the benefit of the Whale-fishing, much there in use. Their chief Commodities are Fish, white Bears, wild Deer, and some store of Cattel there bred upon their Pastures, but housed for the most part all the Winter. The greatest part of the people dwell in the Caves, and delight in Necromancy, to which they are more wilfully addicted than those in Island, because less acquainted with the Gospel.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Saint Thomas, (in which there is a Monastery of Dominican Friars) seated in the North-East part of the Island; concerning which Mercator speaks of one thing which is very observable, relating that it is not far from a flaming or burning Mountain, seated upon hot scalding Springs, conveyed by Pipes of stone into the Monastery, and serving both as a Stove to warm them, and for a Fire to boil their Viands. The Walls of the Monastery are built of Pumice-stones cast out of that Mountain, which, being tempered with the water of those burning Springs, doth make a glutinous substance, serving instead of Lime, and as long durable. The Gardens of the Convent, in regard of this heat, flourish all the year with Herbs and sweet smelling Flowers; and the adjoining Sea, for the same reason being never frozen, affords good plenty of Fish and Fowl the whole year about, not only for the Monks, but the neighbouring Islanders. So far and to this purpose he. The second Town of note is Iloa, not far from this Monastery: and 3. Munderpre, on the South-East-point. Others, as in a Country not well discovered, we have little notice of: though it be near 300 years since Nicolas Zeni, a Venetian, cast by Tempest on the Coast of Freesland, and by the King thereof employed upon new Discoveries, An. 1380, first made it known to us of Europe; it being immediately on that discovery possessed by the Norwegians, and made a Member and portion of that Crown.

As for the Norwegians themselves, now their Fellow-subjects, they were first known in the time of Ptolemy by the name of Cedini, possessing then the Western parts of Scandia. Uniting with their Neighbours, both Danes and Swishlanders, they became better known in the flourishing times of the French Empire by the name of Normans; first called so by Eginhartus in his History of the Life of Charles the Great, infesting then the Sea-coasts of France and Belgium. Under this name they fell so heavily heavily on the French, especially in the times of Charles the Simple, that they extorted from him that goodly Country, since of them called Normandy, conferred on Rollo, first Duke thereof, Anno 912, whose Successors much increased their glory by the Conquest of England; as some private Adventurers of them did by the Conquest of the Kingdoms of Naples, Sicily, and Antioch. Afterwards feeling on their own bottom, every one of these Northern Nations acting by it self, they were called Norwegians: sometimes, as formerly, commanding over all three Kingdoms, subject successively to each; but most an end governed by their own Kings, till their final Subjugation by the Danes. And as a Nation acting solely and by it self, they subdued Ireland under the conduct of Turgesius, who tyrannized there for a time, as also all the Orcades and the Isle of Man, sold or surrendered by them upon good conditions to the English and Scots, who by those Titles still possess them. The Catalogue of their Kings, leaving out all those of the darker times (parallel to our Brute and the first Scottish Fergus) as merely fabulous, we will begin with King Snuidagerus, who was King of all the three Kingdoms, and at his death divided them again amongst his three Sons; whose Successors Munster thus reckoneth.

The Kings of NORWAY.

1. Snuidagerus.
2. Haddingus.
3. Hetharvus.
4. Collerus.
5. Frogerus.
6. Gotarus.
7. Rotherus.
8. Helga.
9. Hafmunus.
10. Reginaldus.
11. Gimvarus.
12. Osmondus.
13. Olans.
14. Osmondus II. not long after whose time, Anno scil. 800, the Normans began their Irruptions.
15. Aquinus.
16. Heraldus.
17. Olans.
18. Sueno, King of Denmark by Birth and of Norway by Conquest.
19. Olans III. Son of Swain or Sueno, succeeded in the Realms of Denmark and Norway, Cannus his younger Brother being King of England. In this King's time the Norwegians first received the Gospel.
20. Cannus, King of England, succeeded his Brother Olans in the Kingdoms of Denmark and Norway, to which he also added the Crown of Sweden.
21. Sueno II. by whom the Kingdom was restored to the Norwegians.
22. Cannus II.
23. Magnus.
24. Harald II.
25. Magnus II. King of Sweden and Norway.
2326. Magnus III. King of Sweden and Norway, intending the Crown of Sweden for Ericus his eldest Son, conferred that of Norway on Haquin, or Aquinus, his second Son.
1359. 27. Aquinus, King of Norway, younger Son of Magnus the third, married with Margaret, eldest Daughter of Waldemar the third, King of Denmark, founding the Kingdom. And though Olans, the only Son of his Bed, died young without any Issue, yet the Danes, having once got footing in Norway, so assured themselves of it, that they have ever since possessed it as a subject Kingdom, keeping the Natives so poor and low, that they are not able to assert their former Liberties, and not permitting them to use any Shipping, so much as for transporting their own Commodities, for fear they should grow wealthy and strong at Sea. Besides the strong Garrisons maintained in most parts of the Country, kept it in such an absolute Awe, that they dare not stir against the Danes, if their stomachs served them. So that now Norway being made subject to the Crown of Denmark, or both made Fellow-subjects to the same King, we must next look upon these Kings, not as Kings of each distinct and separate from the other but as they are in Fact and Title.

The Kings of DENMARK and NORWAY.

1376. 1. Haquin, or Aquinus, King of Denmark and Norway: of this last by Descent, of the other by Marriage.
1380. 2. Olans, Son of Aquinus and Margaret.
1383. 3. Margaret, Wife of Aquinus, Mother of Olans, and Daughter of Waldemar the third, after the death of her Son, (in whose time she governed as his Guardian) took upon her the Kingdom in her own Right; not only keeping Norway in the State she found it, but adding unto Denmark, the Crown of Sweden, won by the Vanquishment of Albert Duke of Mecklenburg, then King thereof. A gallant and magnanimous Lady, the Semiramis of Germany.
1411. 4. Ericus, Duke of Pomeran, and Knight of the Garter, Son of the Lady Mary, Dutches of Pomeran, Daughter of Ingeburgis, the Sister of Margaret, by whom he was adopted for her Heir, succeeded after her decease in all the three Kingdoms; outed of all before his death by a strong Faction made against him, and his Estates conferred on.
1439. 5. Christopher, Count Palatine of the Rhene, and Duke of Bavaria, (but in Title only) the Son of Margaret, Sister of Ericus; chosen by the joyn consent of all the Sates of these Kingdoms. After whose death (without Issue) the Danes considering the great advantage they had gotten by the addition of Norway, pitched upon Adolphus, Duke of Sleswick and Earl of Holftein, for the next Successor, that they might get in those Estates to their Kingdom also. Who, excusing himself by reason of his Age and want of Children, commended to them Christiern Earl of Oldenburg, his Kinsman and next Heir, who was chosen accordingly.
1448. 6. Christiern, Earl of Oldenburg, upon the commendation of his Uncle Adolphus, chosen King of Denmark and Norway, succeeded his said Uncle in the Estates of Holftein and Sleswick, continuing since united unto that Crown, and added also thereunto by Conquest the Kingdom of Sweden.

- 1482 7. John, Son of Christiern, succeeded in all three Kingdoms; Knight of the Order of the Garter.
- 1514 8. Christiern II. Son of John, King of Denmark, Norway and Sweden, which last he held under with great cruelty; hated by reason of his Tyranny toward all sorts of people, and outed of his Kingdoms by his Uncle Frederick, Anno 1522. by whom at last he was taken and kept in prison till he died, Anno 1559.
- 1523 9. Frederick, Brother of John, and Uncle of Christiern the second, chosen King of Denmark and Norway on the Abdication of his Nephew, Reformed Religion in both Kingdoms according to the confession of Augsburg.
- 1535 10. Christiern III. suppressed with great trouble the Party formed against him in behalf of Christiern the second, perfected the Reformation begun in the time of his Father, and was a great Benefactor to the University of Copenhagen.
- 1559 11. Frederick II. Son of Christiern the third, subdued Diemarsh, before unconquered by the Danes or Earls of Holfstein, and added it unto that Dukedom, (both being united to that Crown though held of the Empire) Knight of the Garter.
- 1588 12. Christiern IV. Son of Frederick the second, Brother of Anne Queen of great Britain, and Knight of the Garter; who engaging in a War against the Emperor Ferdinand the second for the Liberty of Germany, was suddenly beat out of all the Cimbriack Chersonese by the prevailing Imperialists, but compounded the business upon very good Terms, and was restored to all his own.
- 1648 13. Frederick III. the youngest Son of Christiern the fourth, his eldest Brethren being all dead without Issue, succeeded in the Crowns of Denmark and Norway.

Having thus mustered up the Kings of these several Kingdoms, taken distinctly and conjunct; we must next look upon the way of their coming to their Regal Throne, their form of Government together with their Powerableness and Revenues incident unto it. As for the manner of their coming to the Regal Throne, the Danes pretend their Kingdom to be Elective, and not Hereditary; yet so as they have always set the eldest Son on the Throne of his Father, unless some extraordinary occasion have disposed it otherwise. But they that look upon their Stories in the former times can see no such matter, the Kingdom going generally in the way of Succession, unless by Faction or Usurpation some popular and powerful Pretender hath interloped; as often times hath happened in such other Estates as are Hereditary merely, without claim or colour of Election. 'Tis true, that the Male-issue failing in Olav the Son of Margaret, and the Princess which pretended by the Females after her decease not being of sufficient power to assert their Titles; the Kingdom was transferred to the house of Oldenburg, who held it on no other ground than by that of Election. Which, being an extraordinary case, is to make no Precedent, though seconded by the ousting of King Christiern the second, and the advancement of Frederick unto that Estate: these being acts of Violence and Force, and justified only by the false Topick of Success. But whosoever lost by the hand, the Danes got well by it; King Frederick taking up the Crown upon such Conditions as have made him and his Successors little more than Titulary. For he was fain to swear at his Coronation, that he would put none of the Nobility to death or Banishment, but by the judgment of the Senate, that the Great men should have power of Life and Death over their Tenants or Vassals; that no Appeal should lie from them to the Kings Tribunal, nor the King be partaker of the Consecrations, nor, finally, advance any to Commands and Honours but by consent of his great Council. Which Oath being also taken by his Successors, made Bodinus say, Non tam re ipsa quam appellatione Reges esse; that they were only Kings in Title, but not Kings indeed, Yet in regard that the Nobility (so they call their Gentry) have but small Estates, none of them above the degree of Knights, (except only the Princes of the Blood) and that Decree conferred by the King alone; it is not often found that they have dared to cross or oppose their King, but when some of the Royal Family (out of private ends) have conferred with them in it: as in the case of Christiern the 2. deposed by the People, but those people headed and set on by his Uncle Frederick, who had an eye upon the Crown.

As for the Senate or great Council, spoken of before, it consists wholly of men chosen out of the Nobility, (who are to prove their Gentry by a long Descent) seldom exceeding the number of 28. to each of which there is allowed a convenient Salary, with some fair Castle in the Country for his Retirements, during his being of that Body: his whole Estate being freed also for that time from all publick Payments. Without their Counsel and advice the King is neither to determine of Peace or War, or to enter into any new League or Confederacies, nor impose any Tax upon the Subject; and unto them and the King jointly is the last Appeal: such being the Constitution of this Estate, that all Causes and Controversies are first decided in the Prefecture or Heret (184 in number) where they first arise; from whence it is lawful to appeal to the Judge of the Province, from him to the Chancellor of the Kingdom, and finally to the King and Council. By the Laws of Waldemar the first, who first reduced the Laws into set form and writing, the Bishops were to sit with his Council in all Causes of moment: but were discharged from that Employment by King Christiern the third, by whom it was also ordeyned, that the Clergy should not sell any of the Church-lands without leave of the King.

The Forces which this King or Kingdom are able to raise may best be seen by some of their percticular Undertakings: those specially of Christiern the second, who, at the request of Henry the second of France, sent a Navy of an hundred Sail into Scotland against the English, and therein no fewer than 10000 Souldiers; and of Frederick then Duke of Holfstein, who in his War against this Christiern, (whose removal from the Crown he had then projected) brought 80000 men into the field to make good his Quarrel. And questionless considering the many Ports and Islands that this Crown is Master of, both within the Baltick and without, it cannot be but he may suddenly raise a strong power at Sea. And then considering that each of the Nobility, which are here numerous enough, is bound to find a certain number of Horse upon all occasions; as are those also who hold Lands of the King, which the Danes call Verlehnunge: it will accordingly be concluded, that they are able to make good Levies for a suddain Service, especially in defence of their own Dominions.

The Revenue of this King consisteth principally in the great Impost laid upon all Ships which pass through the Sound: the greatness whereof may easily be conjectured at by the multitude of Ships which of necessity must pass pass by it in the Trade of the Baltick, though of late somewhat lessened of what it was, since the English found out and frequented the Northern passage into Muscovia. There are also some Crown-lands, and a great yearly Toll made of the Cattel which pass into Germany, as also of the Fish transported into other Countries. And yet it is conceived that the Treasures of this King are not very great: partly because there is no other important Commodity but Fish to draw Merchants thither; and partly that there is not any one Town of any great Traffick in all his Realms for the entertaining of Commerce.

The chief order of Knighthood in it is that of the Elephant, instituted by Frederick the second. Their Badge, a Collar powdered with Elephants towred, supporting the Kings Arms, and having at the end the picture of the Virgin Mary.

The Arms hereof are Quarterly, 1. Or, three Lions passant Vert, crowned of the first, for the Kingdom of Denmark; and secondly, Gules, a Lion Rampant Or, crowned and armed of the first, in his Paws a Dansk Hatchet Argent, for the Kingdom of Norway. What Arms belong to him as Duke of Holfstein and Sleswick I am yet to seek.

There are in Denmark

Archbishops 2. Bishops 13.

Universities 2. Viz.

Copenhagen.

Sora.

And so much for the Kingdom of DENMARK.

SWETHLAND.

SWETHLAND is bounded on the East with Muscovie, on the West with the Dofine Hills, which divide it from Norway; on the North with the great Frozen Ocean, spoken of before, on the South with Denmark, Liesland, and the Baltick Sea. So called from the Sueci, Suehans, or Suehidi, and the word Land, added for a termination; of which more hereafter.

It is in length, from Stockholm unto the borders of Lapland, above 1000 Italian miles; and in breadth from Stockholm, lying on the Bodner Sea, to the Borders of Denmark, about twenty good days journey on horseback: in compass as they which have travelled the length and breadth of it, on this side of Lapland and the Gulf or Bay of Bodner, account it little less than all Italy and France together; but taking in Lapland, and the Provinces on the other side of the Gulf, bigger than both by the quantity of 900 miles.

The situation of it in regard of the Heavenly bodies is the same with Norway, under the same Parallels and Degrees; but of so different a temper, both for Soil and Air, as if disposed of under several and long-distant Climes. For the Air here is very pure, but not so sharp and insupportable as it is in Norway: though in some places, where the Moors and Waters fettle, for want of care to open and cleanse the Water-courses, they have great Fogs and Mists, which do somewhat putrify it. And for the Soil, it is more fertile than any of the other Northern Provinces: so that besides those Necessaries which they keep for themselves, they usually transport into other Countries store of Malt and Barley, together with great quantities of Brast, Lead, Steel, Copper, Iron, the Hides of Goats, Bucks, Oxen, and costly Furs. They have also some Mines of Silver, not mixt with any other Metal, plenty of Fish in their Lakes and Rivers; abundance of Pine-trees, Firre, Oaks, both for Ships and Houses; yielding besides, among the Woods, good store of Tar and Honey, and some other Necessaries. But hereof we shall speak more punctually in the several Provinces.

The principal Mountains of this Country are the Dofine Hills, a vast and continual Ridge of Mountains which divide it from Norway. And though they want not Rivers fit for common uses, yet partly by reason of their great Frosts and flakes of Ice, partly by reason of the falling of Trees which lye cross their Channels, they have not many navigable, or any of great fame. The principal of such as be, are 1. Meler, at the mouth whereof stands the City of Stockholm, 2. Lusen, 3. Dalacartie, giving name to the Province so called, or denominated from it. And of the Lakes, whereof here are exceeding many, that of most note is the Lake of Weret, which, receiving into it 24 Rivers, disburtheneth it self at one mouth into the Baltick, with such noise and fury, that they call it commonly the Devil's head.

The people are naturally strong and active, provident, patient and industrious; hospitable towards Strangers, whom they entertain with great Humanity; so healthy, that, if they do not shorten their days by Excess and Riot, they live commonly to 140 years of age; and so laborious, that a Beggar is not seen amongst them. Of no great note for Arts or Arms in the times foregoing: not much addicted to the one; and so kept under by the Danes, that they could not grow eminent in the other: but much improved in both respects in these later days: Eriem, the first King of the present Race, who cleared his Country of the Danes, and Gustavus Adolphus, the last King, who freed the Germans from the Yoke of the House of Austria, not being easily to be matched in the Arts of War. And since they began to give themselves to the sweets of Learning, this Country hath produced (amongst some other learnh men) Olavus Magnus, Archbishop of Upsal, of great note for his History of the Goths and Vandals, the first-fruits of this Nation in the liberal Sciences. And it is probable, by reason of their late Commerce with the German Nations, they will give better testimony to the World hereafter of their proficiency in this kind, as being generally exceeding apt to learn the Arts Mechanical, every man in a manner being his own Artificer, without employing Smith, Mason, Carpenter, or any other manual Trades. Very valiant they are both on foot and horseback, which their long Wars against the Danes, and their late Wars in Germany, have given good proof of. Their Women are discreet and modest, free from that Intemperance which these Northern parts are subject to. Both sexes use a corrupt Dutch, common to all three Northern Kingdoms, except in Finland, and the Provinces on the other side of the Bodner Sea, where they partake somewhat of the Muscovite or Russian Language.

The Christian Religion was first planted amongst them by the care and diligence of Ansgarius Archbishop of Breme, the Apostle-general of the North. Corrupt with Popish Superstitions, it was reformed, according to the Augustine Confession, in the time of Gustavus Ericus, the first of that present Royal Family, solicited thereto by one Peter Nevicus a Lutheran Divine, and Laurence, the Archdeacon of Srengnes; but chiefly moved (as others say) by a desire to appropriate to himself the Goods of the Church. And this appears to have had some strong influence upon him in it, in that he presently seized upon what he pleased; and made a Law, that Bishops should enjoy no more than the King thought fit: yet having pretty well lessened their Revenues, he was content they should remain as formerly both in power and number; reserving to himself and his Successors the Nomination of the persons; but so as the Approbation of the Clergy in a kind of Election doth usually go along with the Kings appointment.

The Bishops are in number seven: that is to say, 1. of Lincopen, containing in his Diocese 226 Parishes. 2. Of Vexime, under whom are 210. 3. Of Scara, ruling over the same number of Churches. 4. Of Srengnes, under whom are a hundred only. 5. Of Abg, the greatest for extent of all, as comprehending under it 500 Parishes. 6. Of Wyborg, and 7. of Habsy; whose Dioceses for the most part lie out of the bounds of Sweden, in Moscovie, Livonia, and some other of the out-parts of the Realm of Poland. All of them are under the Archbishop of Upsal, as their Metropolitan, whose Diocese, extending into Lapland and Finmarck, containeth 171 Parish-Churches. By which account there are in all the Kingdom of Swethland but 1417 Parishes; but many of them a thousand or eight hundred Families: the people being dispersed in Forests and other places, where they have store of Timber to build them houses, and store of Pasturage for their Cattel, which is the reason why they have not so many great Towns, nor so well inhabited, as is usual in far lesser Countries. As for the Authority of these Bishops, they still retain their Voice in Parliament, and with them so many of the inferior Clergy as are from every Socken (a certain number of Parishes, like our Rural Deanries) deputed to appear there in the name of the Church: the Affairs whereof the Bishops do direct and order, as well in as out of public Meetings, according to the Ecclesiastical Constitutions formerly established; and if any great occasion be, they may either advise with their Consistorials, or call a Diocesan Synod, (as they think most fit) and therein make such Laws and Canons as they conceive to be most proper for their own Edification.

The whole Kingdom is divided into two parts, the one lying on the East, the other on the West-side of the Bay or Gulf of Bodner, called Sinus Bodicus in Latine, being a large and spacious Branch of the Baltick Sea, extending from the most Southernly Point of Gothland, as far as to Lapland on the North. According to which division, we have the Provinces of 1. Gothland, and 2. Sweden, lying on the West-side of the Gulf; 3. Lapland, shutting it up upon the North; 4. Bodia or Bodden, and 5. Finland, on the East-side thereof; and 6. the Syedsjö Islands, where it minglith with the rest of the Baltick.

1. G O T H L A N D.

G O T H L A N D is bounded on the East with the Bodner Sea, on the West with the Mountains which divide it from Norway, and so much of Denmark as lies in the same Continent with it, on the North with Sweden, on the South with the Sea Baltick. So called either from the Goths, whose original Country it is commonly affirmed to be, or quasi goot Land, from the goodness and fertility of the Soil, (Gootlandia, quæ Germanicè Terra bona sonat, as Alanus out of Munster hath it) the Soil being very fruitful for Corn and Cattel, affording plenty of Mines, with great store of Fish, and generally a better conditioned Country than any of the rest of these Northern Regions.

It is divided commonly into Ostro-goth, or East-Gothland; Wester-Goth, divided from the former by the great Lake of Weret, spoken of before; and South-Gothland, subdivided into Smalandia, Tuiscia, and Vendia. Chief Towns in Ostrogoth are, 1. Lincopen, a Bishops See. 2. Loduse, adorned with a very fair Haven. In Wester-goth, 3. Scara, on the Lake Weret, a Bishops See also. 4. Elfsborg, on the Western Sea, betwixt Denmark and Norway; a place of consequence, and flank'd with two very strong Castles in the parts adjoining, the one called Croneberg, and the other Goldberg. 5. Tragnalle, remarkable for Iron works, occasioned by the Mines adjoining. And finally, in South-Gothland there is 6. Vexime, or Vexio, another of the Episcopal Sees. 7. Walburg, a reasonable fair Town, with a strong Castle. 8. Elholm, in that part hereof which is called Vendia, near the Confines of Denmark. 9. Calmar, a noted and well traded Port on the Baltick Sea, beautified with a Castle not inferior to that of Millain, and so well fortified throughout, that at the taking of it by Christiern the fourth of Denmark, Anno 1611, there were found mounted on the works 108 brass pieces of Ordnance, six Men of War to guard the Haven, with all manner of Ammunition in proportion to them. 10. Gottenburg, (or Gothorum Burgum) the chief Town of the Goths or Gothland, as the name importeth, enjoying a commodious Haven, on the Baltick also, and very much frequented for the Trade of Germany, to which it serves exceeding fitly; the principal Town of all this Province, and for that cause the ordinary Seat or Residence of the Governour for the King of Sweden.

The first Inhabitants of the South parts of Scandia are commonly affirmed to have been the GOTHS, whom Jornandes in his Book de Rebus Geticis makes to have issued out of this Country, and to plant themselves on the North Banks of the Ister, near the Euxine Sea, some time before the Trojan War: ascribing to them whatsoever is reported in old Writers of the ancient Scythians, as their Encounter with Vexoris or Sesostris the King of Egypt, the Acts and Atchievements of the Amazons, their Congress with Alexander the Great in his Persian War, and the like to these. In which Jornandes, being himself a Goth, is no more to be credited than Giosy of Monmouth, a Welsh-man, in the Story of Brute and his Successors, to whom he doth ascribe the taking and sacking of Rome under the conduct of Brennus, whom he makes to be be the Brother of Belinus a King of Britain. Most probable it is, that they were originally a Dutch or German people, part of the great Nation of the Suevi, called by Tacitus the Gothones, inhabiting in his time (as it is conceived) in the Land of Prussia; who, finding their own Country too narrow for them, might pass over the Baltick into the next adjoining Regions; and not well liking that cold Climate, might afterwards in some good numbers go to seek new Dwellings, and at last seat themselves on the Banks of the Ister, where Jornandes found them. That they were Dutch originally, besides the general name of the Githones or Goths, and those of Ostro-goths and Wester-goths, into which they were afterwards divided; the particular names of Alarie, Theodoric, Riccard, (the names of their Kings and Captains) seem to me to evidence. That they were once seated in this Country doth appear as plainly, 1. by the name of Gothland here still remaining; 2. by the Title of Rex Gothorum, which the Kings of Swethland keep in the Royal Style; 3. by some Inscriptions in ancient unknown Characters engraven on the Rocks near Scara in the Continent, and in Wishy in the Ill: of Gothland, supposed by learned men to be some monument of that People. And finally, that their fixt Dwelling, when first known by this name amongst the Romans, was on the North-side of the Ister, is evident by the testimony of all ancient Writers, from the time of Antoninus Caracalla, with whom they had some tumultuary Skirmishes in his way towards Persia, till their violent Irruption into Italy and the Western Provinces: most famous in this Interval for a great Fight with Decius the Roman Emperour, whom they overcame and slew in a Battel, Anno 253. In the time of Valens and Valentinian, the Roman Emperours, a Quarrel being grown amongst them, managed by Phritigernes and Athanaricus, the Leaders of the opposite Factions; Phritigernes, overthrown in fight, had recourse to Valens, from whom he received such Succours, that giving his Adversary another day for it, he obtained the Victory. Whereupon Phritigernes and his Party received the Gospel, but intermixt and corrupt with the Leaven of Arianism, by the practice of Valens, who sent them none but Arian Teachers, to whom and their Factions in the Church he was wholly addicted. Afterwards the whole Nation being driven over the Ister by the barbarous Huns, they obtained of Valens the out-parts of Torace for an Habitation, on condition they should serve under the pay of the Emperour, and become Christians: the cause that Arianism over-spread the whole Nation generally, which had before infected but one part only. Ulphilas, a devout and learned man, was their first Bishop; who, for their better Edification in the way of Godliness, invented a new Gothick Character, and translated the Scriptures into that Language: in the study whereof they so well profited, that many of them in the time of their first Conversion suffered death for it at the hands of Athanaricus, and were counted Martyrs. Burthened by Valens, and denied their accustomed Pay, they haras and depopulate the rest of Torace, marching towards Constantinople, encountered in the way by Valens, whom they overcame and killed, after all his Favours. Vanquished by Theodosius the succeeding Emperour in many Battels, they became good neighbours, enlarging their Bounds with his leave and licence as far as Pannonia, and grown into such estimation with him, that Ricimer and Franka, two of that Nation, did obtain the Consulship: not to say any thing of that exorbitant power and favour which Gaisas had attained unto in the Court it self. Mide insolent by so great Honours, and apt to pick Quarrels with their Patrons, they invaded Italy in two great Bodies, consisting of no fewer than 200000 fighting men. The first whereof, under the Conduct of Rha- uagisus, was discomfited and cut in pieces by Stilico, Lieutenant to Honorius the Western Emperour, at Fesula in the Streights of the Appennine. The other, by his Treachery permitted to pass, sacked Rome, and subdued the most part of Italy, under the leading of Alaricus. He dying immediately after this great Victory, left the fruits of it to his Son Athanalsius, who, marrying with Galla Placidia, the Emperour's Sister, relinquished Italy, and had all Gallia Narbonensis, and a great part of Hispania Tarraconensis, assigned unto him, where he erected the Kingdom of the Wist-Goths or Western Goths, possessed of Spain and Tingitana for the space of 300 years and upward, when they lost that Kingdom to the *Moor*s, as hath there been said. In the mean time the Goths which were left in their own Countries, distinguished from these by the name of Ostro-Goths, by reason of their more Eastern situation, kept themselves in quiet: being first subdued by the Huns, and when by Wislamis freed from that subjection, not intermeddling or attempting any thing against the Empire, till called by Zeno Emperour of Constantinople into Italy against Odoacer and the Heruli, who had then subdued it. Which action they managed with so much prudence and good fortune by their King Theodoric, that they vanquished Odoacer, possessed Italy, and held it above 60 years; when, broken in many set Battels by Belisarius and Narces, Lieutenants for the Emperour Justinian, their Kingdom and Name there came unto an end.

As for the Kings of the Goths, we have a succession of them in Jornandes from Berig, who first conducted them out of Scandia towards the East, till the going of Theodoric into Italy; but made up with so little probability, that I dare give no more credit to it than the Stories of Brute, Dan, Fergus, or the Lady Scota, Pharaoh's Daughter. Such of whom there is any certain knowledge and succession are these few that follow.

The Kings of the G O T H S.

- 344 1. Athanaricus, King of the Goths in the time of Constantinus and Constantins, the Sons of Constantine the Great.
- 357 2. Alaricus, the first of that name, in the time of Constantinus.
3. Phritigernes, King of the Goths in the time of Valens, the first Christian Prince among that People.
- 370 4. Athanaricus II. in the time of the Emperours Valens, Gratian, and Valentinian the second; under whom the Goths were first settled on this side of the Ister.
- 379 5. Rhadagisus, who in the time of Honorius first led the Goths into Italy; slain at the Battel of Fesula.
- 410 6. Alaricus II. who, pursuing the War of Italy, sacked Rome, subdued Naples, and the most of Italy.
- 412 7. Athanalsius, the Son of Alarick the second, who first erected the Kingdom of the Wist-goths in Gaul and Spain, continuing there for the space of 300 years and upwards; the present Kings of Spain coming from this Stock.
- 417 8. Athalaricus, King of the Goths remaining in the East at the departure of Rhadagisus and Alaricus, distinguished from their Plantations by the name of Ostro-Goths: vanquished by Attila, they became Subjects to the Huns in the time of Theodosius the second and Valentinian the third, Emperours of the East and West.

9. Wilamir, one of the Bloud-Royal of the Goths, Vassal to Attila at the first, whom he assisted, or served rather, in the great Battle near Tholuse against the Romans: but, taking advantage of some Quarrel amongst the Sons of Attila, shook off that Yoke, and recovered the Kingdom of the Goths, in the time of the Emperour Marcianus.

10. Theodimir, Son of Winithar, and Brother of Wilamir, in the time of Leo Emperour of Constantinople.

11. Theodorick, Son of Theodimir, kept at Constantinople in his youth as a Pledge or Hostage for his Father, where he was instructed in all the Greek and Roman Learning, and made the adopted Son (as is said by Scaliger) of the Emperour Zeno, by whom he was sent into Italy against Odoacer and the Hermis, and erected there the Kingdom of the Ostrogoths, which continued till the Reign of Justinian, when it was destroyed by Belisarius and Narses, as before is said: the name of Goths in Italy being thus extinct, but their Bloud intermix with the best Italian. The sum of their whole Story, for varieties sake, take thus out of Du Bartas.

The warlike Goths, which whilom issued forth From the cold frozen Islands of the North, Incamp'd by Vistula: but the Air almost B'ing there as cold as in the Baltick Coast, He with victorious Arms Scythia gains, The Transylvanian and Valachian Plains; Then flies to Tracia, and then leaving Greece, Greedy of Spoil, four times he bravely seeks To pluck from Rome (then Mars his Minion) The Plumes which the from all the World had won, Guided by Rhadagise and Alarick, Bold Vindimar and Theodorick, (Legions Thence flies to France, from whence expulst, his Rest ever since upon the Spanish Regions.

The Arms of these Kings are said to have been Or, three Ravens with displayed wings Purple, mem'bred Gules. And let this suffice for the Original, Successes, and final Period of the Goths; reserved by me unto this place, because most commonly conceived to be their original Country, at least the place out of which they issued when they first moved towards the East to seek new Dwellings.

2. SWEDEN.

SWEDEN is bounded on the East with the Bodner Sea, on the West with the Dofrine Hills, which part it from Norway, on the North with Lapland, on the South with Gothland. So called from the Suehans, or Suehidi, the old Inhabitants hereof; of whom more anon. A Country sufficiently fruitful, but for the goodness of the Soil inferior to Gothland; and not so well planted or inhabited as that is, by reason of the vast Woods which they will not suffer to be destroyed, and the greatness of some Marshes hitherto undrained: but might be made as rich and fertile, if the people would; as appeareth by that plenty of Corn growing amongst the Woods, though much hindered by their shade and thickness both from Sun and Rain. But for the Character of this Country, we had it formerly, when we spake of Swethland, in the general; relating specially to this as the principal part.

And as the largest and principal part of this great Body, it contains in it many Provinces and Subdivisions:

as namely, 1. Upland, 2. Sudermannia, 3. Nericia, 4. Westmannia, 5. Delcarlie, 6. Vernland, 7. Copendale, 8. Geffricia, 9. Helsingia, 10. Middelfar, 11. Angermannia, bordering on Lapland, the farthest of these Provinces towards the North. Many of these have no Towns or Cities of any greatness or beauty, the people living thin and scattered, where they have Wood for Building, Pasture for their Beasts, and elbow-room enough for themselves and their Cattel. Of these the principal are, 1. Upsal, an Archbishop's See, and an University, situate not far from the Bay of Bodner, beautified with a large Cathedral, wherein many of the ancient Kings of Swethland are interred. From this City the Country hereabouts is stiled Archiepiscopatus Upsalensis. 2. Holm, by the Inhabitants called Stockholm, by the Russians Stoccolme, the Royal Seat of the Kings, a noted and well traded Port, and the chief of the Kingdom; exceeding strong both by Art and Nature, as being situate in the Marshes, like Venice, at the mouth of the Lake or River of Meler; the passage to it out of the Bay being very narrow, and by consequence easily defended, and yet so deep withal, that the greatest Ships of Burthen may sail up to the City: the Port within the Streight being so safe and capacious, that it is able to receive at one time 300 Sail, which usually ride there without any Anchor. The Castle of this City is conceived to be one of the strongest holds in the world, fortified for the more assurance of it with 400 brass Pieces, many of which are double Canon. 3. Nicopen, a Seaport on the same Bay also. These three are in that part hereof which is called Upland. Then there is 4. Strengnes, an Episcopal See, and 5. Telga, on the Lake of Meler, in the Province of Sudermannia; the Title and Estate of Charles, Father of Gustavus Adolphus late King of Sweden before his getting of the Crown called Duke of Suderman. Next, in the Province of Westmannia, there are 6. Arvoga, on the West-side of the said Lake of Meler; and 7. Arvofia, rich in Silver-mines, out of which are made the best Dollars of Sweden: the Mines here being so rich and profitable, that out of every fifteen pound weight of Silver, the workmen draw a pound weight of Gold. 8. Helsingia, upon the Bay of Bodner, in the Province of Helsingia, taking name from hence. 9. Orrebo or Ornbo, a strong piece in Nericia; and 10. Leffinger, on the Bay of Bodner, one of the farthest North of Sweden distinctly and specially so called.

3. LAPLAND.

LAPLAND, the most Northern part of all Scandia, hath on the East Russia, on the West the Province or Prefecture of Wardhys in the Kingdom of Norway, on the North the main Frozen Ocean, and on the South Bodia, or Bodden, on both sides of the Bay so called.

It is named thus originally from the Lappi or Lappones, the Inhabitants of it, as they are from their blackish behaviour; the word Lappen signifying the same with inopius or insultus in Latine; for such they are, rude, barbarous, and without the knowledge of Arts or Letters, as also without Corn and Houses, or any certain Habitations, except only in Finmark; feeding for the most part on Fish and the flesh of wild Beasts, with the Skins whereof sowed together they hide their nakedness. Generally they are meer Idolaters, giving Divine honour all the day following to that living Creature, whatsoever it be, which they see at their first setting out in the morning; great Sorcerers, and abhorring the sight of Strangers, whom till of late they used to flee from at their first approach, but within few years past beginning to be more sociable and familiar. In a word, they are the true descendants of the ancient Finni, (possessed in old times of all that Tract which lieth between the Bay of Finland and the Frozen ocean) whose natural rudeness and barbarity, unmixt with the condition of more civil people, they do still retain.

It is divided into the Eastern and the Western Lapland. The former pertaining to the Knez or Great Duke of Moscovy, by which people the Inhabitants are called Dikloppi, or the wild Lappians, is subdivided into Biermia and Corelia; of which, if there be any thing in them worth taking notice of, we shall there speak more. The latter doth belong to the Crown of Sweden, subdivided into two parts also, that is to say, 1. Finmark, and 2. Scricfinnia.

1. FINMARK, being that part hereof which lieth next unto Norway, is the more populous of the two. The people are for the most part Idolatrous, but by the neighbourhood of the Norwegians, and resort of Strangers unto Wardhys and the parts adjoining, somewhat civilized, and in the Borders of both Kingdoms favouring of Religion, possessed of Sheds or sorry Houses, and those Houses reduced to Parishes under the Jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Upsal; the chief of which (if there be any chief amongst them) are named, 1. Samman, and 2. Hielso. Called Finmark, as the ancient Bounds and Marches of the Finni (of whom more anon) and therefore erroneously by Maginus made apart of the Kingdom of Norway.

2. SCRICFINNIA lieth between Finmark and Russia. The name is derived from the Finni, a great People of Scandia, and Scryken, a Dutch word signifying leaping, sliding, or bounding, for such is their gate. An Etimologie not much improbable, in that the Wooden-shoes with sharp bottoms, which they used for their more speedy sliding over the Ice, of which this Country is full, are by the Germans (who also use them) called Scrick, loenen, or Sliding-shoes. The ancient Writers call this people Scriclofinni.

These are indeed the natural and proper Laplanders, and unto these the former Character doth of right belong. Of stature very low, little more than Pygmies, but strong and active; well skill'd in Archery, and patient of Cold and Labour; much given to hunting of wild Beasts, whom they kill with their Bowes, devour the flesh, and cloath themselves with their Skins, which they tie at the top of their Heads, and leave no place open but for the sight; giving thereby occasion unto some to write that they are hairy all over, like Kine or Horses. Such Deer (whereof they have great plenty) as they take unkill'd, they make to draw in little Carts, as they shift their Quarters. But having served them for a while, they are killed at last, though perhaps for nothing but their Skins: a certain number of which they pay yearly to the King of Sweden in the way of Tribute. Three Companies of these Laplanders, so clad and Armed, as aforesaid, came into Germany in the year 1630, to serve Gustavus Adolphus in those Wars: looked on with admiration by all Spectators.

Towns we must look for none here, where no Houses be: and yet there are some Sheds and Cabbins on the Sea-shore, which Mariners having made for their refreshment when they came on Land, have bestowed some names on, and possibly in time may become good Towns, now not worth the naming.

4. BODIA.

BODIA, BODDEN, or BODNER, is situate on the South of Scricfinnia, betwixt it and the Bay or Gulf hence named; extending Southwards on the West side of it, till it joins to Sweden, and on the East-side, till it meets with the Province of Finland.

Hence is the division of this country into the Eastern, Northern and Western Badden, with reference to the Situation of it on the Bay aforesaid. The Country is not very plentiful of Grain or Fruits, but full of great variety of wild Beasts, whose rich Skins yield great profit unto the Inhabitants, and by reason of the commodious situation on all sides of the Bay, it is well stored with Fish. Anciently it was part of the possessions of the Finni, but how or whence it had the name of Bodia, Bodden or Bodner, I am yet to learn. But whence soever it had the name, certain I am, that from hence the Gulf adjoining is called Sinus Bodicus, the Bodner Zee by the Dutch or Germans.

Chief Towns herein are, 1. Birkara, in West Bodden, betwixt the Bay and a great navigable Lake. 2. Tornia, a well-traded Empory at the very bottom of the Bay, in North Bodden. 3. Helsingiac, more North than that, towards the Borders of Lapland. And 4. Kerlasi in East Bodden, on the Bank of the Gulf, conveniently seated for a Town of Trade.

5. FINLAND.

FINLAND hath on the North Bodia, on the South the Baltick Sea or Mare Suevicum, on the East Sinus Finnicus, on the West Sinus Bodicus. It is by Munster thought to be called Finland, quasi fine land; quod pulchrior & amantior sit Suecia, because it is a more fine and pleasing Country than Sweden it self. But indeed it is so called from the Finni or Fenni, a potent Nation who have here dwelt; whose Character is thus framed by Tacitus; Finnis mira Feritas; sedita Paupertas; non Arma, non Equi, non Penates, Vitiis Herbe, Vistini Peller, Cubili Humus, sola in Sagittis spes. The Finni, saith he, are wonderfully barbarous, miserably poor, without Arms, Horse, or Household-goods; Herbs their Food, the Ground their Bed, and the Skins of Beasts their best Apparel, armed only with their Arrows, and in them their hopes. A Character which agreeth every way with our present Finlanders, especially those of Scricfinnia and some parts of Finmarkia; who are not so well reclaimed to Civility as the other are: but very different from that which Forandes gives them, who, living within 400 years after Tacitus, before they had much (if any) intercourse with foreign Nations, telleth us of them, that they were Scanzia Cultoribus omnibus mitiores, more tractable and civil than any of the Inhabitants of Scandia, not excepting the Suehidi themselves. If so, they did deserve to live in so good a Country, more plentiful and plain than Sweden, and neither so hilly nor so moorish.

The principal places in it are, 1. Abo, an Archbishop's See, situate on the most Southern Point of it, shooting into the Baltick. 2. Wyborg, a Bishops See also, whose Jurisdiction for the most part is without this Province, on some part of Russia, all Finland being it the Diocese of the Bishop of Abo. A Town conveniently seated at the bottom of the Bay or Gulf of Finland, (called Sinus Finnicus in Latine) which divides this Country from Livonia; well fortified as the chief Bulwark of this Kingdom against the Moscovites; and so well garrisoned withal, that the keeping of this Town, and Rivalia or Revel in the Borders of Liesland, do cost the King of Sweden 100000 Dollars yearly. 3. Udden, on a Point or Promontory of the same Gulf, opposite to Narva, another Garison of this King in Liesland. 4. Verma, upon the Bodner Zee. 5. Cronaburg, more within the Land, at the efflux of a River out of the Lake called Piente. 6. Deckala, on the Banks of the great Lake called Holela. 7. Varta, more Northwards towards Lapland. Of which last four I find not any thing observable in the way of Story.

6. The SWEDISH Islands.

AND now at last I come to the Swedish Islands, here and there interperfed in the Baltick Seas, betwixt the Ifle of Bornholm, which belongs to Denmark, and Lifland or Livonia, appertaining to the King of Poland: the principal of which are, 1. Gothia, or the Ifle of Gothland; and 2. Insula Oland, or the Ifles of Oeland.

1. GOTHIA, or the Ifle of GOTHLAND, is fituate over againft Calmar, a ftrong Town in the Continent of Gothland; in length 18 Dutch miles, and five in breadth, of a rich Soil, but more fit for Paffurage than Tillage, yielding great Herds of Cattel, ftore of Game for Hunting plenty of Filh, excellent Marble, and abundance of Pitch, which it fendeth forth to other Countries. There are in it 18 large and wealthy Villages, befides the Haven Town of Wifby, heretofore rich and of very great Trading, as much frequented by the Merchant as moft in Europe; but now much decayed, and neither fo well peopled nor fo rich as formerly. The Trade removed hither from Wollin in Pomerania (destroyed by Walde-mar the first of Denmark, Anno 1170) made it flourifh mightily, the greateft Traffick of the Baltick being managed here: but after that by reason of the long and continual Wars betwixt Denmark and Swethland for the poffeffion of this Ifle, it became unfafe, the Factory was transferred unto other places. For being conveniently feated to annoy the Swedes, the Danes have much contended for it, and fometimes poffeffed it; but at the prefent it is in the hand of the Swethlander. By fome conceived to be the Eningia fpooken of by Pliny.

2. OELAND, or the Ifles of Oland, fo called in the plural Number, becaufe there are many of them, of which this the principal is fituate over againft Abo, the chief City of Finland. Of no great note, but that it is commodioufly feated to invade or annoy this Kingdom; and therefore very well fortified and as ftrongly garrifoned: here being the good Towns of 1. Fiborg, 2. Vames, and 3. the ftrong Caftle of Cafrolm.

Befides which Countries here defcribed, the King of Sweden is poffeffed of the ftrong Towns of Narva, and Rivalia, or Revel, and Pernau in Liefland of Kexholm, or Hexholm, in Carolia, a Province of Ruffia; with very fair and ample Territories appertaining to them: fubdued and added to this Crown by John the fecond, An. 1581; except Rivalia, which voluntarily fubmitted to Ericus the fecond King of this prefent Race, An. 1561. But being thefe Towns and Territories are not within the Bounds of Swethland, we fhall defer all farther difcourfe thereof to a place more proper.

The firft Inhabitants of this Kingdom, befides the Goths and Finnis fpooken of already, were the Sitones and Suiones, mentioned in Tacitus; together with the Phavona, the Phirafi, and the Levoni, whom we find in Ptolemy, placed by him in the Eaft and midle of this great Peninfula. Which, being the general names of fome mighty Nations, are by Jornandes branched into leffer Tribes of the Suehans, Theuffad, Vagoths, Bergio, Hallin, Liorhida, Athelnil, Gaurigoth, Rammarica, Ranragniciti, Grannii, Aganzia, Unizis, Arochitami, Snagere, Othingi, and divers others by him named. But from what root the name of Sweden, Swedes, or Swethland, by which the chief Province of it, the people generally and the whole Kingdom is now called, is not yet agreed on; nor fpooken of at all by Munfter or Cranzius, which two but (fpecially the laft) have written purpofely of this people. Gafper Peucerus deriveth them from the Suevi, who anciently inhabited in the North parts of Germany, beyond the Albis; from whom the Baltick Sea was called Mare Suevicum:

which people he conceiveth to have been driven by the Goths and Daci into this Country, and by the change of one letter only to be called Sueci. But this hath no good ground to ftand on, though I meet with many others which are more improbable. For when they left thofe colder Countries they fell into thefe parts which are ftill called Suevia, (the Schwaben of the modern Dutch) where we find them in the time of Cafar. And after, in fatali illa Gentium commigratione, when almoft all the Northern Nations did fhift their Seats, we find fuch of them as had ftaid behind to have accompanied the Vandals in their On-falls into Gaul and Spain. Of any Expedition or their crofs the Baltick Seas, ne gry quidem, nothing to be found in more ancient Authors. We muft therefore refer the original of this people either to the Suiones, or the Suehidi, or perhaps to both; both being anciently fetled in thefe Northern Regions. Of the Suiones we read in the Book of Tacitus infcribed De Moribus Germanorum; by whom they are reported to be ftrong in Men, Armour and Shipping. And that they were Inhabitants of Scandia, appears by two Circumftances in that Author.

1. That the people were not permitted to wear Weapons, quia fubito Hoftium Incurfus prohibet Oceanus, becaufe the Ocean was to them a fufficient Rampart; which could not be affirmed of the ancient Suevians, but agreeth very well with the fiteuation of this prefent Country, defended by the Baltick and vaft Northern Ocean from the fudden Affaults of any Enemy. 2. Becaufe the Sea which hemmed in that people was conceived to be the utmoft bounds of the World; Trans Suiones Mare aliud, quo cingi claudique Terrarum orbis fines, as his words there are: which we know to hold good of this Country.

3. Add unto thefe this paffage of the old Annals of the Emperour Lewis the fecond, where it is told us of the Danes, relicta patria apud Suiones exulabant, that they were banifhed into the Country of the Suiones, which cannot fo well be underftood of any place as of this Sweden, being next neighbour unto Denmark. And 4. that this People both by Munfter and Cranzius, are as well called Suiones, as Sueci or Suedi; which fheweth what they conceived of their true Original. Then for the Suehans or the Suehidi, whom Jornandes fpeaks of in his Book De rebus Geticis, they are by him placed in the Ifle of Scandia, (for fuch this great Peninfula was eftemed to be by moft ancient Writers.) Now that thefe Suehidi are no other than the prefent Swethlanders appeareth 1. by the propinquity of the Names. 2. In that he maketh the Finni and Finniathe the next neighbours to them. And 3. in that they are affirmed by the fame Author to have furnifhed the Romans with rich Furs, and the Skins of wild Beasts, with which Commodities this Country is abundantly well ftored. Now to which of thefe two Nations, either the Suiones or the Suehidi thofe of Sweden are moft indebted for their Original, will (I conceive) be no great controverfie: the Suehans and Suehidi of Jornandes being no other than a Tribe of the Suiones, though the greateft and moft powerful of all thofe Tribes; placed therefore in the Front to command the reft, and fo moft like to give the name unto the whole.

Their Government was anciently under Kings, affirmed fo to be by Tacitus, who telleth us alfo that they were abfolute and free, nullis exceptionibus, non precario jure regnandi; not bound in Covenant with their people, nor holding their Eftates at the will of the Subject. But their Hiftorians have gone for Antiquity hereof beyond the ftory of Brute or the Trojan War, (beyond which very few of that ftain have dared to pretend) as high as unto Magog the Son of Japhet, reigning here within 90 years after the Flood. But letting pafs thefe Dreams and Doga-

ges of the Monkh times, certain it is that fometimes they were under the Danes, fometimes under the Norwegians, fometimes had diftinct Kings of their own; and finally fometimes were comprehended with the Danes and Norwegians under the general names of Normans, conducted by one King or Captain upon Forrain Actions. Omitting therefore the Succeffion of their former Kings, of Whole very being there is caufe to make great queftion, we will begin our Catalogue of them with fermanicus, who entertained Herald King of Denmark and his Brother Regenfride, driven out of that Kingdom by Gotticus or Godfrey, the Contemporary of Charlemaign; of whole Succeffors Munfter giveth us more certainty.

- 1363 28. Albert, Duke of Mecklenburg, Son of Euphemia, the Sifter of Magnus the fourth; to the prejudice of Aquinus King of Denmark and Norway, made King of Sweden, on that Quarrel Vanquifhed by Margaret Queen of Denmark and Norway Widow of Aquinus, Anno 1387: to whom, deftrous of liberty, he refigned his Kingdom, and died in his own Country, Anno 1407.
- 1387 29. Margaret, Queen of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, the Semiramis of Germany, having united the three Kingdoms under her Command, caufed an Act of State to be paffed in Calmar, a chief Town in Swethland, for the perpetuation of this Union unto her Succeffors; the Law and Privileges of each Kingdom continuing as before they were.
- 1411 30. Ericus IV. Duke of Pomerania, adopted by Margaret, of whole Sifter Ingelburgis he was defcended, was in her life-time chofen King of the three Kingdoms, into which he fucceeded actually after her deceafe: but outed of them all by a ftrong Faction raifed againft him, Anno 1439, he died in a private Eftate in Pomerania, Anno 1459.

1439 31. Chriftopher, Count Palatine, and Duke of Bavaria, (in Title only) Son of the Lady Margaret, Sifter of Ericus, fucceeded in all three Kingdoms. After whole death the Swethlanders, being weary of the Danifh Government, broke the Agreement made at Calmar, for the uniting of the three Kingdoms under one Prince, and chofe one Carolus Canutus to be their King, Anno 1448.

1448 32. Carolus Canutus, one of the meaneft of the Nobility, and not long pleafing to the great ones: whole Difpleafure when he had incurred, and feared the confequents thereof, he gathered together all the Treafure he could, fled unto Dantzick, and there ended his days.

1455 33. Chriftiern, King of Denmark and Norway, called in by a Party of the Swedes, and crowned King of Swethland; but outed again under colour that he had not kept Conditions with them: the Kingdom being governed after that for a time by Marfhals.

1458 34. John, King of Denmark and Norway, the Son of Chriftiern, received King by the Swedes, then over-powered by the Mufcovite: but their turn being ferved, they expelled him again, returning to their former Government under Marfhals. Of which Marfhals (defcended from Steno Stur, the Uncle of Carolus Canutus by his Mother's fide) there were three in number; viz. 1. Steno, 2. Suanto, and 3. Steno Stur the fecond; of which the two firft died natural deaths, and the laft being by Chriftiern the fecond flain in Battel, this Kingdom was again poffeffed by the Danes.

1519 35. Chriftiern II. King of all three Kingdoms, ufed his Victory fo cruelly here; and his Subjects fo infolently at home, that here he was outed by Guffavus Ericus and driven out of Denmark by his Uncle Frederick.

1523 36. Guffavus Ericus, defcended from the ancient Race of the Kings of Sweden, having vanquifhed and expelled the Danes, was on the merit of that action chofen King of Swethland, which ftill continueth in his Houfe.

1561 37. Ericus V. Son to Guffavus.

1569 38. John II. Brother of Ericus, married Catherine the Sifter of Sigifmund the fecond, King of Poland.

1593 39. Sigifmund, the Son of John the fecond, in the life-time of his Father chofen King of Poland, Anno 1586, but was difpoffeffed of the Crown of Sweden (after a long War) by his Uncle Charles.

1607 40. Charles II. Duke of Suderman, the youngeft Son of Guffavus Ericus, and Brother of John and Ericus the two former Kings, firft governed here as Viceroy for his Nephew Sigifmund. But having an aim upon the Crown (to which he found the Lutherans not very favourable) he raifed up a Calvinian party within that Realm; according to whole Principles he began firft to withdraw his Obedience from his natural Prince, and afterwards to affume the Government to himfelf: fpeeding fo well in his Defign, that after a long War he forced his Nephew to defist from all farther Enter-Enterprizes, and made himself King. An. 1607.

 1611 41. Gustavus Adolphus, Son of Charles, having settled his Affairs in Sweden, and made Peace with the King of Denmark, with whom his Father was in War at the time of his death, fell first on his Cousin Sigismund, the King of Poland, from whom he took many places of importance in Prussia and Livonia; and in pursuance of that War was made Knight of the Garter. Afterwards, having settled a Truce with him, he passed into Germany, then in great danger of being absolutely intrahed to the House of Austria. In which he prospered beyond all expectation, that in one year he passed over the Elb, the Rhene, and the Danow, (which no Conquerour ever did before :) and having twice vanquished the Imperialists led by Tilly, and restored many of the German Princes unto their Estates, was in the current of his Victories slain in the Battel of Lutzen, Novemb. 1632; his body royally conveyed to Swethland, and there interred.

1632 42. Christina, sole Daughter of Gustavus, of the age of seven years, acknowledged Queen of Sweden; the Estate being governed by the Counsels of the Nobility. After a long War, with variable success in Germany, they came at last to this accord in the Treaty of Munster, that she and her Successors, Kings and Queens of Swethland, should peaceably enjoy all the high-er Pomeran, with the Isles of Rugia, Wollen, and the Town of Stetin, in Lower Pomerland; the Town and Port of Wismar in the Dukedom of Mecklenburg; and the whole Bishoprick of Bremen and Verden, and the Prefecture of the Town of Wilshusen; with the Title of Dukes of Bremen, Pomeran, and Verden, Princes of Rugia, and Lords of Wismar; and by those Titles to have place, as Princes of the Empire, in all Diets and Assemblies which concern the Publick. By which agreement (if it hold) the Swedes have not only got a good footing in Germany, a strong Influence upon all the Councils of the Empire, a Door open for more Forces, (if occasion be) and a free passage into the Western Ocean, which before they wanted; but may in time prove absolute Masters of the Baltick Sea, and make the Hamburgers, those of Lubeck, and possibly the Kings of Denmark and the Empire itself, be at their Devotion.

But leaving these things to the Doubtful issue of Contingency, let us next look upon the Forces and Revenues of the Crown of Sweden before the time of Gustavus Adolphus, or as he found them at his Succession to that Crown. For though the Swedes pretend their Kingdom to be Elective, especially since the falling of the Royal Line in Magnus the fourth, and Albert of Mecklenburg: yet still the eldest Son or next Heir succedeth; unless put by by Faction and strong hand, as in the case of Sigismund and his Uncle Charles. Which Charles fo ordered his affairs, that having engaged the Kingdom in a War against his Nephew, he was solicited at the last to accept of the Crown: to which he would by no means yield, till a law was made for the entailing the same for ever unto his Posterity, whether male or female, as an Hereditary Crown. But whether Hereditary or Elective, the King once settled in the Throne is an absolute Monarch; having not only a power to levie Taxes on his Subjects, as he seeth occasion, as five, six, seven, eight Dollars, or more yearly upon every Household, according to the proportion of his Estate, but also to grant a certain number of Peasants unto such as he means to favour, to be as Subjects and Vassals to him, according to his well-deserving. And whereas in the Constitution of this Government every Parish hath a Landman or Consul to decide the Controversies of the same, as every Territory hath its Vicount, and each Province his Lamen; there lieth an Appeal from the Landman unto the Vicount, and from the Vicount to the Lamen; who, if they be supposed not to judge uprightly, then the Appeal lies unto the Council, and from the Council of Estate to the King himself, (in whom is fixed the Sovereignty and Dernier Resort) and not unto the King and Council, as before in Denmark.

The Forces of this King are either by Sea or Land. By Sea he is Commander wholly of the Bay of Badner, and hath a great Power in all the rest of the Baltick; being able to set out 70 good men of War, as John the second did in the year 1578; seven of which were good Gallions, and all the rest did carry above 50 cast Pieces of all sorts, besides many other good Vessels fit for service. And if a Navy of this size will not serve the turn, he is not only furnished with Timber, Cordage, and all other necessaries for the building of Ships, and with good store of Ordnance and Ammunition for present use, but is able to raise upon a sudden 6000 Marriners, and upon little warning as many more; all which he entertaineth at no other charges in a manner than to find Victuals: inasmuch as John the second, before mentioned, did use to say, that that which cost the King of Spain a Million of Crowns, cost not him 100000 Dollars.

For his Land-Forces, they may best be estimated by the Trained Bands (as we call them) in every Province; there being in all 32 Vexilles (or Ensigns) of Foot constantly trained and mustered in the several Provinces; each Vexille comprehending 600 or 700 men, amounting in the Total to 20000 Foot; all in a manner Musketers, ready to march whensoever the Kings occasion shall so require. And then for Horse, there are eleven Cornets in continual readiness for Sweden and Gothland, and two for Finland, maintained at the Charges of those Countries: to which the King may add at his own charges as many more as he pleaseth. And for an instance of what this King is able to do, without putting his Estate in hazard by draining them too dry of men to make good his Kingdom, we find that John the second, in his Navy of 70 Ships spoken of before, had above 18000 Land-Souldiers, besides Marriners. And in the Army which Gustavus Adolphus, the late King, brought into Germany, there were mustered no fewer at one time than 12000 Horse, and 34600 Foot, all *Finn*s and Swethlanders. For the accommodating of which Armies with Artillery and the like Engines of War, it is thought that the Kings hereof are Masters of 8000 great Pieces, for the most part Brass, with Mortar-pieces and Granado's in proportion to them.

But that which makes his Land Forces most considerable is their Hardiness in enduring the extremities of Wind and Weather (inasmuch that it is usual with them to stand Centinel a whole Winters night of 18 hours long without being relieved) their exact Discipline, and Obedience to their Commanders, and finally their indefatigable Industry in making their own Shoes, Apparel, Stocks for Muskets, and all other necessaries. Which doth not only make them fit to endure any labour which is put upon them in the Wars, but keeps them from Idleness and the pride of Mutinies; the ordinary effect, in great Armies, of Sloth and ease. Nor do they want encouragement on the Kings part neither; who, 1. gives to every Souldier Victuals, which he accompts not in their pay, and that according to his Obedience and desert. 2. If a Souldier dier be taken Prisoner, him the King doth usually redeem at his own charges. And 3. if a Souldier's Horse be slain under him, the King supplieth him with another. Which make the Souldiers (very sensible of such Obligations) exceedingly conformable unto his Commands, how dangerous soever they seem to be.

Finally, as for his Revenues, they must needs be great, there being four ways allowed him to amass his Treasures. First the Revenues of the Church, consisting before the Reformation of seven Bishopricks and sixty Monasteries, which enjoyed very great Possessions; all seized on by Gustavus Ericus, and by him incorporate to the Crown, excepting only what is given back to maintain the Bishops. Secondly, Mines, which are here of all Metals in very great plenty, except of Gold and Silver, which they have more sparingly; the Tenth whereof in all places belongs to the King, and yields him such a fair Intrade, that in the year 1578 the King's part out of two or three Mines of Copper only amounted to 300000 Dollars. Thirdly, Tenthsof out of all Increase, as Rie, Wheat, Barley, Filh, Oxen, Skins, and the like Commodities; the sum whereof though not certainly known, (because the increase is so uncertain) yet it was once computed, that the Tenth of the Oxen only came in one year to 18000 Dollars, besides Provision for his Household. Fourthly and lastly, Customs imposed on Merchandize, and paid in all his Haven-Towns for all Commodities imported or exported, of what sort soever. Besides all which, he hath his Contributions in all times of War, power of imposing Taxes, (though moderately used) as his Necessities require, and on the Marriage of a Daughter, the Kingdom is to provide her Portion, which of late times hath been fixed at the certain sum of 100000 Dollars, besides Plate and Movables. Out of which several Items to sum up the Total: It was observed, that in the year 1578 King John the second (all Charges, ordinary and extraordinary, being first deducted) did lay up into his Treasury no less than 700000 Dollars, which was a vast sum for those times, considering especially the great Charge which the King had been at that year, in furnishing a Navy of 70 Sail, and raising 18000 Land-Souldiers, (besides Horse) for defence of his Realm against the Danes. And yet it is conceived by some knowing men, that his Revenues would be much greater, than they are, if he did employ Strangers to work the Mines, which the Natives do not husband to the best advantage; and yet are fearful to discover them to other Nations upon some Jealousies, which they are naturally addicted to: or if he would turn Merchant, and in his own Ships send out Corn and Cordage, with Masts and Timber fit for Building, and in them bring back Salt and other Necessaries which his Kingdom wants, setting them at a far less price than now they go at, and yet gaining very greatly by it too.

The Arms of this Kingdom are Azure; three Crowns Or.

There are in Swethland

Archbishops 2. Bishops 8.

Universities but one, viz. Upsal.

And thus much for SWETHLAND:

R U S S I A.

RUSSIA is bounded on the East by Tartary, on the West with Livonia and Finland, from which it is divided by great Mountains and the River Poln; on the North by the Frozen Ocean, and some part of Lapland; and on the South by Lithuania, a Province of the Kingdom of Poland, and the Crim-Tartars, inhabiting on the Banks of Palm Meotis and the Euxine Sea. It standeth partly in Europe, and partly in Asia, the River Tanais or Don running through it, the common Boundary of those great and noted parts of the World.

It was thus called from the Rossi or Russi, a People of Mount Taurus, or Taurica Chersonesus, (if not both) who in the declining times of the Greek Empire possessed themselves of some parts of it, and, being the prevailing People, imposed their Name on all the rest. Called also Russia Alba, to distinguish from Russia Nigra, a Province of Poland; quod Incole omnium Gentium ipsius imperio subiectarum (as one observes, discoursing of the Affairs hereof) Vestibus albis & Pileis plerumque utantur, because the Inhabitants use to wear white Caps and Vestments. And why not thus? because the People of Margiana and Sogdiana in Asia have the name of Pesibus only because they wear green Turbants, as the word importeth. Finally, it is called Moscovie, from Moscovie the chief Province of it; as that is denominated from the Moschi, of whom more anon.

In reference to the Heavenly bodies, it is said by some to be situate betwixt the 8. and 20. Climates; the longest Day in the Southern parts being but 16 hours and an half, and almost 22 hours and a half in the Northern part. But this is to be understood only of the Province of Moscovie properly and specially so called, and not of the whole Empire of the Moscovites according to the Bounds before laid down. For taking in the Northern Provinces belonging to it, as East-Lapland, Condora & Petzora, lying within the Arctic Circle, the longest Day in Summer will be full 6 months, (for so long do those Countries see no Night at all;) which is a mighty disproportion from the length of the longest Day in the most Southern parts, being but 16 hours and a half, as before is said. And by this Rule we are to take the Dimensions also. For though some make the length hereof from North to South, that is to say, from Calain in the North to Asfracan near the Caspian Sea, to be no more than 2260 Versts, or 3690 Italian miles; yet they confess that, reckoning forwards from Tromschina, the farthest point of Petzora, the full length thereof will be nigh so much more. And for the breadth, reckoning from Narva on the Bay of Finland, (now in possession of the Swedes) to the Province of Severia in the East; it amounteth to 440 Versts, or 6300 Italian miles; each Verst being estimated at three quarters of an English mile. Which mighty Territory, if it were peopled answerable to some other parts of the World, would either make it too great for one Prince to hold, or make that Prince too great and puissant for all his neighbours.

The people, as is commonly reported of them, are very perfidious, crafty and deceitful in all their Bargains, False-dealers with all they have to do with, making no reckoning of their Promises, and studying nothing more than ways to evade their Contracts. Vices so generally known and noted in them, that when they are to deal with Strangers, they defile their Country, and pretend to be of other Nations, for fear lest no body should trust them. Destitute they are of humane Affections, and so unnatural, that the Father insults on his Son, and he again over his Father and Mother: so malicious one towards another, that you shall have a man hide some of his own Goods in the house of some man whom he hateth, and then accuse him for the stealth of them. They are exceedingly given to drink, in such that all heady and intoxicating Drinks are by Law prohibited, and two or three days only in a year allowed them to be drunk in. For the most part they are strong of Body, swift of Foot, of a square Proportion, broad, short, and thick; gray-eyed, broad-bearded, and generally furnished with prominent Panches. The Commons live in miserable subjection to the Nobles, and they again in as great Slavery to the Duke or Empour; to whom no man of all the vulgar dares immediately exhibit a Petition, or make known his Grievances: nay, the mean Lords and Officers are squeamish in this kind, and, but on great submission, will not commend unto the Duke a poor man's Cause. They are altogether unlearned; even the Priests meanly indoctrinated; it being cautioned by the great Duke, that there be no Schools, lest there should be any Scholars but himself: so that the people use to work commonly on the Lord's day, holding it fit to be kept by none but Gentlemen; and to say in a difficult question, God and our Great Duke know all this; and in other talk, All we enjoy, Health and Life, is all from our Great Duke; according to whose pleasure every man is prescribed what Habit he shall wear, both for matter and fashion, suitable unto their Condition. In the time of my Author their Habit was a long Garment without Plaits, which hung down to their heels, commonly of white or blew, with very straight Sleeves; on their Legs wearing Buskins up as high as the calf, for the most part red, high at the heels, and beset with nails of Iron. The stuff and trimming of the Dress is the only difference betwixt the Noble and the Peasant.

The Women are attired also much after this manner; but if great and noble, suffered to set forth themselves with store of Pearls and Precious Stones which hang so thick about their ears, that they do almost pull their ears from their heads. A second Marriage is conceived no blemish in point of Chastity, but the third condemns them of Incontinence. They are naturally subject enough to the Lufts of the flesh, but private, and fearful to offend; if once lascivious, then most intolerably wanton. It is the fashion of these Women to love that Husband best which beareth them most; and to think themselves neither loved nor regarded, unless they be two or three times a day well-favourably swaddled. The Author of the Treasury of Times telleth a Story of a German Shoemaker, who, travelling into this Country, and here marrying a Widow, used her with all kindness that a woman could (as he thought) desire; yet did not the seem contented. At last learning where the fault was, and that his not beating her was the cause of her Perverseness, he took such a vein in cudgelling her sides, that in the end the Hangman was fain to break his Neck for his labour.

They use the Slavonian Language, but so corrupt and mixt with other Languages, that they and the Slavonians understand not one another's meaning but by circumstance only: yet in Jugria (out of which the Hunga- nians are thought to have issued) they speak a corrupt Hungarian; and in Petzora and the Country of the Czeremissians they have a Language to themselves, distinct from others.

They first received the Christian Faith in the year 987, or, as some say, Anno 942, by the preaching and ministry of the Greeks sent hither by the Patriarch of Constantinople; of which Church they are constant followers, both for Rites and Doctrine: but not without some Superstitions of their own superadded to them; viz. not coming near a Cross, Church or Monastery, but they kneel down, and make the sign of the Cross, saying Miloy Hspodi, i. e. Lord have mercy upon us; nor entering into any Church, until washed and bathed. They bear a deadly hatred to the Jews, whom they suffer not to live amongst them; and so great friendship unto a Calf, that they hold it a great offence to kill one, or to eat his flesh. Their Church is governed by 18 Bishops, and 2 Metropolitans, all of them subordinate to their Archbishop or Patriarch; as he in former times to the Constantinopolitan, by whom he used to be confirmed. But about an hundred years ago they withdrew themselves from that subjection; the Patriarch being nominated by the Great Duke, and consecrated by two or three of his own Suffragans. Without the counsel and advice of this Patriarch, the Emperor or Great Duke doth nothing of any moment. The Bishops are all chosen out of the Monastick or Regular Clergy; which makes the Monks (being all of the order of S. Basil) to live very religiously, in hope to be advanced to the Episcopal Dignity. And for the Secular Clergy, or Parochial Priests, there is not much required of them, but to say their Masses, (which being in their own Language they may easily do) and to read now and then one of S. Chrysostom's Homilies, translated heretofore for the use of those Churches. After the death of their first Wives they are not permitted to marry; in other things little differing from the rest of the people. Once in the year it is lawful and usual with them to hold a Synod, at which the Patriarch hath his Crozier or Pastoral-staff carried before him, as the Pope's Legate hath the Cross; where they make Constitutions for the publick Government, and the regulating of Divine matters; which are punctually and carefully observed by the Prince himself.

As followers of the Greek Church, (but so as to be counted a Church distinct) they differ much both from the Romish and Reformed. 1. Denying the Holy Ghost to proceed from the Father and the Son. 2. Denying Purgatory, but praying for the Dead. 3. Believing that holy men enjoy not the presence of God before the Resurrection. 4. Communicating in both kinds but using Leavened bread, and mingling warm Water with the Wine, which both together they distribute with a Spoon. 5. Receiving Children of 7 years old to the Sacrament of the Eucharist, because then they begin to sin. 6. Forbidding extreme Unction, Confirmation, and fourth Marriages. 7. Admitting none to Orders but such as are married, and yet prohibiting Marriage to them that are actually in Orders. 8. Rejecting Carved Images, but admitting the Painted. 9. Observing 4 Lenten in the year. 10. Reputing it unlawful to fast on Saturday; or to eat Blood, or any thing that hath been strangled, according to the first Council holden at Hiersalem. 11. And finally, dissolving Marriage by Divorcement upon every slight occasion, or conceived displeasure. Which diversity betwixt the Romanists and this people in point of Religion hath bred such a difference betwixt them in point of Affection, and made them so ill-conceited of one another, that if a Moscovite be known, or but suspected, to have conversed with any of the Church of Rome, he is accounted to be a polluted person, and must be solemnly purged and purified, before before he be admitted to partake of the blessed Sacrament.

In matters of War the people are indifferent able, as being almost in continual Broils with their Neighbours; and have a Custom, that when they go to the Wars, every Soldier giveth to the Emperor or Great Duke a piece of money, which at the end of the War he receiveth again: and by that means the number of the slain is exactly known. At their Funerals they use to put a Penny into the Mouth of the party deceased, a pair of Shoes on his Feet, and a Letter in his Hand, directed (such is their Superstition) to S. Nicolas, whom they deem to be the Porter of Heaven: an opinion doubtless very prejudicial to the Pope's and S. Peter's Prerogatives.

This Country is not so populous as spacious. The Eastern parts are vexed with the Tartars, who, like Alexander's Dog, will neither dwell there themselves, nor suffer the Moscovites to plant Colonies in them: the Western parts almost as much molested by the Svedish and Polonian Kings; the Southern by the Turks and Precopenzes, and the Northern by the coldness of the Air, which is of such vehemency, that Water thrown up into the Air will turn to Ice before it fall to the ground. The better to resist the extremity of this Cold, not only the Clothes of this people, but their very Houses, are lined with thick Furs. Every Gentleman or man of note hath in his Dwelling-house, a Stove or Hot-house, in which they keep as it were, to thaw themselves. Such as travel on the way use often to rub their Nose or Ears with Snow or Ice, to settle and recal the motive Spirits into those parts, which otherwise they would be in danger to lose; the ignorance of which preventing Chirurgery was not the least cause that, in the year 1598, of 70000 Turks which made an Inroad into Moscovia, 40000 were frozen to death. By reason of these extremities of Frosts and Cold, it is the Custom of this people to lay the Bodies of their dead all the Winter long on heaps in the Believers of their Churches, where they lie without putrifying or any ill favour to the end of March; at what time the Air beginning to wax warm, and the earth to be fit for digging, each Family looks out their dead bodies, and takes care to bury them. This excess of Cold in the Air gave occasion to Cashilian in his Aulicus wittily, and not incongruously, to feign that if two men being somewhat distant talk together in the Winter, their words will be so frozen that they cannot be heard; but if the parties in the Spring return to the same place, their words will melt into the same order that they were frozen and spoken, and be plainly understood. Such is their Winter: neither is their Summer less miraculous. For the huge Seas of Ice which in a manner covered the whole surface of the Country, are at the first approach of the Sun suddenly dissolved, the Water quickly dried up, and the Earth dressed in her holy-day Apparel: such a mature growth of Fruits, such flourishing of Herbs, such chirping of Birds, as if here were a perpetual Spring. The reason of which strange and sudden alteration is conceived to be the long lying of the Snow on the face of the Earth, keeping it from the rigour of the Winter Frosts; which being dissolved by the Sun in the beginning of the Spring, doth so thoroughly drench and soke the Ground, (being of a light and Sandy mold) and consequently make it the more penetrable by the beams of the Sun shining hotly on it, that it forth in a manner the Herbs and Plants to shoot forth in great plenty, and that too in a shorter time than can be imagined.

The whole Country generally is very much overspread with Woods, parts of the great Hercynian Forest, heretofore over-running all the North, and still more visible here than in other places: either by reason of the Idleness of the people, naturally given to Sloth and Ease, or for that the Country is not populous enough to overcome them; or that there is already Ground enough for Tillage to supply their necessary uses. For here do grow the goodliest and tallest Trees of the World, through which, by reason of their thickness, the brightness of the Sun-beams can hardly pierce; affording shelter to great multitudes of Cattel, but of wild Beasts especially, whose Skins are better than their Bodies, as Bears, Martens, Zibellines, Wolves, Black Foxes, whose skins are of very great estimation. Of the timber of these Trees are squared all necessaries both for Forts and Houses; the Fortifications in this Country being made of huge Beams fastened together, (the Chinks filled with Earth) not easily shaken by Battery, though much subject to Fire. And out of them is such an unspeakable quantity of Pitch and Rosin, which are hence distilled: besides an everlasting Fountain of Wax and Honey; the Bees, without the Midwifery of the Art of Men, building their Hives or Houses in the hollow Trees. Concerning this there goeth a Story (reported and believed for a certain truth) of a Countryman who accidentally had slipped down into a great hollow Tree, where he stood up to the breast in Honey, continuing there two days without other Sustenance: at the end whereof a Bear coming to partake of the Booty, he laid hold of his Legs, and so terrified him with his Cries, that he made him leap out with the man at his heels. The Country yieldeth also great store of Flax and Hemp, which is transported yearly into other Countries, (and would make them very excellent Cordage, if the people had any skill in Manufactures or Mechanical Arts) and in some places rich Pastures, and such store of Corn, that therewith they do furnish Lapland, and the North parts of Sweden. Fish they have also in good plenty, which they salt and dry, and either vent it to the Merchant, or lay it up in store for their Forts and Families. By which account it will appear that the principal Commodities which they send abroad are rich Furs, Flax, Hemp, Whales-grease, Honey, Wax, Pitch, Rosin, Nuts, Filberds and the like: which either the Dutch and English buy of them at the Port of S. Nicolas, or the Armenians at Afracan near the Caspian Sea; giving them in return Cloth, Silks, Tapettry, and some other Merchandise, transported to the value of 500000 Rubbles yearly. Particularly of Wax 50000 Pood, (every Pood containing 40 English Pounds) of Tallow 100000 Pood, 100000 Hides, 100 Ships laden with Flax and Hemp, the rest of their Commodities proportionably in the time of my Author; since whose time the Trade hereof hath been much increased.

This Country not improperly may be called (as by some it is) the Mother of Rivers. The chief of which are, 1. The Dona, called Tanaïs by the old Geographers, and by them thought to be the only Boundary betwixt Europe and Asia; the Northern parts of this Country being then unknown. It disburtheneth it self into Palus Maotis; and hath its Fountain not out of the Riphean Mountains, as was thought of old, but out of a great Lake called Iwanowskeroj in the Forest of Okenieskies or Jepapinies, some 20 English miles from the City of Tulla; and having run a great way Eastward, turneth back again and then proceedeth Southwards towards the Maotis, as was said before. 2. Borysthenes, now called Nieper, whose spring was unknown unto Herodotus, but now discovered to be near Dnipereck, a Village of Moscovy specially so called, in the Forest of Wolkonskie. Whence passing South, and running by the Town of Smolensko, it receiveth many other Rivers, and amongst them that of Defna (by the ancient Writers called Hypanis) notwithstanding whose muddy waters it still retains its natural Clearness, and so falls into the Eufrase Sea. 3. Thyrnus, (so called by Ptolemy) or Duina the less, (to difference it from Duina the greater) which rising not far from the Head of Borysthenes, out of the Lake of Duina, and washing the Walls of Riga, the chief Town of Livonia, joeth it self in the Baltick Sea. 4. Duna, or Dwine, (commonly called Duina the greater) so called from the meeting of two Rivers, the Puga and the Sachan, (whereof more hereafter) of which that of the longest course, not known unto the Ancients, hath its Head in the Province of Permia, and it falls into the Frozen or Northern Ocean at the Port of S. Nicolas. 5. Occa, or Ocyne, rising in the Territory of Miscenick, and making all the Country fruitful through which it passeth, emptieth it self into the Volga. 6. Volga, by Ptolemy called Rha, by the Tartars Edil; which riseth 25 Dutch miles from Mosco, towards Lituania, and fetching a great compass in and out, after it hath swallowed up many lesser Rivers, dischargeth it self with 70 Mouths into the Caspian Sea, now called Mar di Bachn. Here are besides these Rivers many notable Lakes, as those of Duina and Volga, out of which the said two Rivers issue, that called Ilmen, not far from Novogrod the great, 80 Italian miles in compass; that of Ladoga, 100 Dutch miles in length and 60 in breadth, in which are many pleasant Islands; and that called Bielyezero, (Lacus Albus in Latine) about 12 German miles long and as many broad, into which 360 Rivers are said to discharge their Streams; in the midst whereof is a strong Castle, said to be impregnable, in which the Great Duke keeps the most part of his Treasure, and into which he doth withdraw in the times of Danger and Sedition.

As for the Mountains of this Country, here are the Montes Amadoci, Riphei, and Hyperborei, so much talked of and so little known amongst the Ancients: a continual and craggy Chain of Hills running cross Sarmatia Europaea, South and North, and thence Eastwards into Asiatia. Beginning not far from the fall of Borysthenes into the Euxine, they extend directly towards the North, and are there called Montes Amadoci; afterwards bending for a long space towards the North-east, they are called Riphei; and then passing on directly East, by reason of their Northernly situation, called Hyperborei. And though Sir Walter Raleigh says, I know not on what authority, that there are no Riphaean Mountains in verum natura; yet Mercator placeth them in this Tract, and telleth us, that in regard of their being always covered with Ice and Snow, they are hardly passible; calling these and the said Hyperborei (in his Europa) by the name of Imigium terre, or the Girdle of the Earth, a great part whereof (though known in divers places by different names) they do seem to compass.

It is divided, for the better Government hereof, into four parts, (by them termed Cheifords) and those governed by four Lieutenants, not resident upon their Charges, but attending on the Emperor's person wheresoever he goeth, and there holding their Courts, but especially at Mosco, the prime Seat of the Empire, where from their Under-Deputies they receive the Complaints of their Provinces, and inform the Emperor's Council of the business, and from them again receive instruction for Reformation. But as to the Corography of it, it is divided into the Province of 1. Moscovie, especially so called. 2. Smolensko. 3. Mosaiski. 4. Plescow. 5. Novogrod the great. 6. Covelis. 7. Biarmia. 8. Petozora. 9. Candora. 10. Obdora. 11. Jugria. 12. Severia. 13. Permia. 14. Rezan. 15. Wiatka. 16. Cajun. 17. Astracan. 18. Novogrodia inferior. 19. The Moravia, or Mordua. 20. Morotina. 21. Tuver. 22. Wolodimir. 23. Duina, and 24. the Russian Islands. Others of less note (of which there is no want) are reduced to these. In my Description whereof I shall not be so exact and punctual as I have been hitherto; the Country not being much travelled by Strangers, nor any of the Natives suffered to go into Foreign Nations, or permitted (out of Jealousies of State) to hold discourse with the Embassadors of Neighbouring Princes, but only in the Emperor's hearing. By means whereof the Corography of this vast Empire is come but lamely to our hands, though the Power, Policy and Revenues of it, being Points discernible by the Ministers of other Princes, and by the course and conduct of their Affairs, are as well known as those of less distance. Which said, we will first begin with Moscovie, the prevailing Province, that which gives name to this whole Empire; with reference to which the Situation and Position of the rest of the Provinces is set forth unto us in our Authors.

1. MOSCOVIE.

MOSCOVIE specially so called is seated in the very Center of this Estate, and so more fit to order the Affairs thereof. It is the largest Province of the whole, extending from East to West 600 Dutch, or 2400 English miles: so populous withal, that besides 30000 Boiars or Gentlemen, bound to serve on horse-back at their own charges, (like the Turks Timariots) the Great Duke is able to raise 70000 Foot, (which is a great matter for a Country so little cultivated.)

The Soil hereof is stiff and clammy, but might be made more profitable than it is, were it well manured, or ploughed and ordered, as it is in all other Countries. For here, and in most parts else of this large Dominion, the people are accustomed to sow no more of their Land than what they dig with the Spade, or can break up with a Stick, very sharply pointed; whereof they carry great numbers into the Field, that when one breaks they may use another.

Chief places in this Province are, 1. Mosco, the Imperial Seat, and the See of the Patriarch, so called of the River Mosco upon which it is situate. Exceedingly improved both in State and beauty since the time that Daniel the fourth Lord of Moscovie, removed the Seat-Royal hither from Wolodimir, where before it was; inasmuch that it was once grown to nine miles in compass, containing then 41500 Families: but being fired by the Tartar Anno 1571, (at what time there were burnt 80000 persons) it is reduced to five miles only. The Houses for the most part are of Wood and Dirt, the Streets very narrow; without either Ditch, Wall, or Rampart, to defend it against an enemy. Instead whereof there are two Castles in the outward parts of it, the one called Kitagorod, the other Balsigorod. It is environed with the River Mosco, and another Water called Neglinna, which here falls into it. It contains 16 Churches, most of them of the same materials as the Houses are; and the Palace of the Great Duke, situate in the midst hereof, (which for the greatness of it may be thought a little City) fortified with 17 Towers, 3 Bulwarks, and a continual Garrison (if the Great Duke be there) of 25000 men for the Guard of his person. 2. Sloboda, a Bishop's See, North-east to Mosco, on the Banks of one of the greatest Rivers which fall into the Volga. 3. Ruschow, the Title of a Dukedom, fortified with a Castle of Wood, (of which stuff most of the Fortresses of this Country are made) situate 23 leagues from Mosco towards the West, on the Banks of the Volga, which hath its fountain in the Territory and Precincts hereof. 4. Jaroslaw, on the Volga also, a Town and Castle distant about 46 Dutch miles from Mosco; formerly the Estate and Patrimony of the second Sons of the Great Duke, but united to the Royal Domain by John Wasilwicz, and by him added also to the Style Imperial. It is also also one of the Sees Episcopal. 5. Ruslow, the See of one of the two Metropolitans, situate in a fruitful Soil, well stored with Fish, and yielding good plenty of Salt. One of the ancientest Principalities of all this Empire, and held accountably by the second Son of the Great Duke as a State distinct, but conquered by John Wasilwicz, Anno 1565, and added to the Style and Patrimony of the Great Duke himself, the younger Sons being from thenceforth put off with Pensions. 6. Vologda, a Bishop's See, situate in a fenny and woody Country; very strong by nature, and beautified with one of the strongest Castles of all this Estate, where the great Duke doth sometime lay a part of his Treasure, that part especially which is raised of the English and Dutch Merchandise, which, being landed at the Port of S. Nicolas, is first brought hither, where having paid a new Toll or Custom, it goeth on to Mosco. Betwixt this City and that of Jaroslaw before mentioned, for the space of an hundred English miles, where stood in former times 50 goodly Villages, (some of them of a mile in length) the Country in a manner is left wholly desolate and without Inhabitant; abandoned by the people by reason of the insupportable Pressures which were laid upon them.

2. SMOLENSKO. 3. MOSAISKI. 4. PLESCOW.

THE Dukedom of SMOLENSKO is situate on the course of the River Nieper or Borysthenes, full of many thick Forests, from whence they carry a great number of rich Skins yearly. Places of most observation in it are, 1. Smolensko, situate on the Nieper, a Bishop's See, about 80 Polonian miles from Mosco, begirt on every side with Mountains and spacious Woods. A large Town, and of great esteem in these parts of the Empire, and giving name unto this Province; which hitherto was governed in a free condition under the Patronage and Protection of the King of Poland, in the time of Alexander a late King thereof; but by Basilius the Great Duke conquered and added unto this Estate: taken by the Polanders in the year 1610, after a long siege of two years, with the slaughter of 200000 Muscovites, and the loss of many of the Besiegers, but restored again to Michael Fedorowitch the Great Duke, on the making of the Peace between them. 2. Biela, a Principality of it self, having the honour of a Castle, and reckoned in the usual Style of the Kiezer or Emperor.

MOS AISKI hath in length 350 Italian miles, and as much in breadth, so called from Mosaiski, the chief Town hereof, and a Bishop's See, taken together with the Territory or Province appertaining to it, from Alexander King of Poland, by John the Great Duke, Father of Basilius before mentioned.

PLESCOW, or PSKOW, contains in length 350 Italian miles, in breadth 230 or thereabouts, so called from Plescow, or Psikow, the chief City of it, and a Bishop's See, great, powerful, and well walled about, the only walled City of all this Empire: so large within the Walls, that when it was besieged by Stephen King of Poland, there were in it for defence thereof 70000 Foot and 7000 Horse; besides the natural Inhabitants of it, which in all ordinary computation must be many more. It belonged formerly to the Poles, in the right of the Dukedom of Lituania; taken from them by Basilius the Great Duke of Moscovie, Anno 1509, by whom and his Successors it is used in the Royal Style.

5. NOVOGORD.

NOVOGORD, or NOVOGROD, is one of the largest Provinces or Dukedoms in all Russia, bordering on Livonia, towards Sinus Finnicus or the Gulf of Finland. A colder Country and less fruitful than that of Moscovie, because situate somewhat farther North: the longest Summer day in Mosco not being above 18 hours; whereas in Novogrod, the chief City hereof, it is very near 20. By consequence, the Winter-nights being of that length must make the Air exceeding cold, and the Soil as comfortless. Here is in this Province the great lake Ilmen, spoken of before, 80 Italian miles in compass; as also that called Ladoga, before also mentioned.

Towns of most estimation in it are, 1. Novogrod it self, the wealthiest and goodliest City of all the North, affirmed to be in greatness not inferior to Rome; called therefore Novogrod the great, (to difference it from another of the same name near unto Wolodimir); an Archbishop's See, and one of the four Mart-Towns of the Hanse Merchants, resorted to from all parts for the Trade of Moscovie, brought thither by Land, and thence transported through the Baltick to most parts of Christendom. So confident were they in those times of their power and strength, that they used to say, that Men could do nothing against God and them: but they found the contrary, when taken from the Crown of Poland by the Great Duke of Moscovie. The Trade hereof is since much decayed, by the finding out of the North-east passage to the Port of S. Nicolas, where the English and Dutch Merchants bicker with the Muscovites. Yet still it keeps the reputation of the principal City; situate on the River Nyssa, which the Dutch call Ny. The Buildings are for the most part of Wood and Clay. It is distant from Mosco 120 Dutch miles, and about 200 from the main body of the Baltick, betwixt which and this City lieth the whole Bay of Finland, the Entrances whereof upon the Duina (which leads towards Novogrod) are fortified with the strong Towns and Garrisons of Narva and Revel, both in the hands of the K. of Sweden, which is another great hindrance to the Trade of this Town. 2. Narva, on the North-Bank of Duina, where it falls into the Bay of Finland or Sinus Finnicus, in the Province or Territory of Wichidaw: heretofore reckoned of as a part of Livonia, but being taken by Basilius the Great Duke, with the rest of this Country, and the Town of Novogrod it self, Anno 1477, it was impregnablely fortified by the care of his Son Wasilwicz, who for a reward unto the Architect, being a Polonian, put out both his Eyes, to disable him from building the like again: But having left all the Natives in their own Habitations, without abating either their strength or number, the Town and Castle not long after was betrayed to the King of Sweden, who still holds it. 3. Pozow, or Pozowia, and 4. Polocaluc; two strong Pieces situate in the Borders against the Polanders. 5. Pobsko, besieged by Stephen King of Poland with an Army of 100000 men, who was forced to retire without taking it, with the loss of many of his best Captains and common Souldiers. It is distant from Novogrod 28 Dutch miles: the Country about it is called Volk; where they say for certain, that all Cattel which are brought thither, of what hair or colour forever they be, upon a little stay there become all white. The People of this Tract have a Language (or some Dialect rather) peculiar only to themselves. 6. Juanogorod, a strong Castle not far from Pobsko, 40 miles from Novogrod, a Frontier-Castle against the Swedes garrisoned in Narva, to repulse whole Inroads it was built.

In this Country, and not far from the Town of Novogrod, was fought that memorable Battle betwixt the the Sarmatians and their Slaves. For when the Asiatick Scythians went to plant themselves in Media, and the parts adjoining, some of the Sarmatians, then Inhabitants of this Tract, went along for company. Their long stay caused their Wives, desiring of their return, to comfort themselves with their Slaves both at bed and board; to whom they brought a lusty increase of Youths: who being well grown, and hearing that the Sarmatians were upon their coming back, joined together against them: the Slaves to retain their Wealth and Freedom which they were possessed of, the Women, for fear of the displeasure of their Husbands, and the Young men, for defence of their Fathers and Mothers. With joyned Forces they go out to meet them before their entry into the Country; neither are the Masters flow in their advance, hoping to take them unprovided. At Novogrod they have the first sight of each other. The Masters, scornful to defile their Swords on so ignoble an Enemy, assault them with Whips, and by the terror thereof got a signal Victory. In memory of which Battle, the people of that City have ever since stamped their money with the figure of an Horseman shaking a Whip in his hands: And it is the Custom of all Muscovite, that the Maids in the time of wooing send such a Whip, curiously wrought by her own hands, to that Sutor whom she resolves on for her Husband, in token of her future Subjection to him. But of this more hereafter in another place.

6. GORELIA. 7. BIARMIA.

Sixty Dutch miles from Novogrod lieth the Province called GORELIA, extending Northwards as far as to a Branch of the Frozen Sea, where the longest Day is 20 hours and a half, the Nights proportionable in the Winter make it cold and barren. It bordereth on the East of Finland, from which it is parted by a long and rough ridge of Mountains. By reason of which Situation betwixt two great Princes, the people are enforced to pay Tribute to both, though properly the Subjects of the great Duke of Muscovite. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Kexholm or Hexholm, in the hands of the Swedes, and 2. Cornelburg, the chief Towns of the Province, belonging with the rest of the Country unto the Moscovite. By some this Province is made a part of the Eastern Lapland, but I think, erroneously: the people having some good Town, and favouring of some Humanity, neither of which are known or heard of amongst the Laplainers. 3. Nodenburg, on the mouth of a Lake, which by the River called Warjuga emptieth it self into the Bay of S. Nicolas.

On the North-side of that Branch or Arm of the Frozen Ocean which bounds Gorelia lieth the Western part of Lapland, which by a proper name is called BIARMIA: the Country of the Dikloppi, or wild Lappians, as the Muscovites call them, to whose Duke or Emperour they are subject. We had their Character before when we were in Swethland, nor shall we need to repeat it here: as Barbarous and as rude as the worst sort of those mentioned in Scythia, and as Idolatrous as they; but more (if more may be) inclined to Lustfulness than the others. In the Winter Solstice, when the Sun entrencheth into Capricorn, they have Night for three whole months together, during which time, lurking in their Caves, they have leisure to consult with the Prince of Darkness; being very great Sorcerers, able (as some affirm) to raise Winds, Clouds, Tempests, and do many strange things. Towns there are none. Some Sheds and Cabins on the Seacoasts, patched up by the Sailors for their reception and refreshment as they come on Land, and named according to their fancies, but not here considerable.

8. PETZORA. 9. GONDORA. 10. OB-DORA. 11. VUGRIA.

Opposite to Biarmia, or West-Lapland, on the other side of the Bay leading towards the Port of S. Nicolas, lieth a large Promontory or Head-land, stretching out far into the North, beyond the Arctic, comprehending in it 4 Provinces of the Russian Empire; that is to say, Petzora, Gondora, Obdora, and Vugria, belonging formerly to the Tartars, but won from them of late years by the Russian Emperours, extending by that means their Territories to the River Ob, but not a whit improving them in Power or Patrimony. Howsoever somewhat must be said of them, because parts of this great Body which we are to dissect.

PETZORA, so called from a River of that name, is fenced on every side by Mountains and unpassable Rocks, extending Northwards to the Sea, and crossed with a vast Chain of Hills, part of the Hyperborei, spoken of before: so high, that a certain man, having travelled in the ascent of them 17 days together, is said to have returned back again, despairing to attain the top of them: covered in the Winter-time with perpetual Snows, in the Summer with as scorching Heats, by the continual lying of the Sun on all parts thereof. The people are of a plain and simple nature, and received the Russian Faith and Empire at one time together, Anno 1518. The chief Town of it is Petzora, or Pechora, at the fall of that River into the Sea, a small Town, but having three Churches in it: the people whereof, though otherwise sufficiently simple, as before is said, do in the Summer-time catch Partridge, Ducks, Swans, Geese, and other Fowl, which they salt and lay by till the Winter, and then live upon them. So good a Tutor is the Belly, that the Poet did not unjustly give it the titles of Artis Magister and Ingenii largitor Venter: whereof this may serve for one example.

GONDORA lieth on the North of Petzora, more near the Pole; by consequence is a colder Country, and of worse condition; one half of the Year being continual Day, and the other half as long a Night. The people are universally Idolaters, worshipping some Images (or Idols) in the shape of a Man, others in that of Bears, Wolves, &c. which they adorn with the Richest Furs they can get, and hide them in their Caves for fear of the Russes, who if they chance to light upon them, as they hunt those parts for Sables, Foxes and Bevers, take away their Furs, and bestow a greater heat upon them in Fires. The chief Town hereof is Pusozera, over against Nova Zemla, on or near the great Lake called Ozera, whence it hath the name; situate in the 68 Degree of Northern Latitude, 50 minutes over.

OB-DORA, so called from the River Ob, on both sides of whose Banks it lieth, is the most North-Eastern Province of all these Dominions, won to the Obedience of the Russes in the Reign of Theodore the Son of John, Great Duke of Muscovite. At what time the People had no Cities, lived in Hoords or Companies, ate the Beasts they took, knew no Corn nor Bread. They were then very good Archers, sharpening their Arrows with Fish-bones; with which bones and the Sinews of the Beasts they fowed Furs together for their Clothing, which they wear inward in the Winter, outward in the Summer, covering their Houses with Elk-skins. By this Theodore were some Castles built on the River-side, to which he sent condemned persons, and brought it into the form of a petit Kingdom. But his Successor Boris built Tooma, the chief Town hereof, with divers other Towns on both sides of the Water, not worth naming here. But notwithstanding this Subjection to the Moscovite, they continue still in their old Idolatry, worshipping an ancient Idol in form of an old Woman, holding in Each Arm a Child, and a third at her feet, called by them Zlatu Bahu, or the Golden old Wife; to which they offer precious Furs, sacrifice Harts, and therewith do consult touching things to come. But some account this for a fable or a mere mistake.

VUGRIA, or VUHAR, lieth also on the Northern Seas, but more South than either of the other, betwixt Petzora or Pechora, and the Province of Dvina: the longest Day in Summer being not above 21 hours, or not fully that. The people are for the most part Idolaters, and worship the same Images as do those of Obdora: affirmed by some to be the Progenitors of the present Hungarians, who, Coming out of this Country, overran all Pannonia, and there fixed their Dwellings. For proof of which it is affirmed that they spake the old Hungarian Language, not used but in this Country and the North parts of Hungary, betwixt Danubius and Tibiscus: which more learned men affirm to be the Scythian, the Language of the Scythians, who antiently possessed that Country in the times of the Romans. But leaving this dispute to another place, certain it is they are subject to the Muscovite, but so poor and miserable a people, that they have few Towns, and not many Houses; and so bare of money, that in stead thereof they pay Furs for Tribute to their Emperour.

12. SEVERIA. 13. PERMIA. 14. REZEN.

SEVERIA, or SIBIOR, as the Moscovites call it, lieth in a long Tract on the Banks of the River Ob or Oby, South of Obdora and the rest of the four last Provinces. The Country is very fruitful, and abounding with all things necessary, notwithstanding that there be great Deserts, and some Forests also; but those Forests well stored with black Foxes, Ermines, Sables, and the like wild Beasts, which yield more profit by their rich Furs, than any more fertile Country doth by its Corn and Fruits. Insumuch that in the year 1589 there were collected out of this Province only in the way of Tribute for the Emperour, 466 Timber of Sables, (every Timber containing 40 Skins) five Timber of Martermes, 180 Cases of black Foxes, (every Case containing 40 Skins) besides other Commodities. The Woods also do offer good plenty of Honey, and the Plains of Herbage, well watered with the River Sem, which falleth into the Desna, and both together into that of the Nieper, or Borysthenes. There are in it many Towns and Castles, the principal whereof are, 1. Sibir, on the West side of the River Ob, which gives name to the Province. 2. Branki, not far from the great Forest from hence named. 3. Siarodus, 4. Potwolo, and 5. Cernigo. [Here by mistake the two Provinces of Siberia and Severia (which differ as the farthest North-east and South-west points of Muscovia, betwixt which there is a vast Tract of ground) are confounded, part of the Towns belonging to one, part to the other; as do the two Rivers, the Ob, and the Nieper.]

The people hereof, by reason of their continual Skirmishes with the neighboring Tartars, are the most Warlike Nations of all the Russes: heretofore governed by a Duke or Prince of their own, who at the first acknowledged no Superieur, but afterwards was severally and successively tributary to the Lithuanians, the Poles, and the Moscovite; and finally, the last Duke, being falsely accused of Treason, was ousted of his Estate by Basilin the Great Duke, who added it to the rest of his Dominions, as it hath continued ever since.

PERMIA is situate on the South-West of Sibir, or Severia, a large Province, distant 250 Dutch miles from Mosko; so called from Perm, or Permia, the chief Town hereof, situate on the River Vilchore, or Vistorna. The second Town of note is called Siewiarsky. The people (as also those of Sibir) are of the Moscovite Religion, and live most by hunting wild Beasts, whose Fleesh they eat, and make good Merchandise of their Skins, many of which they pay yearly to the Great Duke in way of Tribute, who makes a good Commodity of them, selling them to the Merchant at excessive rates. They have no Care of their own growth; nor will they buy any elsewhere; but, instead of Bread, eat the fleesh of Stags dried and prepared in the Sun; speaking a Language of their own, different from the rest of the Russes, and in stead of Horses and Oxen, make use of great Dogs and Stags, whom they train up to draw their Sleds from one place to another. There is good store of Woods amongst them; but they want Cedars, and they have paid dearly for that want. For John Vasilvich, meaning to pick a Quarrel with them, sent to them for certain loads of Cedar-wood whereof he knew there grew none in their Country; and upon word returned that they had no such Wood he fined them at 12060 Rubbles.

REZEN, a great and goodly Province, is situate betwixt the River Tanais and that of Occa, the most fruitful Country of all Russia, and (if report be true) of the whole World also: it being credibly affirmed that one grain of Corn doth bring forth six Ears; the Stalks hereof growing so thick, that an Horse can hardly pass through them, or a Quail file out of them, but with very much difficulty. Here is also great plenty of Fruits, better than are to be found elsewhere in Russia; together with good store of Honey, Fish, Fowl, and other Commodities; besides Ermines, Bevers, and the like, common in these Countries. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Tulla, famous for the Fountain or Spring-head of the River Tanais, which riseth near it. 2. Colluga, well garrisoned for fear of the Crim-Tartars. 3. Cossira, a Bishop's See; as is also 4. Rezan, the principal of the Province, which it giveth name to, seated upon the Banks of the River Occa. A Country populous and well-planted, affording to the Great Duke 15000 Boiars, or Gentlemen which serve on horse-back, and betwixt 30 and 40000 Foot.

15. WIATHKA. 16. CASAN. 17. ASTRACAN.

South-east of Rezan, beyond the banks of the River Skamme, and about 150 Dutch miles from Mosko, lieth the Province called WIATHKA, fenny and barren, but well stored with Fish and Honey, and wild Beasts good plenty. Heretofore subject to the Tartars, and then the receptacle or retreat of all fugitive Servants, here very gladly entertained: but the Tartars being expelled, it was made Subject by Basilin to the Dukes of Moscovite. I do not read of any Towns which should be here, which makes me think that they do still retain so much of the Tartar with them as to live in Hoords and Companies, without any fix Dwellings, or at the best in scattered houses, not hitherto united into Towns and Villages; except it be the Town of Wiatka it self, built since the subjection of it to the Moscovite, and made a Garrison, to defend these out-parts of this Empire against the Incurfions of the Tartars.

CASAN, a Kingdom formerly of Tartaria deserta, hath on the South-east of Wiatka, the most civil people of the Tartars, but owing much of that Civility to their conversation with the Muscovites; (though some of the civillest themselves) tilling their Lands and building Houses where they may with safety. For although the the Soil hereof to be tolerably fruitful and fit for Habitation, yet the Country for the most part is desolate and ill inhabited; partly by reason of some vast Desarts, lying betwixt the Cities of Casán and Astracán; but principally in regard of the Crim-Tartars, who will not suffer the Moscovites to plant it with Colonies of his own people, nor the Natives to live there in quiet, except only in the Western parts, where they are protected by Garrisons. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Casán, upon the River Volga, which gives name to the Kingdom; since the Subjection of this People to the great Duke, and their Conversion to the Faith, made a Bishop's See. 2. Sarai, upon the River Sura, in the middle of the vast Desarts betwixt Casán and Astracán; built by Basilus, the great Duke, for a Stage, or resting-place for Merchants and Travellers, that there they might repose themselves without fear of the Tartars. The people hereof had once a King of their own, as before was said; the last of which named Chelealeck, submitted himself unto Basilus, the great Duke, and became tributary; but afterwards revolting, he was vanquished by John Vasilvich, An. 1558, and this Kingdom thereupon united to the Empire of Russia: the Emperours since that time writing themselves Czar Casanski, or King of Casán. And possibly enough it is that Basilus, who first made it tributary, might from hence take the name of Basilus Casán, according to the custom of the ancient Romans.

Under the Government hereof are the Czeremissis, a People that live in great Forrefts without any Houses, living for the most part of Honey and the flesh of wild Beasts, with the Skins of which they are apparelled. Their Language is different from the rest. They are swift of foot, and very good Archers, carrying their Bows in their hands continually, and practising their Children to timely in it, that they give them nothing to eat (after such an Age) until they can hit a White which is set before them.

ASTRACÁN lieth also South East of Casán, more near unto the Caspian Sea; parted from Casán by those Desarts spoken of before, but situate on the same Branch of the River Volga; which, having run a course of 2000 Italian Miles, dischargeth it self into this Sea with no less than 70 Mouths or Channels. It took this name from Astracán the chief Town hereof, situate about 20 Italian miles from the fall of one of those 70 Mouths or Channels into the Caspian: by the commodiousness whereof it is one of the best Towns of Trade in all these Dominions, the Armenian Merchants coming hither, and barreling their Silks and Manufactures for the Furs and other natural Commodities of the Russes or Moscovites. A Kingdom formerly, but a Kingdom of less esteem than that of Casán, conquered (together with it) by Basilus the Great Duke, Anno 1494, and by him made Christian. But afterwards revolting, they were more absolutely subdued by John Vasilvich, who brought into the field against them, no fewer than 320000 Horse and 200000 Foot, (enough to over-run almost greater Country) and yet hardly got the better, but for the terror of his great Ordinance, which the others wanted. Upon that Victory it was made a Member of the Empire of Russia, the Emperour whereof hath since styled himself the King of Astracán.

18. NOVOGORDIA Inferior.
19. THE MORDWITS.

BUT it is now time we return towards Europe, out of which we have wandered up and down in the skirts of Russia, in tracing out the several Provinces of this Empire, since our first crossing over the Bay of Grandvic, or Saint Michael, into the Country of Pattora. But in our way we must first take a view of the Dukedom of Novogrod the Lower, so called to difference it from Novogrod (sur-named the Great) spoken of before, situate almost in the midst betwixt Casán and Mosco, distant from the last 100 Poleonian miles, and 60 miles from the Borders of the other; every Poleonian mile being reckoned at four Italian; The Country is generally very rich both for Tillage and Pasturage, inferior unto none in all this Estate but Refán and Volodomir only. So called from Novogrod, the chief Town situate at the Confluence of the Occa and Volga; besides which it hath the neighbourhood of a very great Lake, which it storeth plentifully with Fish. A City of great esteem in all this Empire, partly for the great number of Houses, in that not easily equalled by any other; partly for an impregnable Castle cut out of the main Rock with incredible charges in the time of Basilus the Great Duke; but principally for a stately and magnificent Temple, built above 600 year ago, in imitation (or emulation, as some say) of the famous Church of S. Sophia in Constantinople. To this Town the Story of the Scythian or Sarmatian Slaves ought, in my mind, to be ascribed; though commonly reported of the other Novogrod, in the West parts of this Empire. My reason is, because it is not likely that the Sarmatians dwelling on the Borders of the Baltick Sea should cross all this Country, to join with the Asiatick Scythians, so remote from them in a needless War, which those of this Tract might well do, as near Neighbours to them, if not of the same Nation or Extraction with them: nor is it probable that the Slaves would suffer their Masters to wait all the Country as far as the Baltick Sea, and to increase their strength by the Spoil thereof, before they met them in the Field to give them Battel.

Subject to the Estate hereof are the MORDWIT Tartars, lying on the South, betwixt the Volga and the Don or Tanais, where it beginneth to return Westwards towards the Euxine. A people much of the same nature with the Czeremissis, but that they have some Villages and scattered Houses, which the other either want or else care not for. They are Idolaters for the most part (and the rest Mahometians) carrying their Idols in their Carts wherever they go; worshipping that Beast all day which they first see in the morning, and swearing by it for that day, as their chiefest Deity.

22. WOLODOMIR.

AND now again we are in Europe, where the Great Duke hath almost as many Titles as Towns with Territories. Four of them (besides some before) are either situate in the Province of Moscow, or else so intermingled with the Towns thereof, that they may easily be taken (or mistaken) for Members of it. The principal are, WOROTINE, seated on the West side of the River Occa, a distinct Dukedom of it self, so called from Worotin the chief City of it, built upon that River, about 3 Dutch miles from Colluga in the Province of Rexen lying on the farther Bank thereof; beautified with a strong Castle, and a pleasant Soil. The 2. Miseneck, the next Town of note, remarkable for the Head of the River Occa, which ariseth in the fields adjoining.

TUVER, or OTUVER, as some call it, is a large and goodly Country lying along the Banks of the River Volga: so populous, that it is said to contain 40000 Boiars, or Gentlemen fit to serve on horseback, and double that number of the common or inferior sort. It gives the Title of a Duke to the Russian Emperour, and is so called from Tuver the chief Town thereof; and a Bishop's See; affirmed to be a fairer and more stately City than Mosco it self, from which it is distant 36 Dutch miles.

WOLO-

WOLODOMIR is one of the most fruitful Countries in all Russia, not parallel'd by many Countries in the World; the Soil here (if all be true which is said of it) yielding such an Increase, that many times the Husbandman hath twenty, and sometimes twenty five, for one. It gives the title of a Duke to the Russian Emperour, and hath precedence before Moscow in the Style Imperial. So called from Wolodomir, the chief City of it, and a Bishop's See, and that so named from the Founder, who probably was the same Paladimir (one of the first Kings of the Russes) who married Helena the Daughter of Nicephorus Phocas, Emperour of Constantinople. The City is situate 36 Poleonian miles on the East of Mosco, anciently the chief Seat and Residence of the Great Duke, and so continued till the time of John, the Son of Daniel, who first translated it to Mosco, that from thence he might more easily confront and oppose the Tartars, with whose Irruptions and Invasions both he and his Predecessors had long been troubled. Under the Government hereof is the City of Sudali, of great esteem, and very well peopled as long as the Royal Seat remained at Wolodomir, betwixt which and Mosco it is seated. After it fell into decay, and being once destroyed by the Tartars, could never since recover its ancient Lustre; having now little to uphold its reputation but a Bishop's See.

23. DIVINA.

DIVINA*, so called from the chief Town, is situate on the Confluence of two Rivers, Juch and Sachona, whence it hath the name; Dwine in the Language of that Country signifying two, as twain doth with us amongst Country-people. A Country of great extent, but exceeding barren, which makes the Villages hereof to stand very thin, the Towns (considering the great compass of it) to be very few, and the Inhabitants for the most part to live upon dried Fish and the Flesh of wild Beasts, which they have no want of. The chief Commodity is Salt, with which they use to furnish the neighbouring Provinces, and provide such Necessaries for themselves as they stand in need of. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Dwine, spoken of before, situate in the midst of the Province, on the meeting of the said two Rivers, which here united into one Stream take the name of Dwine, or Dwina, the greater; known by that name until its fall into the Northern Ocean in the Bay of Granvic. 2. Sagan, so called of the River (one of the two which makes the Dwine) upon which it is seated. 3. Colmagro. 4. Pinnegue, two strong Castles.

Unto this Province (because I know not else how to dispose of them) I must reduce these four Towns following: that is to say, 1. Ussing, a Bishop's See, situate on the Western side of the River, over against the Town of Dwine, and in a Country so ill furnished with Necessaries, that the people eat dried Fish instead of Bread, but have Salt enough to season it from those of Dwine. 2. Cargapol, a Bishop's See also, on the same side of the River that Dwine is of. 3. S. Nicolas, a well-known Port, and a Bishop's See; situate at the influx of Dwine into the Gulf of Granvic, or the Bay of S. Nicolas, from hence denominated. A Town much traded since the discovery of the North-east passage by the English, and the removal of theirs and the Dutch Traffick from Novogrod hither, from hence dispersed with more ease and speed into all the parts of this vast Empire. 4. S. Michael, on the Sea-side, commonly called Archangel, a Town of great Trade, by the English especially, who have of late here fixed their Staple, to the great enriching of the place; by reason whereof the English Merchants have not only great Privileges and Immunities (as the Authors of so great a benefit unto this Estate) not granted to others, but the whole Nation have found better and more noble entertainment from them than any others have received. The cause of which was primarily the great opinion which their Emperours had of Q. Elizabeth, who held very good correspondence with them, continued ever since by mutual Embassies on both sides; and secondly, the conformable Behaviour of the English themselves, so acceptable to those Barbarians (both Prince and People) that when John Vasilvich sailed the Hat of another foreign Embassador to his Head, for his too much perverseness, he used our Sir Thomas Smith with all kindness imaginable. Another time, when the Jesuite Possévine began to persuade with him to approve of the Religion of the Church of Rome; upon the information of the English Embassador, that the Pope was a proud Prelate, and would make Princes kiss his feet, he grew into such a rage, that the Jesuite was afraid he would have beat out his Brains. But to return again to the Port of S. Nicolas, it is so called from an Abbey there built unto that Saint, the Tutelary Saint and local Patron of the Nation. Which said, I will set sail from this Port to the Russian Islands, and see what may be said of them to our present purpose.

24. THE RUSSIAN ISLANDS.

THE RUSSIAN Islands* are but two, both of them in the Northern or Frozen Ocean, on the Coasts of this Country; that is to say, 1. Sir Hugh Willoughbie's Island, and Nova Zemla, both subject (if to any) to the Knez, or great Duke of Moscow.

1. WILLOUGHBIE'S ISLAND was so called from Sir Hugh Willoughby, because he first discovered it, Anno 1553, and was hereabouts found frozen to death the next year following. For being employed by the Merchants of London in the time of King Edward the sixth, to find out a new way to Moscow, Cathai and China, he proceeded so far as to this Island, (situate almost opposite to the Bay of S. Nicolas) where the Weather proved so extreme, and the Frosts so vehement, that his Ship was set fast in the Ice, and all his people with himself frozen to death, in which condition they were found the next year after, with an exact description of their Voyage and Fortunes. Notwithstanding which disastrous beginning, the Enterprize was pursued by some noble Adventurers, as Jenkinson, Burroughs, Pet Jackman, and others of the English Nation, who opened the way as far as to the River Ob, (the East Bounder of Russia) but by reason of the length of the way, the vast floating Islands of Ice, and perpetual Night for many months together in Winter, could advance no farther.

2. NOVA ZEMLA, situate on the East of Willoughbie's Island, opposite to Pusskova in Condora before mentioned, was first discovered by such Adventurers as followed Willoughbie's Design. Famous for nothing but a race of short-statured men, not above four foot high, a degree above the height of Pigmies: not yet so far discovered as to know any thing thereof, but by the relation of the Russes, who affirm the Inhabitants to have neither Religion, nor Civility, nor the Precepts of any Law; but that they worshipped the Sun, Moon, and Northern Star, to which they offer a yearly Sacrifice of their Deer; that the Island is woody, desart, and not easie for travel, having in it neither green Bough nor Grass, yet harbouring great store of Bears and such ravenous and dangerous Beasts. Found experimentally true by William Barrentson and his Associates, employed by the Hollanders.

for this Discovery, Anno 1594, and 1596, in which last year, after many dreadful Combats with huge flakes of Ice, they were forced to winter in this Island, where they built an House, as well to preserve themselves from being buried in Snow, as from being devoured by the Bears, (some of them 13 foot in length) which, with the loss of two of their company devoured by those savage creatures, they at last effected; some of them coming home in safety the October following. And though they seemed to give some hope that a way might be found unto Cathaie on the North of this Island (themselves having gone as far North as the 81. Degree of Latitude, within 9 of the Pole) yet it is generally conceived that the undertaking is unprofitable, the success impossible.

And so I leave it, to return to the Story of Russia, called anciently by the name of Sarmatia Europaea, but known no farther Northwards than the Head of Tanais. And for Sarmatia Europaea, it was bounded in the time of Ptolemy by the Baltic Sea and some Terra Incognita on the North, the Jazyges Metanastæ (now Transylvania and the Upper Hungary) upon the South, the River Vistula, or Wesela, which divided it from Germany, upon the West, and the Tanais upon the East. Beyond that, all along the Banks of the Euxine Sea to the Mare Cyprium, and as far North as any Conqueror had gone, it was called Sarmatia Asiatica: the Countries farther Eastward being then called Scythia. By which account, as Russia, containeth not all Sarmatia Europaea, of which Prussia and the rest of the incorporate Provinces of Poland pass for a part; so neither is it totally comprehended in it, extending beyond Tanais into Asiatica. The ancient Inhabitants, called by a general name Sarmatæ, by the Greeks Sarmatæ, were subdivided, for so much of this part of it as was then well known, into the Agathyrsi, Rutheni, Pagirite, dwelling in the North; the Ossii, Alanni, Roxolani, &c. dwelling in the South. Amongst many other barbarous Nations, these were some of the principal. And from these Roxolani, as the principal of all the rest, Matthias à Michow, a learned Polander, doth derive the Original of the Rosses, (which we now call the Russians;) seconded herein by the more learned Bochartus, who proveth out of ancient Authors, that the Inhabitants of Taurica Cherfoneus (from which the passage into this Country is both short and easie) have been formerly called Rhos. Ταυρικῶν Ῥοί, Ῥοί καὶ Ῥοί, Ῥοί τῶν ταυρικῶν γένος Ῥhos, as he saith from Tzetzes. Which Roi, or Rhos, first mingling with the Alani, a Sarmatian People, might get the name of Roxolani; and afterwards possessing the more Northern Countries, or mingling with the Rossi, of Mount Taurus (from whom those of Taurica descended) in their enterprises on Constantinople and the parts adjoining, return to their old name of Rossi. The Rossi, or Russians, were then the first Lords of this Country generally; the Moscovites possessors of a Province only; so called from the Moschi, spoken of by Lucan in his Pharsalia, and placed by Pliny near the head of the River Phasis, which rising from the Armenian Mountains, falls into the Euxine. Derived no doubt from Mosch, (or Mosch, as the Ancients called him) the Son of Japhet, placed originally in the North and North-east of Syria, on the Confines of Colchis and Armenia; where Pliny, as before is said, hath fixed the Moschi, and where there is a long Chain of Hills, which most of the old Writers call Montes Moschici. But to return unto the Rossi, we hear not of them by this name till the time of Michael the third, Emperor of Constantinople; in whose Reign they invaded the Euxine Sea, and had the boldness to attempt the Imperial City, Anno 864; said by Cedrenus and some other of the Eastern Writers to be a People of Mount Taurus, (next neighbours to Mosch or the Moschi.) Failing in their attempt upon Constantinople, and not willing to go home again, they spread themselves, with their Confederates and Associates in this Expedition, upon the North-west Banks of the Euxine Sea; enlarging their bounds Northwards with less opposition than they were likely to have done on the Southern parts: Constantinople being once again in vain attempted in the Reigns of Constantine the 7. and Heuricus Ancyra. Converted to the Christian Faith, or growing into better terms with the Eastern Emperours, Helena, Daughter of Nicephorus Phocas, is married to Valdomirus one of their Kings. From that time forwards they turned their Forces on the Polanders and their weaker neighbours; save that, provoked by the death of one of their Country, slain accidentally at Constantinople in a private Quarrel, they made another fruitless Journey against that City, in the time of Michael Calaphates. Enlarging their Estate to the West and South, they became Masters of a great part of Sarmatia Europaea, Lithuania, Podolia, Nigra, Russia, and other Provinces, now subject to the Crown of Poland, being then parts of their Estate. Anno 1240 the Tartars, under the Conduct of Bathu, or Baydo, Son of Occata Chan, broke in upon them and subdued them: the Country before this entire, under one sole King, being broken afterwards into divers petit and inferior Governments, according to the will and pleasure of the insolent Victors. The principal of these (descended from the former Kings) were Lords of Volodimir, Mosco, and some other Cities; held by them, with no other Title than that of Lords of Moscovy, and for that Tributary to the Tartars, as were all the rest. Their Seat was originally at Volodimir, till the time that John, the Son of Daniel, the fifth Lord of the Russes, descended of the old Regal Line, taking a good liking of the River and Town of Mosco, repaired the Town, being before but mean and ordinary, and made it the chief Seat of his Principality. From whence the residue of the Russes, united in succeeding times unto this Estate by Marriages, Fraud and Conquest, had the name of Moscovites. But notwithstanding this increase of their power and Empire, the Tartars held them for their Vassals, and tyrannized upon the Country with a barbarous Insolency. Under which Thraldom they long groaned, till the Tartarians, being divided amongst themselves, and grown less terrible to their Neighbours, were outed of their Power and Command here by the valour of John, son of Basilius the second, who thereupon changed the Title of Lord into that of Duke, and after into that of Great Duke, as his Fortunes thrived. Yet not so great, but that he was contented to be an Homager of the Tartars: it being finally agreed on at the end of their Wars, that the Tartars should relinquish all their Holds in the Country; and on the other side, that once every year, within the Castle of Mosco, the Great Duke, standing on foot, should feed the Horse of the Crim-Tartar with Oats out of his own Cap. This Homage was by Basilius changed into a Tribute of Furs; which being also denied by his Successors, (as they grow in power) occasioned the long Wars betwixt the Nations; the Tartars always pressing on them by sudden Inroads, sometimes by Armies of no less than 200000 fighting men. But notwithstanding all their Power, and the Friendship of the Turk to boot, the Moscovite is not only able to assert his Sovereignty, but hath also wrested from them many goodly Provinces.

As for the Princes of this Country, I shall not trouble myself (as I see some do) in tracing a Succession of them as far as from the times of Augustus Caesar; when neither the Rossi nor the Moschi had here any footing. We will therefore go no higher than the time of George, whose Daughter Anne I find to have been married married to Henry the first of France. From whom in a direct Line descended another George, with whom we do intend to begin our Catalogue, as being the last King of the Russes before the coming of the Tartars. He, wisely yielding to the Storm, waved the Title of King, contented only with the Title of Lord, as more safe for him, and less invidious to the Tartars. The fifth from whom, called John, (as before is said) having removed his Seat to Mosco, took to himself the Title of Lord of Mosco, the chief feat of that Power and Sovereignty, which he transmitted afterwards to his Posterity; affecting for that cause the Title of Duke of Moscovie (though all the conquered Towns and Territories have their place also in his Style) as much as that of Emperor of Russia; which some of them have assumed also since the time of Basilius, who stiled himself Basilius, by the Grace of God, Emperor and Lord of Russia, Great Duke of Volodimir, Moscovie, Novogrod, the great, Pleskow, Smolensko, Tuver, Jugar, Wiatka, Balgar, &c. Lord and Great Prince of the lower Novogrod, Czernigow, Rezian, Wologda, Pow, Biele, Rostow, Jaroslawn, Poloskie, Bieloziere, Odore, Obdora, Condora, &c. King of Asan and Astracan. But leaving them to their swelling and voluminous Title, (little inferior unto that of the Kings of Spain) let us next look on the Succession from the time aforesaid of

The Great Dukes of MOSCOVIE.

1. John, the first Great Duke, who shook off the Tartarian Bondage.
2. Basilius Casan, won the Provinces of Severia, Roscovia, and Smolensko, with the Realms of Astracan and Casan.
3. John Basilius, conquered Livonia and Lithuania. Both which his Successor
- 1548 4. Joannes Basiliides, or Wasiliwich, lost in his age; though in his youth he had subdued the Nogacenian Tartars to his Empire, and vanquished Selim Emperor of the Turks, Anno 1569. With this King the English first began to confederate.
- 1583 5. Theodorus Johannides, the last of the old Royal Line of Moscovie.
- 1591 6. Boris Theodorus, Brother to the Wife of the last Great Duke, partly by the last Will of his Predecessor, partly by practising with the people, obtained the Empire; but being an unmerciful Tyrant, was dispossessed by the Polanders coming in favour of one.
- 1605 7. Demetrius, pretending himself to be the Son of John Wasiliwich, (and generally believed to be so) preferred in a Monastery from the Tyranny of Boris, in hatred of whom he was brought in by the Polander; by whose aid he overcame the Tyrant, and rooted out his Family, and was with great joy crowned Emperor in the City of Mosco. But the Russian Lords disdaining to have a Prince imposed on them from Poland, rose in Arms against him, and at last vanquished and slew him in open Field: his Wife, a noble Polonian Lady, being sent poorly home, and the Polanders beaten out of the Country.

- 1606 8. Basil Jhanniwich, surnamed Sniskins, the chief of the Conspirators, was by the rest of his Faction chosen Knez or Emperor, and held the State with great Trouble till the year 1610, when
- 1610 9. Demetrius II, another pretender to the State as the Son of John Wasiliwich also, in opposition unto Sniskins, set up by a stronger Faction, gave occasion to the Polander to work upon this distemper; by whom Sniskins was taken Prisoner, Demetrius slain, Smolensko and other great Towns subdued, and Vladislaus, Prince of Poland, recommended to the Russians to be chosen Emperor. But the Russes, loth to fall under the power of the Polander; and weary of their own Confusions, made choice at last of
- 1615 10. Michael Fedrovitz, Son of Theodore the Patriarch of Mosco, who at last fed this vast Empire, and managed it in a more constant way of Peace with the Turk, Tartar, Polonian, and Swethlander, than any of his Predecessors had done before him.
- 1646 11. Alexius Michaeliwitz (or the Son of Michael) succeeded his Father in the Empire, troubled at first with some Distempers in the State, (as in all other Countries about that time) but now quietly settled, Anno 1648.

The Formalities with which these great Emperors are invested or settled in the Throne are not many nor stately, such as they be, I here afford you out of the History of the Life of Joannes Basiliides, written in Latine by Paulus Oderbornius. On the 2. of June, Anno 1583, Theodorus Johannides went towards the Temple of S. Michael, being the principal Church in all Mosco; the Streets all covered with Flowers, the Doors of the Citizens crowned with Garlands, the Air echoing with the noise of Flutes and Trumpets, and the people so crowding to behold their Prince, that had not the Guard with naked Swords forced a passage through them, it had been impossible for him to have gone on. Being now come to the Church-door, the Lords of the Country (Knezes they there call them) went out to meet him; and the Archbishop of Mosco, clad in his Pontificalibus, when he was come into the Church, embraced him. The Pavement of the Church was hidden with Tapestry, and the Stalls adorned with costly Hangings. The Great Duke sat down in his Throne, being attired in a garment of Silk, buttoned down with Golden Buttons: on his Head he wore a Purple Cap spangled with rich Jewels, and on his Fingers abundance of Rings. Being thus seated, the Patriarch made a Prayer to God to bless him, his People, and his Government: which was seconded by the joyful Shouts and Acclamations of his Subjects; amongst whom no small store of Silver-money was flung by the Treasurer, and so they returned to the Palace.

The Government of this Country is meerly Tyrannical, the Emperor being absolute Lord of the Lives, Lands and Goods of all his Subjects: all of them, the noble as well as the base, subscribing themselves in their Petitions to him by the name of Keloptery, that is, Slaves. Whereupon Mahomet, a Turkish Bajow, was used to say, that his Master and the Moscovites were the two most absolute Princes in all the World. First for their Goods; when any Embassador returns home, the Great Duke takes from him all the Presents which he hath received, giving him perhaps some small Reward, perhaps none at all: and as for Lands, they pass not from Father to Son, but as he confirms it. But more particularly, (besides the case of Permia spoken of before) John Vasilvich sent a Command to Mosco, to provide a Coal-pack of live Fleas for a Medicine: and when the Citizens returned answer that it was impossible, he fined them at 700 Rubbles for their Disobedience. Another time he laid a Multitude of 300000 Rubbles upon his Nobility, because he had no good Sport in his Hunting: which they again extorted from the common people; and under colour of want, commanded from some Bishops and Monasteries the sum of 100000 Rubbles, from some 50000, more or less from others, according unto their Revenues. And it is usual with the best of them to cause the Boiars or Gentlemen which serve on horse-back to pretend themselves robbed, that he may send unto the City to find out the Felon, and, on a Non est inventus, fine them at discretion, sometimes 8000, sometimes 10000, and sometimes 20000 Rubbles. Then for their Lives, there is a Story, that Vasilvich having found that one of his Secretaries had received a Goose stuffed full of Silver for a Bribe, caused him to be brought into the Market-place of Mosco; where without any legal Trial, he commanded the Executioner first to cut off his Legs about the Shins, and then his Arms about the Elbows, (still asking the miserable man how he liked Goose-flesh) and in the end to cut off his Head; in similitude of a Goose ready for the Spit. And that they may the better preserve this Power, the Great Dukes seldom shew themselves unto the people but in Apparel of inestimable value, joyning the Ornaments of a Bishop unto the Majesty of a King, by wearing a Mitre on their Heads shining with Diamonds and rich Stones: and when they wear it not on their Heads, they place it before the Chair of State, (over which are the Images of Christ and the Blessed Virgin) holding in their hands a most rich Crozier-Staff, and all their Fingers full of Rings. And upon solemn Festivals and Entertainments the great Chamber is beset with Cupboards of Plate of infinite value, and filled with men clothed with Cloth of Gold to the very foot, all of them seeming to be men of the chief Nobility; but many times being no other than the gravest and portliest Citizens of Mosco, richly apparelled for the time out of the Emperor's Wardrobe, which to such as do not understand the Fraud, look like so many Princes, and cause no small wonder at his Magnificence. So that the people seeing him in such Royal state, and knowing no more than what they are taught at home, reverence him as Slaves, not Subjects, and look upon him rather as a God than a King.

Having so absolute a Command on their Lives and Goods, it will be easily supposed that he may raise what Forces and amass what Treasures he hath a mind to. First, for his Forces, it is said that he is able to raise 300000

Horse, if occasion be: and that he may come near that number it is more than probable, in that John Vasilvich, in his War against those of African, had actually 120000 Horse; and that a great part of the Country is in the hands of the Boiars, bound by their Tenure to serve with Horse whenever he pleaseth; and that there are 110 men chosen by the Emperor; and by him enfeoffed with Lands, (during pleasure only) who for these Lands are to find 65000 Horse with all things necessary for the Wars, and those in a continual readiness fit for present Action. Then for such Horse as he himself doth keep in perpetual pay, there are no fewer than 25000 which attend him as a Guard to his person, all of them well-experienced men and fit for Service; which added to the 65000 spoken of before, make up a standing Body of 90000. Had he Foot answerable unto this proportion of Horse, there were no dealing with him; but therein his Militia is defective: Vasilvich with his great Army of 120000 Horse having but 20000 Foot; the Foot-men which he hath in continual pay amounting to 12000 only, far short of such a standing Body of Horse as before we spoke of. And this defect hath been the reason why the Polanders with far less Armies have prevailed against them: the Great Duke not being able with all his power to hinder King Stephen of Poland from taking Villocaine, or besieging Plescow (though his Army was not above 60000 in both Horse and Foot) for want of standing Bands of Foot to make good his ground. Generally both Horse and Foot are very obedient to their Captains and Superiour Officers: patiently enduring all Discommodities of Cold, Rain, and Hunger; (in that regard fitter to keep a Fortrefs than serve in Field) and so regardless of their Lives in the day of Battle, that they will rather loose themselves than yield themselves Prisoners or demand Quarter.

For his Revenues, they may be what he will himself, considering (besides his extraordinary power of oppressing his Subjects before mentioned) the many ordinary ways he hath of amassing Treasure: viz. the Foretelling of home-bred Commodities, and ingrossing the foreign; selling them at what price he list, and hindering all men else from Trade till his own be sold; provision of Rent-corn and Victual, raised in some years to 200000 Rubbles, Rent-wax and Hay to 30000, Poll-money to 400000, Customs on Merchandise to 800000. By which and other means of collecting Monies, and the Domain of his Crown, though he raise vast Sums: yet it is thought that, his Household-charges being deducted, there remain not towards all other Expences three millions of Rubbles; every Rubble being as much as an English Mark.

The Arms are Sable, a Portal open of two Leaves and as many Degrees Or.

OF POLAND.

POLAND is bounded on the East with Russia and the Crim-Tartar, from whom it is parted by the River Borysthenes; on the West with Germany, on the North with the Baltick Sea and some part of Russia, on the South with the Carpathian Mountains, which divide it from Hungary, Transylvania and Moldavia.

It is an aggregate Body, consisting of many distinct Provinces united into one Estate, of which Poland, being the predominant, hath given name to the rest, called all together the Realm of Poland: and that so named from Pole, which in the Slavonian Language (the common Language of the Country) significth plain; because it is but little swelled with Hills. It is of Figure round, in compass 2600 miles, situate under the eighth and twelfth Climates; so that the longest Day in the Southern part is but 16 hours, and about 18 hours in the parts most North.

This Country is plain, but full of Woods, which serve to rectifie the Air, being naturally so cold that they have neither Wine nor Grapes; instead whereof they use that kind of Drink called Ale, in former times the usual Beverage of England and this Country only. Barley they have, and Pulse in such abundant measure, that no small quantities of each are transported yearly: nor yield they any thing at all to Denmark or Hungary for their plenty of Cattel. But of this more in our description of the several Provinces.

The People are very industrious, and studious of all Languages, especially of the Latine; to which they are so devoted, that there is scarce a mean man who is not able in some measure to express himself in it. According to their abilities they are rather prodigal than truly liberal; and good Souldiers generally. The Peasants live in miserable Servitude unto their Lords; the Lords in such Equality of estate amongst themselves, that none of them excepting the greater Princes) exceedeth 25000 Ducats of yearly Rent. Proud in their Garb, costly in their Apparel, impatient in their Humours, and delicate in Diet. These last Conditions are common to the Women also, who are for the most part indifferently fair, and rather witty than well spoken. But this, being the peculiar Character of the Polander properly so called, is not perhaps communicable to the People of the rest of the Provinces, whom we shall speak of severally in their proper places.

The Christian Faith was first planted in this Kingdom at several times and by several persons, according to the different parts of which it consisteth: in Poland specially so called in the time of their Prince Micislaus, Son of Nemyslaw, Anno 963; in Livonia, by the Preaching of one Meinardus, Anno 1200, or thereabouts; in Lithuania, not until the year 1386, at the admission of Agello to the Crown of Poland, and then done (as some say) by Thomas of Walden (or Waldensis) an English Friar, in Samagitia and Polbinia, at the same time with Lithuania; in the rest at other times and on other occasions: yet so that in many places of idolatry was never totally rooted out, the feeds and practice whereof in many Points still remain amongst them. Corrupted by the Superstitions of the Church of Rome, a Reformation was endeavoured at such a time as John Hus flourished in Bohemia, the next neighbouring Kingdom: but by the rigour of Vladislav the sixth, then King thereof, assisted by his Bishops and Noblemen, it was at that time hindered. Afterwards in the time of Lutber, some who had studied at Leipsick and Wittenberg (Universities of Saxony) brought his Opinions home with them into the Province of Poland; as some Dutch Merchants (with the rest of their Commodities) did into Dantzick, the chief Town of Pomerellia, Anno 1525: from whence it spread it self over most part of that Country. According as it was favoured or disliked by the Palatines, Chastellans and other great men of the Realm, so was its entertainment either good or bad: the Gratiens in the mean time taking opportunity to win some parts of it to their side, and confirm others in it; who, being originally Members of the Church of Greece, because originally converted by the Bishops thereof, did still continue in Conformity and Obedience to it. In the end, by reason of the over-great Liberty of the Nobility and People, and want of Power in the King to controule their doings, every man took up what Religion he best liked; some following the Augustine Confession, others the Helvetian, others adhering as tenaciously to the Church of Rome; and some inclining to new Sects, or rather to old Heresies under new Disguises, have brought in such a Miscellany of Babel of Religions into this Estate, (Jesuites, Lutherans, Calvinists, Socinians, Arians, Anabaptists, and indeed what not; being here all tolerated) that at last it grew into a By-word, that if any man had lost his Religion, he might find it in Poland, or else believe it to be vanished. A by-word afterwards applied unto Amsterdam, communicable since unto other places, Libertas Prophetandi, or the Liberty of Prophefying, being now as much allowed of in some parts of Christendom, as Libertas opinandi was in Rome under Nerva's Government, ubi sentire qua velis, & qua sentias loqui liceat, when as a man might think as he listed of the publick, and speak what he thought. But whether this be such a rara temporum Felicitas, such a Felicity of these our Times, as Tacitus conceived the other to be of those, future times will shew.

But to return again to Poland: notwithstanding this mixture of Religions, yet that most publicly allowed and countenanced is the Religion authorized by the Church of Rome, asserted here by the Zeal of the Kings unto that Cause, and the great Power of the Bishops, who seeing how those of their Order have spread in Germany and other places, under colour of Reformation of some things amiss, have hitherto upheld the Ecclesiastical Estate in the same form they found it. The Government of the Church is as formerly by 3 Archbishops and 19 Bishops, who challenge a Jurisdiction over all the Kingdom, but exercise it upon those only who submit unto them: those who embrace the Doctrines of Lutber or Calvin following the Forms of Government by them established; as others do some new ones of their own devising. And for those Provinces and people which lie towards Greece, or or were parts heretofore of the Russian Empire, and still hold a Communion with those Churches, they have Archbishops and Bishops of their own Religion; that is to say, the Archbishops of Vilna and Lemberg, the Bishops of Polozko, Luko, Pinsk, Volodimir, Przemil, and Kiovia. Yet amongst all these different Churches and forms of Government there is this Conformity, that whenever the Gospel is read openly in the Congregation, the Nobility and Gentry use to draw their Swords, (according to an ancient Custom which they had among them) signifying their readiness to defend it against all Opposers. Which reason doubtless gave beginning to the standing up at the Creed and Gospel in the Primitive times, retained still in the Church of England, whereby we do declare how prepared and resolute we are to defend the same: though some of late, holding it for a Relique of Popery, with greater nicety than wisdom, have refused to do it.

Principal Commanders of this Country in the Art of War were, 1. Casimir the third, the great Establisher of this Kingdom after long Dissensions. 2. Jagello, or Wladislaw the first, who first brought down the Pride of the Dutch Knights in a famous Victory. 3. Casimir the 4. the fortunate Conqueror of the Knights of Prussia, brought by him under the Command of the Kings of Poland. 4. Sigismund the first, by whose Valour and good fortune the Dutch Knights were totally suppressed, and the greatest part of Prussia for ever added to that Crown. 5. Sigismund the second, surnamed Augustus, fortunate in his Wars against most of them of Livonia, by him united to this Kingdom. Of most special note for learning, Hofius, a Divine of the Papal Party, whose great Abilities advanced him to the state of a Cardinal. 2. Crellius, and 3. Polakius, of the contrary party in Religion, men of great parts, but Heterodox and unfound Opinions. 4. Cromerus, the Historian. 5. Keckerman, the Professor at Dantzick or Dantzick; a man of universal Studies, but of greater industry than exactness.

Chief Rivers of this Kingdom are, 1. Vistula or the Weysfel, the ancient Boundary betwixt Germany and Sarmatia Europa, which, rising in the Carpathian Mountains, passeth by Cracovia, the chief City of Poland, and, dividing Prussia from Pomerellia, falleth into the Baltick Sea, not far from Dantzick, and is navigable for the space of 400 miles, of old called Pandalus. 2. Waria, which runneth through the lesser Poland. 3. Dwina the less, watering Livonia; and 4. Borjshenes, or the Nieper, passing through Podolia: both spoken of before, when we were in Russia. 5. Niefter, by Ptolemy called Tyras, which falleth into the Euxine Sea, having first parted Podolia from Moldavia. 6. Jugra, by some called the lesser Tanaus, arising in Lituania, and falling into the more noted Tanaus, which is now called Don. Of less note there are, 1. Reuben, or Renbon. 2. Chronia, now called Pregel. 3. Bog, said by some to be the Hypanis of the Ancients. 4. Memel. 5. Niemen, the Meander of these Northern parts. 6. Windaw, a Livonian River falling into the Baltick. Mountains of note here are not many, the Countries for the most part being plain and champain; and those which are rather Boundaries betwixt this and some other Kingdom, than proper unto this alone. The chief of which are those called Sarmatici, dividing Germany from Sarmatia Europa, by Solinus named Sevo, by Ptolemy the Carpathian Mountains; the Boundary at this time betwixt Poland and Hungary, of which more anon.

The common Meets and Land-marks being thus laid down, we will next take a view of those several Provinces of which this Kingdom doth consist, being eleven in number; that is to say, 1. Livonia, 2. Samogitia, 3. Lituania, 4. Polinia, 5. Podolia, 6. Russia nigra,

7. Maffovia, 8. Podlaffia, 9. Prussia, 10. Pomerellia; and 11. Poland specially so called: all of them (except the proper Poland) within Sarmatia Europa.

1. LIVONIA.

LIVONIA, or LIEFLAND, is bounded on the East with the Empire of Russia, on the West with the Baltick Sea, on the North with the Gulf or Bay of Finland, on the South with Samogitia and Lituania; extended in length along the Shore of the Baltick for the space of 125 Dutch, or 500 Italian miles, and 40 Dutch, or 160 Italian miles in breadth: and called thus perhaps from the Levomi, a People of Germany, inhabiting not far from the River Vistula.

The Country is for the most part plain, without any Mountains; furnished with Corn and Fruits in so great abundance, that they send part thereof into other Countries: and yet there is much Ground untilld in it, by reason of the Bogs and Marishes, which are very frequent. Here is also store of Wax, Honey and Pitch, but they have neither Oyl nor Wine: the want of which last is supplied by Meth. Of tame Beasts fit for man's service they are well provided, as also of such whose Skins are of more value with the Merchant than their Flesh at the Market; as Ermins, Sables, Castors, and others of that kind; besides good store of Game for Hunting, the Country having in it many large Woods, parts of the Heremian. And as for Rivers, there are few Countries which have more; it being watered by the Windaw, the Beck, the Dwina, the Renbon, all of them falling into the Baltick; many great Lakes, whereof the chief is that of Beybas, 45 miles long, and full of Fish.

The people are much given to Gluttony and Drunkenness, especially in rich mens houses, where it is to be had: for the Peasants live in want enough, meer Slaves to their Tyrannical Landlords, who spend in Riot and excess what they get by Drudgery: and when at any time the poor Wretch leaves his Landlord to mend his condition with some other, the Lord, if he can overtake him, will cut off his Foot, to make him sure for the future. They are a mixture of many Nations: as the Estonians, which are the natural Inhabitants, (derived from the Estii, a Dutch people, spoken of by Ptolemy) of which Nation are almost all the Peasants; the Moscovites, Swedes, Danes, Dutch and Polanders, intermingled with them, coming in upon several Conquests, and planting themselves in the best parts of it, in which they still Lord it over the Native, but the Dutch especially, for long time Masters of the whole.

The Christian Faith was first here planted by Meinardus of Lubeck (employed herein) in the time of Frederick the first; at the perswasion of some Dutch Merchants who traded hither, by the Archbishop of Breme, by whom he was made the first Bishop of the Livonians. The Church hereof at this time is governed by the Archbishop of Riga, the Bishops of Derpt, Asilia, Oscl, Curland, and Rivallia. In those parts which remain subject to the Polander, the Religion of the Church of Rome is only countenanced. Such parts of it as are under the Swedes or Danes are for the most part of the Lutheran Profession, planted with Colonies of that People. But the Estonians, or original Inhabitants, as they have a Language, so they have a Religion by themselves also, mixt of the Christian and the Pagan. Extremely well affected unto their Priests, to whom they present Salt, Candles and Fruits, when they come to them for their Blessings; great lovers of Confection, esteemers of Holy water, and diligent frequenters of their Churches; but so extremely ignorant in all Points of Religion, that there is hardly one in a Village that can fay his Pater-noster. When they bury any of their dead, every one drinketh an Health to him, and poureth his part upon him when his turn comes to drink; putting into the Grave with him a Hatchet, Wine, Meat, and a little Money for his Voyage. And in some places they are wholly Idolatrous, (if not converted very lately by the care of the Jesuites) some of them worshipping the Sun, others Stocks and Stones, and some Serpents also. The Language of the Country is for the most part the High Dutch, being the Language of those Nations who first Lorded over them; the Estonians having generally a peculiar Language, which none of the others understand.

It was divided formerly into the Provinces of Curland, Estland, Semigalia, Virland, Harland and Lettenland; but these six, since the Conquest of it by the Polanders, are reduced to three, Harland and Virland being united unto Estland, and Semigalia unto Curland.

Chief places in Estland are, 1. Rivallia, or Revel, a Bishop's See, and a well-traded Port, situate on the Gulf of Finland; a Town belonging to the Swede, the keeping whereof, and of Wiborg on the Borders of Moscovy, stand him yearly in 100000 Dollars. 2. Hafley, or Habsel, (Asilia in Latine) a Bishop's See; and 3. Pernaw, a well-fortified place, belonging to the Swedish also, ever since the Conquest of these parts of the Country by John the second. Places of great importance to the Crown of Sweden, as all other pieces of this nature are, which, standing in an Enemy's Country, not only do defend our own, but offend our Adversaries. For they are not only Doors, to open a farther passage into their Territories, whenever we shall see occasion; but whilst the Enemy is besieging thereof, or otherwise buied in recovering them into his power, our own State is preserved in quiet, and time may yield fit opportunity to relieve them, if they be distressed, without waiting of any part of our proper Countries. Of which nature was Calais when it was in the hands of the English; the Garrisons which the Spaniards and Portuguezes have in Africk and India: the Charge of keeping them being sufficiently defrayed (if the charge prove greater than the Income, as sometimes it doth) by the advantages they give unto him which hath them. 4. Velin, a strong Town, and fortified with an impregnable Castle, betrayed by the Dutch Garrison at that time in it, together with William of Furstenburg, the Great Master into the hands of John Basilus the Great Duke of Moscovy, who still holds it. 5. Derpt, or Derbern, (in Latine Tupatum) a Bishop's See, situate on the Beck, or Embeck, betwixt two Lakes, in the midst of the Province, and taken at the same time by the Moscovite, who, transporting the Livonians into other places, planted these parts with Colonies of his own people. 6. Terveest, a Castle of great strength, taken then also by the Russes; but being recovered by the Polander, was blown up with Gunpowder, that it might no more come into the hands of the Enemy. Hitherto nothing of this Country which belongs to the Polanders; these that follow do: that is to say, 7. Borcholm, the Seat and Residence of the Bishop of Rivallia, since the taking of that Town by the Swedes. 8. Weisenburg, incommoiously seated betwixt two ill neighbours, Narva and Rivallia, but serving very well to prohibit the Incursions of those Garrisons farther into the Country. 9. Wernebeck, in that part of Estland, which is called Odinpo; and 10. Weißenstein, in that part thereof which is named Servia.

In LETTELAND, lying in the midst betwixt Estland and Curland, the places of most note are, 1. Riga, (the people call it Rig) seated on the Mouth of the River Dwina, falling there into the Baltick: first built & planted at the charges of the Merchants of Breme; after that the Archbishop's See, the ordinary Residence of the Great Master, and the chief City of the whole Province of Livonia. A Town well fortified, according to the modern Rules of Fortification, with a strong Wall, large Bulwarks, double Ditches, Palisadoes, and well provided, of all manner of Ammunition: a famous Empory, of great resort for foreign Merchants, who carry hence, Pitch, Wax, Hemp, Flax, and such other Commodities. They are governed (notwithstanding their Subjection to the King of Poland) by their own Laws; and such stout defenders of their Liberties, that they will by no means admit of any Foreigner to have Command of the City, obedient in all other things to the will of that King. 2. Dunamund, an impregnable Fortrefs, two Dutch miles from Riga, well garrisoned by the Polanders, who here take Toll of all foreign Merchants. 3. Blokaw, a Garrison of the King's betwixt Riga and Dunamund, where the Merchants are tolled over again. 4. Wenden, more within the Land, on the River Teider. 5. Wolmar, upon the same River. 6. Kakenhaufe, a strong Town on the Banks of the Dwina. This Country belongs wholly to the King of Poland, and stood firm for him in the War made by Charles Duke of Suderman against his Nephew Sigismund King of Poland and Sweden, when almost all Estland had submitted to him.

CURLAND, the third and last Member of this Division, containing Semigalia also, lieth South of Lettenland, and North of Samogitia and Lituania: an entire Dukedom of it self, but holden under the Sovereignty and Homage of the Kings of Poland. Places of most importance in it are, 1. Candow. 2. Goldingen. 3. Kies, (the Dutch call it Windaw) the Seat of the Great Master of the Tentonic Order in times past; now most frequently as the place of Parliament or general Assembly for Affairs which concern the publick. 4. Dubin. 5. Grubin, on the Sea-side, but of no Trade at all. 6. Hafenpo. And then in Semigal. 7. Mittaw, the Court and Residence of the Dukes of Curland. 8. Selborg. 9. Bessenborg. 10. Dobelin. There is no Town in all this Dukedom of any Trading, though lying for a great space all along the Baltick; because none of them are furnished with commodious Havens. A Dukedom first begun in the person of Gothardus Ketter, (of one of the Noble Families of Denmark) the last Great Master of the Dutch Knights in this Country, who in the year 1562, surrendering his Order, and the whole possession of Livonia, to Sigismund Augustus K. of Poland, received back again for him, and his Heirs for ever the Dukedom of Curland and Semigal; to be held by them of the Crown; the Nobility of these Countries doing then presently their Homage and Allegiance to him as their Hereditary Prince. Since which time the Princes of this House have continued Feudataries unto Poland, but not reckoned as parts or members of the Body thereof; not coming to the Diers, nor liable to the publick Charges, nor having any thing to do in the King's Election; in a word, rather honourable Neighbours of the King's of Poland, than Subjects to them. The present Duke is like to be much increased in Estate and Power, if the now Marquis of Brandenburg (whose Sister is his Mother) should depart without Issue. For by that means there will be added to this House the great Dukedom of Prussia, those of Cleve and Gulick, together with such other Countries possessed now by that Marquis as he holds by descent from the Heirs-general of those Dukedoms: which makes him cast an eye already upon those Estates.

There belong also to Livonia some few Islands situate in the Baltick Sea: that is to say, 1. Osilia. 2. Dachden. 3. Mona. 4. Wormse. 5. Wrangen, and 6. Keon. Of which the four last do belong to the King of Poland, Dachden to the King of Swedish, and Osilia, or O-fel, to the Danes. This last is the chief of all the six, distant distant from the main Land of Livonia 12 Dutch miles; 14 of the same miles in length, half as much in breadth: the chief Towns hereof being 1. Oſela a Biſhop's See, which gave name to the Island. 2. Sumneburg. The Island was made ſubject to the Danes by Magnus, Brother of Fredrick the ſecond, King of Denmark, who, being choſen Admiſtrator of the Biſhoprick of Depr in Eſtland, made himſelf Maſter of this Island and ſome other pieces, which, dying without Iſſue, he bequeathed to the King his Brother, Anno 1580.

As for Livonia it ſelf, it was firſt under the Levoni and Eſtii, two German Nations, from whom the Country had the name of Livonia, the People of Eſtlanders or Eſtones. Diſtracted into many petit Principalities, it was made acquainted with the Chriſtian Faith by the care of the Merchants of Bremen, as before was ſaid. Meinard their firſt Biſhop being dead, and Berold his Succeſſor ſlain by ſuch of the people as had not yet received the Goſpel; the Knights of the Port-glaive, or the Sword, were ſent thither, to defend the Preachers and the Doctrine by the force of Arms. Finding themſelves too weak to effect the buſineſs, they united with the Order of Dutch Knights in Pruſſia, to whom from that time forwards they became ſubordinate; the great Maſter of Livonia acknowledging him of Pruſſia for his Superiour. Theſe Knights continued Maſters of it without contradiction till the year 1557, (embracing in the mean time the Opinions of Luther, Anno 1528) then quarrelling with the Archbiſhop of Riga, of the Houſe of Brandenburg, becauſe he would not adhere unto their Opinions; who, to ſecure his own Eſtate was forced to put Riga into the hands of the Polanders. Afterward being overlaid by the Moscovite, who had taken from them almoſt all their Country, they were fain to put themſelves under the Protection of Sigiſmund, Auguſtus King of Poland, Anno 1559. But William of Furſtenberg, the Great Maſter being betrayed by his own Mercenaries into the hands of the Moscovite, Gothardus his Succeſſor (following the example of Albert the Great Maſter of Pruſſia) tranſacted with the ſaid Sigiſmund for the whole Eſtate, which he ſurrendered to his uſe in the Caſtle of Riga, March 5. 1562, together with his Croſs, the Seal of the Order, the Charters and Grants of many of the Popes and Emperours which concerned the ſame, as alſo the Keys of the City and Caſtle of Riga, the Office of Great Maſter, the Rights of Coinage, and all the Powers and Privileges appertaining to it: receiving back again from Ratziſvil, the King's Commiſſioner, the Dukedom of Curland to him and his Heirs for ever, as before is ſaid. By this Tranſaction the Kings of Pole became Maſters of Lieſland, and were more abſolutely ſetled in it after a long War betwixt Stephen King of Poland and John Vaſilievich the Great Duke of Moscovie, who in the end ſurrendered all his Claim therein to the ſaid Stephen and his Succeſſors, Anno 1582, reſerving only ſome few Towns on the Eaſtern Borders: the Danes and Swethlanders taking occaſion by their Troubles to impatronize themſelves of Narva, Rivallia, Oſel, and ſome other pieces.

2. SAMOGITIA.

SAMOGITIA is a ſmall Province wedged in betwixt Livonia and Lithuania, having Livonia on the North, Lithuania on the Eaſt and South, and the Baltick Sea upon the Weſt: in length extending 50 miles from Eaſt to Weſt, but not of an anſwerable breadth. It is ſo called from the lowlineſs of the ſituation, (the word Samogitis in the Language of the Inhabitants ſignifying terram inferiorem, or the Low-lands) by the Moscovite in ſame ſenſe called Samotzkafelma. This lowneſs of ſituation makes it very watery, and almoſt continually frozen: but withal it hath many Foreſts, which yield unto the people abundance of Honey, better, more pleaſing to the taſte, and leſs mixt with Wax, than in other places.

The people are ſuppoſed, to be of the Saxon Race, of a good Stature, well ſet, bold, and apt for War; but withal boiſterous, rude and barbarous: Chriſtians in general, but many of them do ſtill retain their old Idolatries, nourishing amongſt them a kind of four-footed Serpents, about three handfulls in length, which they worſhip as their Houſhold-gods, attending them with fear and reverence when they call them out to their repaſt: and if any Miſchance do happen to any of the Family; it is imputed preſently to ſome want of due obſervance of theſe ugly Creatures. They are naturally inclined to Divinations, Charms and Sorceries, and frequently abuſed (as for the moſt part ſuch people are) by Diabolical Illuſions. Nay, they which profeſs the name of Chriſt are ſo ill inſtructed, that they uſe to marry many Wives, without conſideration of Bloud or Parentage: it being ordinary for a man to marry with his Brother's Widow, and not unuſual to marry the Reſiſt of their Fathers, (a Fornication not ſo much as heard of in S. Paul's time amongſt the Gentiles.) They have ſome Cuſtoms alſo as unprofitable as theſe are heatheniſh; breaking up their Land, as they do in Moscovie, with Spades or Sticks. And when one of their Governours, obſerving the Huſbandry of other Nations had brought them the uſe of the Plough, it fortune that for two or three years, either by the indiſpoſition of the Weather, or ſome other Accident, they had not ſo much Corn as they uſed to have. Which Want the people attributing to the uſe of the Plough, nec quicquam aliud in cauſa eſſe putantes, and not believing that there was any other cauſe of it, grew ſo much incenſed, that the Governour, fearing ſome Sedition like to follow on it, was forced to leave them to the old way which before they went. An humour like to that of the preſent Iriſh, in ploughing with their Horſes tails, ſpoken of before. So pertinacious for the moſt part are ignorant and ſuperſtitious people, in ſtanding to their ancient Cuſtoms, though abſurd and hurtful.

Towns they have few, their Houſes for the generality being poor and low, covered with Straw or Dirt, with an Hole open in the Roof to let in the light. The principal of thoſe they have (but rather Villages than Towns) are 1. Bigla, near the head of the River Swiote; 2. Lin-kaw, of which nothing memorable.

This Province hath always followed the fortunes of Lithuania: ſubject, when that was ſo, to the Kings of Ruſſia, converted when that was to the Chriſtian Faith, and finally united with it to the Crown of Poland.

3. LITHUANIA.

LITHUANIA hath on the Eaſt the Empire of Ruſſia, on the Weſt Pruſſia, Maſſovia and Poland, on the North Livonia and Samogitia, and on the South Valhinia and Podolia. So called from Lithus the Ceremonial Staff, uſed anciently by the Augurs in their Divinations; to which the Inhabitants hereof being very much addicted before their receiving of the Goſpel, were called Lithani; but this is but conjectural only. Yet rather thus, than that it ſhould be peopled by ſome baniſhed Italians, firſt named Italia, then Litalia, and after, by a moſt unlikely Corruption, come to Lithuania, as Matthias a Michon would fain have it.

The Country for the moſt part is full of Moors, Foreſts, ſome great Lakes like a Sea for bigneſs, and many navigable Rivers; which frozen over in the Winter make the ways more travelling at that time of the year than they are in Summer. The Air in moſt places is exceeding cold, which makes their Wheat (whereof they have ſome abundance) to be ſeldom ripe, and other Fruits of the Earth to come ſlowly forward. Their Foreſts yield them Bugles, Ermines, Sables, Deer, wild Horſes, plenty of Honey, Wax, and Pitch: but their breed of Cattel is leſs here, and of ſmaller ſtature, than it is in Germany. Theſe Foreſts alſo are the Store-houſe out of which the Engliſh and Hollanders furniſh themſelves with Timber, both for Ships and Building; returning to them in exchange Salt, Wine, and other Neceſſaries which are wanting here.

The people anciently had Fire and Serpents for their Gods, nourishing the laſt in their houſes, and keeping the other continually burning; the Priests and Miniſters of the Temple always adding Fuel, that it might not fail. The Veſtal Fire was not kept more carefully at Rome, nor with greater Ceremony. To this God, whom they called Diſpan, or the Lord of the Smoke, they uſed to ſacrifice young Pullets; to the other, their Cocks. The ſeed of this Idolatry is ſo implanted in them, that it is ſaid, that in a Village of the King's called Lovaniski, not four miles from Vilna, their chief City, they do to this day worſhip Serpents. Converted with their Prince Ja-gello to the Chriſtian Faith, Anno 1386, they yet retained ſuch Cuſtoms as are iſt conſiſtent with Chriſtianity, marrying, unmarried, when and as often as they pleaſe, no Bond being ſo ſoon cancelled as that of Matrimony. For a married man to uſe the body of an Harlot is accounted (as indeed it is) an opprobrious Crime: but for the Wife to have her Stallions and Adulterers is a thing ſo ordinary and unblameable, that the Huſbands call them their Coadjutors, and prize them far above the reſt of their Acquaintance. The common people are in a miſerable Servitude unto their Lords, pillaged and beaten by them upon any occaſion; yet muſt not come before them with an empty hand. And if any of them have committed a Crime deſerving death, he muſt hang himſelf as ſoon as the Sentence is ſigned to him, or elſe is beaten and tormented in ſo cruel a manner, that Death at laſt is looked on as a better Life.

The Country is divided into ten parts or Provinces, ſubject unto the Jurisdiction of ſo many Palatines; that is to ſay, the Palatine of 1. Vilna. 2. Trock. 3. Minſk. 4. Novogrod. 5. Breſtia. 6. Volhinia. 7. Kiovia. 8. Mieſlaw. 9. Vitebsko. 10. Polotzkie. But Novogrod and Polotzkie being conquered by the Great Duke of Moscovie, and added unto that Eſtate, and Volhinia reckoned (of late times) for a diſtinct Province of it ſelf, not depending of it; the remaining number is but ſeven, moſt of them taking names from their principal Towns. The chief of thoſe, and others which deſerve place here, are, 1. Vilna, a Biſhop's See, equal in bigneſs to Cra-cow, the chief City of Poland; ſo called of the River Vil, or Viln, upon which it is ſeated; built there in the year 1305 by one Godemin, a great Prince of theſe parts; well walled, but the Gates thereof open night and day; large, rich, and well frequented by foreign Merchants, eſpecially by thoſe that drive the Trade of Moscovie, who have here their Hall, one of the chief Ornaments of the City. They have in it alſo ſome Churches built of Stone, (but the moſt of Wood) the principal whereof is the Monastery of S. Bernard, which is a very comely Structure. The Natives call this Town Vilenski; the Dutch Die Wilde. It is ſituate in the very heart of the Country, the longeſt Day in Summer being here 16 hours and half a quarter; whereas in the moſt Southern parts of the Country it is but 16, and in the moſt Northern not fully 18. 2. Kiovia, or Kiof, ſituate on the Nieper, or Bory- ſthenes, where the River Deſna falls into it: heretofore a beautiful and moſt ſtately City, having in it above 300 fair Churches, of which ſome remain unto this day; the Ruines of the reſt to be traced out amongſt Shrubs and Buſhes, the receptacles of wild Beaſts. The Seat at that time of the Metropolitan of the Ruſſian Empire, containing alſo under his Jurisdiction the Countries of Walachia in Dacia, and Nigra Ruſſia in Poland. But being deſtroyed by Bahn or Boyd the Tartarian, in the Conqueſt of theſe parts by that People, it never could come near its former Luſtre: yet ſtill it holds the reputation of a Biſhop's See, acknowledging the Patriarch of Mosco for his Metropolitan, and conſequently is of the Communion of the Greek Churches, not of that of Rome. 3. Grod-ne, on the River Chornus, the chief Town of the Palatinate of Trock, memorable for the death of Stephen King of Poland. 4. Grumwald, more memorable for the great Deſcat given near it, by Ja-gello Duke of Lithuania and King of Poland, to the numerous Army of the Dutch Knights invading this Province; ſo confident of their Succeſs in the undertaking, that they brought with them abundance of Chains and Torches; with the one to lead captive the Nobles of Poland, and with the other to fire their Cities. But Ja-gello, then newly made a Chriſtian, putting his confidence in God, with an Army of untrained Souldiers ſo tamed their Pride, that he flew 40000 of them; ſo that they never recovered of that Blow whilſt their Order ſtood. 5. Pinsk, in the Palatinate of Brzeſſ, 6. Klow, reckoned a Country of it ſelf, and 7. Strifſu, fortified with a Caſtle, both under the Palatine of Mieſlaw. The reſt of the chief Towns may be known by the Palatinates which they give their names to, but not elſe obſervable.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Aorſi, Pagari-vini, Savari, Tribes of the Sarmata Europaei. United into this name of Lithuanians, they became ſubject to the Kings of Ruſſia, till the breaking of that Kingdom by the Tartars. At what time Erdzvil, then their Prince, (but an Homager and Tributary to the Ruſſians) withdrew himſelf from their Command; as did alſo many other of the conquered Provinces. Afterwards Mindaoh, one of the Dukes or Princes of it, being made a Chriſtian, was by Pope Innocent the third honoured with the Title of a King; but returning again unto his Vomit, he loſt that Title. In the end, Anno 1386, Ja-gello Duke of Lithuania, marrying with Hedwigis Queen of Poland, was upon three Conditions choſen King of that Realm. 1. That he ſhould immediately receive the Chriſtian Faith. 2. That he ſhould draw all his Subjects to the ſame Belief. And 3. That he ſhould unite this Dukedom to the Crown of Poland. Of theſe the two firſt were performed without any delay, though the ſecond not without ſome difficulty, the people being obſtinate in their old Idolatry, eſpecially in the Religious conceit they had of high Trees, which to cut down was held both unſafe and impious. They could not be weaned from this conceit, till by the authority of the King their loſtief Trees were felled, and their Woods grubbed up; which when they ſaw done without any danger to the Prince, or any of thoſe whom he employed in that ſervice, Regis mandato & autoritati cedere coeperunt, they then began to hearken unto his Commands, and generally received the Goſpel, and were baptized. In the laſt point there was a longer time of deliberation: For the Princes of the Houſe of Ja-gello, loth to deprive themſelves of their Patrimonial Eſtate, which was hereditary unto their Poſterity, and to ſubject it to the Election of the Palanders, in which it was poſſible the Princes of their Family might be pretermitted, deſerred the accompliſhment hereof from one day to another, under colour that the Lithuanians would revolt if they went about it. But Sigismund-Augustus, in whose person the Male-issue of Agello failed, foreseeing what Divisions might ensue after his decease, and fearing that the Moscovites would renew their old Pretensions, united it unto the Crown: ordaining that the Bishops, Palatines, and a certain number of the Chastellans by him established, should have their place and Suffrage in the great Council of Poland, power in the chusing of the King, and all other Privileges which the natural Polonians have. Since that it is accounted a chief Member of that Body politic, subject to those Corruptions, Changes and Innovations in matters of Religion, which have been predominant in the other; excepting those parts only which relate to the Church of Greece, or Mosco, adhering pertinaciously to the Rites thereof.

4. VOLHINIA.

VOLHINIA, by some accounted one of the Palatinates of Lithuania, (as once it was) but by others a distinct Province of it self, is bounded on the North and East with Lithuania, on the South with Podolia, and on the West with Russia Nigra and Podlussia. So called, as Maginnus is of opinion, from the Volgari, who, dwelling on the Banks of the River Volga, came afterwards in to this Country, calling it Volgaria, whence by degrees it came unto Volhonia, and at last unto Volhonia. But this conjecture is improbable, and of no good grounds.

The Country yields good plenty both of Grain and Fruits, Pools which abound with very good Fish, Forests which do afford them store of Game and Honey, and much good Pasturage for their Cattel. That people are of the same nature with the Lithuanians, but more strong and warlike, & better weaned from their old Superstitions and heathenish customs than the others are. They are of the same Language and Religion with those of Russia, to which, together with the rest of Lithuania, it did once belong. It is divided commonly into three parts or Provinces, all taking name from the three principal Cities of it: that is to say, 1. Luske, in Larine called Luceoria a Town of above 1000 Families, where 127 only (in the time of my Authour) were of the Romish Religion; the residue being Russians, Gracians, and some Armenians. The Seat and Residence of two Bishops, of which one, being of the Communion of the Church of Rome, is of the Province of the Archbishop of Lemberg in Russia Nigra, but they which are of the Communion of the Church of Greece have also a Bishop of their own, who acknowledgeth the Patriarch of Mosco for his Metropolitan. 2. Polodimir, a Bishop's See also, of the same condition. 3. Keromenze, which (as the rest) hath under it many fair Towns and Castles, besides large Villages. The whole was once part of Lithuania, as before was said; but of late dismembered from it, and united to the Crown of Poland, as a State distinct; but so, that the greatest part of it is immediately subject to the Duke of Ostrogoye, who is said to have 4000 Feudatories in this Country; the greatest Prince of those who hold Communion with the Church of Greece in the whole Realm of Poland.

5. PODOLIA.

PODOLIA hath on the North Volhonia, part of Lithuania, and the great Empire of Russia; on the South Moldavia, from which it is parted by the River Tyras, now called Nieper; on the West Russia Nigra; extending Eastward through vast uninhabited Countries as far as to the Euxine Sea. The reason of the name I find no where guessed at: The people are for the most part of the same nature and original with the Russians, to whose Empire it formerly belonged also, till gained (if such a Subjection as they give the King may be called a gaining) to the Crown of Poland, at such time as the Russes were intrahled to the power of the Tartars.

The Country is generally so fertile, that the Husbandman is accustomed to reap an hundred for one, in regard it bears at one Ploughing for three years together; the Countryman being put to no farther trouble, than at the end of the first and second years to shake the Corn a little, as he reaps or loads it; that which so falls serving as Seed for the next year following. The Meadow-ground is so strangely rich and luxuriant, and the Grass so high, that a man can hardly see the Heads or Horns of his Cattel; of so swift a growth, that in three days it will cover a Rod which is thrown into it, and in few more to hide a Plough, that it is not an easy work to find it. If these things seem beyond belief, let Maginnus, who reporteth them, bear the blame thereof; though better take it on his word, than go so far to disprove him. And yet, which adds much unto the Miracle, the ground is in most places so hard and stony, that there need six yoke of Oxen to break it up; to the great toil both of the Cattel and the men. It is also said that in this Country there are great Flocks of Sheep, many Herds of Oxen, abundance of wild Beasts, and great store of Honey. And yet for all this Plenty and abundance of all things necessary, the Country for the most part, especially towards the East, is but meanly inhabited, by reason of the frequent Incurfions of the Tartars bordering next unto it, who have so wasted it in times past, and thereby so discouraged the people from Building, Planting, and all other works of Peace and Husbandry, that in so large and rich a Country there is nothing to be seen but some scattered Houses, few Villages, and not above five Towns of note, viz. 1. Orzadow, at the Influx of the Borysthenes or Nieper into the Euxine Sea. 2. Vafzow, at the fall of the River Bog into that of Nieper. 3. Bracław, more high upon the Bog. 4. Camieniec, on the Borders of Russia Nigra, built by some divine hand, as it were, amongst the Precipices of high and inaccessible Rocks, and so well fortified withal, that it is impregnable; as is apparent by the many and great Repulses which the Turks, Tartars, and Wallachians have received before it, with much flame and loss. 5. Lemberg, remarkable for the Sawces or Salt-meats which they send thence into other Countries. The former fortunes of this Province, and how it was brought under the Crown of Poland, (with which it was incorporated long since) we shall see anon.

6. RUSSIA NIGRA.

RUSSIA NIGRA hath on the East Volhonia, Podolia, and Moldavia; on the West Mosovia and Poland specially so called; on the North Lithuania and Podlussia; and on the South the Sarmatian or Carpathian Mountains. It is called also Roxolania, from the Roxolani, a chief People of Sarmatia Europaea, and by some Ruthenia; but generally Russia, from the Russi spoken of before in the Empire of Russia, who spread themselves over all these parts. Some hold that it was first called Rossia, which signifieth in the Slavonian Language a scattered Nation, or a Nation disseminated and dispersed into many parts; and that this was the name generally of all that spake the Slavonian Tongue, and followed the Religion and the Rites of the Church of Greece, extended from the Frozen Sea to the Adriatick, and from the Euxine to the Baltick. This and a greater Tract of ground I grant to have been heretofore possessed by divers Nations under the name of Slavonians; a very considerable part of Germany and Poland being conquered by them. But for the name of Russia, given at first to all the Russian Empire, Empire, distinguished now into Russia Alba and Russia Nigra, I adhere unto my former Vote, conceiving that it came from the Ressi, an Armenian People, inhabiting about Mount Taurus, who in the year 864, or thereabouts, attempting the taking of Constantinople, and after placed themselves on the Northern Banks of the Euxine, getting ground of the Slavonians to the North and East, till they had made themselves Masters of all Russia Alba, Lithuania, Volhonia, Podolia, and this Russia Nigra. Distinguished from the former by the adjunct of Nigra, after the destruction of that great Empire by the coming in of the Tartars, either from the colour of their garments, or their black and more Southerly Complexion. In which regard it is called also Russia Meridionalis, or the Southern Russia.

The Country is generally fruitful, abounding in Horses, Oxen, Sheep, Sables, and Foxes: such store of Bees, that they breed not only in Hives and hollow Trees, but in Rocks and Caves. Well watered both with Pools and Rivers, affording them great plenty of Fish, more naturally spawning here than in other places, inso-much that if a Pond be digged, and spring accordingly, the Fish will breed therein of their own accord, without being brought from other waters. The greatest want hereof is Wine, either supplied with Mede, or from other places. And it is said that in the Territory of Chelm the Branches of the Pine-Trees, left upon the ground for three years together, will be converted into Stone.

The people are generally valiant, and so strong of body, that they use Bows of 12 foot long. Being formerly governed by Dukes, they do but ill brook the name of King; which much induced the King of Poland to send Colonies of natural Polonians into most parts of the Country, inso-much as most of the Knights and Gentry of it are of that Extraction, and follow the Religion of the Church of Rome; the Peasants and the Original Inhabitants of it being more generally affected to the Rites and Doctrines of the Church of Greece.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Chelm, in the Territory whereof it is affirmed that the Branches of Pine-trees, left upon the ground for three years together, are converted to Stone. 2. Premislen. 3. Halitz. 4. Belzo. 5. Groddeck, and 6. Leopolis, by the Natives called Lemberg, built by one Leo a Moscovite; a Town of great Traffick, and an Archbishop's See, who is of the Religion of the Church of Rome. But the Patriarch of Mosco hath here also an Archbishop of his own ordaining, there being Churches both in the City itself, and all Russia generally, (as before was said) which are of the Communion of the Church of Greece. There are also in this City some Armenian Merchants, who have a Church, a Bishop, and some Priests of their own Religion.

Of the Affairs of this Province, and how it was a part once of the Russian Empire, hath been said already. Dismembered from it by the Tartars, it had a while Dukes or Provincial Governors, subject and tributary unto those Barbarians: as had also Podolia, its next neighbour. Both conquered by the Polanders, were for a time kept under by strong hand and the power of Garrisons. But being upon all occasions apt to revolt, by the reason of the hard hand which the Kings held over them, (by whom they were treated rather like Slaves than Subjects) they were assured unto the State, by giving the same Liberties and Immunities both for the Nobility and the Commons, which the natural Polonians had; and by that means made Fellow-members of that Commonwealth. The A& of Ladislaws the 6. the Son of Agello, imitating therein the ancient Romans, who much augmented their Forces; and assured their Estates, by communicating the Freedom of Rome and the Privileges of Latinum to many of the conquered Provinces: and was imitated by Sigismund the first, Sigismund-Augustus and Stephen, his Successors in their incorporating of Prussia, Lithuania, and Livonia, to the Crown of Poland.

7. MASSOVIA.

MASSOVIA is bounded on the East with Lithuania; on the West with Poland specially so called, on the North with Prussia and Podlussia, on the South with Russia Nigra or Meridionalis. So called from Masso, one of the Dukes hereof, who in the year 1045, being vanquished by Casimir Duke of Poland, fled into Prussia; and there unfortunately died.

The Country is large, and for the most part full of Woods, where they find store of Bugles and wild Bulls. The people are strong, valiant and courageous in War; differing little from the Polonians in Speech, Manners, or Apparel, save that they use a kind of Whistling, which the others do not. The principal Towns of it are, 1. Warsaw, the chief of the Province, and heretofore the Residence of the Duke or Prince; remarkable for the best Mede or Metheglin. 2. Czirske. 3. Poltowskie. 4. Gadziesk. 5. Lozara. 6. Droic, the Seat of a Palatine, but not else observable.

This Province was once subject to Princes of its own, not subject or subordinate unto any Superior. Of which number that Masso was one, from whom it was named Massovia. In the year 1246 and 1260, being strangely wasted and distressed by Mindoy Duke of Lithuania, they were fain to put themselves under the power of the Polander; by whom they were made the Portion of the second Son of that Kingdom. But John and Stanislaws, the two last Dukes hereof, dying without Issue, it returned unto the Kings of Poland, and became incorporate to that Crown, and privileged in the Election of the King, and all matters which concern the publick, as all others of the Polonians are, Anno 1526.

8. PODLASSIA.

PODLASSIA is bounded on the East with Volhonia, on the West with Prussia, on the North with Lithuania, and on the South with Massovia and Russia Nigra. The reason of the name I know not. The Country differs not much from those before: the people being a mixt generation of Russes, Moscovites, and Polonians, partake a little of the Manners and Garb of those several Nations from which they lineally are descended.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Bielsko. 2. Branisko. 3. Suras; all of them having fair and ample Territories. 4. Tyocoksyn, strongly fortified and well garrisoned, as being the place where the King's Treasures are kept. 5. Knyssin, beautified with a Royal Palace, and a pleasant Park, wherein are store of wild Beasts for Hunting, and Fish ponds very well replenished. 6. Narew. 7. Vasilkow, and 8. Angustow, a very strong Town, built and well fortified by Sigismund-Augustus, and by him thus named, Anno 1569; at what time he dismembered this Province from Lithuania, to which before it appertained, uniting it for ever to the Crown of Poland.

9. PRUSSIA.

PRUSSIA is bounded on the East with Lithuania and Podlussia, on the West with Pomerania, on the North with the Baltick Sea, and on the South with Poland and Masovia. Called first Borussia, from the Borussi, who subdued it, (of whom more anon) which by an easy alteration was changed into Prussia, by which name it is still called.

The Country is extended all along the Baltick Sea, from the City of Dantzick in the West, to Labiau on the Mouth of the Mailank, East, for the space of 50 Polish miles; and from Torne, bordering on Masovia, to Memel in the Confines of Lithuania, 58 miles of the same measure. The Air thereof is very mild and temperate, the Soil both profitable and pleasant; full of Lakes and Rivers stored with Fish, plentiful of Corn and other Necessaries, and well clad with Forests, which yield them Game for Hunting, rich Skins for profit, and abundance of Honey; of which last they make Mead for their own use, (their ordinary Drink where there is no Wine) and sell the rest unto the Merchant. But the Commodity wherein they do excel their neighbours is their plenty of Amber, which is the juice of a Stone which groweth like a Coral in a Mountain of these Baltick Seas, covered quite with water, and shunned by Mariners three leagues off, for fear of Shipwreck: the Mountain is reasonable large, about 50 yards high of English measure. And when any Tempest riseth in these Northern Seas, especially in September and December, the Liquor by violence thereof is rent from the Rock, and cast into divers Havens, and on divers Coasts of this Country, and sometimes upon those of Sweden and Pomerania: the people leaping into the Sea when it rageth most, whence they take up first some store of Weeds, after that this Liquor, which being taken out of the water hardeneth like to Coral. Besides the beauty hereof, and the quality it hath of attracting Straws and Iron, as the Adament doth, burning like Pitch, and others of this nature; it is excellent good for stopping Blood, all kind of Agues, Falling-sickness, Dropsies, Stone, Chelick, weakness of Stomack, Head-ach, and the Yellow-jaundies.

The people, especially the Gentry, descend from the Germans, and retain much of their nature; having more Art and industry than the other Polonians, and being more tenacious of their ancient Customs. They were Idolaters for long time together, converted first unto the Faith in the time of the Emperor Frederick the 2. by whose setting on they were subdued by the Order of the Dutch Knights, An 1215, and either won or forced to the Christian Faith. As Christians, governed since the plantation of the Gospel by the Bishops of Culm, Warmia, Sambia, and Pomesan, Suffragans to the Archbishop of Gnesna; under whom those parts do still continue which have not yet forsaken the Church of Rome: the Lutherans, Calvinians, and other separate Congregations distinct from them, having their own Forms both of Doctrine and Discipline.

Few Provinces of the North are better watered than this is, both for Lakes and Rivers: some of the Lakes being leaven Dutch miles in compass, and well stored with Fish. The Rivers are 12 in number; that is to say, 1. the Vistula. 2. Chronus. 3. Nogat. 4. Elbing. 5. Vasera. 6. Pasaria. 7. Alta. 8. Pregel. 9. Ossa. 10. Drebnitz. 11. Lica, and 12. Lavia, all plentifully stored with Fish, besides a large Sea-Coast both for Trade and Fishing no small commodity to the Natives.

The Country, formerly divided into twelve Dukedoms, (so they called the parts and fractions of it) was by the industry of the Dutch Knights so adorned and beautified, (after they had once brought it under their Obedience) that there were no fewer than 72 Castles and 62 good Towns of their foundation. Which number being much increased in these later times, hath made it the most flourishing part of the whole Kingdom of Poland. But the Order of these Knights being suppressed in this Country by an Agreement betwixt Sigmund the first, King of Poland, and Albert of Brandenburg, the last Great Master of the Order; both Town and Country are divided between the Successors of the said Albert, as Dukes of Prussia, and of the said Sigmund, as Kings of Pole: the Dukedoms or Divisions of Hogeland, Warmia, Galindia, Michelow, Culmigeria, with the City of Marienburgh, the Sovereignty of Dantzick and Melving with the whole Country of Pomerellia, lying on the West-side of the Vistula, being allotted to the King; the residue, containing the Divisions of Schalavonia, Sambia, Natangia, Nadravia, Bartonia, Sudavia, and Pomesania (except the City and Territory of Marienburgh) to the Dukes of Prussia.

Chief Towns belonging to the Duke are, 1. Memel, a well-frequented Port, the Mart-Town for the Commodities of Lithuania, which are brought hither, and here bought by the foreign Merchant: part of this Province interposing betwixt Lithuania and the Baltick. 2. Koenigsberg, as the Dutch, Regimont, as the French, and Mons Regius, as the Latines call it; situate in the Province of Sambia, at the bottom of a Gulf or Bay, where the Pregel falleth into the Baltick Sea: built by the Dutch Knights in the year 1260, and made an University by Albert the first Duke hereof 1225, the Seat and principal Residence of his Successors; as also of the Bishop of Sambia, in Latine called Sambienfis, by the name of the Province. 3. Mulmberg, founded by the Dutch Knights, Anno 1279. 4. Brandenburg, on the South-side of that Bay, but more near the Sea; built, as I guess, by some of the Great Masters of that Family. 5. Ragnitz, the farthest Town of note towards Lithuania. 6. Angersburg, in Schalavonia, as was also Ragnitz. 7. Nordenburg, in Bartonia. 8. Ortelsburg, in Galindia: of which little memorable. 9. Marienwerder, the farthest of the Duke's Estate towards the Vistula, and the ordinary Residence of the Bishop of Pomesan. Besides which there are reckoned in this Division 80 good Towns more, and about 54 Castles, though not of much observation in the course of Story.

Chief Towns pertaining to the King are, 1. Braunsberg, upon a Bay of the Baltick Sea which they call Frisch Haffe; a Town of good Trade by reason of the commodious Haven, and the ordinary Residence of the Bishop of Warmia. 2. Fravenberg, on the same Bay, not far from Braunsberg. 3. Refel, the chief Town of the Diocese and Dukedom of Warmia. 4. Strauburg, in Michelow, confining on Poland, specially so called; at the Siege whereof by Gustavus Adolphus King of Sweden, Anno 1628, Elis trype, one of the Engineers of that King, found out the use of Leather Ordnance, which afterwards did that King great service in the Wars of Germany. 5. Culm, on the River Vistula, a Bishop's See. 6. Marienburgh, on the Nogat, built by the Dutch Knights, An 1302, and made the Seat of the great Masters of their order, translated first from Ptolemais or Acon in Syria to the City of Venice, from thence to Marpurg, and at last to this place by Sifride the twelfth Great Master of it, whose constant Residence in this Town occasioned the Bishop of Culm to remove thither also. A very fair and well-built City, the Chief of those which do belong to the King of Poland: by him so well garrisoned, and furnished with such store of Victuals, Ammunition and other Necessaries, that it was thought able to hold out for a Six years Siege. But it proved otherwise when besieged by the King of Sweden, who took it in less space than so many months; being on the falling of a Peace betwixt the Crowns rendred again unto the King of Poland. Beneath this Town, down towards the Baltick, is a pleasant Island made by the Nogat and the Weyssel, for the fertility of thy Soil, and the great number of Houses, Villages, and People, not equalled (for the muchness of it) in all this Country.

To

To this part also belongeth the fair port of Elbing, (or Melving, as Maginus calls it) situate on the Bay of the Baltick called Frisch Haffe; spoken of before, not far from a Fishful Lake; well traded, rich, and full of very wealthy Merchants, of great resort from other Nations, and much frequented by the English Merchants, who have here their Staple for the Baltick: a small, but neat and well-built City, and fortified with a very good Wall, governed after the manner of a free Estate or Commonwealth, under the Patronage and Protection of the Kings of Poland, in like sort as Dantzick also is, of which more anon.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Venedi, the most potent Nation of this Tract, extended all along the Coasts of the Baltick, from them by Ptolemy called Sinar Venedicus: containing under them the Githones, Phini, Sulaner, Phrangudiones, Avarini; and more within the Land the Sodini and Galinde, whose name the Dukedom or Province of Galindia do still retain. But great and potent though they were, they were subdued by the Borussi, inhabiting at the foot of the Riphaean Mountains, who, weary of their own cold and barren Dwellings, removed into the Western parts, and vanquished the Venedi, and those other Nations, possessed themselves of this Country, which they called Borussia, now by us named Prussia. By Venedus one of their Princes, having twelve Sons in all, it was divided into 12 Provinces or Dukedoms, one for every Son; continuing by that means distracted into divers petty Principalities, till the coming of the Marian or Dutch Knights, sent hither by Frederick the second, Anno 1215, by whom the Provinces or Dukedoms of Sudavia, Michelow, and the greatest part of Nadravia, were laid waste and desolate: the rest submitted to their power, and received the Gospel. After this it continued subject to this Order of Knights till the year 1419, when, weary of their Extortion and the continual change of Masters, they revolted to the King of Poland, to whom they offered their Obedience: seconded by the yielding up of Marienburgh, with many other Towns and Castles, sold to King Casimir by the Garillon-Soldiers, Anno 1457, for 476000 Florens. But the Knights disdaining to be so dealt withal, and refusing to swear Allegiance to the Kings of Poland, they brake out into open War, which was managed with variable Success on both sides; Ludovicus, the then Great Master, being so successful at the first, that he once Beat the King out of the Field, routed his whole Army, slew 30000 of his men upon the place, and took 136 of his chief Nobility: nor was he vanquished at last, but by the Treachery and Rebellion of his own people. In the end, wearied and worn out on both sides by continual Wars, Albert of Brandenburg, then Great Master, having for 14 years together courageously maintained the Honour of his Order, and for the four last years importuned in vain the Assistance of the Emperor and Princes of Germany, began to think of some Expedient to compound the business. Being inclined to Luther's Doctrines, and willing to advance himself unto this Estate, he secretly practised with Sigmund the first of Poland to end the War to the advantage of both parties. By whom at last it was agreed, That Albert should relinquish his Order, and surrender all Prussia into the hands of the King: That the King, possessing the Western parts, with the Town of Marienburgh, and the Sovereignty of Danzik and Melving, should invest Albert with the Title of Duke of Prussia, styling on him and the Heirs of his body the whole Eastern Moiety, containing the Provinces or Dukedoms before specified; and finally, that Albert and his Heirs should hold the said Estate, as Homagers to the Crown of Poland, taking place in all Assemblies at the King's right hand. According to this Agreement, Anno 1525, Albert, attired in the compleat habit of Master of the Dutch Order, presents himself humbly on his knees before Sigmund at Cracow, the King then sitting on his Throne. The King, raising him from the ground, caused him to put off those Robes and attire himself in a Ducal Habit: which done, an instrument was read and published, whereby the King conferred upon him and the Heirs of his body the Dukedom of Prussia, to be held of him and his Successors Kings of Poland, An 1525, at which the whole Order were extremely incensed; but they could not help it, and thereupon retired into Germany, where there were some good Lands left, to maintain such of them as had no mind to quit that Military honour; leaving their old Estates into Prussia to the King and the Duke, whose Successors have hitherto enjoyed their part of it, with the Title of

Dukes of PRUSSIA

- 1525 1. Albert of Brandenburg Son of Frederick Marquess of Onoldseeb, or Onsbach, created Master of the Order by the Emperor Naximilian, Anno 1511, and the first Duke of Prussia by Sigmund, the first of Poland, An 1525, founded the University of Koenigsberg, Anno 1544.
- 1568 2. Albert-Frederick Son of Albert the first Duke, married Mary-Eleanor, Daughter of William Duke of Cleve, Gulick, Berg, &c.
3. Anne, Eldest Daughter of Duke Albert-Frederick, Dutches of Prussia, brought the Estate in Marriage to
4. John-Sigmund, Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg, who was confirmed therein by Sigmund the 3. of Poland, pretending an Escheat thereof for want of Heirs-males of the body of Albert the first Duke.
5. George-William, Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg, in right of his Father, Duke of Prussia in right of the Lady Anne his Mother, and of Cleve, Gulick, Berg, &c. by Descent from Mary-Eleanor his Grandmother.
6. Frederick-William, Son of George-William Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg, Duke of Prussia, Cleve, Gulick, and Berg; of whose Investiture in the Dukedom of Pomerania and other large and goodly Seigniories we have spoken elsewhere.

As for the Government of this Province standing thus divided, that of the Duke is more Monarchical than that of the King; the one being absolute and uncontrollable in his Estates, the other subject to the great Council of Poland. If any difference grow between them, Delegates appointed by the King, but taking a new Oath to do equal Justice either at Marienburgh or Elbing, do compound the business: who, together with some other of the Duke's nomination, receive all Appeals in which the Duke is interested as one of the parties.

The Revenues of this Dukedom are thought to be 120000 Ducats yearly.

The Armes thereof are Argent, an Eagle Vert, membered and crowned Or, langued Gules.

10. POMERELLIA.

POMERELLIA is bounded on the East with the River Vistula, by it parted from Prussia, on the South with Poland specially so called, on the North with the Baltick Sea, and on the West with the Dukedom of Pomerania.

merania, of which it was anciently a part, till separated from it, and united to the Crown of Poland under this new name.

The Territory is small, and consequently not capable of many Towns and Cities of consideration. Those of most note are, 1. Newenburg, on the Banks of the Vistula, or Wesell. 2. Dirschaw, or Darlaw, (in Latine Darlowia) a well fortified Town and of great importance, at the Siege whereof, Anno 1627, Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, received the Order of the Garter. 3. Danzick, in Latine, called Dantiscum, and sometimes Gedanum, situate at the mouth of the same River also, a fair and well-built City, the Houses for the most part of Brick, and the rest of Stone raised with great beauty and magnificence six or seven floors high; beautified with a fair Council-house for affairs of State, and many publick Gardens for disport and exercise. It consisteth of three Cities, governed by as many Senates; the one called Voorstat, or the fore-City; the second Alistat, or the old City, and the third Reichstat, or the Emperour's City: but all encompassed with one Wall, and governed by one chief Senate or Common-Council chosen out of all three. A Bishop's See, and the second in esteem and rank of all the Hanse-Towns; of so great Trade, such a noted Granary of all sorts of Corn, illud from hence to supply the wants of other Countries, that 1000 Measures of Wheat (besides other commodities in proportion) are here daily sold. Heretofore it was reckoned as Imperial, but now as a Free State, acknowledging the King of Poland for their Protectors, to whom they allow many Customs upon their Merchandise, and permit their Officers to remain there for receiving them. The first Town in the Kingdom of Poland which gave entrance to the Doctrines of Luther, An. 1525, but in so tumultuous a manner, that they that favoured his Opinions deposed the old Common-Council-men, and created new ones of their own, prophaned the Churches, robbed them of their Ornaments, and shamefully abused the Priests and Religious persons, abolished the Mass, and altered all things at their pleasure. But by the coming of the King they grew somewhat quieter leaving one Convent of Blackfriars and two of Nuns, who still enjoy the exercise of their Religion.

This Country once a part of the Dukedom of Pomerania, was given by Skantibore, once Duke thereof, Anno 1107, to Bugislaus, his second Son; whose Posterity enjoyed it till the year 1295, when Miszevin 2. dying without Issue-male, gave it to Primislaus Duke of the Polonians, whose Successors have ever since enjoyed it by that Donation. It is called Pomerellia, for distinction sake, from the first separating of it from the Dukedom of Pomerania.

II. POLAND.

POLAND properly, and specially so called is bounded on the East with Masovia and Podlaffia, on the West with Silesia and the Marquitate of Brandenburg, on the North with Prussia and Pomerellia, and on the South with the Sarmatian or Carpathian Mountains, which divide it from Hungary. It is in length 480 Italian miles, 300 of the same miles in breadth; and took this name (as afore is said) from the word Pale, signifying as much as plain, the Country being plain and level, little swelled with Hills.

The Air hereof is pure and healthy, but sharp and cold; the Country plain, shaded with thick dark Woods, parts of the Hercynian, full of wild-Beasts for hunting, and of Bees for Honey, which they have here in great abundance, together with such plenty of Grain, but of Rice specially, by reason of the continual breaking up of new Grounds gained out of the Forests, that it may be called the Granary or Store-house of the Western parts of Europe: the Grain is sent down the Weyssell unto Danzick; and thence transported by the Merchant into other Countries, according to their several wants.

The Character of the people we have had before; adding now only, that in matters of War they are stout and resolute; so forward in giving the Charge and Pursuit of the Enemy, that John Wasilwick, the great Duke of Moscovie comparing them with the souldiers of his own Dominions, was wont to say, that the Moscovites wanted a Spur to drive them forwards, and the Polander had need of a bridle to hold them back. Their Language is the Sclavonian Tongue; most generally spoken also in the rest of the Provinces, but with some difference in the Dialect or Pronunciation.

It is divided commonly into two parts, the Greater and the Lesser Poland. The GREATER, lying wholly on the Western side of the Weyssell, and so accounted anciently as a part of Germany, contains 9 Divisions, under the Jurisdiction of the 9 Palatines of 1. Pozna, 2. Kalisch, 3. Siradia, 4. Lanciano, 5. Vladislav, 6. Brzeskye, 7. Rawa, 8. Plocko, and 9. Dobrzyn; each of them so called from some Town of note. The chief whereof, and of the rest contained in them, are 1. Pozna a Bishop's See, and the principal of the Greater Poland, seated among the Hills on the River Warta, built of Free-Stone, with very large Suburbs beyond the River, but much subject unto Inundations, which add much strength unto the place; of great resort by reason of the Marts or Fairs holden twice a year.

2. Koscien, situate amongst Marthes, and fortified with a double Wall. 3. Ofstzewow, bordering on Silesia, begirt with Woods. 4. Gnesna, the ancientest Town of Poland, founded by Lechus their first Prince, the Seat of him and his Successors, till removed to Cracow, situate in Kalisch, and by old prescription the first place for Inauguration of the Kings of Pole, in regard that here Prince Boleslaus, the first King of this Country, received, the Regal Diadem at the hands of Otho, the third. The Town is well walled, and the See of an Archbishop, who is the Primate of the Kingdom, by ancient Privilege the Pope's Legat for all Sarmatia Europaea, and in the absence of the King or Interregnum, the Vicar-general of the Kingdom, having power to summon the Diets, to conclude and publish their Decrees. 5. Pietrokow, a walled Town in the Palatinate or Division of Siradia, situate on a morish soil; the place in former times of the general Diets, since removed to Warsaw. 6. Vladislav on the Weyssell or Vistula, a Bishop's See. 7. Bedgost, a walled Town on the Bard, a Navigable River, conveying the Merchandise of these parts into the Vistula. 8. Kruszwick, in Brzeskye built of Wood, standing on a great Lake named Gopla, in the Castle whereof Papielus the 2. Duke of Poland, was after a strange manner devoured with Rats swarming out of the Lake. 9. Plocko, upon the Vistula, a walled Town, and a Bishop's See, with a Castle to it. 10. Warsaw, upon the Banks of the same River; of no great note in former times, but of late grown the best frequented and most traded Town in all the Province: honoured for the most part with the Court of the King, the holding of all publick Diets, (removed from Pietrokow to this place) and the Transaction of all business both of Peace and War, which must needs draw to it great resort of all sorts of people; the fruitfulness of the Soil and commodiousness of the situation rendering it very capable of those publick Meetings. 11. Malawa bordering on the Dukedom of Prussia.

The LESSER Poland, lying on the South of the Greater, and divided by the River Weyssell, comprehendeth only three Divisions, under the government of the Palatines of 1. Cracow, 2. Sandomir, and 3. Lublin, Principal Cities of of the which are, 1. Cracow, upon the Weyssell, (called in Latine Cracovia) a Bishop's See, the chief of all the Kingdom, the Seat of the Prince, and the Sepulchre of the former Kings; by Ptolemy called Caradunum; fortified with a double Wall (of the old fashion) a deep Ditch, the Castle of Vanel situate on the top of an high Rock, and beautified with an University, or general Study of good Arts and Sciences. The Buildings are more fair than elsewhere in Poland, of Free-Stone, and four Stories high; but for the most part covered with Shingles, or Tiles of wood: in the midst is a large Market-place, in form quadrangular, and in the middle of that the Common-Council-house, about which are many Shops of Merchants. On one side of it standeth the Cathedral Church; and on the East-side of the City the Palace Royal, high seated on an Hill overlooking both the Town and Country, fair and well built, of form somewhat near a Quadrangle, but lying open to the South without any Buildings above the Wall, affording thereby to the Gallery, being on the North-side of the Castle, the more excellent Prospect. 2. Lelov, a walled Town with a Castle on the River Bialo. 3. Sandomir, a walled Town with a Castle also, seated on a Hill, under which runs the Vistula or Wesell. 4. Wislica, a walled Town amongst Marthes, encompassed with the River Nid. 5. Lublin, a walled Town, but more strongly fortified by the Marthes and Water with which it is environed; remarkable for three yearly Marts, drawing hither Merchants from most parts adjoining, as also Moscovites, Armenians, Turks and Gracians. The Jews inhabiting the greatest part of the Suburbs, have here their Synagogue; making the Town, especially at the time of those Marts, a Medley of all Nations and Religions. 6. Casimiria, on the Weyssell, so named from the Founder of it, a King of Poland.

The old Inhabitants of this Country were the Arii, Heleverone, Elysi, and the Naharvali, parts of the Suevi Lygii spoken of by Tacitus, all of them lying on the Dutch side of the Weyssell, by consequence within the Bounds of the ancient Germany: the people of all the rest of the Provinces before described being of the Sarmatian Race, next neighbours to the Germans, and not much unlike them in Persons, Customs, or Conditions. But these dispersed and scattered Nations of Sarmatia Europaea, being united in the common name of Slaves, part of them settled in that part which we now call Poland, at that time reckoned and accounted of as a part of Germany. The time of their first coming hither, and the manner of their Government when first settled here, is not very well known. But for the first it is most certain, that it was some time, and that not long, after the death of Mauritius the Eastern Emperour: and for the next it is as certain; that on the coming of Lechus, a Croatian, who fled his Country for a Murder, with his Brother Zechius, they settled into a more constant form of Government than before they did. For Lechus, seeing his Brother's good Success in Bohemia, where the Slaves received him for their Prince, passed into Poland, the next Province, and was as cheerfully received by the Slaves thereof, who looked upon him as a Prince of their own Extraction, and without quarrel or competition submitted themselves to his Commands, Anno 690, or thereabouts. Of this there is good constat amongst our Authors. But neither the names or number of his Successors do occur in Story till the time of Crocm, the Founder of Cracovia, the chief City of Poland, and the Legistator of this People. After this, the Succession of their Princes and the success of their Affairs becomes more certain: the Estate hereof being much improved by the Conquest of many Sarmatian Countries, all which together constitute and make up the Kingdom of Poland, so called from this predominating and prevailing Province. The sum of their Affairs is this. The Posterity of Crocm failing in Papielus the second, Piaffus is elected Duke; the Princes from that time forwards becoming Elective, but always with respect to the next of blood. In the time of Miciuslaus, Son of Nemomylaus, they received the Gospel, Anno 963. Boleslaus the Son of Miciuslaus was the first who had the Title of a King, conferred upon him by the Emperour Otho the third about the year 1001, relinquished by Vladislav the first, and not resumed again till the time of Primislaus Duke of Pozna, Anno 1300, after which it became perpetual. In the person of this Primislaus Pomerellia is united to the State of Poland, Anno 1295; in that of Agello, or Vladislav the fifth, the great Dukedom of Lithuania, incorporated into this Body as a Member of it in the time of Sigismund Augustus. By Vladislav the sixth, Son of Agello, Podolia, and Russia Nigra were also added by Sigismund the first, Prussia and Masovia; Podlaffia by Sigismund Augustus, who also took Polonia, out of Lithuania; by Stephen the actual possession of the greatest part of Lithuania; by Sigismund the third, a Title to the Crown of Sweden. The Princes follow in this order, 1548 40. Sigismund II. surnamed Augustus, the last of the Male-issue of Agello.

 1574 41. Henry, Duke of Anjou, Son of Henry the second, the French King, chosen on the death of Sigismund-Augustus, the only Stranger to the Blood in all this Catalogue. On the death of his Brother Charles the ninth, he departed secretly into France, where he succeeded by the name of Henry the third.
 1579 42. Stephen Bathor, Vaivod of Transylvania, by the recommendation of Amurat the third, Emperour of the Turks, having first married Anne, Sister of Sigismund the second, is elected King. He united Livonia to the Crown, and had a great hand upon the Muscovite.
 1587 43. Sigismund III. Son of John King of Sweden, and of Katharine his Wife, another of the Sisters of Sigismund the second, King of Poland and Sweden. He valiantly opposed Osmán the Great Turk, invading his Dominions with an Army of 300000 fighting men.
 1633 44. Vladislaus VII. eldest Son of Sigismund the third. After whose death the Kingdom was extremely embroiled by Factions, especially by the mutinous and seditious Cossacks, not fully settled by the Election of 1648 45. Casimir V. Brother of Vladislaus the seventh, now King of Poland, Anno 1648.

The Government of this Kingdom is nothing less than Monarchical. For though the first Dukes hereof were absolute Princes, and ruled after a Despotical manner, having power not only of the Estates of their Subjects, but of Life and Death, without Formalities of Law; yet when they once became Elective, they lost much of that power: which decayed so by little and little, that at the last the King is counted little better than a Royal Shadow; Stat magni nominis umbra, in the Poet's language. A Diminution which began first in the times of Lewis of Hungary and Agello of Lithuania; who, to gain the Succession to the Kingdom, contrary to Law, the one for his Daughter, the other for his Son, departed with many of their Royalties and Prerogatives, to buy the Voices of the Nobility. Since which time, the Nobility in all their Elections have so limited and restrained, the King's Authority, and enlarged their own, that without their consent in Council he may neither make a War, nor treat of Peace, nor impose Taxes, nor alienate any of his Demesns, nor do any thing of importance which concerns the Publick: inasmuch as Boerus, a great Statesman doth expressly say, That the Government of Poland doth rather seem an Aristocracy than a Monarchy, a Commonwealth rather than a Kingdom. Besides, the King not only takes a solemn Oath at his Coronation to confirm all the Rights and Privileges which have been granted to the Subject by his Predecessors, but adds this Clause, Quid si Sacramentum meum violavero, incola Regni nullam nobis obedientiam prestare tenebuntur, that if he violate this Oath, his Subjects shall not be obliged to yield him any Obedience. Which as Badinus well observeth, doth rather favour of the condition of a Prince of the Senate, than of the Majesty of a King. He is respected accordingly by the Great ones, who look not on him as their King but their elder Brother, (and perhaps not that) and reckon his Decrees but of three daies lasting. Which notwithstanding, the King, once chosen and introned, hath sole power in many things without consulting with the Senate; as viz. in assembling Diets, chusing the Secular Counsellors, disposing absolutely also of his Vassals and the Revenues of the Crown to what use he pleaseth; being sole Judge of the Nobility in Criminal Causes, which is a strong Bridle to rein them in with. By which, and either uniting himself unto the Clergy, or the well forming of his party amongst the Nobility, he may do many things not allowable in strictness of Law: the power and influence which he hath in the publick Government being proportionable to the strength of his Wit and Brain.

And here it is to be observed, that none but the Clergy and Nobility have any Suffrage in the Election of the King: that is to say, the 26. Palatines, and 60. Chastellans, with the four Marshalls, and some others of the principal Officers of State, in behalf of the Nobility; and the Archbishops and Bishops in the name of the Clergy; but of the Commons none at all. Which is the reason why there is so much care taken to preserve the Privileges of the two first Orders, without obtaining any Immunities for relief of the third; who are most miserably oppressed on all sides, rather as bondmen than Tenants in respect of their Lords, and not so much Subjects as plain Slaves in regard of the King; whereof somewhat hath before been noted. Nor are the Common people excluded only out of these Elections, but have no place nor Vote in the Council of State, or in any of the general Diets: the first consisting only of the Prelates, Palatines, Chastell-

Chastellans, and principal Officers spoken of before, the nominating of which pertaineth to the King alone; the other aggregated of all persons of those several Orders; and the Delegates of each Province and principal City, sent thither for the rest of the Nobility, whom they represent. Yet notwithstanding this exclusion of the Commons from this Common-Council, they there conclude of all matters of publick Interest not properly determinable by the great Council or Council of State: in which perhaps (especially in the case of Taxes) the Commons may be more concerned than any other.

The Forces of this Kingdom or Commonwealth relate unto Land-Service only. For though they have a large Sea-coast upon the Baltick, yet the Danes, Swedes and Hanse-Towns, having got the start of them, keep them from doing much at Sea. And for Land-Forces, they consist of Horse especially, whereof they are able to raise 80000, (that is to say, 10000 out of Poland, and 60 or 70000 out of Lithuania and the Eastern Provinces) of which one half at least are thought to be for action. And this seems probable enough, in regard of those great Bodies of Horse which Stephen and Sigismund the third had against the Muscovite; whereof the one had 40000, and the other 30000, (besides Draught-horses) very well appointed. But for their Foot, they are not at so good a pass, their Infantry being for the most part Germans or Hungarians, whom they hire for money; of which two Nations King Stephen, in his Enterprize upon Livonia, had no less than 16000 to convey his Ordinance. Upon confidence of this great number of Horse, and their readiness to serve upon all occasions, the Polanders bear themselves so high, that they neither fear the power of a foreign Enemy, nor regard the fortifying of their Towns, or the building of Fortresses on their Frontiers; boasting that they are able to defend their Country without such Helps against any Nation whatsoever, and trusting more to a Castle of Bones (as was courageously said by Savage an English Gentleman) than to a Castle of Stones. And for the raising of these Horse, the Gentlemen of the Country are bound by their Tenure, (like the Turks Timariots) not only to serve in person for defence of the Realm, but to maintain a certain number of Horse in continual readiness; especially in those parts which lye next the Tartars, where their numbers are exceeding great, and with whom many times they join to assault and harrahs their own Country, though in pay against them. Of these some serve in the manner of our Men at Arms, some like unto our Light-horse, others like the Tartars. And these they call commonly by the name of Cossacks, (or Adventurers;) a race of men trained up to steal, waste, and depopulate, wheresoever they come, having little but their Swords to live by; a numerous and wicked people, chiefly in their Drunkenness, and that not only towards Strangers, but their natural Countrymen. The cause of that Seditious which, for some years past, hath more depopulated and distracted that flourishing Kingdom than all the Armies of the Turks.

As for the Revenues of this King, they are computed at 600000 Crowns per annum, drawn chiefly out of Salt and some Mines of Silver: the Profits arising from the Demesns of the Crown being for the most part given away in Pensions and Gratuities to the Palatines, Chastellans, and other great men of the Realm, to make them the more pliant to his desires. Most of which Sum is put up yearly in his Coffers, or expended in the purchase of Estates for his younger Sons: his Daughters being married at the publick Charge, and the expence of his Household defrayed by the Lithuanians and most part of Poland, for the time that he remains amongst them. Nor do the Wars at any time exhaust his Treasure, in which case, by Decree of the Diets, he is enabled to lay Impositions and Taxes upon the people, levied in the way of Excise, or upon their Lands: which do amount to such a Sum that by means hereof King Stephen maintained War three years against the Moscovite, without expending any thing of his own Revenue.

Chief Orders of Knights in this Kingdom are, 1. The Marian of Dutch Knights, instituted under the Walls of Acon or Ptolemais in the Holy Land; in a Church whereof, dedicated to the blessed Virgin, their Order was first allowed, from whence they are called Equites Mariani. The Institution was in the year 1190. The first Great Master was Henry Walpot. The Christians being beaten out of Syria, they first removed to Venice, and from thence to Marpurg in Hassia; where, and in some other parts of Germany, they were endowed with fair Revenues; hence they were named Equites Teutonici, or the Dutch Knights. Sent into Prussia by the Emperour Frederick the second Anno 1239, or called in, as some say, by the Moscovite against the Prussians, they fixed their Seat at Marienburgh, under Sigisfride the second Great Master, Anno 1340, or thereabouts. In the time of Ludovicus, the 18. Great Master; they were forced to submit to Casimir the fourth of Poland, Anno 1450; which was the occasion of the long War betwixt them and the Polanders, continuing till the time of Albert of Brandenburg, the 24. and last Great Master in this Country; who surrendered his Order (as before is said) to Sigismund the first, by whom he was created the first Duke of Prussia. Such of the Knights as disliketh this action retired into Germany, where they chose one Walter Cronenberg Master of the Order; the Title being afterwards conferred upon Maximilian, one of the younger Sons of Maximilian the second, but the Order sensibly decaying, and at this time of little estimation in the World.

2. Of the Port glaive, or Sword-bearers, (Enssiferi in Latine) confirmed by Pope Innocent the third, by whom they were sent into Livonia, to defend the Preachers of the Gospel against the Infidels, at the first Conversion of that Country. Being too weak to effect that business, they united themselves with the Dutch Knights by the Popes authority, and, instead of Knights of the Sword, were called Knights of the Cross. Separated therefrom in the time of Univert their Great Master, Anno 1541, the Dutch Knights being then dispossessed of Prussia, and these inclining wholly to the Opinions of Luther, they a while subsisted of themselves. What became of them afterwards, and how the Order was extinguished, hath been shewn already in Livonia.

The Arms of this Kingdom are quarterly, 1. Gules, an Eagle Argent, crowned and armed Or, for the Realm of Poland; and 2. Gules, a Chevalier armed Cap-a-pie, advancing his Sword, Argent, mounted on a barbed Courser of the second, for the Dukedom of Lithuania.

There are in the whole Realm of Poland

Of the Romish Church, Archbishops 3. Bishops 19.
 Of the Greek Church, Archbishops 2. Bishops 6.

Universities 4.

Cracow. Dantzick.
Vilna. Koningsberg.

And so much for POLAND.

THE

Carpathian Mountains.

IN our way from Poland unto Hungary (whither now we go) we must of necessity pass over the CARPATHIAN MOUNTAINS, the ancient Boundary of Sarmatia Europea from the rest of Europe. A long and craggy Ledge of Hills, which beginning near the City of Presburg, and the Borders of Austria, pass on in a continual course till they come to the very Euxine Sea; and by that means not only divide Hungary from Poland specially so called, but part Transylvania and Moldavia, two Dacian Regions, from Russia Nigra and Podolia, Provinces of the Polonian Kingdom. By Ptolemy, in his second Book, they are called Montes Sarmatici, (Sarmatica Rupes by Solinus) because determining the Sarmatian Nation (who possessed the most part of it) from Germany and the more Southern parts of Europe: and in his third Book by one name Carpates, or Mons Carpatius, so called (as some think) from the Greek word Karpos signifying Fruit, from the Fruitfulness of it, compared with the other Mountains in those Northern Countries. At the present it is known by divers names, according to the Provinces and People which it passeth by. By the Dutch generally called Wintzgarven, (or a Garden of Herbs) which alludeth to the name of Carpatius, by the Hungars, Tarczbal, betwixt Moravia and Hungaria, where it is at the highest, it is called in the Slavonian Tongue by the name of Tauri, in the German Schneeberg: where it parteth Transylvania from Russia Nigra, the Russes call it Biescid, and the Dutch-men Crapack. A Chain of Hills of more length than fame; not much observable in Story, but for the shutting up the Hungary Slaves, and others of those Northern Nations which afterward invaded the Roman Provinces: nor of much notice at the present, but for giving an Original to many of the principal Rivers which water the Countries lying on both sides of it. And therefore having nothing more to detain us here, we will pass them over, and descend into the Plains of Hungary, where we shall meet again with the Roman Empire, the Territories and Affairs whereof we shall take along without interruption until we come unto the Banks of the great River Tigris and the Caspian Sea. And so far also from this place we shall survey the Fortunes and Estates of the Turkish Empire, of which the Realm of Hungary is the most Western part or Province; not meeting either of them again till we come to Egypt.

HUNGARY.

HUNGARY is bounded on the East with Transylvania and Walachia, on the West with Stiria, Austria, and Moravia, on the North with the Carpathian Mountains, which divide it from Poland, and on the South with Slavonia, and some part of Dacia. It extendeth in length, from Presburg, along the Danow, to the Borders of Transylvania, for the space of 300 English miles; and 190 of the same miles in breadth. The reason of the name we shall have anon.

It lieth in the Northern Temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the 7. and 9. Climates, so that the longest Summers Day in the Southern parts is but 15 hours and a half, and not above 16 hours in the parts most North: taking up all that Tract of ground on the North-side of Danubius possessed by the Jazyges Metanastes, a Sarmatian People, and part also of Pannonia Superior and Pannonia Inferior, both on the South of that River.

But being it passeth generally under the name of Pannonia, we are to know that the Romans having made themselves Masters of all Pannonia, divided it into four Provinces, part of the Diocese of Illyricum Occidentale: that is to say, 1. Pannonia Superior, bordering on Noricum, and containing part of the Higher Austria, and the most Western parts of the present Hungary on the South-side of the Danow. 2. Pannonia Inferior, containing the Eastern parts of Hungary, on the same side of the River. 3. Valeria, anciently part of Pannonia Superior, comprehending Stiria or Stiermark, in the Archdukedom of Austria. And 4. Savia, so called of the Rivers Savius, anciently part of Pannonia Inferior, now called Windischland, one of the Provinces or Subdivisions of Slavonia. But the name of Pannonia falling with the Roman Empire, and this Country being fallen into the hands of other Masters, it took a new name from the Nations who possessed themselves of it; and was called Hungaria, quasi Hunn-Avaria, by a mixt name made of the Hunns and Avars, two Scythian Nations, who either successively or conjunctly were possessed thereof; or from the Hungaris, another race of Scythians, mentioned by Strabo and in his Book De Rebus Geticis, drawn into this Country by the the Emperour Arnulph, to aid him in his War against Suantibogius, King of the Moravians. This last I look on as most probable: the first as more probable than that of Aventine, and others of our later Writers, who finding a poor Province in the most North-east point of the Russian Empire called Jugria, (and by them Jugaria) would have the name of Hungary to be thence derived.

The people are strong of Body, and rude of Behaviour, respecting neither the liberal Arts nor Mechanick Trades. The greatest Asperion is the name of a Coward, which cannot be wiped off without the killing of a Turk: after which they are privileged to wear a Feather, and by the number of their Feathers to shew how many Turks they have slain in Battle. They desire Wars, and like no Trade better, being naturally slothful, (like the Trish) and therefore best approve of that course of Life, whereby they may rather live upon other mens Labour than take pains for their living. Extremely covetous they are, yet having rather desire than art to enrich themselves, permitting the Dutch to ingross all their Trading, and manage such Commodities as the Country yieldeth. Which is the cause (seconded by the Oppressions of the Turk and the Austrian Princes, under whom they are) that none of them rise to any considerable Wealth. And for such as have Estates in Land, they grow every day more poor than other. For though the Females be excluded from inheriting their Father's Possessions, (to whom they give no Portion, but new Cloaths on the Wedding-day;) Yet being the Sons do equally inherit the Estate, (as such who hold in Gavelkind do here in England) it must needs be that by so many Divisions and Subdivisions the greatest Patrimony that is will be brought to nothing. Both sexes in the way of their Education are inured to Hardness, nor suffered to lie in Beds till the night of their Marriage.

The Christian Faith was first planted here in the time of Stephen, surnamed the Saint, the first King of this Country, who was invited thereunto by the special means and procurement of the Emperour Henry the second, giving him upon that Condition his Sister Gisela in Marriage, and through the preaching and industry of Albert Archbishop of Praque, Anno 1016, or thereabouts. Since which time Christianity hath continued here without interruption, (defended gallantly and courageously against the Turks) but broken into Fractions and Subdivisions among themselves: Some pertinaciously adhering to the Church of Rome, some following the Doctrine of Luther, others that of Calvin and some new Fancies and Opinions, disavowed by all the rest. Free exercise of Religion was first granted by Maximilian the second, and re-obtained in the time of Rodolphus his Son and Successor, by the Pacification at Vienna, procured by the power of Boscai Prince of Transylvania, An. 1606. The violating of which Pacification by Ferdinand the second, in the beginning of his Reign occasioned great Wars and Troubles betwixt him and this People, not quieted in a long time after. Yet all these different Parties do agree in this, to punish Adultery and Fornication with no less a punishment than death; the Father forcing his Daughter, the Husband his Wife, and the Brother his Sisters, to the place of their Execution.

The Language generally here spoken is a kind of Slavonian, differing in Dialect from the Poles; but in the parts adjoining to Germany the Dutch is spoken; as the old Jazygian is betwixt Danubius and Tibiscus, the ancient Seat of the Jazyges Metanastes.

The Soil is wonderful fruitful, yielding Corn and Fruits in great abundance; the Grass in some places, (as in the Isle of Komara) if it be suffered to grow to its full length before the cutting of it down, being said to exceed the height of a Man: Which doth breed such a number of Cattel, that this Country alone is thought to be able to feed all Europe with flesh. They yearly send into Germany and Slavonia 80000 Oxen; they have Deer, Partridge, Pheasants, in such superfluity, that any man that will may kill them, which in other places is utterly prohibited, these Creatures being preserved as Game for Gentlemen. For at that great Insurrection of the Boors in Germany, (before the end of which 50000 of them were slain in fight) their chief Demands were, 1. That they might chuse their own Ministers. 2. That they might pay no Tithes but of Corn. 3. That they might be free from the power of Magistrates. 4. That Wood, Timber and Fewel might be common. 5. And especially, that they might hunt and hawk in all times and places. The other Commodities of the Country are Gold and Silver, whereof they have some very rich Veins; as also of Tin, Lead, Iron, good store of Fish, Copper, Wine: this last as good as that of Candia.

The worthiest Scholar that ever this Kingdom produced was St. Hierom, a worthy Father of the Latine Church, born in Syridon. The most worthy of all their Souldiers were 1. Johannes Huniades, who so valiantly resisted the Incursions of the Turks, and slew of them 50000 at the Battle of Maron. And 2. Matthias Corvinus, his Son, afterward King of Hungary; of whom thus Adrian out of a Poet,

— Patria decus, unica Stirpis
Gloria, Pannonica Cadis fortissimusktor.
His Countries Pride, the Glory of his Race,
Revenger of th' Hungarians late Disgrace.

The principal Rivers are; 1. Danubius, spoken of before, when we were in Germany. 2. Savius, which rising in Carniola, 3. Dravus, which rising in Carinthia, and 4. Tibiscus, which rising in the Carpathian Mountains, pay their Tribute to Danubius: Of which Tibiscus the Hungarians use to say, that two parts are Water, and the third Filth. Besides which, and some others of inferior note, there is the famous Lake called Balaton, (by the Dutch Platsee) forty Italian miles in length, but of breadth unequal, in some places being ten miles broad, and in some but three. There be also many Medicinal waters, and more hot Baths than any one Country hath in Europe: some Waters also of a strange nature whereof some falling on the ground is turned to Stone; others about the Town of Smalnice which falling into Ditches make a kind of Mud, out of which tried and melted they make very good Copper; and some again which flow in Winter, and freeze in Summer; and near unto Bistrice, or Menfol, a Spring or Fountain, out of which cometh a green Water, whereof they make Solder for their Gold.

Principal Mountains of this Country are; 1. Carpatius, the Sarmatian or Carpathian Mountains, spoken of before. 2. Matzari, near the City of Agria, covered with rich Vines. 3. Erdol, omnium amplissimus, the largest of the three, faith the Atlas minor. Which words, if true, must needs be understood of the height of this Mountain, but neither of the length or breadth, in both which without question it comes short of Carpatius.

The Country is commonly divided into the Upper Hungary, and the Lower: the Upper lying on the North of the River Danow, out of the Bounds and Territories of the Roman Empire; the Lower lying on the South of that River, and comprehending all Pannonia Inferior, and part of Pannonia Superior, two Roman Provinces. The Upper again was subdivided (before the coming in of the Turks) into 32 Counties or Juridical Reforts; that is to say, 24 on the West-side of Tibiscus (or the Tis), and 8 on the East-side of it: The Lower (at the same time) into 16 only; of which ten were betwixt the Danow and the River Dravus, and the other six betwixt the Dravus and the Savius.

But this Division and the Subdivisions depending on it being since the coming in of the Turks almost out of use, we will now look upon it as it stands divided at the present, betwixt the Emperor, as King of Hungary, by a mixt Title of Descent and Election; and the great Turk, as Lord of the most part of it by Arms and Conquest, two parts of three at least being forced into his possession. But here we are to understand, that by reason of the great Jealousies and Distrusts betwixt these great Princes, every ordinary Town is fortified and garrisoned like a Town of War, and so are almost all the Houses of the Nobility and Gentry throughout this Country: so that it were an infinite labour to specify in this place all those Towns and Fortresses which do occur in reading the Hungarian Histories of these later times. Some of the principal for Strength, Antiquity, or other mark of Estimation which is set upon them, we shall here subjoin.

And first in the Emperor's part of the Lower Hungary, we have; 1. Rab, on the meeting of the Danow with the River Rab, coming out of the Lower Hungary, whence the modern Dutch name, by Antonine called Arabo, by the French Javarine, by our present Latinists Javarinum. Memorable heretofore for being the Boundary of the two Pannonias, Inferior and Superior, hereabouts divided: of late most principally for a strong Fortrefs against the Turks, by whom it was once taken, Anno 1594, but within four years after again recovered by the Industry of Monsieur de Vandrecoart, a French Gentleman, at the French-men say; but as the Germans write, of the Earl of Swartzenburg, at that time Governour of Komara, 2. Altenburg, in the Road leading towards Austria; a strong Town, and the best out-work of Vienna, for which cause most aimed at by the Turks, but without success. 3. Castre-Navo, a new-erected Fortrefs, as the name importeth, but of special strength, erected purposefully, in the time of the Emperor Rodolph, to confront the Turks. 4. Sabaria, anciently the Metropolis of Pannonia Superior, the Birth-place of S. Martin Bishop of Tours; now of less account; as the Hungarians called Kimarevabath. Others conceive it to be that which the Dutch call Leibnitz. 5. Szidon, the Sidrona of Ptolemy, in the Confinnes of Hungaria and Dalmatia, by the common people called Szrigman. A Town of good repute, till destroyed by the Goths; but afterwards of more esteem by the Birth of St. Hierom, one of the four chief Fathers of the Latine Church, and for all parts of Humane Learning nothing inferior to the best of the Gracian Sages. 6. Sopron, (Sopronium in Latine) on the Borders of Austria. 7. Komara a strong piece, in an Island of the same name made by the Circling of the Danow, oft-times attempted by the Turk, but in vain at all times. Then in the Upper Hungary we have 8. Friesburg on the edge of Austria also, but on the North-side of the River, the Carnium of Antoninus, but by the modern Latines called Pozonium; seated in a pleasant healthful Country, on the River Lyet, whose waters the Danow there receiveth: in the Suburbs whereof, on the top of an high Mountain, standeth a goodly Castle, the ordinary Residence of the Emperours, as Kings of Hungary. For though it be a little City and not very beautiful; yet being safe by the Neighbourhood of Austria, it hath been made the Metropolis of this Kingdom since the loss of Buda. Before the Walls hereof died Count Dampierre, one of the chief Commanders of Ferdinand the second, in the Wars of Hungary and Bosnia. 9. Fillek, a place of great strength and consequence taken by Solyman, the Magnificent in his first Attempts upon this Kingdom, and lost by Amurath the third, the Turks in vain attempting the recovery of it. 10. Nitria, a Bishop's See on the River Boch. 11. Vacia, a Bishops See also, on the River Danubius; once in possession of the

Turks, but restored again unto the Christians at the making of the Peace between the Emperor Rodolphus and Sultan Achmet. 12. Caluvia, a strong piece towards Transylvania. 13. Lippe, in the Borders of that Country also, commanding the Entrances thereof and therefore much affected by the Princes or Vaivods of that Province; possessed by whom in the latter times of the Emperor Rodolph, it was by them incorporated into Transylvania; but how long it continued so, I am not able to say. 14. Tokay, a place of great strength, and as great Fidelity, the people and Garison hereof holding out for the Emperor Rodolphus, Anno 1605, against some of his rebellious Subjects, in the time of so extreme a Famine, that the Souldiers did not only eat two Boys, but many times cast lots who should eat one another. 15. Eperies, a place of no less consequence, and exemplary Loyalty. 16. Newsol, or Newhenfel, a strong Town, and as strongly fortified, not far from the Spring-head of the River Gran, which in the year 1621 proved fatal to that great Commander the Count of Bucogoy, who at the Siege hereof (the Town being then in Rebellion against Ferdinand the second, Emperor and King of Hungary) lost his life. For going privately, to view some places of advantage for a general Assault, he fell into an Ambush of Hungarians, who suddenly fell upon him, discomfited his small Party, killed first his Horse under him, and at last himself, having in that Skirmish received 16 wounds. There were slain with him at the same time also Torquato, an Italian Prince, Count Verdugo, a Spanish Earl, and one of the Gonzagues of the House of Mantua.

Places of most importance in the Turks possession are, 1. Buda, by the Dutch called Offen, supposed by some to be the Curia of Ptolemy, by others the Abrincum of Antoninus; and to have took the name of Buda, either from Buda the Brother of Attila, said to be the Re-founder of it; or from the Budini, a Scythian People, mentioned in Herodotus. It is unevenly seated amongst Hills on the Southern Shore of the Danow, but in the most fruitful part of all the Country; exceedingly well fortified, especially by a strong Castle, thought to be impregnable, and therefore very carefully garded by the jealous Turks; adorned with many Buildings, both private and publick and furnished with some Medicinal Bathes, which owe much of their pomp and sumptuousness to their new Masters the Turks, who took it from the Christians August 20. 1591, Solyman the Magnificent then being present at the taking of it. Before that time the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Hungary, and the chief City of the Kingdom; as now the Seat of the chief Bassa, or Lord-Lieutenant for the Grand Seignior. 2. Alba Regalis, by the Dutch called Stul-Weissenburg, betwixt the Danow and the Dravus; strongly, but unhappily seated, in the midst of an inaccessible Marsh, joined to the firm land by three broad Causeys, blockt up at the ends with three great Bulwarks; but for all the Situation of it, taken by the Turks An 1543; before that time the usual place both for the Coronation and Intermitt of the Kings of Hungary; recovered from the Turks, Anno 1601, and lost again unto them in the next year after. 3. Walpo, or Valpo, on the River Dravus, taken by Solyman marching towards Alba Regalis, to leave no enemies behind him at the Siege of that City. 4. Gran, in Latine called Szrigonium; seated upon the Danow, but opposite to the Mouth of Gran, which arising in the Upper Hungary doth there end its course, whence this Town had the name of Gran, honoured of a long time with the See of an Arch-bishop, who is the Primate of the Kingdom, and of great power in all business which concern the State; taken by the Turks Anno, 1534, Solyman the Magnificent being in person at the Siege and lost again, Anno 1595. at what time Sir

Thomas

Thomas Arundel of Wardor Castle in Wiltshire carried himself so gallantly, that forcing the Water Tower, and taking thence with his own hands the Turkish Banner, the Emperor Rodolphus created him a Count of the Empire, and King James afterwards made him Lord Arundel of Wardor; but the Christians were not suffered to keep it long; for being many times after besieged by the Turks, who were resolved not to end the War without it, it was finally recovered by them, Anno 1605. 5. Funkirchen, in Latin called Quinque Ecclesie, from five Churches in it, a Bishop's See, conceived to be the Tentoburgium of Antoninus; taken by the Turks, Anno 1566, and giving them a great Command on the River Dravus, upon which it is seated. 6. Sirmish, betwixt the Danow and the Saw, or Savus, now noted for a Vein of the best Wines, but otherwise of no estimation at the present, though heretofore of most account in all this Province; the Metropolis (as I conceive) of Pannonia Inferior, the Seat of the Præfatus Prætorio Illirico before the Division of the Empire, honoured with the personal Residence of many of the Emperours, and made in those respects the Stage of many great and memorable Actions. For here Varrano or Bretanio, as other call him, took on himself the Purple Robe, and was declared Emperor by the Illyrian Souldiers lying here in Garison: here, being deserted by his own Souldiers, he submitted himself unto Constantinus, the Son of Constantine the Great: here Gratian the Emperor, son of Valentinian the first was born; and finally here was held a Council against Photinus, Bishop of this City, who held that Christ had no existence of God the Father till he was conceived and born of the Virgin; which Tenet, being contrary as well to that of the Arian as the Orthodox Prelates, was here condemned by both parties in the time of the said Constantinus, (who was there in person) Anno 356. 7. Zigeth, a strong Town, situate in a Marsh-ground on the North-side of the Dra, taken by Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1566, who there ended his days. 8. Murfa, upon the Confluence of the Dra and the Danow, once a Roman Colony, and as remarkable in the Stories of elder times as 9. Belgrade, on the Confluence of the Saw and the Danow, hath been in the later. This last being a Town of divers names: first called Taurum or Taurumum; after Alba Græca, by the Dutch accordingly Greisch Weissenburg; by the French and modern Latinists Belgrade and Belgradum, from a beautiful situation of it, hemmed in upon the North with the Danow, on the East with the Saw, on the other sides defended with strong Walls, deep Ditches, and impregnable Rampiers. It belonged anciently to the Despots of Servia, by whom it was consigned over to Sigismund, King of Hungary, as best able to keep it, the Despots being satisfied with Lands and Territories of a better value. It was the Bulwark heretofore of Christendom against the Turks, who received before it many great and notable Repulses, (of which the most memorable were those of Amurath the second, and Mahomet furnished the Great;) but taken at last to the great loss and shame of the Christian World, not succouring the Defendants in convenient time, by Solyman the magnificent, Anno 1520. Then on the North-side of the River, in the Upper Hungary, there is 10. Pest, over against Buda, on the River Danow. 11. Colocza, an Archbishop's See, on the same River also. 12. Zegedin, on the West-side of the River Tibiscus. 13. Agria, an old Bishop's See; and strongly fortified, having a great Command over all those parts of the Country; in vain besieged by Haly the Bassa of Buda with an Army of 36000 Turks, in the time of Solyman the Magnificent, An 1552, but taken by Mahomet the third, himself flying at the Siege in person, Anno 1578; not far from which, immediately after the taking of Agria, Mahomet gave the Christians so great an Overthrow, that, if he had pursued his Victory, it is thought that he had finished the Conquest of Hungary; as on the other side, the Turks were so worried and disordered at first, (Mahomet himself and most of his Commanders flying out of the Field) that, had the Christians followed the chase, and not betook themselves to the Spoil of the Camp, they had in probability for ever freed that Kingdom from the Turkish Tyranny. This Battle, from a Village near unto which it was fought, was called the Battle of Kereszture; a Battle of so strange a Fortune, that the Conquerors were driven out of the Field, and the vanquished Army ran away with the Victory. 14. Hatroan, a very strong Town, and as strongly garisoned, recovered by the Christians after two long Sieges, and many sharp Assaults, An 1558, and presently again abandoned, upon the noise of Mahomet's coming into Hungary, with a dreadful Army. 15. Temefmar, on the East of that River towards Transylvania, the ordinary Residence of a Turkish Bassa. 16. Gyula, a strong Town on the Borders of Transylvania, betrayed by Nicholas Keresken, Governour hereof, in the last year of Solyman, on a promise of some great Reward, But Selimus the Son of Solyman caused him to be put into a Barrel stuck full of Nails, with the points turned inwards, and so to be tumbled up and down till he (most miserably) died: there being on the Barrel this inscription written, viz. Here receive the reward of thy Avarice and Treason; Gyula thou shouldst for Gold: if thou be not faithful to Maximilian thy natural Lord, neither wilt thou be true to me. 17. Singidin on the South of Gyula, betwixt which and Belgrade are the Fields of Maron, memorable for the slaughter of 50000 Turks, slain here in Battle under the fortunate Conduct of John Huniades.

The first Inhabitants of this Country on the North-side of the Danow, and the West of the Tiesi, or Tibiscus, were the Iazyges, Metanastæ, and on the East-side of the Tiesi the Daci, known, but not conquered, by the Romans; on the South of the Danow the Pannonæ, (by some called the Paenones) subdivided into the Asuli, Latavici, Wericianni, Jassii, Oseriætes, and some others inhabiting the West parts thereof, or Pannonia Superior, and the Ercenætes, Bronci, Aravisci, and Scordisci, dwelling in the Eastern parts, or Pannonia Inferior. First conquered by the Romans, Anno V.C. 719, L. Corvicius and Sexus Pompeius being Consuls; but many times rebelling, and not fully subdued till forty years after the Insurrection of Bato, being then crushed by Augustus Cæsar, and thereby the whole Province settled in Obedience. Divided first into two parts or Provinces, Superior and Inferior; out of which Savia, and Valeria were after taken, as before is noted. Under the Romans it continued, till subdued by the Huns, a People not heard of in the time of the Roman Greatness, unless we take them, as some do, for the Chuni of Ptolemy. But being those Chuni are placed by him betwixt the Bastarnæ and the Roxolani, on the South-West of Borysthenes, I see not how to fit that dwelling unto the Huns, who were shut up within Pens of Palus, Mæotis, and by all the Writers of those times accounted a Nation not so much as heard of when they first set footing in Europe. Letting that therefore pass as an improbable and ill-grounded Conjecture, certain it is that from the Pen-Countries of Asia, on the other side of the Tanais, they came first into Europe; living in their own Country a poor and miserable life, till God thought fit to make use of them as a Scourge to chastise the Christians of the West, then grown luxurious, and almost incorrigible, by two much Felicity; and to that end miraculously opened them a Passage never found before. For having neither mind not meaning to invade the Roman Empire, which possibly they had not heard of, nor knowing how to clear themselves of that uncomfortable Country in which they dwelt, it pleased the great Disposer of all things, by following an Hart or Stag which they had in chase, to shew them a safe passage into Europe through the Fens of Maoris, which before they thought to be unpassable. The report made by those Hunters at their coming back, of the rich and pleasant Land which they had so fortunately discovered, invited the chief Heads of their Clans, with all the several Rascalities depending on them, to flock into Europe: into which they fell so suddenly and unexpectedly, that they forced the Goths, then dwelling on the North-side of the Ister, to fly over that River, and supplicate to the Emperor Valens for new Habitations. This happened in the year 373, Athanaricus the second, or Erymanaricus, (as Jornandes calls him) being then King of the Goths, and Balamir Captain of the Hunns. Fleeced with this Victory, Balamir, or Balbember, (as Sigebert calls him) takes the name of King, Anno 386, or thereabout, and following the course of the Ister towards this Pannonia, which he had an aim at, found a great Army raised on the other side of the River, of purpose to encounter with him, commanded by Deitricus General for the Roman Army, and Macrinus, (or Martinus) Commander in chief of the Pannonians. Both Generals presuming too much on the depth and wideness of the River, and knowing well that the Hunns had neither Boat nor Ship to pass them over, betook themselves unto their Rest with too much security. But the Hunns, to the number of 100000, having crossed the River upon Bladders, fell on the Quarters of the Romans, whom they flew like Sheep, Macrinus after this fought two Battels with them, in the first whereof he was victorious, there being lost on both sides about 30000 men: but in the second being slain, and his Army routed, the Hunns possessed themselves of both Pannonia's, bying this Victory with the loss of 40000 men, in the year 401. Balamir being dead, Bleda and Attila his Sons succeeded, Anno 436; and Oleda, dying also in the year 450, left Attila sole King of the Hunns, that great Scourge of the Christian World; who, having first wasted Illyricum and Thrace, compelled the Emperor Theodosius the second to buy his Peace of him at the price of 6000 pound weight of Gold, and an yearly Tribute. Invited afterwards by Genfericus King of the Vandals in Africa to War upon the Goths of Spain, (out of which Country they had driven him) he forced his way through all the Nations betwixt him and Gaul, and beating down all the Towns and Fortresses on the River Rhene, on that side of the Roman Empire, eutred that Province in the Reign of the 3. Valentinian, divided at that time betwixt the Romans, French, Burgundians, and the Goths of Spain. Discomfited by Atius and the Kings of those Nations then in League against him, in that famous Batel near Tholoufe, spoken of before, (with the loss of 180000 of his men) he went back by the way of Italy, where he sacked Aquileia, Millain, Vincetia, Pavia, and not without much difficulty was diverted from the Spoil of Rome, by the intercession of Pope Leo: committing in all places such unspeakable Cruelties, that he was always after called (as he styled himself) Mallens orbis, and Flagellum Dei. Returning home he picked a Quarrel with Martianus the Eastern Emperor, as if the Tribute promised him by Theodosius had not been well paid. But being pacified for the present, and mindful of his former project upon the Goths, he resolved once again to try his Fortune with that People; and was again defeated by them under the Conduct of Thorsimund the third King of the Visigoths, or Goths of Spain, and so returned ingloriously to his Country. Choked after with his own blood, violently breaking out at his Nostrils on his Wedding-night, he left Pannonia to his Sons, named Hernac, Aladarius, and Chabas, who, disagreeing amongst themselves about the Kingdom, gave an advantage to the Goths, then possessed of Dacia, to make themselves Masters of this also; who were scarce through-warm in their new Estates, when sent by Zeno the Emperor into Italy against Odoacer, where they finally fetled. After this time we hear no more of the Goths in Pannonia, or any-where of the Hunns, at all, unless acting under the Avars, or joining with them in the name of Hun-Avars, as some think they did.

The Country, being thus left to the next Invader, was presently possessed by the Longobards, said to be originally of Scandia, and there called Winnili, (and of the Winniloth in Scandia Jornandes speaketh) afterwards, oblongas, barbas, Longobardi. But concerning this last name, take along with you this old Wives Tale, recited, but not approved of, by Paulus Diaconus. The Vandals, warring upon the Winnili went unto Goddan, (he should rather have said Wodin) to sue for the Victory: which the Winnili hearing, wrought by countermeine, and sent Gambata, the Mother of their King Anjon, on the like business to Frea, Goddan's Wife. So it was that Goddan had promised the Vandals, that they should be victorious whom he saw first in the morning: Whereupon Frea, willing to please Gambata, and not loving, as it seemeth, the fight of Men, gave order that all the Women of the Winnili, parting their Hair, bringing one half over one Cheek, the other over the other, and tying both under their Chin, should appear betimes before the Window the next morning. This they did, and the shewing them to her Husband, he demanded of her, Qui sunt isti Longobardi? Hence the occasion of the name. And like enough they might be called so from the length of their beards, though otherwise the whole Tale be vain and foolish. Compelled by scarcity of Victuals to seek new Habitations, they seized first on the Island Rugia and the adjacent Countries; and settled about the time of Cornelius Tacitus in those parts of Germany; which now make up the Bishopricks of Meydsburg and Halberstadt. Afterwards, finding that Country to narrow for them, they left their Dwellings there, and fell next upon some parts of Poland; next on this Pannonia: and at last, having tarried in Pannonia 42 years, or thereabouts, at the solicitation of Narjes, (provoked by many Indignities from the Empress Sophia, the Wife of Iustinus the second) An. 568, under the leading of their King Alboinus, they went into Italy and there fixt their Kingdom; being at the end of 206 years overthrown by the power of Charles the Great, the most mighty Monarch of the West. Of their Kings, before their coming into this Country, I shall only make mention of Lamifus their third King, and of him this Story. Agilmond, the second King of the Longobards, one morning went a-hunting: as he was riding by a Fish-pond, he espied seven Children sprawling for life, which one, as faith Paulus Diaconus, (it may be many Harlots) had been delivered of, and most barbarously thrown into the water. The King amazed at this spectacle, put his Boar-spear or Hunting-pole among them. One of the Children handfasted the Spear, and the King, softly drawing back his hand, wasted the Child to the Shore. This Boy he named Lamifus, from Lama, which in their Language signifieth a Fish-pond. He was in the King's Court carefully brought up; where there appeared in him such tokens of Vertue and Courage, that after the death of Agilmond, he was by the Longobards chosen to succeed him. This Lamifus, together with his Predecessors, and Successors, we find thus Recorded.

The History of this People epitomized by Du Bartas (but with far more of the Poet than the true Historian) is summed up thus.

The Longobard strong, who was in Scowland nurs't,
 On Rugeland and Livonia seized first.
 Then having well reveng'd on the Bulgarian
 The death of Agilmond, the bold Barbarian
 Surprized Poland: thence anon he presses
 In Danaw's Streams to rinse his Amber Tresses.
 When he straight after had surrendered
 The double-named Ister's flow'ry bed
 To fear-fac'd Hunns; he hunteth furiously
 The rest of Gauls from wealthy Insubria.
 There reigns 200 years, triumphing so,
 That Royal Tesin might compare with Po.
 Which after fell in French mens hands again,
 Won by the Sword of worthy Charlemaign.

The Longobards having thus left the Stage, the Avars entered. Some say they were the Avarians of Ptolemy, a Sarmatian People; but most probably (as Nicetas) a People of Scythia, inhabiting about Palmis Maotis. They first began to stir in the reign of Tiberius the 2. (forced by the Turks, their next neighbours, to pass farther Westward) and gave that Emperor's Forces a great Overthrow at the Mouth of Danubius. Tiberius notwithstanding did somewhat quiet them; but he being dead, they took heart again, and with great Courage warred upon Mauritius, his next Successor. Their King at that time was called Caganus, we may English it Cham, as not being the proper name of any one, but the common Attribute of all their Chiefs. This Caganus made his first Wars upon the Turks, which People were about that time first made known to the Inhabitants of Europe; and, with the help of the remainder of the Hunns, invaded and possessed Pannonia, vanquishing both the Emperor's Forces, and the Goths and Gepide, who had still kept some footing in it, and on the departure of the Longobards were of no small power; the name of Goths being swallowed up in that of the Gepide, though not quite extinct. After this Blow Mauritius raised a second War, but more with an intent to revenge himself on his own Souldiers, which had formerly offended him, than with hope of prevailing against the Enemy. Comentiolus, according to the Emperor's directions, betrayeth his Army; 12000 of them were slain, and the rest taken. Caganus, an heroic and merciful Conquerour, offers to ransom them for 8 s. 6 d. a piece (for so much was that Nummus or obolus which he demanded for them). When the Emperor, as much loving his Gold as hating his Souldiers, had denied that Condition; he offered them all for one Nummus, and after for half a one: but being also here unsatisfied, he put them also to the Sword. For this cause the rest of the Souldiers not long after made Phocas, one of the Centurions, Emperor; and he most barbarously stewed the Emperor in his own Broth, putting him, his Wife, Friends, and Children to the Sword. After this we find mention of them in the time of Phocas and Heraclius, foraging Thrace to the very Walls of Constantinople, afterwards settled in Pannonia and part of Noricum, containing now the Upper Hungary and some part of Austria, divided from the Boiarians by the River Enns. They continued possessed hereof till the time of Charles the Great, by whom after a War of eight years, they were utterly subdued, and driven out of these parts, their Country being peopled with new Dutch Colonies: the remainders of them were forced to betake themselves into Transylvania, or that part of Hungary which lieth beyond the River Tibiscus, there subject for a time to Sauvibogius, King of the Moravians, in whose overthrow by the Hungarians they were so broken, that their Name was never heard of.

And so we come to the Hungarians, the last and principal Actors on the Stage of this Kingdom, the givers of the present Name: before whose coming into this Country it had no other name than that of Pannonia, for ought I can find, in any Authors for those Times. A Scythian People, as the Hunns and Avars were, by Jornandes called the Hunngary; first known in Europe by their acts in the time of the Emperor Arnulphus, when, wandering in Sarmatia Europaea without any certain Abode, they were by him called into this Country against Sauvibogius King of the Moravians before mentioned; from whom they took Transylvania, and so much of the modern Hungary as lieth on both sides of Tibiscus, inhabited at that time by the Slaves and some scattered remnants of the Avars, whom they killed up, or forced to seek new Habitations, planting themselves in those places which they took from them, and now the Upper Hungary. In the right of Lewis the 4. Successor to Arnulphus, they passed over the Danow, and subdued Pannonia, dismembering it from the Empire and name of Germany: after that they ranged with unmerciful Cruelty over all Germany, Italy, Greece, Slavonia, Dacia, till, broken by the Forces of the Dutch Emperours, and mollified by the softness of the Christian Religion, they became more quiet. Their Government at the first was under Dukes: Stephen the 4. Duke, on his receiving of the Gospel, being honoured with the Title of King; enjoyed by his Successors to this very day. In the time of Ladislaus, surnamed the Saint, Dalmatia and Croatia were added to the Crown of Hungary, bequeathed to him by his Sister Zelomira, the Widow of the last King. In that of Bela the 4. the Tartarians, to the number of 500000 fighting men, brake into this Country, and like a violent Whirlwind carried all before them, Anno 1248, tyrannizing here for 3 years space, committing merciless Massacres, and making horrible Spoils wherever they came. In that of Stephen the 4. Missa and Bulgaria were made tributary. By the Daughters of Bela and Stephen, both the 4. of those names, the Houses of Naples and Bohemia came to claim the Kingdom of Hungary; as Lewis the first, by Elizabeth his Mother, Sister of Casimir the 2. did the Kingdom of Poland. The rest of their affairs shall be briefly touched at in the following Catalogue of

The Dukes and Kings of HUNGARY.

A. C.

1. Cusala, the first Duke (or Captain) of the Hungars, subdued Transylvania and the Upper Hungary, and passed over the Danow; slain in

  - 1059 7. Bela, the Brother of Andrew.
  - 1062 8. Solomon, the Son of Andrew, expelled his Kingdom by
  - 1075 9. Geisa II. Son of Bela.
  - 1078 10. Ladislaus, surnamed the Saint, Brother of Geisa the second.
  - 1096 11. Coloman, Son of Geisa 2.

  - 1191 17. Emaricus, Son of Bela the 3.
  - 1201 18. Ladislaus II. Son of Emaricus, reigned but 6 months, being slain by Treason very young, and without Issue.
  - 1201 19. Andrew II. Son of Bela the 3. and Brother of Emaricus.

  - 1290 23. Andrew III. Nephew to Bela the 4. by his Brother Stephen.
  - 1302 24. Charles, surnamed Martel: Son of Charles King of Naples, by Mary, Daughter to Stephen the 4. Against whom was chosen Wenceslaus King of Bohemia, Son of Wenceslaus the second, and of Anne his Wife, Daughter of Bela the fourth, and after three years Otho of Bavaria, descended from Elizabeth, another of the Daughters of Bela the fourth, was chosen also by a Faction against Wenceslaus. But Wenceslaus surrendering his Claim to Otho, and Otho not long after being forced to renounce his Title, Charles Martel remained King of the whole.
  - 1343 25. Ludovicus, Nephew to Charles Martel by his Son Carlbert, succeeded King of Poland also, in right of Elizabeth his Mother, Sister of Casimir the 2.
  - 1383 26. Charles II. King of Naples, descended from Charles of Naples, and Mary, Daughter of Stephen the 4. before mentioned, by their Son John of Durazzo, one of the younger Brothers of Charles Martel, poisoned after a short Reign by the Widow of the former King, to make a way for her Daughter to the Crown.
  - 1387 27. Sigismund Emperour, King of Bohemia, and Duke of Luxemburg, succeeded in right of Mary his Wife, eldest Daughter of Lewis or Ludovicus, her younger Sister Edugis being Queen of Poland.
  - 1433 28. Albert of Austria, Emperour, and King of Hungary and Bohemia, in right of Elizabeth his Wife, the Daughter of Sigismund.
  - 1440 29. Ladislaus, or Vladislaus, Son of Agello King of Poland, in the minority of Ladislaus the Son of Albert chosen King of Hungary; unfortunately slain at the Battel of Varna, with 30000 of his people; and perhaps his Perjury might deserve it. For having made and sworn a Truce with the Turk, the Pope's Legate, upon a seeming advantage, absolved him of his Oath, and drew him into the Field. At the beginning the Christians had the better: but at the last, Amurath the 2. against whom they fought, lifting up his eyes to Heaven, and desiring Christ to look upon the perfidious dealing wherewith his Followers had dishonoured him, re-encouraged his men, and so got the Victory.

- 1444 30. Ladislaus V. King of Bohemia, the Son of Albert by Elizabeth, Daughter of Sigismund and Mary.
- 1458 31. Matthias Corvinus, Son of the famous Hunniades, after the death of Ladislaus the 5. King of Hungary.
- 1491 32. Vladislaus II. or Ladislaus VI. Son of Casimir the 4. of Poland, and of Elizabeth the Daughter of Albert, succeeded in the Kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia; his three younger Brothers successively in that of Poland.
- 1517 33. Ludovicus II. King of Hungary and Bohemia, both born dead before the ordinary course of nature; being in the 21. year of his Age, and the tenth of his Reign, unfortunately drawn unto the Field, to encounter Solyman the Magnificent, one of the hardiest Captains in his time. The Battel was fought at a Village called Mogacz, or Mugace, just betwixt Belgrade and Buda; in which 19000 of the Hungarians were slain, and the young King drowned in the Flight. A most lamentable Discomfiture. Lewis thus dead, John Sepusio, Vaivod or Governour of Transylvania, was by the States chosen King of Hungary. But Ferdinand, Archduke of Austria, and Brother unto Charles the fifth, challenged the Kingdom in right of Anne his Wife, Daughter to Vladislaus, and Sister to Lewis King of Hungary and Bohemia. On this Pretence he invaded the Kingdom, and drove out John his Competitor; who, to recover his Right, called Solyman the Magnificent into the Country, who took to fast footing in it, that his Successors could never since be removed.
- 1527 34. John Sepusio, Vaivod of Transylvania, chosen King upon the death of Ludovicus, the 2. outed by Ferdinand of Austria, restored by Solyman the Great Turk, died Anno 1540: after whose death the Hungarians caused his Son Stephen, an Infant, to be crowned King in his Cradle, of which he was immediately deprived by Solyman his pretended Patron, who, under colour of preferring that Kingdom for him, seized Buda, and other the chief Towns thereof, which he after kept unto himself.
- 1540 35. Ferdinand of Austria, elected King of Bohemia, in respect to the Lady Anne his Wife, Sister of Ludovicus the 2. Anno 1527, did in the same Right lay Claim to the Crown of Hungary; chosen to which by a party prepared for him, he was always in contention with

- with John de Sepusio, each of them acknowledged King by their several Factions: but he was by both sides received on the death of John.
- 1562 36. Maximilian, Emperour, King of Hungary and Bohemia, Archduke of Austria, Son of Ferdinand.
  - 1572 37. Rodolphus, Emperour, &c. Son of Maximilian.
  - 1608 38. Matthias, Brother of Rodolphus, afterwards Emperour.
  - 1618 39. Ferdinand II. of Gratz, next Heir unto Matthias of the House of Austria, afterwards Emperour, &c. against whom a Party of Hungarians called in Berthelm Gabor, Prince of Transylvania, whom they elected for their King, intending (as they said) to crown him also. But the Affairs of Bohemia going on the Emperour's side, Gabor relinquished his pretensions, and hearkened to a Peace betwixt them.
  - 1625 40. Ferdinand III. Son of Ferdinand the second, chosen and crowned King in the life of his Father, and in the year 1627 King of Bohemia also, succeeding after him in the Empire, and now living, Anno 1648.

This Kingdom doth pretend it self to be Elective, and to have special Privileges indulged them by their former Princes; and anciently indeed it was so in both respects, the last especially, King Andrew giving authority to his Prelates, Peers, and other people, Ursine nota alicujus Infidelitatis, &c. that without any imputation of Disloyalty they might contradict, oppose, and resist their King, if he did any thing in violation of their Laws and Sanctions. But both their liberty of Elections and pretence of Privileges have been so shaken and restrained by their Kings of the House of Austria, that the Elections are become a matter of Formality only, and their Privileges depending wholly on their Prince's pleasure, now grown too potent for them to contend withal, unless they should betray their Country into the hands of the Turks. To which some of them have expressed some strong Inclinations, the Oppressions laid upon them by the Austrian Family being deemed unsufferable.

The Forces of this Kingdom, when it was entire, may best be seen by those great Armies which they have brought into the Field against the Turk. By whom two parts of three being since subdued, that which remains must not be thought able to answer the proportion of former times, though they have done more than could be reasonably expected from it. For at the Battel of Keresztur, Anno 1596, there were 6000 Hungarian Horse, and 10000 Foot of this Nation only; besides those of Germany and Transylvania: and the next year, notwithstanding the Discomfiture of that Army, they raised no less than 20000 Horse and Foot, on the noise of some Preparations among the Turks. 'Tis true, their Foot are commonly but meanly armed; the defect whereto is rather to be imputed to the Prince, than unto the people, who can but bring their Bodies (which is all they have) for defence of their Country. And for their Horse, (whom they call Heyducks) maintained in continual readiness at the charge of the Nobility and principal Gentry, they are next Cousins to the Cossacks, almost as mischievous as they, and hold as strict Intelligence with the Turks as those do with the Tartars.

The chief Revenues of this Kingdom come from the Silver-Mines, out of which is yearly raised about a million and a half of Guildens. Maximilian the second made it up two millions, by seizing on the Lands of Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, and assigning annual Pensions to the Bishops, Canons, and other Religious persons. Most of which Sum comes clearly to the Emperour's Coffers, the Prefidary Souldiers being paid with Contribution-money raised upon the Country; and the Lieutenant-general, whose entertainment comes to 30000 Dollars yearly, defrayed upon their Purfes also.

The chief Order of Knighthood in this Kingdom was that of the Dragon, instituted by Sigismund Emperour and King hereof, at such time as by the Council of Constance against John Hus and Hierom of Prague, and by the sharpness of his Sword proved upon their Followers, he had cast down (as he conceived) the Dragon of Heresie and Schism. But the Device proved of no long continuance, expiring almost with the Author.

The Arms of Attila the Hun, once the King of this Country by the name of Pannonia, are said to have been Gules, a Falcon displayed Or, membered and crowned Argent. But the Arms of the Kingdom at this time are Barre-wife of eight pieces, Gules and Argent.

There are in HUNGARY.

OF SCLAVONIA.

SCLAVONIA is bounded on the East with Servia, Macedonia, and Epirus, from which it is parted by the River Drinus, and a Line drawn from thence unto the Adriatick, on the West with Carniola in Germany, and Istria in the Seignior of Venice, from which last it is divided by the River Arfa, on the North with Hungary, on the South with the Adriatick Sea. So called from the Sclaves, or Slavi, a Sarmatian People, of whom more anon.

It contains in length from Arfa to the River Drinus, according to Pliny's Computation, 800 Italian miles, the greatest breadth being 325 of the same miles. But others reckon the length of it at no more than 480 miles: who may be reconciled with Pliny by supposing this, that these last measure in a straight and direct Line from River to River; and that Pliny coasted by the Creeks and Reaches of the Adriatick. It is situate in the Northern Temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the sixth and seventh Climates; so that the longest Day in Summer is about fifteen hours and an half.

The Country is generally fruitful of all those Commodities which are found in Italy, to which it is little inferior; yielding not only Wine and Oyl in very good plenty, but good store of Cattel; and of wild Beasts of pleasure is no want at all; some rich Veins also of Gold and Silver. The Northern parts are mountainous, cold, for the most part lying under Snows, not capable of Wine, or any the like Productions which require much Heat. But even these mountainous parts afford very good Pasturage, and breed a wealthy race of Sheep, which bring forth young twice a year, and are shorn four times. Nor do the Sea-coasts come behind in advancing the Profit of the people; not only yielding store of Fish, but the benefit of many excellent and convenient Havens.

The People are courageous, proud, stubborn, and untractable, of strong Bodies and able Constitutions, fit for works of Drudgery; and so employed by the Venetians, when first brought under their Command: who, using them in all fertile Offices both at home and abroad, occasioned the neighbouring Nations to call their Villains or Bond-servants, as they of Venice did, by the name of Sclaves; that being originally as to this People the name, not of their Condition, but of their Ancestors and Country.

The Christian Faith was here planted, I mean in reference to this People who do now inhabit it, about the time of Charles the Bald, Emperour of the West, Anno 877, Sueropius being the first of their Kings who embraced the Gospel. But lying in the mid-way of Greece and Italy, the Religion of the Church of Rome, and that of the Greek Church are both allowed of; that of the Greek being as prevalent in the East parts hereof, as that of Rome is in the Western. But here it is to be observed, that though this People, according to their Division into East and West, follow the Rites and Ceremonies of those several Churches; yet on both sides it is indulged them to celebrate Divine Offices in their natural Language, contrary to the usage of the Church of Rome in all places else. And yet the people are not all of the Christian Faith, the Turkish and Mahometan prevailing in those Towns and Territories under their Obedience.

But though they be not of one Religion, they are all of one Language, which is the old Sarmatian (or, Sclavonian) Tongue, generally spoken in the Empire of Russia, Livonia, Poland, Silesia, Bohemia, Moravia, some part of Hungary, Istria, Sclavonia, where we now are, Dacia, Epirus, Georgia, Mengrelia, (both in Asia) and by all the Captains, Officers, and other Souldiers of the Turkish Empire: the Language generally spreading over all those Countries which either were Sarmatian in their first Original, or made theirs by Conquest under the united name of Sclaves; or otherwise intermix with them by the necessity of Commerce and Trade, or dispatch of their common Business. Inasmuch as, taking in the Subdivisions of the Provinces and Countries before specified, it is affirmed by Gesner, a right learned man, that there are no fewer than threecore Nations which have the Sclavonian Tongue for their vulgar Language.

Chief Mountains in this Country are those called Scardonici, (from Scardona, one of the best Towns of Illyris) dividing Dalmatia in the midst, and extending along the Coasts thereof by Ptolemy called Ardium. Of Rivers those of special note amongst the Ancients were, 1. Titius, now Varietza, separating Illyris from Dalmatia. 2. Arfa, now Arfa, the utmost bound upon the West; as 3. Drinus is upon the East: of which the first falleth into the Bay of the Adriatick, which is called Golfo di Quernero, (Sinus Flanaticus by the Ancients;) the other into the Saw or Savus, somewhat West of Belgrade. 4. Narvon, now Narento, running not far from Epidaurus.

The Boundaries and Land-Marks being thus set out, I should proceed to the Division of the Country as now it standeth. But I must first look on it as it stood in the time of the Romans: in whose time that part of the whole Province which lay from the River Arfa to the Titius was named Liburnia and Illyris; that from the Titius to the Drinus was called Dalmatia. But the Illyrians being the stoutest and more warlike People, and such as created greatest Troubles to the Romans, it pleased the Conquerours, when they had fully subdued both Nations, to call the whole Country by the name of Illyricum; and not so only, but to extend this name over all their Provinces (the Diocese of Thrace excepted) which lay betwixt the Alps and the Euxine Sea, the Adriatick and the Danow; for so far the Jurisdiction of the Præfatus Prætorio of Illyricum did at first extend. Hinc Præfatus (saith Zosimus) Constantinus, ejus Insultor, Macedones attribuit, Thessalos, Creteneses, Græciam, & circumjacentes Insulas, Epirum utramque, Illyricos, Dracos, Triballus, & Pannonias, Valeriam usque & Mysiam superiorem. And that all these did then pass by the name of Illyricum appeareth as well by that of Pollio in the Life of Claudius the second, expressly saying, Illyricum Thracas, Mysos, Dacos, Dacos, Dalmatias & Pannonias continebat; as by that of Socrates the Historian, who lib. 3. cap. 10. calleth Sirmium the chief Town of Pannonia inferior, and lib. 3. cap. 6. Thessalonica, the chief City of Macedon, Urbes Illyricas for Illyrian Cities. By which account Illyricum, in the largest extent of that name, contained no less than 18 Provinces of the Roman Empire; that is to say, 1. Noricum Mediterraneum, 2. Noricum Ripense, 3. Pannonia Superior, 4. Pannonia inferior, 5. Valeria, 6. Savia, 7. Dalmatia, 8. Mæsia Superior, 9. Dardania, 10. Dacia Mediterranea, 11. Dacia Ripensis, 12. Macedonia, 13. Thessaly, 14. Achaia, 15. Cyete, 16. Epirus Vetus, 17. Epirus Nova, and 18. Prevalitana. These 18 Provinces being cast or made up into three Dioceses, viz. the Diocese of Illyricum specially so called, containing the seven first, 2. the Diocese of Macedon, containing the seven last, and 3. the Diocese of Dacia, comprehending the other four, were governed by the Præfatus Prætorio for Illyricum, who had his chief Seat and Residence at Sirmium before mentioned. But in the Division of the Empire betwixt the Sons of Theodosius the Great into the Eastern and Western, the Diocese of Illyricum specially so called (after that named Illyricum Occidentale) was laid unto the Western Empire, under the Governance of the Præfatus Prætorio of Italy; and thereupon the Seat or Residence of the Præfatus Prætorio for Illyricum removed from Sirmium unto Thessalonica, so that we are now to look upon Illyricum in a stricter Notion, as a Diocese of the Western Empire, containing the seven Provinces before specified, whereof both Noricum, both Pannonia, and Valeria, (if at least Stiermark be that Valeria, as some say it is) have been described already in their proper places. There now remain only Savia and Dalmatia to be spoken of: the first containing all the parts of this Country lying on both sides of the Savus, (whence it had the name;) the last those parts hereof which lie towards the Sea, known by the ancient name of Dalmatia, the Region of Illyris properly so called being added to it. But as new Lords give new Laws, so they give new Names: the Country being divided by the Slavi into two Kingdoms, viz. of Croatia, and Dalmatia; of which the first contained the Province of Savia, the last took up the whole Province of Dalmatia, bounded as before, but keeping the name of Sclavonia to it self alone, being indeed the only Province in which the name and memory of the Slavi is retained amongst us. Afterwards as it came to be divided (as at last it was) betwixt the Kings of Hungary and the State of Venice, we find it subdivided into these 6 parts; that is to say, 1. Windischland, 2. Croatia, 3. Bosnia, 4. Dalmatia, 5. Liburnia, or Contrado di Zara, and 6. the Sclavonian Island.

1. WINDISCHLAND.

WINDISCHLAND is bounded on the East with part of the Lower Hungary from which it is separated by a Line drawn from St. Nicolas near the River Dravus, to the Town of Polega, standing on a little River which falls into the Savus; on the West with Carniola, or Krain, a Province of the Archdukedom of Austria; on the North with the River Dravus, on the South with Croatia. It is thus called by the Dutch, as the Land or Country of the Winnithi, or Venedi; the greatest Nation of the Sclaves, whom generally they call by the name Windisch; and anciently, for so much of it as lieth on the North of the Savus, accounted part of Pannonia inferior, as afterwards of the Province of Savia, till conquered by the Slaves, and laid unto their Possessions, from them named Windischland, as before.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Windisch-gratz, located on the Dravus, the Vinundria and Vindomana of the Ancients, 2. Sagona, near unto the Savus, 3. Gradiška, on the South, and 4. Zagabria, on the North of the same River: from which last a great part of this Country is called Comitatus Zagabrienfis, 5. Novigrad, on the Savus also, but more near to Germany, 6. Petrowyna, situate at the foot of the Mountains which are between the Savus and the Dravus, and divide Hungary from Sclavonia, 7. Sissek, or Sissaken, (the Sissa of Pliny and Antoninus) situate on the Saw, over against Zagabria, where it receiveth the River Kulp; famous for the notable Resistance which the Turks there found, Anno 1593, who, hoping by the Conquest of this Province to open a free passage into Germany, entered it with a puissant Army, (having in their way taken the Castle of Ostrowitz, and the strong Town of Wibitz, in Croatia) and fate down very strongly entrenched before this Town. But the Town held it out most gallantly against all their Batteries and Assaults, till relieved by a power of Germans, who came to succor them: by whom 8000 of the Turks were slain in the place, and most of the rest drowned in the River Savus, as they fled hastily and (through that great haste) blindly from the Sword of the Conquerour.

This Province, for the most part, is under the Princes of the House of Austria, as Kings of Hungary, to which Crown it formerly belonged: these parts of it which lie next to Hungary, on the North and East, groaning under the Tyranny and Bondage of the Turkish Garrisons.

2. CROATIA.

CROATIA is bounded on the North with Windischland, from which it is parted by the River Una, or Wana; on the East with Bosnia, on the South with Liburnia, or Contrado di Zara; on the West with Carniola. The reason of the name I find not among my Authors, but only it was imposed by the Sclaves at their first coming hither, who comprehended under this name all the inland parts of Sclavonia, from the Mountain Ardium to Pannonia, including Bosnea and Windischland, though distinguishing the frontiers.

The Country is for the most part cold, mountainous and hilly, overpread by the Branches of the Mountains Bebis, spoken of by Ptolemy; yet reasonably fruitful, stored with all necessary Provisions for the life of man, and would yield more increase and profit both to Lord and Tenant, were it not for the ill neighbourhood of the Turks, to whose Tyranny and Oppressions it hath been and is still exposed. The people for the general are held to be good Souldiers, mentioned in our modern Stories by the name of Crabats.

Chief Towns in it are, 1. Misch, or Mosch, bordering upon Germany, the Alena of the Ancients, 2. Ostrowitz, a strong Fort on the same Frontier, 3. Wibitz, by the Dutch called Bibigen, by the Ancients Fennium, the Metropolis or chief place of the Country, encompassed like an Island by the River Una, and fortified with strong Works by the help of Art; but taken by the Turks, Anno 1592, and all the Souldiers in it cruelly murdered, contrary to the Articles agreed on at the Surrender, 4. Zeng, 5. Wackar, 6. Tarnaw, 7. Modrisch, of which little memorable.

This Country, with the rest included anciently under this name, was one of the two Kingdoms of Sclavonia; the Princes whereof were usually entitled Kings of Croatia and Dalmatia. In the year 1097 the Venetians having before possessed themselves of some Towns on the Sea-side, first set footing there. How the whole Country of Sclavonia came to the Crown of Hungary.

Thus Englisted by my honoured Friend Sir Robert Stratford, in his excellent Translation of that harsh Satyrift: When Business calls, a Crowd the rich man thruns, And o'c mens Heads in's huge Sedan he runs, Reads, writes, and sleeps within it, as he goes: For Sleep will come if he the Curtains close.

Besides which office of Chair-carriers, or Sedan-men, as we call them now, this People being, when once conquered, a servile Nation, furnished the Romans with those Beadles whom they employed in calling the Citizens from the Fields to their publick Businesses: to which the same Poet alludeth in the next Satyr, saying, Clamante Liburno, Currite jam sedis, &c. But to proceed. The nearness of this Country to the Adriatick occasioned the Bay of Quirnero, or Cornaro, as some call it, commonly called Sinus Flanaticus, to be sometimes named Sinus Liburnicus; the parts of Italy on the other side of it to be called Regna Liburnorum in the Poet Virgil; and gave the name of Liburnades to a Shole of Islands lying on the Coast hereof, 60 at least in number, as is said by Strabo. To which and other Islands of the Adriatick we are now to halten, leaving the Stories of Illyricum to the clofe of all.

6. The SCLAVONIAN Islands.

Along the Coasts of Sclavonia lie a Cluster of Islands, to the number of a thousand, as is said by Pliny, most of which (if indeed so many) are but Rocks, not Islands, or not inhabited at all, nor of any note. The Principal whereof, and such as deserve place here, are, 1. the Liburnades before mentioned. 2. The Abstriides. 3. The Isles of Ragus. 4. Arbe. 5. Curzola. 6. Zara. 7. Lissa and Brazzia; the rest not being worth the looking after as to our Design. The whole number of the Inhabitants is reckoned in the total to no more than 40000 persons.

1. The LIBURNADES, said by Strabo to be 60 in number, lie all along the Coasts of Liburnia, or Contado di Zara. The chief whereof are 1. Issa, now called Pago, containing 100 miles in compass, having a Town of the same name; but in all that Tract of ground not above 1500 Inhabitants, in the time of my Author, by reason of the sharp Ayre, and great want of Fuel. The Saltpits here yield great Commodity not only to the people themselves, but also to the State of Venice, supreme Lords hereof. 2. Tragurium, now Trau and Trabu, so called from the chief Town hereof, built by those of Issa: so near the Continent, that it seems to be a part thereof. By Mela it is named Tigurium, with some little difference. 3. Pharus, so called from the Pharii, or Parii, of whom it was once a Colony, long since come to Ruine. It is now called Lefna, the greatest of all the Adriatick as being 150 miles in compass, and very fruitful for the bigness. It hath a Town of the same name, which enjoys a safe and spacious Harbour; unvalled and of no great beauty, but fortified with a strong Castle, which commandeth both the Harbour and the Shipping in it. The Birth-place of Demetrius Pharius, so often mentioned in the Stories of Greece and Rome.

2. The ABSTRTIDES are in number many, so called from the River Abstrius, which thereabouts falls into the Adriatick; according unto that of Lucan, Et vadit Advices pumans Abstrius in undas. Abstrius foaming with his halt, Into the Adria falls at last.

But whether that River were so called by the Colchians at their landing there, in memory of Abstrius the Son of Aetas King of Colchis, whom they went to seek, or for some other reason, I determine not. Certain I am, it could not be so named from the scattering of his Limbs hereabouts by Medea, his unnatural Sister, as is said by Pliny; that cruel Fact being done on the Shores of the Enxine; the place being called Tomos afterwards upon that occasion. But of these Islands, being in number many, as before was said, two only are of special note; that is to say, 1. Vegia, or Vegio, not far from Segna on the firm Land, containing in compass betwixt 80 and 100 miles, and about 10000 Inhabitants: the most populous of all these Seas. It hath a Town of the same name, with a very fair Harbour: the Island by Pliny called Curista, the chief Towns of it in his time being, Fulfinium and Curicum. 2. Abstrus, as Ptolemy Abstrium, as Pliny calls it, in whose time it was one Island only, but now divided into two by the Venetians, letting in the Sea betwixt them: the one of them is called Cherso the other Osero; both joined together by a Bridge made by the Venetians, and both together making up 140 miles in compass; each of them having one Town only, and that of the same name with the Island; the Inhabitants in both not exceeding 5000 persons. Stored with sufficiency of Corn, plenty of Wine, and abundance of Wood, great quantities whereof are sent yearly to Venice. They have also goodly Herds of Cattel, and great Flocks of Sheep; affording by their Fleish, Wool, Cheese and Butter, a good increase of profit to the Owners of them.

3. The Islands of RAGUSI, (for so I call them which belong to that Commonwealth) are but three in number. 1. Gravosa, a very pleasant place, full of gardens of Oranges, Limons, and Pomegranates. 2. Lanuse, environed about with very high Mountains, in which are the Ragusian Farms, made rich by great Charge and Industry of the several Occupants, so as to yield them Wine, Oyl, and most excellent Fruits; which they receive more plentifully from a goodly Plain situate in the midst hereof, and naturally more fruitful than the other parts. Near to this last Island is good fishing for Sprats: and in both an Art of making their trees to bring forth Oysters, by bending down their Boughs, and laying them under the water with Stones; so as in two years there are so many Oysters fastned to them as is strange to see, and in the third year they are very good meat. Melida, lying betwixt Ragus and the Isle of Curzola, by Pliny called Melira, and on that ground supposed by some to be that Island on which St. Paul did suffer Shipwreck, Acts 26. But the name of Barbanus which the Text joins to the Inhabitants of it, not proper to an Island betwixt Greece and Italy in the times of St. Paul, and his Landing, when he parted thence, at Syracuse, an Haven of Sicily so far from this so near unto the other Melita, which is now called Malta, sufficiently refel this Fancy, though otherwise not improbably grounded.

4. Of those which are known only by one single name the chief are, ARBE, so called in the time of Pliny, from the best Town of it, but by Ptolemy it is named Scardona. A pleasant Island, in compass about 30 miles, and containing some 3000 Inhabitants; the only Havenless Isle of all the Adriatick; but that defect is abundantly recompensed by the natural Sweetness of the place, which so enticed certain disolute Rovers of Austria, that they sojourned upon it Anno 1618, and had like to have occasioned an heavy War betwixt Ferdinand, Archduke of the House of Gratz, (not long after chosen King of the Romans) and the State of Venice, if Philip the third of Spain had not made up the Breach.

5. CURSO LA, by Ptolemy and Strabo called Corcyra, or Melena, more rightly Corcyra Melana, or Corcyra Nigra, to difference it from Corcyra, now Corfu, in the Ionian Sea. The chief Town of it, being of the same name with the Island, was founded by the Gnidians of the Isle of Crete. It is sufficiently fruitful, but of Wine especially; forty miles long, in compass ninety, and very populous for the bigness; notwithstanding that the people, being Sea-faring men, do much use the Seas, and build many Ships. In the year 1571, a little after the taking of Cyprus, and before the Battel of Lepanto, it was invaded by Uluaz Ali, General of the Turkish Fleet, with a Navy of 60 Gallies: for fear of whom Contareno, the Venetian Governour, together with the Townsmen and Garrison Souldiers, abandoned Curzola, the chief Town hereof. The silly Women thus forsaken, and preferring Death before Dishonour, defended the Walls, and with Fire, Stones, and such other Weapons as they had, they beat off the Enemy, till at the last a violent Tempest forced the Turkish General to remove his Gallies farther off, to a place of safety.

6. ZARA, LISSA, BRAZZIA, three small Isles, not otherwise memorable but for their Misfortunes, spoiled by the Turks at their departure from Curzola who carried thence 1600 Christians into cruel Bondage. The rest I purposely omit, being rather Rocks than Islands, barren and stony for the most part, and not much inhabited.

The ancient Inhabitants of Illyricum, in the full extent of it, comprehending Liburnia and Dalmatia, were the Iapodes, bordering on Italy; the Scirtones, or Scirtarii, confining upon Macedon; the Mazae, in the midst about Salona; the Peiristae, lying towards Pannonia; the Derii, Ceraunii, Daurii, Varda, Siculora, Sardiora, and others of inferior note: all making up the great and potent Nations of the Liburni and the Dalmatae, and comprehended generally in the name of Illyrians. Of these the Liburnian Illyrians (Illyrii, few Liburni, as they are indifferently called by Florus) were the first who felt the Forces of Rome: which growing State they had provoked by their frequent Piracies, but more by murdering the Embassadors which were sent unto them to require Satisfaction; Tempted their Queen, a proud and imperious Dame, commanding Execution to be done upon them. Warred up by the Romans for so many Injuries under the Conduct of Centimalus, one of their Consuls, they were overthrown, (as having more of the Pirate than the Souldier in them) some of their chief Nobility executed, in revenge of the Wrong done to the Embassadors, an yearly Tribute imposed on them, and the Queen deprived of the greatest part of her Kingdom, conferred by the Romans on Demetrius Pharius, one of their Confederates. But he proving unfaithful to them in their War with Hannibal and Gentius, their last King, who commanded over Illyricum, siding against them with Perseus King of Macedonia, Anitus the Praetor is sent with a sufficient Army to make an end of that work; who used such diligence therein, that Scodra the chief Town of the Kingdom was taken, and the King himself, together with his Wife and Children, made Prisoners; by consequence the whole War ended, antequam geri Romae nunciaretur, before they knew at Rome that it was begun. The Liburnians after that became quiet Subjects, the whole Country on the taking of Gentius being made a Province of the Romans Anno V.C. 586, and they employed at Rome in many servile offices, as before was said: and then the Dalmatians began to cast off the Yoke. But Dalmatinus, their chief City, being first sacked by Marcus Fulgus, and after by Nasica before mentioned, they continued quiet and obedient till the time of Augustus Caesar, when they again rebelled at the instigation of one Batto, a man very potent with the People, who, having ten years together maintained the Liberty of his Country, at last, broken and wearied by the Forces of Germanicus and Tiberius, submitted himself unto the two Generals; who, asking the reason of his Revolt, were answered, because the Romani sent not Shepherds to keep, but Wolves do devour, their Flocks. Thus finally conquered, it continued a Roman Province till the coming of Odoacer into Italy, who brought it under his Command; as the Goths also did, having vanquished him, and thereby made themselves Masters of Italy and the rest of his Purchases. But the Kingdom of the Goths being brought to an end by the good fortune of Justinian, and the valour of Belisarius and Narses, two of his Commanders, (but very ill requited by him) Illyricum became a part of the Eastern Empire, continuing under the power of the Gracian Emperours till the time of Phocas, that bloody Tyrant; when it was made a Prey to the Slavens.

Of these though we have spoken before in several places, as their Fortunes and Affairs have led us; yet being this is the only Country which preserves their name, we will here speak more exactly of them than we have done hitherto, especially as to their Manners, Name, and first Original, and finally of their Successes in this Country. And first for their Original, I take it for a thing past question that they were no other than natural Sarmatians, inhabiting on the North of the River Ister, uniting themselves under this Name in their Undertakings and Attempts on the Eastern Empire: as the many Nations of Germany took the name of Franks and Almans in their Actions and Achievements against the Western. But why they took this name rather than another, is not yet agreed on. Some fetch the original of it from Slavo, which in the Sclavonian Tongue significth a Speech or Word, because they were all of one common Language; others from Slava, significyng in that Language Fame or Glory, in regard of that great Fame and Honour which they had achieved by their Successes on the Empire. But when I find a potent Nation of the Winnithi, Winnali, or Venedi, a Sarmatian People, called Slavini by Pomander, possessed in his time of the farther Shores of the River Ister, opposite to Illyricum and Thrace, and by that Name waiting and foraging these Provinces and other parts of that Empire in the time of Justinian, as we read in Procopius that they did; I see no reason why we should look farther for the name of Slavens than from these Slavini. For having in the time of Phocas subdued this Country, and called it Slavonia or Sclavonia, after their own Name; by that and other fortunate Successes on the Eastern Empire, and the Honour they had thereby gotten, they might very well induce the rest of the scattered Tribes of the Sarmatians to unite together with them both in Name and Action, and try their fortunes in the Conquest of the West of Europe, as these had done already on the East parts of it. In which Design they sped so well, that they became Masters of almost all those Countries which lie betwixt the River Vistula and the Enxine Sea, the Adriatick and the Baltick, communicating their Language unto all the Provinces and Nations conquered by them; and to most their Manners, Rites and Customs. Their Government was at first by Kings, but so that the Succession holden in a Race or Family, and those that had the Throne did not long enjoy it. For having a Law amongst themselves, that he who killed a Tyrant should succeed in his place; they had few Kings whom some or other would not vote to be a Tyrant, and then dispatch him out of the way, that a greater Tyrant than himself (as it commonly happeneth in such cases) might possess the Power. Insomuch that they had a new King almost every year, none of them for the space of an hundred years dying natural deaths; and all that while the People (as it must be) were most miserably torn in pieces by intestine Wars. They were not cured of this Distemper, till the several Tribes and Nations of them (as Poles, Moravians, Bohemians, these here, & those stian Faith, and under the same form of Ecclesiastical Government. In former times they used to read, as the Jews do, from the right hand to the left; but of late here they on so to the Western Nations, from whom they are generally defended.

For that the people of this Country are the Progeny of the Saxons, is evident 1. by the Saxon Language yet in part retained. 2. We find that Charles the Great, like a politic Conquerour, placed many of that Nation here, weakning so their strength at home, and fortifying the Bounds of his Empire. And 3. by a Story recited by Veisfegan, which we touched in our Description of Brunswick, the whole Narration is this: Halberstadt was beyond credit troubled with Rats, which a Musician, whom they called the Pj'd'p'per, undertaking for a great mass of money to destroy, they agree: hereupon he tuned his Pipes, and all the Rats in the Town dancing after him are drowned in the next River. This done, he asketh his pay, but is denied: whereupon he striketh up a new fit of Mirth: all the Children, male and female, of the Town, follow him into the Hill Hameln, which presently closed again. The Parents miss their Children, and could never hear news of them. Now of late some have found them in this Country, where I also leave them: only telling you this, that this marvellous accident is said to happen the 22. of July, 1376. Since which time it is said that the people of Halberstadt permit not any Drum, Pipe, or other Instrument to be founded in that Street: and established a Decree, that in all Writings, of Contract or Bargain, after the Date of our Saviours Nativity, the Date also of this their Childrens Transmigration should be added in rei memoriam. But though the Dutch or Saxons make up the main body of them, yet being conquered by the Hungars, they received many of their Colonies; and in the Northern parts there remain still some of the old Scythians planted there by Attila. Out of those Members is the Body of this State composed: so strong and populous, that it is conceived to be able to raise an Army of 90000 men, and actually did arm 6000 Horse and 12000 Foot for the Battel of Kersburg, Anno 1596, being more by 2000 then the whole Realm of Hungary sent unto that Service.

Chief Towns herein of the foundation of the Dutch or Saxons, are 1. Hermenstat, in Latine Hermanopolis, (of old called Cibinium, from the River Cibin, on which it was situate) so named of one Herman the Founder of it, little inferior to Vienna for strength or greatness, well fortified both by Art and Nature. 2. Cronstad, in Latine called Corona, by some Brassovia, by others Stephanopolis; this last name being given it by Stephen King of Hungary, who repaired and beautified it; situate on the Borders of Wallachia, amongst fruitful Mountains; remarkable for a fair Library and a kind of Academy; and the most noted Empory or Mart-Town of all this Country; of great Resort especially in the Time of their publick Fairs, by Turks, Arabians, Greeks, Armenians, Poles, Walachians, and other Nations. 3. Bispricia, (by the Dutch called Noren) so called from the River Bisprice, which runneth through it: so pleasant and so sweet a Town, that there is no dirt or mire to be seen at any time, or if there be, the people presently swell up the River, and so cleanse the Streets. 4. Medisus (by the Dutch Medwisch) so called quasi medius confusus, because situate in the midst of the Country; a Town almost as neat as Bisprice. 5. Se-goswaria, or Schesburg, on the declivity of an Hill. 6. Zabesius, or Lairz, once the chief Town of the Saxons, but now much decayed; situate in a very deep Valley, well fenced with Waters, and those Waters well stored with Fish. 7. Clausenburg, or Gloswar, the Zeugma of Ptolemy, in Latine called Claudiopolis; from Cladius the II. Emperor, by whom re-edified at first a Colony of the Saxons or Dutch only, but of late times the Hungarians, coming in as Strangers, were at last privileged as Citizens, and inhabited it together with them. The Town is well seated in the middle of a pleasant Plain, encompassed with an handsome Wall, and beautified with elegant Buildings. 8. Alba Julia, now Weissenburg, the Apulum of Ptolemy situate on a small brook then called Apulus, (but now Oratus) whence it had the name. Built on the side of an Hill near the River Marisch, (or Marisus) over-looking a large and fruitful Plain: heretofore a Bishops See, and the ordinary Residence of the Prince or Vaivod of Transylvania; but now a Garrison of Hungarian Soldiers, holding it for the Emperour, as King of Hungary.

Chief Towns belonging to the Hungarians, and by them inhabited, are, 1. Waradin, much mentioned in the Stories of these later times, since the invasions of the Turks; situate on the Borders of Hungary. 2. Thorda, built in or near the place where stood the Salina of Ptolemy, so called from the abundance of Salt-pits which were then about it. 3. Enguedine, by the Romans called Annium, from a Causey leading to it, raised by one Annius, and from him so named; some Fragments whereof are still remaining. 4. Deva, remarkable for a Vein of the best Wines. 5. Fennschium, affording very pleasant Wines also, not inferior to those of Venusium in Italy. 6. Zilach. 7. Gela of which little memorable. 1. Millenback, not far from which, betwixt which and the Town of Brofs, is a very strong Fortref, commanding a straight and narrow passage leading into this Country out of Hungary.

In the North part hereof lieth the Province called ZECKLER, inhabited by the Siculi, an old brood of Scythians, brought hither by Attila on his first Conquest of this Country, and here still continuing. A people which have much in them of the ancient Huns, and had heretofore a peculiar Language to themselves, but now they speak the Hungarian generally, differing in the Dialect only. But, though by the necessity of Commerce and Cohabitation, they are brought into the same Language; they still retain their ancient Customs, governed by their old Laws, and living after the same manner as the Switzers do; each of their Cantons (seven in number) being absolute in and of it self, but all united with the Transylvanians, and with one another, for defence of the whole Country against the feveral Pretensions of the German and Turkish Emperours. And though they do acknowledge some Subjection to the Emperour as King of Hungary, yet it is but what they lift themselves: being anciently privileged from all Taxes, more then the paying of a Bull for every Household, in the way of an Heriot, at the Coronation of the new King, when and how oft soever it may chance to happen. Their Cantons (Sedi: they call them) are, 1. Sepfi. 2. Orbay. 3. Kysdi. 4. Czyk. 5. Gyrgio or Udarbeli. 6. Maros-Zeck. And 7. Aravia-Zeck; so called from the chief Town in each Division. In former times no Nobleman, nor any one of better Means and greater Eminence than other, was known amongst them: but now of late that Parity (or Confusion rather) is grown out of credit, and some begin to over-top the rest both in Power and Title as in other places.

The first Inhabitants of the old Dacia, whereof this Province was a part, were the Anari, Taurisci, Rhaetensis, Canconsi, the Buridenfi, and Biethi, &c. First conquered they were by Lyfsmachus, the great and mighty K. of Thrace, one of the renowned Captains of Alexander the Great; in token whereof, innumerable Medals in the age of our Grandfathers were found in this Country, having his Image on the side, and this word VICTORIA on the other. How they were afterwards subdued by the Emperour Trajan, and quitted by Arrelianus, hath been shewn already dy. Being forsaken by the Romans, it was won by the Goths; their constant Dwelling till forced over the Danow by the Huns, the next Possessors of this Country; the Road or Thorough-fare from that time of those barbarous Nations which out of Asia made their Inroads on the Europeans. Having been successively subdued by the Slavians and Rosses this part hereof was conquered by Stephen, the first King of Hungary, furnished the Saint, by whose persuasion and inducements they received the Gospel. They were governed after this time, as a Member of that Kingdom, by a Deputy, whom they called the Vaivod of Transylvania, (the word Vaivod signifying as much as Præfectus Militie, or a Lord-Lieutenant) a man, by reason of the greatness of his place and power of most Authority in that Kingdom. The names and Succession of these Vaivods, till the time of John Huniades, comes imperfectly to us; but after that more cleere and constant in this order following.

THE VAIVODS AND PRINCES of TRANSYLVANIA.

1. John, surnamed Huniades, made Vaivod hereof by Vladislaw the IV. A man of great Valour and Renown, the great Defender of his Country against the Turks, whom he overthrew in many Battels, especially in that of Maron, where he flew 50000 of them. He died about the year 1458.
2. Stephen, of the noble Family of Cattery, Vaivod in the time of Matthias King of Hungary, the Son of Huniades.
3. Stephen II. surnamed de Sepuso, from the place of his Honour or Estate; not so much memorable for any thing as for being Father of Barbara, the Wife of Sigismund King of Poland, and of
4. John II. called also de Sepuso, after the death of Lewis the II. chosen King of Hungary, of whom before amongst the Kings of that Realm
5. Americus, Bishop of Veradunum, made Vaivod by John de Sepuso, on his taking of the Crown of Hungary; treacherously murdered, for not complying with the Turks, Anno 1534.
6. Stephen III. surnamed Maylat, a noble Hungarian, but extremely ambitious, having not long after the death of Americus usurped the Vaivodship, was in the year 1540 confirmed in that Dignity.
7. Stephen IV. Son of John de Sepuso the late King of Hungary, by Solyman the Magnificent made Vaivod of Transylvania, being then an Infant, (by whom he had been deprived of his Kingdom of Hungary, not long before) being incoached upon not long after by the said Solyman, this Country was put into the hands of Ferdinand King of Hungary, other Lands being given to the young Prince in exchange hereof.
8. Stephen V. surnamed Dobus, for his Valour shewed against the Turks in defending Agria, made Vaivod of this Country by the said King Ferdinand. But Solyman, not liking that this Country should be at the Devotion of the Kings of Hungary, conferred the same (under the Vassalage of his Empire) upon one
9. John III. whose Family and surname I have nowhere found; a professed Champion of the Turks, and as professed an Enemy to Ferdinand and his Successors in the Kingdom of Hungary.

10. Stephen VI. surnamed Battery, (of which House he was) made Vaivod by the Turks; and afterwards on the Commendation of Amurath the III. chosen King of Poland.
11. Christopher Battery, Brother of Stephen on whose Election unto Poland, he succeeded here, and was the first, who leaving the Title of Vaivod, took that of Prince of Transylvania.
12. Sigismund, Son of Christopher, shook off the Turkish Bondage, defeated many of their Armies, and flew some of their Bassas, (the Scanderberg of the times he lived in.) But not being able to hold out against Potem an Adversary, he resigned his Estate to Rodolphus the Emperour, having for it in exchange the Dukedom of Oppelen and Ratibor in Silesia, and an annual Pension of 50000 Thachims. But finding his Pension ill paid, he made a new Renunciation of it to
13. Andrew Battery, Cousin of Sigismund, slain within the year by the Vaivod of Wallachia. After whose death
14. Rodolphus, Emperour and King of Hungary, is admitted Prince of Transylvania, on the second Renunciation of Sigismund. But his Soldiers behaving themselves with too great Insolence, Sigismund was called back again; but never well settled: so that at last he was lain to leave the Country in the power of the Emperour and retire to Prague, where in the year 1613 he died unlamented. In the mean time
15. Justine, or Istvan, surnamed Borsay, a Nobleman of this Country, made Prince hereof by the great Turk, and supported by him, cleared the Province of the Germans: and being followed by great Companies of those of the Reformed Religion, he not only obtained of the Emperour Rodolphus a Confirmation of this Estate unto himself, but liberty of Conscience, and the free exercise of Religion for both the Nations, presently after which he died, Decemb. 30. 1606.
16. Sigismund II. of the noble Family of Ragotzy, elected in the February following by the Transylvanians; but finding himself not able to make his Election good against the Emperour, and being unwilling to subject himself unto the Turks, and after the end of one year he relinquished the Government, and betook himself again to a private life.
17. Gabriel Battery, of the Family of the former Princes, succeeded by the favour of Achmet the great Turk: after whose death, so welcome unto his Neighbours and Subjects,
18. Bethlem Gabor by the same Achmet was made Prince of Transylvania; a professed Enemy of the House of Austria, but one that with a great deal of noise did them little hurt.
19. Stephen VII. surnamed Ragotzy, on the death of Bethlem Gabor, succeeded Prince; by the power and favour of the Turks, under whose Clientele and Protection he doth still enjoy it, (as his Predecessors did before him) against all Pretensions of the Empire and Realm of Hungary: as on the other side he is defended by the Emperour and Crown of Poland from being made Thrall unto the Turks.

2. MOLDAVIA.

MOLDAVIA is bounded on the East with the Euxine Sea, on the West with Transylvania, on the North with the River Niester, the Tyras of Ptolemy and the Ancients, by which it is parted from Podolia, a Province of Poland: and on the South with Valachia.

It is so called as some say, quasi Maotavia, from its nearness to the Fens of Maotis; or rather from the Hunns and other People of those Fens who possessed the same. Others conceive that it was first called Maur-davia, i. e. nigrorum Davorum Regia, the Country of the black Davia, (for by the name of Davi were the Dacians called, as we find in Strabo and some others) so named from their Complexion, or the colour of their Caps and other Garments; as Nigra Russia, a near neighbouring Province of the Realm of Poland, on the like occasion. But the more probable opinion (as I take it) is, that it took this name from the River Moldavia, which runneth through it; as the Moravians had the name from the River Morava. The Nature and Religion of the People we shall find in Valachia, whereof anciently it was reckoned for a part.

The Country is very fruitful in Corn, Wine, Grass, and Wood; but more used for Pasturage than Tillage, by reason of the great want of people to manure the Land: by means whereof it affordeth great plenty of Beef and Mutton, whereby they supply some parts of Poland and the populous City of Constantinople. And these they issue out in so great a Number, that the tenth penny, exacted by the Prince or Vaivod in the way of Custom amounteth to 150000 Crowns per annum: and yet the Clergy and the Gentry are discharged of this Impost. But the main Trade of this Country is not driven by the Natives: the Port Towns being full of Armenians, Jews, Hungarians, and Ragusan Merchants, who forestall the Markets, and barter all their Corn and Wine into Russia and Poland; their Skins, Wax, Honey, powdered Beef, Pulse and Butter into Constantinople: it being credibly reported, that from the Ports of this Country no fewer than 500 Ships laden with Corn, Victuals, and other Provisions necessary to the life of man, are yearly sent unto that City.

The Country is in a manner round, the Diameter each way being near upon 300 English miles: but so ill inhabited, by reason of the neighbourhood of the Turks, Tartars and Polonian Cossacks, that certain English Gentlemen having in the year 1609 travelled at least 240 miles in the Country, could meet with in all the way but nine Towns and Villages; and for an hundred miles together the Grass so high, that it rotted on the ground for want of Cattel to eat it, and of men to order it. So that we are not to expect in it many eminent Cities or Towns of note, though it afford two Archbishops and two Bishops Sees, Followers (as all the rest of the People are) of the Traditions and Doctrines of the Church of Greece.

The principal of those which be, are, 1. Occazoma, Zuczon; or Soczawa, the Vaivod's Seat. 2. Fucciania. 3. Fazeling; of which little memorable. 4. Kotim, a place of great strength, on the Borders of Poland; by some called Cochina; the ordinary Magazine of the Country. 5. Jassy, commonly called Tai, the chief Town for Wealth and Trade in all this Province. 6. Bender, a strong Town on the Euxine Sea. 7. Polada, near the Danow. 8. Bialigrod, situate on or near the River Tyras, now called Niester, a strong Town against the Tartars, and Polonians. 9. Kilia, anciently called Achilleia situate on the Shore of the Euxine Sea, for the most part com-passed round with the waters of it, and therefore said by Ptolemy to be an Island. 10. Ac-German, of old called Asprocastron, and Moncastrum, a very strong Town on the same coast also. Both taken by Bajazet, the second Emperour of the Turks, Anno 1485. But these three Towns are not so properly in Moldavia, at least not in Moldavia properly so called, as in a little Province called Bessarabia, lying on the Euxine, formerly counted part thereof, till conquered by the Turks, in the year aforesaid, it became a Member of that Empire. A Tract inhabited by the Bessi in the times of Ptolemy, who being driven out of their Country by the Bulgarians, settled themselves (as some say) in that part of Sclavonia, which is now called Bosnia.

The whole Country, following the Fortune of Transylvania and the rest of Dacia, till the coming of the Slaves and Rossas, was for a while accounted part of the Russian Empire, till the dismembring of that Empire by the Tartars. After which it was sometime Homage to the Polanders, sometime to the Hungarians, according as the Vaivods or Princes of it could find best Conditions. By Mahomet the Great it was made Tributary to the Turks; but the Tribute at the first was very light and easie not above 2000 Crowns per annum: that mighty Emperour, who aimed at more profitable Conquests, being loath to spend his Forces on so poor a Purchase as the addition of this Province would have been unto him. But Bajazet his Son finding how fit it lay for the more absolute Command of the Euxine Sea, took in that part hereof which is called Bessarabia, reducing it into the form of a Turkish Province, Anno 1485, as before was said; imposing on the rest an increase of the former Tribute; and so left it unto the disposal of its natural Princes. After which time the Vaivods fearing to be made Vassals to the Turks, did many times rise in Arms against them, aided therein sometimes by the Hungarians, and sometimes by the Polander; which last pretended to the Sovereignty and Chiefage of it. Bogdanus, Vaivod hereof in the time of Selimus the second, uniting himself more closely to the Polonians, became thereby suspected by the Turkish Tyrant, who with a great power chased him out of his Country, and gave the same unto one John, a Moldavian born, but bred up for the most part in the Turkish Court (where he renounced his Faith, and was circumcised) under the yearly Tribute of 60000 Crowns. But John the new-made Vaivod was no sooner settled, but he returned again to his first Religion, and for that cause grew less affected by the Turks. Which being observed by the then Vaivod of Valachia, he practised to obtain that Dignity for his Brother Peter; offering to double the said Tribute, and to assist in Subjugation of the Country. The Turk, accepting of these Offers, compounds an Army of 70000 Valachians, 30000 Turks, and 3000 Hungarians, with which they fell into Moldavia; and were so gallantly received by the noble Vaivod, that few of them escaped the Slaughter. But being afterwards betrayed by his old Friend Czarnievice, and against faith given, barbarously murdered by the Turkish Bassa, Moldavia fell into the hands of the Turks, and was united to that Empire, Anno 1574: the Vaivods from that time forwards being nominated by the Turkish Emperours, and governing as Substitutes and Lieutenants for and under them. And though Aaron, one of the succeeding Vaivods, did shake off this Yoke, and confederated himself with Sigismund Prince of Transylvania, and Michael, Vaivod of Valachia, for Defence of themselves and their Estates against that Enemy: yet being afterwards supplanted by Rafwan, one of his own ambitious Subjects, and that confederacy disjointed, it became Subject first unto the Polonians, by the power and prapractise of Zamoiskie, Chancellor of Poland; and then unto Rodolphus, Emperour of Germany; and finally unto the Turk, as before it was. And though the Polanders have since made use of some opportunities in imposing Vaivods on this Country, in despite of the Turks: yet was it commonly to their own Loss, little or no Benefit to the Moldavians, and in the end drew the whole Power of the Turks upon themselves in the Reign of Osman; they never since intermeddling in the Affairs of this Province, but leaving them entirely to the Turks disposing; who receive hence some yearly Tribute, but have not hitherto obtained the entire Possession of it, so long since aimed at by those Tyrants.

3. VALACHIA.

VALACHIA is bounded on the East with Moldavia, and a branch of the Ister, or Danubius, bending towards the North; on the West with Russia, on the North with Transylvania and some part of Moldavia, and on the South with the Danubius wholly, by which it is parted from Servia and Bulgaria. First called Flaccia, from one Flaccus a Noble Roman, who, on the Conquest hereof in the time of Trajan, brought hither an Italian Colony; afterwards by corruption Valachia, and at last Valachia.

But the name of Flaccia or Valachia was at first of more large extent than it is at present, comprehending all Moldavia also divided in those times by a Ridge of Mountains into Cisalpina, and Transalpina; the name of Moldavia being afterwards appropriated to the one, and that of Valachia (properly and specially so called) unto the other. The people of both, in token of their first Extraction, speak a corrupt Latine or Italian Language; but in Matters of Religion follow the Dictates of the Greek Church, and obey the Patriarch of Constantinople, under whom all Ecclesiastical Affairs are governed by one Archbishop, and two Bishops. In other things they partake generally of the Rudeness and Barbarity of those Nations, which have since subdued them; being a rough-hewn people, hardly civilized, ignorant for the most part of Letters and all Liberal Sciences, not weaned perfectly (in so long time of their profession of Christianity) from the Superstitions of the Gentiles, swearing by Jupiter and Venus, marrying and unmarried at their pleasures, much given to Magical Charms and Incantations, and burying with their Dead both Cloaths and Victuals, for their Relief in that long Journey to the other World.

It is in length 500, in breadth 120 miles. The Country is for the most part plain and very fertile, affording store of Cattel, a breed of excellent Horses, Iron-mines, Salt-pits, and all Provisions necessary to the life of man. Some Vines they also have, and not few Mines of Gold and Silver, more then for fear of the Turks, and other ill Neighbours they dare discover. They are begirt about with woody Mountains, which afford them Fewel, and very well watered with the Rivers of 1. Pruth, called anciently Hicrasus. 2. Sterius. 3. Fulmina. 4. Telz. 5. Aluta, all of them falling into 6. the Danow, which in this Province, at the Influx of Fulmina, takes the name of Ister. Yet is it not (at the present) very populous, the Spaciousness and Fertility hereof considered, by reason of the ill neighbourhood of the Tartars, Turks, and Polonian Cossacks: their late long Wars against those Nations and the Dutch having much decreased their former numbers, with which they so abounded in the times foregoing, that the Vaivod of this Country, in the year 1473, was able upon little warning to bring 70000 men into the Field for present Service.

Places of most note herein are, 1. Galacz, on the Influx of the River Pruth, or Hicrasus, into the Danubius; the water of which River is so unwholesome, that it causeth the Body to swell. 2. Tresorium, not far from which they dig a Bituminous earth, so refined and pure, that usually they make Candles of it instead of Wax. 3. Frailata, by some called Brailovia, the Town of most Trade in all this Country, situate on the Danow, and defended with a very strong Castle, fortified by Art and Nature, and furnished with a strong Garrison of Turks, as the Key of this Province, opening the Door unto the rest. The Town was most cruelly destroyed and rased to the ground, with an incredible Slaughter of the Inhabitants of all Sexes and Ages, for the space of four days together, by John the Vaivod of Moldavia, spoken of before, at his first revolting from the Turks: but the Castle, in regard of the great strength of it, was scarce attempted by him. 4. Teina, a Fortress of great strength, but in the hands of the Turks also. 5. Zorn, corruptly for San-Georgio, seated on the Danow, with a 21 Arm whereof the Castle of it is encompassed, garrisoned by the Turks, and by them held to be so strong and so safe a place, that at the taking of it by Sigismund the Prince of Transylvania, Anno 1596, there were found in it 39 great pieces of Ordnance, with such store of Arms and Ammunition as might well have served for a whole Kingdom. 6. Tergovista, or Tervia, sometimes the chief City of the Province, and the ordinary Residence of the Vaivod, till the taking of it by the Turks: once beautified with a fair and famous Monastery, by the Turks converted into a Fortress; environed with deep Trenches, strong Bulwarks upon every quarter, and great store of Ordnance; but many times lost and got again, according to the changes and chance of War. 7. Bucaresta, about a days journey from Tergovista, seated on the Danow, remarkable for two Bridges built near unto it. The one was of Boats, (the laying whereof took up no less then a whole month's time) for the transporting of the Army of Sinan Bassa against Sigismund Prince of Transylvania before mentioned, and broken down by the said Bassa in his Flight, having been worsted in all places by the Transylvanian. The other was the work of the Emperour Trajan, in his War against Decabalus King of Dacia, built all of Stone, and laid on Piles and Arches of a wonderful greatness, 24 Piles or Pillars whereof are yet remaining, to the great admiration of all beholders. 8. Cebinus, of old called Lycopolis, in vain besieged by the Forces of Mahomet the Great, coming in person to subdue this petty Province. 9. Zarniczegethusa, the Seat-royal of Decabalus King of Dacia, taken and destroyed by Trajan in his War against him; who, causing it to be repaired and more beautified than formerly, gave it the Privileges of Rome, and the name of Ulpia Trajana, which it retained as long as Dacia was a Province of the Roman Empire, now a small Village called Petzer. Some Stones have been digged up hereabouts with this Inscription, COLONIA ULPIA TRAJANA AUG. DACIÆ ZARMIS, which clearly shew as well the Dignity and esteem as the Antiquity of the place, before Trajan's times.

This Province, as the rest of Dacia on that side of the Danow, after the coming in of the Slaves and Rosses was under Princes of their own, whom they called (as those of Transylvania and Moldavia did) by the name of Vaivods. Protected by the Hungarian Kings they lived long in Peace; till, sensible of the approaching Danger which the Conquest of most part of Servia and Bulgaria by the Turks was like to bring them, the Vaivod of it in the time of Bajazet the First passed over the Danow with his Forces, and having done great Spoil to the Turkish Territories, returned again unto his Country. Rather provoked than weakened with which Invasion, Bajazet comes into Valachia, overcomes the Vaivod in a pitched Field, compelling him to sue for Peace, and to pay him Tribute. But Bajazet being not long after taken Prisoner by Tamerlane, and the Succession controverted amongst his Sons, the imposed Tribute was withheld, till Mahomet, the fifth King of the Turks, having settled the Affairs of that tottering State, Anno 1417 enforced them to a new Composition, and the payment of all former Reckonings. The fortunate Successes of Hunias in several Battels, induced them once more to change their Masters, and to put themselves under the Protection of the Hungarians, as they had done formerly: but they paid dear for it, their Country being made the Thoroughfare of the Turkish Forces in their Attempts upon that Kingdom. But the Hungarians being vanquished at the Battel of Cassova by Amurath the second, the accustomed Tribute was brought in, and the Turks satisfied for the present, being then hardly put to it by the famous Scanderberg. Not long after, in the year 1462. Mahomet, the Great undertook the Conquest of this Country, upon advertisement that Wladus the then Vaivod of it, intended to join with the Hungarians in some War against him: and finding how unprofitably he had spent his Forces in fighting against Woods, Mountains, and a wasted Country, he set up Dracala, the younger Brother of Wladus, to claim the Government, who, making a Party amongst the people, and having the Turk for his Assistance and support, possessed himself of the Estate, to be holden of him as a Vassal to the Turkish Empire. And it continued in this state, the Vaivods being after this at the Turks appointment, and paying all Exactions imposed upon them, till the Revolt of Sigismund the Prince of Transylvania, Anno 1595, at what time Michael, the then Vaivod hereof, taking that opportunity to shake off this Yoke, confederated with him and the Moldavian for their common Safety. And though he held out longer against Turk and German than either of the other did, discomfited the Turks by his own proper Forces at the Battel of Nicopolis, vanquished the Transylvanians, and added that Province for a while unto the Estate: yet, being at last outed of his Country by the Polanders, and another put into his place, he was shamefully slain in his own Tent, by the privacy and consent of Bassa, Lieutenant of Rodolphus, Emperor, and King of Hungary. After whose death the Country, miserably distracted betwixt two Vaivods, the one placed by the Emperor Rodolph, and the other by Mahomet the Grand Seignior, endured all the Spoil and Wreck which so calamitous a Competition could bring upon it: till in the end, the fortune of the Turks prevailing, the Valachians were constrained to submit unto their Disposall, and receive their Vaivods from that Court, as they had done formerly; performing their accustomed Duties, and paying such yearly Tribute as is laid upon them. Which notwithstanding, partly by their own natural Unquietness, and partly by the ambition of such persons as contend for that Dignity, they have since been many times embroiled in Wars; never so quietly composed, but that a new Hope, or the Artifices of the Turkish Ministers, flirts them into Action. By means whereof, when they have tired and spent themselves in their own Combustions, they may in fine be fully conquered, and made the next addition to the Turkish Monarchy.

Of what Revenue these Provinces severally were to their natural Lords, and of what severally to the Turks, I am not able to determine. But look upon them as conjunct, and as they stood at the time of the Revolt so often mentioned, and they yielded one way with another into the Treasury of the Grand Seignior no less than a million of Ducats yearly. Knolles in his Turkish History doth report it so. And his Continuator doth affirm that Moldavia only, before the said Revolt, did yearly yield unto the Turk a whole Tun of Gold, 2000 Horses for service, 10000 great Measures of Wheat, with as much Barley, and a wonderful proportion of Butter, Honey, and other Victuals; adding withal, that the other two Provinces paid as much, or more, for their yearly Tribute. After which rate, the Estimate made by Knolles may hold very good. But since the Reduction of these Countries, to their former Obedience, the Turks having been more moderate in their Exactions than they were before, for fear of startling them to some new Engagement; whom they have brought to this Obedience and Conformity with such a vast expence both of Blood and Treasure as would have purchased the best Kingdom of Christendom in the open Market. Infomuch that the ordinary Tribute of Moldavia is now but 40000 Chequins, that of Valachia but 24000 of the same Coin; besides 10000 Horses yearly sent from both. Such Bribes and Presents as are given by the Vaivods hereof, either to get or hold their places, being Merchantable Ware, and wholly at the Turks disposing, not being part of this Account.

4. RASCIA.

RASCIA is bounded on the East with Valachia, on the West with Hungary, on the North with Transylvania, and on the South with the River Danow; encompassed on three sides with that River, and another now called Temes, by the Latines Samus; and on the East divided from Valachia by the River Alutia. Called Rascia from the Rascians, a Slavonian People, whom Orellius placeth in this Tract, and from him Magnus. But here it is to be observed, that besides this Country, the Rascians held some Towns and Territories on the other side of the Danow, and amongst others the strong Town of Chrysonicum; whereof more anon.

The Country is poor enough, but the people poorer, oppressed in former times by the Servians, and of late by the Turks; which makes them valiant and adventurous upon all occasions, as commonly those people are who give themselves the hope of bettering those Fortunes which they cannot make worse. Places of most note here are, 1. Bodon, a Town of Trade on the Danow, memorable for the Martrs or Fairs which are here held annually. 2. Zarnovia. 3. Covin. 4. Novobarde. 5. Severin, not far from which, betwixt it and Bucaresta, a Town of Valachia, are the remainders of Trajan's Bridge before mentioned. 6. Colambes, and 7. Columbella; of which little memorable.

These Rascians, as before is said, were a Tribe of Slaves, settled in this Country, at the time of their first spreading in the East, and here continuing ever since in possession of it. Governed at first by their own Princes, whom, by a name borrowed from the Grecians, they called their Despots; that being once the Title of the Heir apparent or designed Successor of the Eastern Empire, as Cesar had been formerly in the Empire of Rome, and Monseigneur in the same sense in the Realm of France, to signify the eldest Brother (if Heir apparent to the Crown) of the King in being. But as the following Emperours did affect new Titles, so that of Despot fell from one step to another, till given at last unto the Governours of Provinces; as the Despot of Epirus, Peloponnesus, &c. and in the end was assumed by the several Princes of Rascia, Servia, and Bulgaria. How this Estate became united unto Servia, I am yet to seek: but sure I am, it was united in the person of George Despot of Servia, and as a part of his Estate surprized by Amurath the second, who boasted his Success therein, (in a Speech made unto his Soldiers at the Siege of Belgrade) notwithstanding that he had to strive with Hunger, Thirst, Labour, and Desperation. Nor have have I found at what time or under whose Conduct they passed over Danubius, and there possessed themselves of Chrysonicum, and some other Towns and Territories on that side of the River, which they still retain, either surrounded by the Servians, or at least intermingled with them; which makes some Writers of opinion that the Rascians and the Servians are but one and the same People under divers names: to which conjecture their being subject to the same Prince gave some farther ground. But whensoever they passed over, most probable it is, that, proving either troublesome Neighbours, or unwelcome Guests, they gave occasion to the Despots of Servia to make War upon them, and having vanquished them on that side of the River, to carry the War over unto this; till in the end the whole Country was made subject to them. Added to Servia, they fell together with it into the power of the Turks, as was said before. But being more impatient of the Yoke than the Servians were, they did the Turks much mischief many times, as they came in their way: never so much nor so effectually, as when Mahomet the III. warred against the Hungarians; at what time they frequently distressed his Armies, by cutting off his men, and intercepting the provisions of Arms and Victuals intended for the great Army of Sinan Bassa. After which at the time when Sigismund Prince of Transylvania had won so many noble Victories against the Turks, 10000 of these Rascians, casting off that Yoke, offered themselves unto his Service. These are the only memorable Actions which are told us of them; though this last was only the attempt of some private Adventures, the whole Nation still continuing in Obedience, as before they did. But following (as they did) the Fortunes of Servia, and having a Concernment on that side of the Water, we shall there say something farther of them.

Thus have we seen when and by what means the whole Province of Old Dacia became in part subject, and in part tributary to the Turks. It is now time to pass over the Danow, and look upon the other part of this Province, called Dacia Nova, or New Dacia; containing after our account four Provinces of the Roman Empire, that is to say, both Mysia, Scythia, and Dardania, besides the two Dacia's, Mediterranea and Ripensis, interjected betwixt the two Mysia's, as before is said: all now reduced only unto two of the Turkish Provinces, namely the Countries of Servia, and Bulgaria.

5. SERVIA.

SERVIA is bounded on the East with Bulgaria, on the West with Bosnia, and some part of the Lower Hungary, on the North with the Danubius, by which it is parted from Rascia and some part of Valachia, on the South with Albania, and part of Macedonia. It containeth all Mysia Superior, and a great part of Dardania; and took this new name from the Serbi, or Sorabi, a Slavonian People, of whom more hereafter.

This Country, with the neighbouring Rascia and the modern Slavonia, was first converted to the Faith by the preaching of Cyril and Methodius, formerly remembered, between the years 860 and 890. of both which there is reserved some special Monuments. For Methodius, having obtained both of the Patriarch of Constantinople and the Pope of Rome, that the Nations by them converted might celebrate all Divine Offices in their natural Language, translated the whole Bible into the Slavonian Tongue, which still they have among them in high esteem. And Cyril is said to have devised the Servian Character, not used in this Country only, (though here originally) but also in Rascia, Bulgaria, Bosnia, Moldavia, and most parts of Russia: which Character, from this

Cyril, (or Chinril, as they pronounce it) is still called Chinrilice.

The Country was very rich and fruitful before the Conquest of it by the Turks, well stored with Mines of Gold and Silver, especially about Zerbenia a strong Town hereof. The people are rude and gross, and much given to Wine; false to their Promises, and that upon slight occasions, so that there is but little trust to be laid upon them.

Chief Rivers of this Country, are, 1. Colubria, and 2. Lim, falling into the Savus. 3. Ibar, falling into the 4. Morava; as that into the Danow at Chrysonicum, or Chrysovelitia, a strong Town of the Rascians: Principal Towns hereof, 1. Nissa, the Nessum, as I take it of Prolemy, by whom it is said to be a City of the Dardanians; now the Metropolis of this Country, and the Key thereof: besieged and taken by Amurath, the third King of the Turks, Anno 1367. 2. Vidina, by the Turks called Kiraton, taken by Perisbeg, in the beginning of Bajazet the first, and ever since the Seat of a Turkish Sanzack under the Beglerbeg or Bassa of Temeswar. 3. Cratovia, and 4. Zerbenic, rich in Silver Mines; a great temptation to the Turks to invade this Country. 5. Simandria, or Sendeavia, by some called Sponderole, by the Hungarian Zendeirin, by the Turks Semender; situate on the Danow not far from Belgrade, and taken by Amurath the II. Anno 1438. since governed by a Turkish Sanzack under the Beglerbeg of Buda. 6. Novograd, in the Borders hereof, fortified with an impregnable Castle. 7. Stimburg (in Latine Stenibrigadum) the ordinary Seat of the Despots. 8. Prisden, said by Amercator to be the Birth-place of the Emperor Iustinian; most like to be Tanresium, a City of the Dardanians, mentioned by Procopius, who maketh it the Birth-place of that Emperor, by whom it was repaired and fortified with four great Towers, thence called Tetrastium. But others (more probably) make him to be born at Lochrida, a Town of Bulgaria; of which more hereafter. 9. Scopi, by Prolemy called Scupi. And 10. Ulpianum, first built by Trajan, whose forename was Ulpian; afterwards re-edified by the said Iustinian, and called Secunda Iustiniana, (Iustiniana Prima, being in Bulgaria;) now a poor Village called Pyreth, as Latus, or Czanadre, as Marius Niger is of opinion. 11. Rhatiaria, by Prolemy, for distinction sake, called Rhatiaria Masorum, then the chief City of the Masians, of which now no Ruines are remaining. 12. Raveniczeu, the Vendenis of Prolemy, but not else observable.

Besides these Towns and many other of less note which properly belong to this Province of Servia, the Rascians also hold some Towns on this side of Danubius, the chief whereof is Chrysonicum, or Chrysovelitia, an old Town, almost wholly ruined, till repaired and fortified by the Turks, Anno 1449, who marking the convenient situation of it on the Banks of Danubius, near to the Fall or Influx of the River Morava, and how commodiously it stood both to command and to annoy the rest of this Country, and for transporting of their Forces to the other side of that great River, made it their first work to possess themselves of it, and have held it ever since with a very strong Garrison. Such other Towns as the Rascians have on this side of the River, or of lesser note, are looked on by our Author but as Towns of Servia, (by the Despots whereof they were long since conquered) where before we had them.

The old Inhabitants of this Country, such as are most considerable in the story of it, were the Bastarnae, the Dardani, and the Messi: the Tricornessi and Piceni, spoken of by Prolemy, being either Branches of the Messi, or else an obscure People not worth the looking after. Of these the Dardanians were most ancient, inhabi-inhabiting near Mount Hemus, on the Borders of Macedonia, a barbarous People, and perpetual Enemies of that Crown, most mischievous in their Attempts and Designs against it in the declining State thereof, making great and frequent inroads into that wealthy Country, with the Spoils whereof they enriched themselves. Infomuch that Philip the Father of Perseus, finding no other likely means to be rid of that Trouble, negotiated with the Bastarna, a strong and hardy Nation that dwell beyond the Danubius, to abandon their own Dwellings, and come to him with their Wives and Children, promising to assist them in rooting out the Dardani, and give them possession of their Country. But Philip dying as the Bastarna were in their March through Thrace, and no care taken by his Son to pursue the Business, they returned all home again, except 30000, which pierced into Dardania, and made their own Fortunes as they could. This practice, as it gave matter of Quarrel to the Romans against the Macedonian, so it occasioned Perseus, the Son of Philip, to make use of these Bastarna against the Romans, at whose request 10000 Horse and as many foot passed over the Danow, under the Conduct of Claudianus, a King amongst them. But finding that Perseus was too trait-laced to part with Money for their pay, they returned again, foraging the Country as they passed. But whether they passed over that River, or mingled themselves with the rest of their Nation, who upon Philip's invitation had before come over, that I do not find. Howsoever, coming by this means acquainted with the sweets of this Country, divers of them came over hither in the following times, incorporating with the Dardani, or bordering near them; infomuch as Tacitus for the most part joyns them both together, either as the same, or neighbouring Nations, first vanquished and added to the Roman Empire by C. Cn. Sertorius, immediately upon the end of the Civil Wars raised by Spartacus and the Fencers, or Gladiators; the Myfians, or the Masi, being broken at the same time also, Anno V.C. 681. As for the Masi, being the last and greatest of these Nations, they were most probably a Colony of the Myfians of the lesser Asia, anciently called Myfi, and the Country Myfia, as those Asians were, and as those Europeans are by the Greek Writers generally, and by Florus and some others amongst the Latines, though after, for distinction sake, Tacitus, Pliny, Virgil, and generally most Latine Authors, give them the name of Masi. A fierce and savage People they were held to be, Barbari barbarum, as my Author calleth them, more barbarous than commonly the Barbarians were: but, for all that, subdued by M. Licinius Crassus in the time of Augustus Caesar, who overcame them in two Battels, and after vanquished the Bastarna, and their King Delido, whom he killed in fight; the Country being reckoned after that as a Roman Province. It continued in this estate till the Fall of the Eastern Empire, when it was subjected by the Slav, or Sarmatians of Europe; and in the division of the Spoil fell unto the Sorabi, a Sclavonian People, contractedly called Sorbi, and at last Serbi, Servii, and the Country Servia. It was reduced again to the Obedience of the Eastern Emperours by Basilius Porphyrogenitus, Anno Ch. 1000, or thereabouts; but more absolutely conquered by John and Mammel Comnenus, two of his Successors: but so as they were suffered to live under their own Princes, whom they called Despots, Homagers to the Empire, and depending on it. Enriched with the Conquest and addition of Rascia, (the certain time whereof I have no where found) they were first set on by the Turks in the time of Lazarus the Despot, from whom Amurath the first took the Town of Nissa, being the chief of all this Country; provoked thereto by the great Forces which the Servian and Bulgarian Despots had raised against him for the Siege of Adrianople. And though Lazarus, terrified with this Loss, made his Peace with Amurath: yet after he brake out again into open War, in which he was overcome and slain in the Plains of Cassova, whereof more anon. To Lazarus succeeded Stephen, who quietly enjoyed his Dominions here; the Turks being in the mean time embroiled in War amongst themselves by the Sons of Bajazet. But that difference being once composed, and Mahomet absolutely settled on his Father's Throne; the Turks began again to pursue this Quarrel: which George the Son of Stephen compounded with Amurath the second, Son of Mahomet, paying the Turks a yearly Tribute, and giving him his Daughters Mary for a Wife or Concubine. But this Alliance did not so well unite their Affections, (though George did many ill Offices in regard thereof to his Christian Neighbours) nor so well settle his Estate, but that Amurath in fine dispossessed him first of Rascia, and afterwards of Servia also, for letting Huniades escape, whom he had in his power. And though Amurath was necessitated to restore Servia again, upon the Peace made with Vladislav the King of Hungary; yet Mahomet the Great, on the death of George, soon possessed himself of it. For Lazarus, the youngest of George's Sons, having deprived Stephen and George his elder Brethren (whose eyes Amurath had before put out, to make them incapable of the Government) of the Principality, compelled them to seek to Mahomet for Aid. But dying whilst these matters were in agitation, his Widow put her self and her three Sons, Peter, John and Martin, under the Protection of the Hungarians; and by that means, but with much trouble and many difficulties (the blind Brethren still solliciting the Turks against her) held the State a while, till the people, finding no assurance in that kind of Government, and weary of daily Harms they received from the Turks, yielded themselves absolutely to the Power of Mahomet, about the year 1460, continuing ever since a Province of the Turkish Empire.

6. BULGARIA.

BULGARIA is bounded on the East with the Enxine Sea, on the West with Servia, on the North with the River Danow, which is here in the East part called Ister, on the South with Thrace, called formerly by the name of Myfia Inferior, as lying lower than the other on the course of that River; as Servia, lying up the Water, was called Myfia Superior. Afterwards it was reckoned of as a part of Dacia, and in that notion was the Birth-place of Galerius, one of the Cæsars in the Empire of Diocletian, born in this Country near the Borders of Thrace, not far from the City Sardica; who therefore, in the Martyrologies of the middle Times, was called by the name of Dacianus. Finally, it took this name from the Bulgars, a Scythian People, who in the year 566. possessed themselves of it.

The Country for the most part is full of sharp and rugged Hills, Branches of the great Mountain Hemus, which divide it from Thrace, and spread themselves over all this Province, infomuch that even the Mid-lands of it are rough and stony; and though the lower parts have some Plains and Valleys, yet are they generally full of Woods and Defarts, the most unpleasant and least fertile part of both the Dacia's. The Inhabitants hereof, in some conformity to the Country, are patient of all Toil and Labour, and not easily tired, but nothing is more troublesome than their Conversation: more full of Courage than of Valour, their Courage not proceeding by the rules rules of Reason, but issuing only out of Brutishness, or a natural Fierceness.

They first received the Christian Faith towards the latter end of Justinian the 2. who died in the year 713, Trebellius being then their Prince; afterwards by the persuasion of Leo the 4. surnamed Porphyrogenetus, about the year 789. But those Converters being but partial and for private ends, they relapsed shortly after to their former Gentilism; not totally gained unto the Gospel till the Empire of Michael and Theodora, in the year of Grace 860. Subject since that unto the Jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Constantinople; but not without great opposition of the Popes of Rome, who laid a Claim unto them.

Places of most note in it are, 1. Axiu, or Axiopolis, on the Banks of Danubius, which from this Town begins to take the name of Ister. It is now called Colonamich, of no great fame otherwise. 2. Dinogetia, by Antonine called Dinagitia, now Drinagot, situate also on the Ister, opposite to the Influx of Hierafus, and the Town of Galacz. 3. Mesembria, situate on the Enxine, and still retaining the old name; in Strabo, by some error of the Transcribers, called Menebria. 4. Marcianopolis, on the Ister or Danubius also, built by Trajan in honour of Marcia his Sister, whence it had the name: in vain besieged by the Goths at their first Irruptions on this Country; and afterwards much mentioned in the Stories of that warlike People, for many Bickerings and some great Battels they had near it with the Emperor Claudian, in one of which they were overthrown by him with a mighty Slaughter. 5. Nicopolis, (by the Turks called Nigebol) built by the same Trajan on the Danow, at the Fall of the River Yatre, at his return from the Conquest of Dacia, whence was the occasion of the Name; the word Nicopolis signifying the City of Victory, sufficiently memorable for the Founder of it, more for the many great Battels fought near unto it; whereof two were principal. The first, that of Sigismund the Emperor and King of Hungary, besieging it with an Army of 130000 Christians in the time of Bajazet the first, (whose Father Amurath had taken it from the King of Bulgaria;) the issue of which Siege was this, that Bajazet coming to raise the Siege obtained the Victory, with the loss of 60000 Turks; the Army of the Christians being wholly routed, 20000 slain, all the rest almost taken Prisoners, and the young Emperor forced to fly by Sea to Thrace, thence unto Constantinople, afterwards to Rhodes, and at last, after 18 months absence, to his Realm of Hungary. The other (as it were in revenge of this) was fought betwixt Michael Vaivod of Valachia, and the Forces of Mahomet the third, over whom the Vaivod got a remarkable Victory, and, as the Fruits thereof, sacked the City it self, carrying thence great Spoil and Booty, and infinite multitudes of People; with some whereof he made up his Army, sending the rest to inhabit and manure the void and desert places of his own Dominions. 6. Sophia, called Thibiscum in the time of Ptolemy, repaired by the Emperor Justinian, who gave it this name, from a famous and magnificent Temple founded and dedicated by him unto S. Sophia. The ordinary Residence in these late times of a Turkish Beglerbeg, who hath the chief Command of Europe under the Grand Seignior. Once taken by Huniades, and by him at the command of Vladislav King of Hungary, burnt to the ground; but afterwards repaired, and more strongly fortified then it had been formerly. 7. Varna, anciently called Dionysopolis, situate on the Enxine Sea, near the Borders of Thrace; remarkable for the great Defeat there given the Christians, the first Flight of Huniades from the face of the Turks, and the death of Vladislav King of Hungary, spoken of before. 8. Sumnu,

9. Pezechium, 10. Calacium, 11. Galatza, & 12. Macropolis, all taken by the Hungarians in their way to Arna, and left again upon the issue of that Battel. 13. Silifria, at this time the chief City hereof, and the ordinary Abode of a Turkish Bassa: delivered to Amurath the first by Safemur, Prince or King of Bulgaria, out of a vain hope to save thereby the rest of his Country. 14. Parastaba, or Peristaba, the ancient Seat of the Kings of Bulgaria, till the taking of it by John Zimisces Emperor of Constantinople, who caused it to be called Johannopolis: but it soon lost that new Name, and is now an ordinary Village called Peretalar. 15. Ternova, the usual Seat or Residence of the later Princes of this Country at the Conquest of it by the Turks. 16. Budina, once of great importance, and the chief of this Country; but being taken by Huniades in the course of his Victories, it was by him burnt down to the ground, as having been the cause of much War to the Christians there: supposed to be built in or near the place where once stood the old City of Oescus, the principal Town of the Triballi, called therefore Oescus Triballorum, though some will have that City to be now called Ehida. 17. Venzina, a Town of great strength, and one of the first pieces taken by the Turks. 18. Cassova, fatal to the Christians, who in the Plains hereof had two main Defeats. The first by Amurath the first, who here discomfited Lazarus the Despot of Servia, and the greatest Army that the Christians ever raised against the Turks: Lazarus himself being slain in the Fight, and Amurath himself shortly after the Battel stabbed in the Belly by one Miles Cobelisk, a wounded and half-dead Souldier, as he was taking a view of the dead Bodies which lay there in heaps. The last by Amurath the second to the famous Huniades, whom he here discomfited after a cruel Fight continuing three days together, in which were slain 17000 Christians, and amongst them the greatest part of the Hungarian Nobility; Huniades put again to flight, and forced to some Extremities to preserve his life: the Turks buying this great Victory with the loss of 40000 men, as themselves confessed. The place in which these Fights were fought, called the Plains of Cassova, extendeth 20 miles in length and 5 miles in breadth, encompassed round with pleasant Mountains, in the form of an Amphitheatre; as if it were designed by Nature for a Stage of action. 19. Doroforum, by some of the Ancients called Rhodofolon, the Seat in Ptolemy's time of the First Legion called Italica; afterwards one of the chief Towns which the Rosses or Russians had in this Country: from whom it was taken by John Zimisces the Eastern Emperor, decaying after that time by little and little, and now wholly ruinant. 20. Achrida, the Birth place of Justinian, by whom it was beautified and enlarged, and called Justiniana Prima: who, raising the Diocese of Dacia into a Prefecture, placed here a Primate for the Affairs of the Church, which honour it doth still retain, the Bishop hereof being the Primate of all Dacia, and a Prefectus Prætorio for Affairs of State. But he being dead, the Town returned to its old name, now called Ochrida, contracted by William of Tyre to Acra, by the Turks called Ginfandil: a distinct Principate of it self in the time of Amurath the first, and by him made tributary at his first War with this Country.

And here it is to be observed, that those parts of this Country which lie next to the Enxine Sea had anciently the name of Pontus, as had also some parts of Asia minor which bordered on the same Sea also; and that the City of Tomi, as Ptolemy, or Tomos, as Pliny calleth it, to which Ovid was banished by Augustus Caesar, was a City of this European Pontus, and not of the Asian, as hath been commonly conceived. For Tomi is by Ptolemy placed amongst the Cities of Mæsia inferior.

ferior, and by Ovid on the West or left side of the Euxine, and not upon the South thereof, as appeareth by these Lines of his:

Cum Maris Euxini positos ad lava Tomitas Quarere me lesi Principis ira iubet.

That is to say;

*My wretched Prince's Wrath commands me 'bide
At Tomos, on the Euxine's Western side.*

The place is at this day called Tomiswar, according to Cælius Calpurnius: but others would have it to be the same which is now named Kiovia, in the same Tract also; not far from which is said to be a Lake called to this day Ovidow Jezecocoor, the Lake of Ovid. For what cause he was hither banished is not yet agreed on. Some say it was for the unlawful Pleasures which he enjoyed with Julia the Emperours Daughter, whom he celebrates in his Amorums under the borrowed name of Corinna. Others imagine that he had seen Augustus himself unnaturally using the company of the same Julia, his Daughter; for which the offended Prince exiled him; and that he allueth hereunto in his Book de Tristibus, saying, Cui aliquid vidi? cur noxia lumeni feci? &c. A Crime of which I dare not think that noble Emperour to be any way guilty. But certain it is, that whatsoever was the true reason of it, that which was openly pretended was the writing of those lascivious and inflammatory Books de Arte amandi; tending to the Debauchment of Youth and Corruption of Manners, which he in divers places of his Works acknowledgeth for the cause thereof.

But to return unto the business of this Country. The ancient Inhabitants hereof were towards the East the Troglodyte, dwelling near the Mouth or Fall of the River Pence into the Euxine or Black Sea; the Pencini, inhabiting on the very Mouth of it; and in a little Island opposite thereunto, called also Pence, now Picina, the Cribizi, Piarenfi and Dimenfi, the most potent Nation of them all, who alone had the happiness to vanquish Philip King of the Macedonians. For Philip having, or pretending a Quarrel against Mataas a King of the Sarmatians, entered his Country, overthrew him in a set Fight, carried with him great Booties, and among other things 20000 Mares for Breed, which he took in the Battle; it being the Custom of the Scythians and Sarmatians to use Mares only in their Wars, because their not stopping in the midst of a Race to piss could be no impediment to them in their Flight. In his return homeward these Triballi deny him passage through their Country, unless they might partake of the Spoils. This being denied, they fall from words to blows, and next to a pitched Field. In which Fight Philip was wounded with an Arrow, which, passing through his thigh, nailed him to his Saddle; his Horse being galled with the Wound, falling down to the ground. Which the frightened Macedonians seeing, and supposing him dead, fled out of the Field, leaving all their spoils to the Triballi, as if they had been sent out only to be their Receivers. So true an Observation is it, that the very Life-blood of an Army runs chiefly in the veins of the General or supreme Commander. Over-topped after this by the Mæsi, or mingled with them, they were first broken by the Mæsi, or mingled with them, of C. Curio Scribonius, spoken of before; the absolute Conquest of them and the rest of the Mæsi being reserved for the times of Augustus Cæsar. By him, or his Successors, the whole Countrey of the Mæsi being cast into two Provinces, this part of it had the name of Mæsia inferior, that, lying Westward up the Water, being called Mæsia superior, for distinction sake. By the Emperour Aurelianus, the Dacians being forced from the other side of the Danow by the Barbarous Nations, or by him prudently removed to avoid their Fury, were planted here betwixt both the Mæsi, divided afterwards into two Provinces taken out of the other, Mediserranea, and Ripensis; which, with the help of the higher Mæsia, Dardania, Prævaliana, and part of Macedonia Salutaris, made up the whole Diocese of Dacia, as before was said. The residue hereof, now passing under the name of Bulgaria, was afterwards divided into two Provinces also; another Province being taken out of the East parts of the lower Mæsia, lying betwixt the River Phanissus and the most Northern Branch of the Ister, which they called Scythia, because the Arctores; a Scythian People, did once possess it; the Romans ambitiously affecting to be thought the Conquerors of that unconquerable Nation. Successively by the Goths and Huns was this Country taken from the Romans: recovered again in or before the time of Iustinian, who had here his Officers which were subordinate to the Vicar or Lieutenant of Thrace, to which Diocese they properly and of right belonged.

But long they held not in that State, the Slavonians first, and after the Bulgarians, being Masters of them. Of the first of these enough hath been said elsewhere. These latter being a Scythian People, inhabiting on the Banks of the River Volga, were at first called Volgari, afterwards Bulgari: though some conceive they had the name of Bulgarians from Bulgar, the chief Town of their Nation: but both uncertain. In the time of the Emperour Anastasius they made their first Sally into the Provinces of the Empire, foraging Illyricum and Thrace; afterward, in the Reign of Heraclius, they were hired by Cyrrhos the Persian (with many other Barbarous Nations) to besiege Constantinople. In the Reign of Constantine surnamed Pogonatus, conquering or calling out the Slaves, they planted themselves in these Countries; compelling the Emperour to compound with them for a sum of money, from making any farther Inroad into his Dominions. From this time forward we find their Princes called by the name of Kings of the Bulgarians: the first of which after their settling in these parts was Trebellius, or Trebellis, as some call him, the first Christian Prince of the Bulgarians, by whom Iustinian the Second was first restored unto the Empire, of which he had been ousted by Asimus; and afterwards well beaten by them, and forced to fly unto Constantinople, on some Breach between them. Growing into good terms with the Eastern Emperours, they aided them against the Saracens, then besieging the Imperial City; of whom they slew 22000 as they were foraging the Country: and in the time of Leo the fourth, called Porphyrogenetus, they became Homagers to the Empire, by whose perswasion Telericus King of the Bulgarians received the Sacrament of Baptism; and thereupon was honoured by him with a Wife of the Imperial Family, and the honourable Title of a Patrician. After this time the Kings hereof had many Privileges indulged them by the Constantinopolitans, not usually communicated unto other Princes, viz. their Crown of Gold, their Tiara or Cap of Silk, and their red Shoes, for their Regal (which were also the Imperial) Ornaments. To these Kings also, and to these only, did the Greek Emperours allow the Title of Basilius, as being merely Imperial. Other Kings they called Pais, from the Latine word Rex. Insomuch that when Basilius Macedo had received Letters from Pope Adrian the second, wherein Lewis the Second the Western Emperour was called Basilius, he rased out that Imperial Attribute, and dispatched an Ambassador to Lewis, wherein he challenged it at his own peculiar Epithet. Some Quarrels after falling out, Cyrinus the Bulgarian King, in the time of Nicephorus, Successor to the Emperors Irene, invadeth Thrace, and, taking the City of Sardica, killeth that Emperour in his Tent, and worsteth Michael (who

(who succeeded) in the open Field, Mesembria, a principal City of this Country, being taken and ranfacked by him. But Bogor, of another temper, not only did receive the Sacrament of Baptism, which many of his Predecessors had intermitted; but brought his Subjects (who rebelled on the Change of Religion, and thereupon were fought with and vanquished by him) to the same Faith also: gratified for that cause by Theodora the Emperess with some large Accession into his Estate. After long Wars betwixt the Bulgarians and the following Emperours, the Fortune of the Constantinopolitan did at last prevail: Samuel King of the Bulgarians being overthrown, 15000 of his Souldiers taken and deprived of fight, and the Country conquered by Basilius the second, surnamed Porphyrogenetus, Anno 1015, from that time Tributary to the Empire, to which they did good service in the time of Constantinus Ducas, using their Help against the Uz, a new Swarm of Scythians, passing over the Ister with an Army of 60000 fighting men, and waiting Macedon and Greece. The like did John, another of the Kings thereof, aiding the Greeks against the Latines, whom they overthrew with a great Slaughter, Baldwin the Emperour of the Latines in Constantinople being taken Prisoner, sent in Bonds to Ternova, and there cruelly murdered, An. 1206. Nor were they wanting to assist them against the Turks, when they grew dangerous to that Empire by the taking of Adrianople: for the Recovery whereof they raised a great and puissant Army, unfortunately discom-fitted by the Forces of Amurath the first, Anno 1386. Provoked with which Invasion, Amurath, having settled his Affairs in Asia, with an army of 300000 fallen into Bulgaria; takes divers Places of importance, and prevailed so far, that Sasmanor the last Prince hereof, wrapping his Winding-sheet about him, to shew that he had deserved Death, prostrates himself most abjectly at the Tyrant's feet, offering to put Silistria (his strongest City) into his possession. For not performance of which Offer, his Country is again invaded, and most part of it taken from him, he being permitted to enjoy the rest upon hard Conditions, as Vassal and Tributary to the Turk Baibars, Amurath's Successor, not content herewith, picked a Quarrel with him; and made an absolute Conquest of Bulgaria, converting it into a Province of the Turkish Empire, An. 1396. In which state it hath ever since continued, governed by three Turkish Sanzacks under the Beglerbeg of Greece: the Sanzacks residing at Nicopolis, Silistria, and Sophia, in which last the Beglerbeg himself doth sometimes reside.

Mount Hæmus.

Before we enter into Greece, we must cross MOUNT HÆMUS, a Ridge of Hills extending from the Euxine Sea to the Adriatick, and thereby separating Greece both from Dacia and Slavonia. They are so high and Subject to the Weather, that Stratonicus, an old Græcian, did use to say, that eight months of the Year it was always cold, for the other four, Winter. It was affirmed by some of the ancient Writers, that from one of the highest Heads hereof as well the Adriatick as the Euxine might have been discerned: the truth of which report, upon very good reason, hath been called in question. But out of doubt, from some one Top or Summit of it there is so full a Prospect into Thrace and Macedon, that from hence Persens taking a survey of the Site of these Countries, possis per abrupta Cæstris, &c. as the Story hath it, was able to make choice of the fittest places for Forts and Castles, whereby to lock up all the passages against his enemies the Romans. In the parts bordering upon Thrace it is so rough and craggy, that it is not to be passed but at two places only. Whereof one was made by the Emperour Trajan, where is yet to be seen a mighty strong Gate built of great square Stone, by which the Passage that way was either opened or shut at the pleasure of them who had the keeping of the same, with a small Force exceeding easily defended against puissant Armies. The other, being situate near a little River by the Bulgarians called Saliza, not altogether so straight and narrow as the other, but rising high, and full of broken Rocks and dangerous Precipices, is alike impassable; defensible at ease, and without any great danger, as was experimentally found by the famous Hunides, when he attempted (but in vain) to have led his Forces this way for the Siege of Adrianople. Those parts hereof which border upon Macedonia, though somewhat open, are not much easier of ascent, the Passages through the broken Rocks and Precipices being very difficult, and not easily mastered: insomuch that when Persens, the last King of Macedon, had fortified the Straights hereof against the Romans, non reliquisse additum nisi i Colo venientibus videbatur, it was conceived (saith Florus) that there was no passage left for any Forces, unless they fell immediately from the Heavens themselves.

This great and rocky Chain of Hills, as they were vehemently exposed to Wind and Weather, so were they destitute of those Commodities which were either comfortable, or indeed merely necessary to the Life of man: which made the Passage over them in a manner impossible unto any Armies; but what were very painful, both of Cold and Hunger. Yet were they not left desolate and void of People, especially in these sides hereof which lay next to Greece; but most especially in those parts which bordered or confined on Thrace: where the Spurs and Branches of the Hills spreading far and wide and taking up a great part of the Country, occasioned the Romans, in the Division of the Diocese of Thrace into several Provinces, to call that part or Province of it which lay next to Mæsia by the name of Hamimontum, or Hamimontana. The principal Towns whereof were Adrianople, Uscudama, and Anchialus: the principal Governor thereof being a Roman President. Where, by the way, we may take notice of an Error in the common Impressions most punctually, the Laity eat all sorts of Fish without any exception, the Blood of some of which, as the Cuttle by name, is held to be a delicate Food, and in great request.

The Language they spake was of their own, of which there were four Dialects; viz. 1. the Attick, 2. the Doric, 3. the Eolic, 4. the Ionick; besides the common phrase of speech most in use among them. A Language of great fame for the Liberal Arts, but more for so great a part of the Holy Scripture first delivered in it: and for the lofty Sound, significant Expressions, genuine Suavity, and happy composition of words, so excelling all others, that even in the flourishing of the Roman Empire it so much overtopped the Latine, that the Histories of Rome it self (as by Polybius, Appian, Dion and Cassius) were written in it. It was once also the general Language of Anatolia, some parts of Italy, Provence in France, and almost all the Islands of the Mediterranean. But now, partly by the mutilation of some words and contraction of others, partly by confusion of the true sound of Vowels, Diphthongs and Consonants, and the transfixing of the Accents, and finally, by the admixture of foreign Nations it is not only fallen from its natural Elegancy, but from its largeness of extent. For it is now shut up within the Limits of Greece, and the Sea-coast of the lesser Asia opposite unto it; and there not only much corrupted, but almost quite devoured by the Turkish and Sclavonian Tongues; but specially by that which they call Frango, a mongrel Language, composed of Italian, French, and some Spanish words, used as the ordinary Speech for Commerce & intercourse betwixt Christians, Jews, Turks, and the Greeks themselves, who do not understand, and much less speak, the true genuine Greek. So that although they still retain for ordinary days S. Chrysostom's Liturgie, and that of S. Basil for the Festivals: yet being both written in the ancient and learned Greek, they are no more understood by the Vulgar Gracian, then the Latine Service by the common and illiterate Papst.

The Soil questionless is very fruitful, and would yield great profit to the Husbandman, if they would take pains in the tilling: but they, knowing nothing certainly to be their own, but all things subject to the Grand Seigneur and his Souldiers, neglect the Tillage of their Lands, on the same grounds with those who said in the Poet's Eclogues.

*Impius hac tam culta novalia Miles habebis?
Barbarus has segetes? En quis consecrimus Arva!*

Shall misbelieving Turks these Acres spoil,
Which I manur'd with so much Cost and Toil?
Shall they enjoy my care? See, neighbours, see
For whom these goodly Corn-fields tilled be!

The more natural and certain Commodities which they transport into other parts are Wines, which, in memory of the Water which our Saviour turned into Wine, and on the sixth day of January, being that day whereon this Miracle was wrought, they use to baptize: for which cause the Jews will drink none of them. They send also into other parts of the World Oil, Copper, Vitriol, some Gold and Silver, Velvet, Damasks, Turky-Grograms, &c.

This Countrey hath formerly been famous for the brave Commanders, Miltiades, Aristides and Themistocles of Athens, Lisander and Agessinus of Sparta, Pelopidas and Epaminondas of Thebes, Aratus and Philopomen of Achaia, Pyrrhus of Epirus, Philip of Macedon, the Subverter of the Gracian Liberty, and Alexander his Son, (to omit infinite others) the Subverter of the Persian Monarchy; for the divine Philosophers, Plato, Socrates, Aristotle and Theophrastus; for the most eminent Law-givers, Solon and Lycurgus; for the most exquisite Poets, Hesiodus, Homer, Sophocles and Aristophanes; for the famous Historiographers, Xenophon the Condisciple of Plato, Thucydides, Plutarch and Herodotus; for the eloquent Orators, Aeschines, Demosthenes and Isocrates; and, lastly, for the Authors and Establishers of all humane Learning whatsoever, only the Mathematicians excepted.

The chief Rivers are, 1. Cephissus, which, arising in the Frontiers of Epirus, disburtheneth it self into the Aegean Sea. 2. Erigon, and 3. Aliaemon; which, beginning their course in the more Northern parts of Macedon, end it in Thermaicus Sinus. 4. Strymon in Mygdonia. 5. Athyras, and 6. Nessus, in Thrace. 7. Symphalus, where Hercules killed the Symphalian Birds. 8. Ladon, in Arcadia. 9. Inachus, whose Daughter Io turned into a Heifer, was worshipped by the Egyptians under the name of Isis. 10. Achelous, in Epirus, much celebrated by the ancient Poets, especially by Ovid in his Metamorphosis. As is also 11. Peneus, the chief River of Thessaly, and there arising from Mount Pindus, and increased with the waters of many Rivers. Daphne the Nymph, whom Apollo is fabled to have loved, and turned into a Bay-tree, lived near or on the Banks of this River Peneus, and is therefore said to be his Daughter: as Io above mentioned was the Daughter of Inachus. Of less note,

Populifer 11. Sperchius, & irrequietus 12. Enipeus,
13. *Apidan*isque senex, lenisque 14. Amphrysus, & 15. Eas.

That is to say,
Cool Sperchius, Enipeus that troubled ran,
Smooth Amphrysus, Eas, and old Apidan,

The rest of less note, and the most eminent Mountains in each part hereof, shall be remembered in their places, as we see occasion.

Thus much of the whole Country in gross. And as for the Division of it with reference to the State of the Roman Empire, it contained in a manner two whole Dioceses, viz. Thrace, and Macedon: the first under the Præfatus Prætorio Orientis, the latter (together with that of Dacia) under the Præfatus Prætorio for Illyricum. Of these the Diocese of Macedon, lying wholly within the Bounds of the modern Greece, contained the Provinces of Macedonia Prima, 2. Macedonia Secunda, or Salutaris, (now, as in former times, called Albania) 3. Epirus Nova, taking up the Countries of Phocis, Locris, and so much of the Old Epirus as was on that side of the River Achelous, 4. Old Epirus, comprehending all the rest of that Country, 5. Thessaly, 6. Achaia, containing all Achaia, and Peloponnesus, the Countreys of Locris and Phocis excepted only, and 7. Crete or Candia, with the Island adjoining. And for the Diocese of Thrace, it was divided into the Provinces of, 1. Thrace specially so called, 2. Europa, 3. Rhodope, 4. Hemimontum, 5. Mæsia Inferior, and 6. Scythia: of which the four first make up the Body of Thrace, and shall there be spoken of; the two last, being comprehended in the modern Dacia, have been described already in their proper places. But not to bind my self precisely unto this Division, (though I shall look on this as occasion serveth) I shall consider Greece in the several Provinces of, 1. Peloponnesus, 2. Achaia, 3. Epirus, 4. Albania, 5. Macedon, 6. Thrace, 7. the Islands of the Propontick, 8. Aegean, and 9. the Ionian Seas, and 10. finally the Isle of Crete.

I. PELOPONNESUS.

PELOPONNESUS is bounded on the East with the Cretan, on the West with the Adriatick or Ionian Seas, on the North-east with Sinus Saronicus, now Golfo di Engia, on the North-west with Sinus Corinthiacus, now Golfo di Patræ or Lepanto, and on the South with the Mediterranean. So that it is almost an Island, properly called a Peninsula with the Sea, except where it is tied to the main Land of Greece by an Isthmus six miles in breadth, which the Greecians and Venetians fortified with a great Wall and five Castles. This Wall was called anciently Hexamilum, and was overthrown by Amurath the Second, who harraled & spoiled all the Country. It was afterwards in the year 1453, upon the rumour of a War, built up again by the Venetians (who then had the greatest part of this Country) in 15 days; there being for that time 30000 men employed in the work. This wall extended from one Sea unto the other; which had it been as gallantly guarded as it was hastily made up, or as it was well fortified had it been as well manned, might easily have resisted the Turks, until more means had been thought on to defend it. Not less observable, but more fruitless, was the Design of some in the elder times, to cut through this Isthmus, and make a perfect Island of it. It was attempted by Demetrius King of Macedon, Julius Cæsar, and Caius Caligula; by none more eagerly pursued then by the Emperor Nero, who, to hearten his Souldiers, loth to attempt so fruitless an Enterprize, took a Spade in hand, and busily began the work. Yet at last the Souldiers, being frightened with the Blood which abundantly broke forth, with the Groans and Roarings which they continually heard, and with the Hobgoblins and Furies which were always in their sight, perswaded the Emperor, now half out of the humour, to leave this, and enjoy them some more profitable Service. It was also given over by the former Princes on the like Discouragements. But of this Isthmus we shall add no more then these words of Ovid, and so pass towards to the Description of the Country; that is to say,

*Æquora bina suis oppugnant fluctibus Isthmum.
Et tenuis Tellus andet utrumque Mare.*

Which may be thus Englished;

Two Seas assault the Isthmus with their Waves,
And that thin Neck of Land both Seas out-braves.

As for this Country of Peloponnesus, it is in compass 600 miles, and was called at first Ægialia, from Ægialis the first King of Sicyon; next Apia, from Apis the fourth King; after that Scionia, from Sicyon the 19 King thereof; and finally Peloponnesus, from Pelops the Son of Tantalus King of Phrygia, and Nisus, Insula, the word signifying as much as the Isle of Pelops. But it is now of late called Morea; and that a Maurorum Incurfionibus, from the Incurfions of the Moors, as Mercator thinketh: but by the Moors he means the Saracens, as some others also do.

It is conceived to be the most pleasant Country in all Greece, abounding in all things necessary for the Life of man; and in such also as do serve for Delicacy and Contentment only: adorned with many goodly Plains, swelled with fruitful Hills, well stored with Ports and Havens on all sides thereof. And though no Country in the World, for the bigness of it, hath suffered in the Ruine of so many brave and stately Cities; yet is it still the most populous and best inhabited of all the Continent of Greece. Near the middle of it, in Laconia, is the Mount Tajetus, from the top whereof there was no City of note in all this Peninsula but might easily be seen. A most gallant Prospect. The whole was divided commonly into these seven Provinces; 1. Achaia propria. 2. Elis. 3. Messene. 4. Arcadia. 5. Laconia. 6. Argolis, and 7. Corinthia.

1. ACHAIA propria is bounded on the East with Argolis and Corinthia, on the West with the Ionian Sea, on the North with Sinus Corinthiacus or the Gulf of Lepanto, on the South with Elis. So called from the Achai, the Inhabitants of it; the Adjunct propria being added to difference it from Achaia in the Continent or Mainland of Greece.

Places of most consideration in it are, 1. Dyme, situate in the most Western point of it, in or near the Promontory called Araxus. The Town is now called Chiarenza, and the Promontory Cabo di Chiarenza. Not far from which is another Promontory or Head-land, of old called Rhium, opposite to another in Etolia that was called Antirrhium, divided by a very narrow Streight or Fretum, which openeth into the Bay of Corinth; fortified on each side with a Castle for defence thereof, commonly called Castelli di Lepanto: both built and fortified by Bajazet the second, when he had finished the Conquest of Peloponnesus, to secure the entrance of this Bay, both taken and demolished by Andrew Doria, Lord Admiral to Charles the V. to lay the Bay open to the Christians; and finally, both within few years recovered and repaired by Solyman the Magnificent, as they still continue. 2. Ægium, where Jupiter is said to have been nursed by a Goat, whence it had the name; Æli in Greek signifying a Shee-Goat: once a strong Town, now ruined and destroyed by the Turks; called at this day Possiza, or Bolizian. 3. Ægira, once the chief City of all this Tract, situate on a steep and inaccessible Hill; now a small Village, called Xylocastro. 4. Olenus, so named from Olenus the Son of Jupiter and Anaxithea, now called Chaminisfa. 5. Patræ, situate at the very Mouth of the Gulf, opposite to Lepanto. First called Aroe; but being by one Patreus enlarged and walled, took the name of Patræ, which name it holdeth to this day, being still called Patræ; the Town of most note on the bay of Corinth, which is called from hence Golfo di Patræ. A Town of good Trade, and much frequented not long since by the English Merchants, who had here their Consul, called the Consul of Morea: but formerly more memorable for the death of S. Andrew the Apostle, who here suffered Martyrdom. 6. Pellene, distant from the Sea about 60 Furlongs: the people whereof being constant to their old Fashions of Apparel, occasioned the Proverb of Pellenica vestis, applied to old Cloths out of Fashion. Here were once also the two Cities of 7. Helice, and 8. Buris, sunk by the violence of a Tempest into the bottom of the Sea, about the time of the Battle of Lewtra. Not to say any thing of 9. Trinea, and 10. Pheræ, two other Towns hereof, of note in the former times; so little now remaining of them, as if they had been sunk at the same time also.

But the chief Town of all this Province (if not a Province of it self) is Sicyon, situate not far from the Isthmus, in the most Eastern parts hereof, and giving to the Territory or adjoining Country (as once unto the whole Peninsula) the name of Sigionia. The Territory is rich, especially in Olives, and Works of Iron; the City the most ancient of all Greece, built within little time of the general Flood and reformation of mankind. First called Ægialia, after Sicyonia, by the name of the first and nineteenth King hereof; by whom and their Successors it was much adorned and beautified with Temples, Altars, Statues and Images of their several Gods: the ancientest Kingdom in the World, the Assyrian and Egyptian excepted only, only, and perhaps not those. It took beginning in the person of Agistius, within 50 years after the Deluge, and 200 years before the death of Noah, continuing in a Race of Princes who sway'd the Affairs of Peloponnesus, till overtopped by the growth and good fortune of the Kings of Argos. The names of whom, by reason of the undoubted Antiquity of this Kingdom, I shall here subjoin in the ensuing Catalogue of the last King of Sicyon. After whose death, A. M. 2812, the Estate hereof was governed by the Priests of Apollo, seven of them successively one after another: the first five, only years apiece; Amphytion, who was the sixth, continuing 9 years in the Regency, and Charidemus, the last of them, ruling 18 years. After whose death, or departure, I know not which, A. M. 2844, the Heracleids, who about that time returned into Peloponnesus, made themselves Masters of this Country; there being no Kings of Sicyon from this time forwards.

Of these Kings the most memorable were Agistius and Apis, the first and fourth, from whom this Peninsula had the names of Apia and Agiala; Agirius, the 6 giving name and being to the City Agira spoken of before; Marathon, the 13, of whom perhaps the famous Fields of Marathon (in the other Achaia) took denomination; Epopeus, the 17, who founded a Temple to Minerva, and therein placed his own Monument or Trophies; Sicyon, the 19, the Founder of the City Sicyon, or at least the Repairer and Enlarger of it; Pelagus, the 25, from whom perhaps the Gracians might be called Pelagii, if not known formerly by that name. After this time I find no man of note who bare sway in Sicyon, till the time of Aratus, the special Ornament of this Town, (of which a Native) and one of the principal Establishers of the Achaean Commonwealth against the Spartans and Macedonians; of which more hereafter in the general History of Peloponnesus.

2. The Country of ELIS hath on the East Arcadia, on the West the Ionian Sea, on the North Achaia propria, on the South Messenia. The chief Cities are, 1. Elis, which gives name to the whole Province. So called from Elisus the Son of Javan, and Grandchild of Japhet, who fixt himself in these parts of this Country, where he built this City, calling it by his own name, as his posterity in honour of him did the Isles adjoining, mentioned in the Prophet Ezekiel by the name of the Isles of Elisus, ch. 27. v. 7. Nigh to this City runneth the River Alpheus, of which we have spoken in Sicilia: and in this City reigned the King Augeas, the cleansing of whose Stable is accounted one of the Wonders or twelve Labours performed by Hercules. 2. Olympia, famous for the Statue of Jupiter Olympius, one of the seven Wonders, being in height 60 Cubits, composed by that excellent Workman Phidias of Gold and Ivory. In honour of this Jupiter were the Olympick Games instituted by Hercules, and celebrated on the Plains of this City. A. M. 2757. The Exercises in them were for the most part bodily, as running in Chariots, Running on Foot, Wrestling, Fighting with the Whorlbat, and the like: But so that there repaired thither also Orators, Poets, and Musicians, and all that thought themselves excellent in any laudable quality, to make trial of their several Abilities: the very Criers, who proclaimed the Victories, contending which should cry loudest, and best play his part. The rewards given to the Victor were either Garlands of Palm, or such slight remembrances; and yet the Greeks no less esteemed that small Sign of conquest and Honour, then the Romans did their most magnificent Triumphs: those which were Conquerours herein being met by all the principal men in the City in or under which they lived, and a passage broken in the main Walls thereof for their reception; as if the ordinary Gates were not capable of so high an Honour, or able to afford them entrance. Infomuch that when Diagoras had seen his three Sons crowned for their several Victories, a Friend of his came to him with this Gratulation, Morere, Diagora, nunquam enim in Caelum ascensus es, that is to say, Dye now, Diagoras, for thou shalt never go to Heaven: as if no greater Happiness could befall the man either in this life or to come, than that which he enjoyed already. The Judges and Presidents of these Games were some of the Citizens of Elis, deputed to it; highly commended for their Justice and Integrity in pronouncing who best deserved without Partiality. Of these thus Horace in his Odes:

*Sunt quos Curriculo pervererem Olympicum
Collegisse juvat, Merque servidis
Evitata Rotas, Palmisque nobilis Terrarum Dominos evehit ad Deos.*

*Quos Elæ domum reducit
Palma caelestes.*

That is to say,
Some in Olympick Dust take pride
Their Chariots and themselves to hide;
Whom the shunn'd Mark, and Palm so priz'd,
Like to the Gods hath eterniz'd.

Such as like Heav'nly Wights do come
With an Eleas Garland home.

But to proceed, after the death of Hercules these Games were discontinued for 430 years: at which time one Iphitus, warned so to do by the Oracle of Apollo, renewed them, causing them to be solemnly exercised every fourth year: from which Custom Olympias is sometimes taken for the space of 4 years; as quingue annorum Olympiades for 20 years Varro reckoneth the times before the Flood to be Obscure, those before the Olympiads, and after the Flood, to be Famous; but those that followed these Olympiads to be Historical. These Olympiads were of long time, even from the restoration of them by Iphitus until the Reign of the Emperour Theodosius, the Gracian Epocha, by which they reckoned their Account: the first of them being placed in the year of the World 3174, before the building of Rome 40 years; the last in the 440, year after Christ's Nativity. According to which reckoning this Account continued for the space of 1214 years, the memory of which remains, though the name of Olympus be not found in Peloponnesus, the Town at at this day being called by the name of Sconri. 3. Pisfa, whose people followed Nestor to the Wars of Troy; and in their return were by Tempest driven to the Coasts of Italy, where they built the City Pisfa in Tuscany. 4. Tornefe, a new Town, or the new name of some ancient City; from whence the adjoining Promontory, of old called Chelemites, is now called Cabo di Tornefe.

3. MESSENIA hath on the East Arcadia, on the North Elis, on the South and West the Sea. It takes its name from the Metropolis Messene, situate on Sinns Messeniacus, now called Golfo di Corone. 2. Pylos, where Nestor was King, now called Navarino, a desolate and poor Village not worth the noting. Of which thus Ovid speaking in the name of Penelope:

Nos Pylon, antiqua Neleia Nostris arva, Messimus; incerta est reddita fama Pylo.

To Pylos, aged Nestor's Seat, we sent;

But could not hear from thence how matters went.

3. Medon, or Methone, seated in the most Southern part of this Peninsula, from whence unto the Isthmus which joineeth it to the rest of Greece are reckoned 175 Italian miles. The Town is commodiously seated in a Demi Island, washed on the one side with the Sea, and so well fortified toward the Land, that in the opinion of most men it is thought impregnable; adorned on the South-side with a large and capacious Bay, about 3 miles wide, secure from all winds except the North, and shut up with a little Island called anciently Oenusa, but now Sapienza, which makes it one of the safest Harbours in all these Seas. It was possessed once by the State of Venice, but conquered by the Turks, after many sharp and fierce Assaults, Anno 1500, both Pylos and Corone yielding on the noise thereof. The best Retreat since that time of the Turkish Navies, and the ordinary Residence of the Turkish Sanzack, who hath the Government of this whole Province of Morea under the Beglerberg of Greece. 4. Corone or Coron, the chief Town on the Bay of Messene, called from hence Golfo di Corone, and the last which held out against the Turks for the State of Venice, once Lords of all the Sea Coasts of Peloponnesus. 5. Cyparissus, now called Arcadia, from whence the Bay adjoining hath the name of Golfo di Arcadia. Here is also the Promontory called of old Coryphasium, now Cabo Zunchi.

The people of this small Province had once a great sway in the whole Peninsula. At first they were confederate with the Spartans in so strict a League, that they mutually sent young Virgins to one another for their publick Sacrifice: but afterwards Corrivals with them for the supreme power. The Spartans, at the last getting the upper hand of them, oppressed them with a miserable Servitude. The occasion this: In the confines of this Country stood a Temple of Diana, common alike to the Messenians, Spartans, and Dores. It happened that some Spartan Virgins were by the Messenians here ravished: which abuse the Spartans pretended to be the ground of their War; the true reason indeed being their Covetousness of the sole Empire. This War broke out three several times. The first continued twenty years: in which space the Lacedaemonians, fearing their Absence would hinder the supply of Children in the City, sent a Company of their ablest young men home to accompany their Wives. Their Offspring were called Parthenae, who, coming to full growth, abandoned Sparta, sailed into Italy, and there built Tarentum. The second being of 23 years continuance, was raised and maintained by Arifomenes, one of the chief men of the Messenians, in which they prospered till Arifocrates, King of Arcadia, one of their Confederates, revolted to side with Lacedaemon. Then began they to decline, and Arifomenes was thrice taken Prisoner, still miraculously escaping. His last Imprisonment was in a Dungeon, where by chance espying a Fox devouring a dead body, he caught hold of her Tail. The Fox running away, guided Arifomenes after; till the streights of the Hole by which he went out made him leave his hold; and fall to scraping with his Nails, which exercise he never left till he had made the Hole passable, and so escaped; and having a while upheld his falling Country, died in Rhodes. The third War was like drops after a Tempest; in which the Messenians being finally subdued, were forced to abandon their Country, or become Slaves unto the Spartans, who put them to all Drudgeries and servile Works, as they did the Helots, whom they counted as their Bondmen. And to this life some of them did apply themselves with so much Obscurity, that at last it grew into a Proverb, Messina servilior, that such a one was more servile, or more slavishly used, than these poor Messenians. But the greatest part of them not brooking that heavy Yoke, passed into Sicily, and there built the City of Messana. Others were planted in Naupactium, by the State of Athenis; the rest dispersed up and down in all parts of Greece: few of them left in their own Country, till Epaminondas having vanquished the Lacedaemonians at the Battle of Leuctra, restored them to their ancient Possessions.

4. ARCADIA hath on the East Laconia, on the West Elis and Messene, on the North Achaia propria, and on the South the Sea. This Country took its name from Arca, the Son of Jupiter and Callisto; but was formerly called Pelagisa: the people whereof thought themselves more ancient than the Moon.

*Orta prius Luna, de se seditur ipsa.
Amagno, tellus Arcade nomen habet.*

The land which of great Arca took its name
Was ere the Moon, if we will credit Fame.

The chief Cities are; 1. Mantineia, nigh unto which the Theban Army, consisting of 30000 Foot and 3000 Horse, routed the Army of the Spartans and Athenians, consisting of 25000 Foot and 2000 Horse. In this Battle Epaminondas, that famous Leader, received his death's wound, and not long after died. At his last Gaspe, one of his Friends bemoaning his untimely death, Alas, said he, thou diest, Epaminondas, and leavest behind thee no Children. Nay, replied he, two Daughters will I leave behind me, the Victory of Leuctra, and this other at Mantineia. It was afterward called Antigonea; in honour of Antigonus, Tutor or Protector of Philip the Father of Persus, King of Macedon; but by command of the Emperour Adrian restored to its old name again, and is now called Mantinea. 2. Megalopolis, the Birth-place of Polybius, that excellent Historian. The one half of it had sometimes the name of Orestia, from the lodging of Orestes in it: the whole is now called Leontari; on what cause I know not. 3. Phalaea, towards the Sea. 4. Pisphus, so called from Pisphus, one of the Sons of Lycos, once King of this Country; slain by Jupiter. 5. Symphalius, situate near a Lake and River of the same name; where Hercules slew the Symphalian Birds; so great in number, and in Body, that they darkened the Sun-beams, and terribly infested this little Province, till driven thence by Hercules. Here was also in this Town a Temple dedicated to Minerva, from hence called Symphalida. 6. Tegæ, famous for the Temple of Pan, here worshipped, and from hence called Tegæans: more for the War made upon the Tegæans, or people hereof, by the Lacedaemonians; who, thinking themselves assured of Victory, brought with them store of Chains and Fetters wherewith to lead Captive their conquered Enemies; but, being overcome in Battle, were themselves bound with them, and forced as Slaves to till the Grounds of these Tegæans. Here is also in this Country the famous River Syx, whose whose water, for the poisonous taste, was called the water of Hell; by which Poets feign that the Gods use to swear, as may be every where observed; and that what God soever swore by, Sisy fallily, he was banished from Heaven, and prohibited Nectar for 1000 years.

This Country, for the fitness of it for Pasturage and Grazing, hath made it the subject of many worthy and witty Discourses, especially that of Sir Philip Sidney, of whom I cannot but make honorable mention: a Book which besides its excellent Language, rare Contrivances, and delectable Stories, hath in it all the Strains of Poetic, comprehendeth the universal Art of speaking, and to them which can discern and will observe, affordeth notable Rules for Democour, both private and publick. Which notable Gentleman, as he may worthily be called the English Heliodore, so the ingenious Author of the History of Melinus and Ariana may deservedly be called the French Sidney.

LACONIA is bounded on the West with Arcadia, on the East and South with the Sea, on the North with Argolis. Called first Lelegia, from the Leleges, by Strabo said to be the first Inhabitants of it; afterwards Oebalia, from Oebalus a King of Lacedamon; and finally Laconia, of the Lacones who succeeded the Leleges in the possession hereof, on their removal into the Islands of the lesser Asia. It is by some Writers also called Hecatompolis, from the number of an hundred Cities which it once had in it.

The Soil hereof is exceeding rich, and the Fields very spacious; yet for most part not well tilled, in regard of the many Hills and Mountains which overthwart it. Well watered with the River Eurotas, and memorable for many fair Bays and Promontories: of which the principal are the Promontories of Malea, and Tanaria, now called Cabo Malio and Cabo Matapan; and of the Bays, that called Golfo di Colochina, the Sinus Laconicus of the Ancients, into which the River Eurotas (now better known by the name of Vassilopotamo, or the Kingly River) pours his gentle Streams. The nature of the People we shall find in Sparta.

Places of most observation in it are, 1. Leuttra, situate on the Sea-side, near the Bay of Messene: of which name were two others in Greece, the one in Arcadia, the other in Achaia; but this last most memorable. 2. Amycla, so called from Amyclas, the third King of Sparta, by whom it was first founded: renowned afterwards for the Birth of Castor and Pollux, the Sons of Tyndarus; and of good note for being the Foundress of the City of Amycla in Calabria Superior, at first a Colony of this: distant from Lacedamon about 20 Furlongs. 3. Thalana, nigh to which is the Lake of Lerna, where Hercules slew the Monster Hydra; and not far off Mount Tanarus, near the Promontory Tanaria, in which the Natives shew a Cave, (believed in former times to be the Descent into Hell) out of which the Poets feign that Cerberus was dragged by Hercules. 4. Salassia, where Antigonus vanquished Cleomenes, the last King of Sparta. 5. Epidaurus, (seated on the Bay named Golpo di Napoli) now called Malvasia: a Town well built, and very well peopled; remarkable for the sweet Vines called Malvesey or Malmsey, sent from hence into all other parts in great abundance. 6. Sparta, so called from Sparta, the Son or Brother of Phoroneus, the second King of Argos, the Founder of it but afterwards beautified and enlarged by Lacedamon, the second King of this Country, it took that name also, promiscuously known by both in the best Authors. One of the Eyes of Greece, and a famous Commonwealth; but at first governed by Kings, as most of the Greek Cities in ancient times. Tyndarus, the Father of Castor and Pollux, was once King hereof. After whose death, and the death of the said famous Brethren, Menelaus was admitted King of Sparta, or Lacedamon, in right of Helena his Wife, their Sister. And though Nicostratus and Megapenthes, Sons of Menelaus by another Venter, succeeded after his decease; yet the Spartans soon rejected them, and received Orestes the Son of Agamemnon to be their King, marrying him to Hermione, the daughter of Menelaus and Helena, and consequently the Niece of Tyndarus. Tisamenus, the Son of Orestes and Hermione, succeeded next; in whose time the Heraclida, or posterity of Hercules, returned into Greece, under the conduct of Temenus, Cleoppon, and Aristodemus, Sons of Aristomachus: whereof the first possessed himself by force of Arms of the City Argos, the second of Messene, and the third conquered the City and State of Sparta; which dying very shortly after, he left unto his two Sons, Eurythene and Procles, the Roots of the two Royal Families which jointly and in common governed the Affairs of Sparta; first absolutely as Sovereign Princes, without any controul, afterwards at the direction of the Senate, and finally under the Command and Check of those popular Officers whom they called the Ephori. But because these Spartan Kings in each several period were for the most part men of Action, and often mentioned in the Histories of the elder time, I will first make a Catalogue of them, and then subjoin such Observations and Remembrances as I think most pertinent.

Eurydamidas, the Son of Agis the third, substituted his Brother Epiclides in his place. But being himself shortly after vanquished by Antigonus of Macedonia, and forced to fly his Country with his Wife and Children, the Government of the Heraclida ended, after it had continued here for the space of 900 years, or thereabouts.

Under these Kings the Government at first was Monarchical, as Plutarch termeth it, sufficiently Monarchical, if it were not more. Under Ennomus, the fourth King of the second House, the people, finding the Reins of Government let loose, began to mutiny and grow too headstrong. To bridle whom, and to restrain the Kings withal, (should they prove exorbitant) Lycurgus, the Protector of Charilaus, the sixth King of that House, did ordain the Senate, committing to them the supreme Power in matters Civil, and leaving to the Kings the ordering all Military and Sacred business. To curb the Insolencies of this Senate, who quickly found their own strength, Theopompus, the eighth King of that House, with the consent of Polydorus, the tenth King of the other, instituted a new Magistracy chosen out of the Common People, whom they called the Ephori, which grew in fine to such an height of Pride and Tyranny, as not only to controul the Senators, but to censure, fine, imprison, depose, and mutually to kill their Kings, as the spirit of Seditious moved them. So that the State of Lacedamon was at first a Monarchy under Kings; then an Aristocracy under the command of the Senate, next a Democracy under the Ephori, and finally, by those popular Officers made so plain a Tyranny, that Aristotle and Plato, two great Common-wealth-men, who died before they had embroiled their hands in the blood of their Kings, call it in plain terms tyrannide & tyrannide a most absolute Tyranny. What think you these men would have called it, had they lived to see Leonidas the third deposed, and Agis the third of that name also most barbarously murdered by these popular Villains?

But being the Foundation of this Common-wealth was first laid, and the good Laws and Politick Constitutions by which it did so long subsist in great Power and Splendour established, by the Wit and Power of Lycurgus, as before was said, we are to know concerning him, that he was the Son of Ennomus, the fourth King of the second House, slain in a popular Tumult by the Common people. Who, finding by this Essay, that the People were become too head strong for the Kings to govern, unless reduced to extreme Bondage by their Kings, which he wished not neither, took the advantage of the Minority of Charilaus to new mould the Government; and what he could not do by fair means, to effect by Arms; forcing this Charilaus, though his Nephew, when he came to age, to flee for Sanctuary to the Temple of Juno. Having ordained what Laws he pleased, and settled such a Form of Government as himself well fancied, the better to decline the Envy of so great a Change, he got leave to travel, binding the people by an Oath to observe all his Laws until his return; and, being gone, commanded at his death, that his Ashes should be cast into the Sea, left, being carried back to Sparta, the people might conceive themselves released from their Oath. By means whereof his Laws continued in force near 700 years, during which time that Commonwealth did flourish in all Prosperity. The particulars of which Institutions he that lists to see may find them specified at large by Plutarch in the Life of Lycurgus. Suffice it that the Discipline was so sharp and strict, that many went into the Wars for no other reason than on a hope to rid themselves from so hard a life; and that Diogenes, returning hence to the City of Athens, gave out that he returned from Men to Women.

As the Ephori were the last of the Heraclida, and being asked in what part of Greece he had met with the completest men, made answer that he could no where meet with Men, but that he had found some Boys amongst the Spartans. A cynical and rugged Answer, but such as carried a great deal of Judgment in it; the Spartans being more stout and resolute in all their Actions, and less effeminate in their Lives, than the rest of the Gracians. But besides the strictness of the Discipline under which they lived, there was another thing which made them with for Wars abroad, namely, the little or no power which either the Kings or People had in Civil matters, or Affairs of State, entirely left to the disposing of the Senate and the Power of the Ephori. So that the Kings, having by the Laws the Command of their Armies, were willing to engage in War upon all occasions, and the Common people as desirous to attend them in such Employments as the Kings could with. Upon these grounds War was made a Trade amongst them; beginning with the Helots, a neighbouring People, then with the rest of the Laconians, afterwards quarrelling the Messenians, their old Confederates: all which they severally subdued, and made subject to them. In the War which Xerxes made against the City of Athens, their King Leonidas the first, of the elder House, went forth to aid them; slain at the Straights of Thermopyla, courageously fighting for the Liberty of Greece: and when it was thought fit to set upon the Persian Fleet, Eurybiades the Spartan Admiral did command in chief. In pursuit of this War against the Persians, Pausanias and Agefilans were of most renown: the first in helping the Athenians to drive them out of Greece; the other in making War upon them in their own Dominions. Freed from the Persians, they grow jealous of the State of Athens, whom they looked on as their Rivals in point of Sovereignty and Glory. Hence the long War betwixt these Cities, called Belium Peloponnesiacum, managed for the most part in Peloponnesus, from whence transferred into Sicily, and at last ended in the taking of Athens: the Government whereof they changed into an Aristocracy under thirty Magistrates of their own appointment, commonly called the Thirty Tyrants. Proud of this fortunate Success, their next Quarrel was with the Bacotians, the conquered Athenians covertly, and the Persians openly, assisting the Enemy. Here their Prosperity began to leave them. For, besides many small Defeats, Epaminondas the Theban so discomfited them at the Overthrows of Leuttra and Maninea, that Sparta it felt was in danger of utter Ruine. Not long after happened the Holy War, chiefly undertook against the Phocians, wherein also they made a party: but this War being ended by King Philip, they scarce breathed more Freedom than he gave air to. But when Alexander's Captains fought for the Empire of their Master, all these flourishing Republics were either totally swallowed into, or much defaced by the Kingdom of Macedon. The Lacedamonians held the chief strength of a Town to consist in the Valour of the people; and therefore would never suffer Sparta to be walled, till the times immediately following the death of Alexander the Great: yet could not those Fortifications then defend them from Antigonus Dofon, King of Macedon, who, having vanquished Cleomenes King of Sparta, entered the Town, and was the first man that ever was received into it as Conqueror. So much different were the present Spartans from the Valour and Courage of their Ancestors. Cleomenes being forced to forsake his Country, and the Race of the Heracidae failing in him, they became a Prey to Machanidas and Nabis two wicked Tyrants; from whom they were no sooner freed, but they were made subject (in a manner) to the Power of Rome; and in the end the Town was so weak and inconsiderable, that it was not able to resist the poorest enemy; now a small Burrough called Misithra. And so I leave them to the thoughts of their former Glories, having now nothing else to boast of but the fame and memory of their Actions in former times.

6. ARGOLIS, so called from the chief City Argos, is bounded on the South with Laconia, on the West with Corinthia and Achaia propria, on the East and North with the Sea. A Territory remarkable for a most excellent breed of Horses, and from thence called Hippium.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Argos, founded by Argus, the fourth King of this Country; the chief of this Kingdom. Memorable as for other things, so 1. for the Death of Pyrrhus King of Epirus, who, having forced his Entry into it, was here ignobly slain, after all his Victories, by the hands of an old Woman, throwing a Tile at him from the top of an House: 2. for the long Race of the Kings hereof, from Inachus the contemporary of our Father Abraham. Anno 2003, unto Acrifius their last King: whose Daughter Danae, being shut up in a Tower of Brass, was deflowered by Jupiter, to whom she bore the renowned Perseus, so memorized in ancient Poets. But Perseus, having by misfortune slain his Grandfather, the old King Acrifius quitted the City of Argos as unlucky to him, and transferred the Kingdom to Mycenae, a City of his own Foundation, and so better fancied, which was by means hereof the second City of esteem in this little Province, growing in small time unto so great Riches, that it got the name of dires Mycenae, as appeareth by Horace, in whom the Horses of Argos and the Wealth of Mycenae are placed in one Verse together:

Aprum dicit, equis Argos, dire, que Mycenae.

For Horses Argos is of fame,

For Wealth Mycenae hath the name.

3. Troezen, situate on the Sinus Saronicus, (now called Golfo di Engia) the Royal Seat of Pitheus, the Grandfather of Theseus by the Mothers side, who was born here: from whence the Town in Ovid hath sometime the name of Pitheia Troezen, and Theseus many times is called Troezenus Heros; as Hercules had the name of Tyrinthius Heros from 4. Tyrinthia, another City of this Province, in which he was nursed, 5. Nemea, where Hercules slew the dreadful Lion which annointed this Country. In honour of which noble Act were instituted in time following the Nemean Games, which continued of great fame in Greece for many Ages. The Exercises were, Running with swift Horses; Whorl-bats, Running on foot, Quoting, Wrestling, Darting, Shooting. Some have referred the Original of these Games to one Opheltes, a Lacedamonian, in whose Honour they conceive them instituted, and others fetch it higher, from the War of Thebes. But this I take to be the more allowable Opinion. 6. Epidaurns, on the Sea-side, famous for the Temple of Asculapius, and the Cure of all sorts of diseases there; so called from Epidaurnus, the Son of Argus, the Founder of it. Of the same name, but of a different situation from that before mentioned in Laconia; that being seated on the Bay called Golfo di Napoli, this on that of Engia. Once called Melissa and Amera, at that time an Island, but by an Earthquake laid unto the Continent; now called Pigiada. 7. Nauplia, so called of Nauplius King of Enbasa, and Father of Palamedes, to whom it anciently belonged. A Station then, as now, for Shipping; in that regard called Nauplia Navale, now Napoli, or Neapolis, the richest and best traded in all this Tract, giving name unto a large and capacious Bay, now called Golfo di Napoli, of old Sinus Argolicus, into which the famous River Inachus, having passed through the City of Argos, doth discharge it self; so called from Inachus the Father of Io, and the Original and Progenitor of

The Kings of ARGOS and MYCENAE.

A.M.

- 2093 1. Inachus, the supposed Father of Io, from whom the Gracians are sometimes called by the name of Inachii.
- 2143 2. Phoroneus, the Son of Inachus and Melissa, from whom the said Io hath the name of Phoronis in the Poet.
- 2223 3. Apis, the Son of Jupiter and Niobe the Daughter of Phoroneus, who, leaving Greece, went into Egypt, where he taught the people Tillage, and was there worshipped afterwards in the form of an Ox.
- 2238 4. Argus the Son of Apis, and the Founder of Argos; in whose time Agriculture was taken up amongst the Gracians, from him called Argivi.
- 2308 5. Crius, by some Peirasus, the Son of Argus.
- 2363 6. Phorbas, the Son of Crius; in whose time Atlas and Prometheus are said to flourish.
- 2397 7. Triopas, the Son of Phorbas, and the Brother of another Phorbas, who planted himself in the Isle of Rhodes.
- 2442 8. Crotopus.
- 2464 9. Sthenelus, ousted of the Kingdom by
- 2475 10. Danaus, the Brother of Aegyptus; by whom being driven out of Egypt, he was made King

- King of Argos by consent of the people: the Father of those many Daughters got with child by Hercules. From him the Gracians are called often by the name of Danaei.
- 2525 11. Lyneus, Son of Aegyptus, the Brother of Danaus.
  - 2556 12. Abas, the Son of Lyneus and Hypermetra, the Daughter of Danaus.
  - 2566 13. Prætus, the Son of Abas.
  - 2606 14. Acrifius, the Brother of Prætus, and the Father of Danae; who being foretold by the Oracle that he should be slain by a Son of that Daughter, shut her up in a Brazen Tower. But Jupiter, having corrupted the Guards with Gold, got the Ladie's consent, by whom he had Perseus, so renowned amongst the Poets and Historians of those elder times.
  - 2637 15. Perseus, the Son of Jupiter and Danae, exposed by his Grandfather to the Seas, miraculously preserved, and grown into great fame by his brave Exploits. He restored Acrifius to his Throne from which he had been deposed by his Brother Prætus. But after having ignorantly and unfortunately slain the said Acrifius, he removed his Seat unto Mycenae, where he reigned together with his Son Sthenelus.
  - 2645 16. Eurythemus, the Son of Sthenelus, much spoken of for the difficult Tasks which, at the instigation of Juno, he imposed on Hercules his Foster-child, and the supposed Son of Amphitryon his Cousin-german.
  - 2688 17. Atreus and Thyestes, Sons of Pelops, on the falling of the Line of Perseus, succeeded in Argos and Mycenae; infamous for their Murders and Adultery; Thyestes abusing the Bed of Atreus, and Atreus feasting him with the Body of his own Son, whence Ovid has a Story in the Proverb.
  - 2753 18. Agamemnon, the Son of Atreus, Commander of the Greeks at the War of Troy, in which action there engaged 69 Kings of the Gracians, wasted over with a Navy of 1224 Ships; killed at his coming home by Aegisthus, his Cousin-german.
  - 2768 19. Aegisthus, the Son of Thyestes, having defiled Clytemnestra the Wife of Agamemnon in the time of his absence, by her procurement murdered him at his coming home, and usurped the Kingdom.
  - 2775 20. Orestes, Son of Agamemnon, revenged his Father's death on Aegisthus and Clytemnestra his own Mother. After which falling mad, and restored again unto his Wits, he married Hermione, Daughter of Menelaus and Helena, by whom he had the Kingdom of Sparta also.
  - 2803 21. Penibulus, the Son of Orestes, and the last King of this Line, ousted of his Estate by the Dores and Heracidae, who made themselves Masters of all Peloponnesus, which they possessed untill the Conquest of it by the Macedonians.
7. CORINTHIA is a little Region, lying towards the Isthmus or Neck of Land which joineeth Peloponnesus to the rest of Greece, betwixt Argolis and Achaia propria. It conteyneth only the Territory of the City of Corinth, not large, nor very fruitful of those Commodities which the rest of this Peninsula doth abound withal;

as being mountainous and hilly, and, by reason of the nearness of the Sea, full of craggy Rocks. The chief, and indeed the only, Cities of note in it are, 1. Centraea, the naval Road or Station of Ships for Corinth, mentioned Acts 18. 18. and Rom. 16. 1. in both Texts reckoned a distinct Town from Corinth, as indeed it was; situate on that Bay which openeth into the Cretan Sea, called anciently Sinus Saronicus, now Golfo di Engia; and consequently opposite to 2. Lechaum, the other Naval Road for Corinth, situate on the Western Bay, called of old Sinus Corinthiacus; now the Gulf of Lepanto. 3. Corinth it self, commodiously situate for the Command of all Greece, (had not the Inhabitants been more given to Merchandise than unto the Wars) as being seated on the bottom of the Neck or Isthmus, the Ionian Sea upon the West, and the Aegean on the East, washing the Walls thereof, and giving it on each side a Capacious Haven; in which regard it is called by Horace bimaris Corinthus. It is in compass about Eleven miles, for Strength impregnable, for Command as powerful, Mastering both Seas on which it stood, and cutting off all passage from one half of Greece to the other: to which last end the Castle called Acrocorinthus, looking into both Seas, served exceeding fitly; and was therefore called one of the Festors of Greece. The City is rich, very well Traded, and neatly built, most Houses beautified with handfom Pillars, from then called Corinthians; more memorable for the Wealth of the People, and the conveniency of the Situation, than for any notable Exploits performed by them, or any great Influence which they had on the States of Greece. But in regard of the Wealth, Greatness, and Situation, accounted by the Romans one of the three Cities which they held capable of the Empire, Carthage and Capra being the other two. In this City lived the famous (or infamous) Whore Thais, who exacted 10000 Drachmas for a single night's Lodging; which made Demosthenes cry out, Non emam tanti pœnitere, and occasioned the old By-word,

'Tis not for every man's avail

Unto Corinth for to Sail.

Near hereunto stood the Acrocorinthian Mountains, at the foot whereof the City, and on the top whereof the Castle called hence Acrocorinthus, were seated: out of which flowed the famous Fountain named Pyrene, of old consecrated to the Muses; by Perseus called Fons Caballinus, because seized by the ancient Poets to have been made by the Horle Pegasus dashing his foot against the Rock. And on the other side hereof in the Isthmus were celebrated yearly the Isthmian Games, ordered by Theseus in honour of Neptune; in imitation of the Olympick devised by Hercules in honour of Jupiter. The Exercises were much the same, and the reward no other than a Garland of Oaken Boughs: yet they drew yearly a great resort of people to them; partly to exercise themselves and behold the Sports; and partly to sacrifice to Neptune, who had hard by a famous Temple.

As for the Fortunes of this City, it was at first called Ephyre, at that time a small and obscure place; but beautified and repaired by Corinthus, the Son of Pelops, it took the name of Corinth; governed by him and his posterity, till the coming of the Heracidae into Peloponnesus, at what time one Aleres of the Race of Hercules possessed himself hereof, with the name of King, A.M. 2849. Twelve Princes of his Line enjoyed it for the space of 220 years and upwards: when the House failing in the person of Automanes, they were governed by temporary Officers, like the Archontes of Athens. Continuing under this Government 124 years, the City was seized on by one Cypselus, A.M. 3294, who left it to his Son Periander, one of the Seven wise men of Greece, counted a Tyrant in those those times, for no other reason than that he had suppressed the Popular Government. After whose death, Anno 3364, the City did recover its former Liberty. In the Battle between Athens and Lacedæmon, and other the Estates of Greece, for the Superiority, he did little meddle; the aim of this people being Wealth, not Honour; not interested in any Action of renown in all those times, but in the sending of Timoleon to the aid of the Syracusans against the Tyrant Dionysius, who did Lord it over them. It was subdued, together with the rest, by the Kings of Macedon; and with the rest restored to Liberty by the power of Rome: under whom growing still more rich, and withal more insolent, they abused certain Roman Embassadors. But irasci populo Romano nemo sapienter potest, as is said in Livius, which the Corinthians found too true; the City being besieged, sacked, and burnt unto the Ground by Lucius Mummius, a Roman Consul, Anno U. C. 670. In the burning whereof there were consumed so many goodly Statues of Gold, Silver, Brass, and other Metals, that, being melted into a lump, they made up by that fatal chance the so-much estimated Metal called Æt Corinthium, more highly prized in Rome than Gold or Silver. Repaired again, it was of great esteem in the time of the Emperours, converted by St. Paul to the Christian Faith, and having flourished a long time in Pride and Pleasures, decayed by little and little, till it came to nothing, and is now a small Burrough called Crato.

Having thus spoken of the several Estates of Peloponnesus, it rethinks that we speak somewhat of the Estates of the whole, varied according to the Fortunes of those particular, which had most Influence on the same. The Affairs hereof were a long while swayed by the Kings of Sicily, whence it had the name of Sicilyonia, restrained afterwards to the Territories of that City only. But when the Kings of Argos came in place and power, it depended much upon their pleasures; from Apis the third King whereof, (if not rather from Apis the fourth King of Sicily) in the opinion of some Writers, it was named Apia. But Pelops the Son of Tantalus King of Phrygia, coming into Greece, and marrying Hippodamia, Daughter of Oenomaus King of Elis, became the most powerful Prince of all this Peninsula, taking from him the name of Peloponnesus. The Kingdom of Mycena, growing into Power and Credit, had the next turn in swaying the Affairs hereof for a certain season; as after that the Doris and Heraclida, possessed at once of Argos, Sparta Corinth, and Messene. The Spartans, getting the Preeminence over all the rest, were the next who governed the Affairs of it, and they held it long, having first conquered Laconia, and subverted the Estate of Messene; by means whereof, and by their fortunate Success against the Persians, they became almost absolute in their Commands, without any Competitor. But their Power being broken by Pelopidas and Epaminondas in the Theban War, the petty States hereof began to take heart again, and stand upon their own Legs; as they did awhile, till the Kings of Macedon succeeding Alexander the Great brought them once more under, and made them Fellow-servants with their Spartan Masters. In the Conquests which ensued in Macedon amongst the Competitors for that Kingdom, Patras and Dyme, two Cities of Achaia propria, first united them in a strong League of Amity, at such time as Phylarchus first went into Italy: into which Confederacy the Cities of Tricaria and Phara shortly after came, and not long after that of Egira, and the rest of Achaia propria. Their Affairs were first governed by two Prætors with Advice of the Senate, as afterwards by one alone with the like Advice, of which Marcus Carinensis was the first, and Aratus of Sicilyonia the second. The ground thus laid, and the reputation of this new Commonwealth increasing by the Vertue of Aratus, the Epidaurians, Træzenians, Argives and Megarians became Members of it, maintaining gallantly the Liberties of Peloponnesus, till finally mastered by the Romans. In the Division of whose Empire it fell, with all the rest of Greece to the Constantinopolitans, and in the declining of their Fortunes, when the Latins got possession of the Imperial City, most of the Sea-Coasts of it were allotted to the State of Venice; the Inland parts formerly parcelled out amongst many Princes whom they called Despots, continuing as before they were. By Isabel, a Daughter of one of these Despots, (and as it seems the chief among them) married to Ferdinand, Son of James the first, and Father of James the second King of Majorca, the Title of Prince of Majorca came into that House; used by them and the rest of these Pitit Princes, till all together were made a Prey to the Turkish Tyrants, Mahomet the Great, and Bajazet the second, by whom they were wholly conquered. For howsoever Thomas and Demetrius, Brethren of that unfortunate Prince Constantinus Paleologus, were received and obeyed by those petit Princes: yet being unable to hold out against the Conquerour, they became his Tributaries. But their falling out amongst themselves, and neglecting then to fend in the Tribute agreed upon, gave Mahomet the Great occasion to invade the Country, and under colour of aiding one Brother against the other, to destroy them both, as he did accordingly: Demetrius being carried Prisoner to Constantinople, and Thomas forced to abandon Peloponnesus, and fly to Italy, An. 1457. Such Towns hereof as belonged to the State of Venice followed the same Fortune also in the time of Bajazet, by whom they were all taken at the last, and the whole Country brought under his obedience, Anno 1500, or thereabouts. Governed ever since that time by a Turkish Sanzack under the Beglerbeg of Greece, who hath his Residence at Modon, a Regiment of 1000 Horse to secure the Country, and 700000 Aspers (that is to say, 140000 Crowns) a year for his Entertainment.

2. ACHÆIA.

ACHÆIA is bounded on the East with the Ægean Sea, on the West with Epirus, on the North with Thessaly, on the South with Peloponnesus and the Seas thereof. Called anciently Hellas from Hæles the Son of Deucalion; but whence it had the name of Achaia, is not yet agreed on: though sure I am that from hence the Inhabitants of it were called Achivi, a name communicated afterwards to all the Græcians) to difference them from the Achæi of Achaia propria.

The Country is famous in the Authors of the elder times, more for the Gallantry of the Men, than any great goodness of the Soil and place: yet that is sufficiently memorable for the Hill Hymettus, swarming with Bees, plentiful of the sweetest Honey, and rich in Mines of excellent Marble; as also for the River Cephissus, which runneth almost through the whole length hereof; divided into two main Streams, of which the one is called Aopos, the other retaineth its first name, to which Deucalion did repair to be directed in the Restauration of Mankind, as the Poets Fable.

It was divided anciently into these seven Parts; viz. 1. Attica, 2. Megaris, 3. Bæotia, 4. Phocis, 5. Locris, 6. Doris, and 7. Ætolia. A Division now as much diffused as the name of Achaia, changed by the Turks into that of Lebadaia, of which more anon.

1. ATTICA bath on the West Megaris and some part

Part of Bæotia, on all other parts compassed with the Sea: so called from Athens, the chief City. The Soil for the most part is very barren and craggy; yet by the Arms and Industry of the People made both rich and famous; inasmuch as the yearly Revenues of the State of Athens were 1200 Talents. The Money current in this Country was commonly stamped with an Ox, whence came the By-word Bos in lingua, applied to such Lawyers as were bribed to say nothing in their Client's Cause. Not much unlike to which was the Proverb rising from the Coin of Ægina (an Isle adjoining) stamped with the figure of a Snail, viz. Virtutem & Sapientiam vincunt Tarditudo.

Places of most observation in it were, 1. Phyla, a strong Fortrefs on the Borders of Bæotia, surprised by Thrasybulus and others of the banished Athenians, during the Government of the thirty Tyrants: the taking whereof was the first step towards their own and their Country's Liberty, which soon after followed. 2. Eleusis, on the Borders of Megaris, almost impregnable fortified by the thirty Tyrants when they had the command of Athens, by whom it was designed for their Retreat in all times of Danger. But having withdrawn hither on the taking of Phyla and Piræus by the Thrasybulians, they found strong Walls a weak defence for so much Wickedness, being trained out as to a Parly, and so deprived of the Place and their Power together. It was first built by one Eleusius, who entertained Ceres as his was in Quest of her Daughter Proserpina; who, to reward him, taught him the use of Agriculture; and he in honour of her built here a Temple. Hence Ceres in the Poets is called Eleusina, and her Sacrifices Sacra Eleusinia; and sometimes the City also Cerealis Eleusis, so called by Ovid in the seventh Book of his Metamorphoses. 3. Rhamnus, upon the River Aopos, famous for the Temple of Amphiarus, and the Statue of the Goddess Nemesis, hence called Rhamnusia in the Poets: This Nemesis, or Rhamnusia, being the Goddess of Indignation, punished those who made themselves unworthy of their present Fortunes. 4. Trycorium, of more Antiquity than fame. 5. Marathon, on the South-side of the River Aopos, opposite to Rhamnus; of great note for the Discomfiture given by Miltiades the Athenian to the numerous Army of Darius, consisting of 200000 and 100000 Horse: the Emulation of which noble Victory started such brave Resolves in the breast of Themistocles. As memorable in the Poets of those elder times for the Marathonian Bull there slain by Theseus. 6. Mopsoia, the ordinary Dwelling-place of Theseus, before he fixed his Seat at Athens. It being at this Town that he restored Helena (whom he had before stoln from her own Country) to her two Brethren Castor and Pollux; of which both Rape and Restitution we find mention in Ovid, the one in the Epistle of Oenone to Paris, the other in that of Hermione to Orestes, in which last it is said expressly, Reddita Mopsoia Tyndaris urbe Soror, that is to say, that she was delivered to her two Brethren (who had taken much pains in seeking for her) in the Town of Mopsoia. 7. Piræus, the Port town to Athens, and the ordinary Station for their Shipping, the Haven hereof being capable of 400 Sail; distant from the City about two miles, but joynted unto it by two long Walls reaching from the one to the other, for securing the conveyance of their Merchandise to and from the Sea. The Port it self was impregnable fortified by the Advice of Themistocles. But as these long Walls were broken down by the command of the Spartans, when the City of Athens was taken by them; so were the Fortifications of Piræus it self demolished by the command of Sylla, in his War against Mithridates King of Pontus, the better to keep under the Athenians. 8. Panormus, a Sea-town also, and of very good Trade, but not of such importance as the other was. 9. Athens, one of the Rices of Greece, and the chief of Attica, situate from the Sea two miles, as before was said; the Haven of Piræus serving it with all Commodities which came from other parts by shipping. First built by Cecrops the first King of it, by whom it was called Cecropia, A.M. 2409; repaired afterwards by Theseus, and furnished with good Laws by Solon; and finally thus named from Minerva, (whom the Greeks called Athene) to whom they dedicated, and in whose Honour there were yearly kept some solemn Games, called Panathænaia. A City heretofore adorned with all those excellencies of Strength and Beauty which Art or Cost could add unto it. Renowned, as for many things, so for three especially: 1. For the inviolable Faith of the Citizens in all their Leagues, and most firm Affection to their Friends: so that Fides Attica grew in the end unto an Adage. 2. For the famous Scholars which here taught and flourished, this being so happy a Nursery of the choicest Wits; and so fitly seated for the Muses, that the very Natives, being in other Countries, could sensibly perceive some want of that natural Vigour which at home was resistant in their spirits. Trā ut corpora ipsius Gentis separata sint in alias Regiones, Ingenia verò solis Athenienium muris clausa esse existimes, as Pellerus hath it. Yea and, to say the truth, it was a most famous Univerfity, from whose great Cistern the Conduit-pipes of Learning were dispersed over all the World. Yet did not Learning so effeminate or soften the hearts of the people, but that 3. This one City yielded more famous Captains than any in the World besides, not excepting Rome; Miltiades, Aristides, Themistocles, Simon, Pericles, Alcibiades, Phocion, and divers others of great name. Who though they were the men that both defended and enlarged this Commonwealth, yet were the people so ungrateful to them, or they so unfortunate in the end, that they either died abroad in Banishment, or by some violent death at home. Themistocles, the Champion of Greece, died an Exile in Persia, Phocion was slain by the people, Demosthenes made himself away by Poison, Pericles was many times endangered, Theseus their Founder first depofed, and then desperately imprisoned, Aristides, Alcibiades, Nicias, &c. banished for ten years by the Ostracism; a form of Punishment, so called, because the name of the party banished was writ on an Oyster-shell; and only used towards such who either began to grow too popular, or potent among the men of service. Which Device, allowable in a Democratick, where the over-much powerableness of one might hazard the Liberty of all, was exercised in spite ofner than for desert. A Country-fellow meeting by chance with Aristides, desired him to write Aristides in his shell; and being asked whether the man whose Banishment he desired had ever wronged him? he replied, No, he was only sorry to hear folk call him a good man. We find the like unfortunate end to most of the Romans so redoubted in War. Coriolanus was exiled, Camillus confined to Ardea, Scipio murdered, with divers others; only because their Vertue had lifted them above the pitch of ordinary men. Ventidius was disgraced by Anron; Agricola poisoned, with the privacy of Domitian; Corbulo murdered by the command of Nero: all able men, yet living in an Age wherein it was not lawful to be valiant. In latter times it so happened to Gonsalvo the great Captain, who having conquered the Kingdom of Naples, driven the French beyond the Mountains, and brought all the Italian Potentates to stand at the Spaniards devotion, was by his Master called home, where he lived obscurely, though honoured after his decease with a solemn Funeral. Worse fared the Gaifes and Biron in France; worse Essex, and Dudley of Northumberland, with us in England. Neither will will I omit William Duke of Suffolk, who having served 34 years in our Wars with France, and for 17 years together never coming home, at his return was quarrelled, and safely murdered. It were almost impiety to be filer of Job, the bravest Souldier and most fortunate Leader that ever fought the Lord's Battles, and yet was killed at the horns of the Altar. Whether it be that such men be born under an unhappy Planet, or that Courtiers, and such as have best opportunity to endeavor men of War unto their Sovereigns, know not the way of commending their great Deserts; or that Envy, the common Foe to Virtue, be an hindrance to it; I am not able to determine. And yet it may be that Princes naturally are distrustful of men of action, and are not willing to make them greater whose name is great enough already. And it may be the fault is in the Souldiers themselves, by an unreasonable over-valuing of their own Performances, as if the Prince or State were not able to reward or prize them: which was the cause of the death of Silius in the time of Tiberius. Concerning which Tacitus giveth us this good note, That Over-merit in great Subjects is exceeding dangerous, and begets Hate in stead of Favours. Beneficia eo usque lata sunt, dum videntur exsolvi posse; ubi multum anteverterunt, pro gratia Odium reddunt, saith that wise Historian.

But to look back again on Athens: it was first built by Cecrops, the first King thereof; governed by him and his Posterity with no lower Title for 400 years, as is apparent by this following Catalogue of

The Kings of A T H E N S.

- A.M.*
2394 1. Cecrops, who first made Jupiter a God, and ordained Sacrifices to be offered to him, as Pausanias writeth.
2444 2. Cranæus, ousted of his Kingdom by 2453 3. Amphictyon, the Son of Dencalion, and Uncle to that Amphictyon who first instituted the supreme Court of the Amphictyones, or Common-Council of all Greece.
2463 4. Erichthonius, the Son of Vulcan.
2513 5. Pandion, the Father of Progne and Philomela, so famous in the old Poets; of whom more hereafter.
2553 6. Erichthonius, whose Daughter Orithyia was ravished by Boreas King of Thrace.
2603 7. Cecrops II. Brother of Erichthonius.
2643 8. Pandion II. Son of Erichthonius.
2668 9. Ægeus, Son of Pandion the second, of whom the Ægean Sea took name.
2706 10. Theseus, the Son of Ægeus, and Companion of Hercules, vanquished the Minotaur in Crete, collected the People of Attica into a body, and incorporated them into the City of Athens, which he had beautified and enlarged.
2746 11. Mnestheus, the Son of Peteus, Grandchild of Erichthonius, served with the other Greek Princes at the War of Troy.
2769 12. Demophon, the Son of Theseus, restored unto his Fathers Throne on the death of Mnestheus.
2802 13. Oxyntes, Son or Brother of Demophon.
2814 14. Aphydas Son of Oxyntes, slain by his Brother.
2815 15. Thymades the last of the Line of Erichthonius.
2823 16. Melanthius of Meffene, driven out of his own Kingdom by the Heraclids, obtained that of Athens.
2860 17. Codrus, the Son of Melanthius, the last King of Athens, who, in the Wars against the Peloponnesians, having Intelligence by an Oracle that his Enemies should have the Victory, if they did not kill the Athenian King, attired himself like a common Beggar, entered the Peloponnesian Camp, and there played such Pranks, that at the last they were fain to kill him. Which when the Enemy understood, they thought themselves by this means deprived of all hopes of Success, and so broke up their Army, and departed homewards. For to the people of Athens did so honour his memory, that they thought no man worthy to succeed as King, and therefore committed the managing of the Estate to Governors for term of Life, whom they called Archontes: the first Archon being Medon, the Son of Codrus. They differed not from the former Kings in point of Power, but only in the manner of their Admission: the former Kings claiming the Government by Succession in right of Blood; and these Archontes holding by Election only: whose names here follow in this List of

The perpetual Archontes in the State of A T H E N S.

- A.M.*
2882 1. Medon, the Son of Codrus.
2902 2. Acastus, the Son of Medon.
2938 3. Archippus, the Son of Acastus.
2957 4. Therippus, the Son of Archippus.
2998 5. Phorbas, the Son of Therippus.
3029 6. Megacles, the Son of Phorbas.
3059 7. Diogenetus, the Son of Megacles.
3087 8. Pherculus, the Son of Diogenetus.
3106 9. Arithon, the Son of Pherculus.
3126 10. Thespius; in whose time began the Kingdom of Macedon.
3153 11. Agamestor.
3173 12. Æschylus, the Son of Agamestor. After whose death, Anno Mundi 3195, the Athenians, weary of these Governors for term of Life, as being less obnoxious to the Check and Censure of the People, chose themselves Officers or Archontes for ten years onely: at the end of which time they were to yield up their places, and make room for others. But being a People greedy of Novelty and desirous of Change, they had only seven of those Decennial Archontes; their Officers from that time forwards being chosen annually: which Officers, being nine in number, we may call most properly the Provost, the chief Bishop, the Marshal, and the six chief Justices, all chosen out of the Nobility. And so it held for the space of 170 years, till the time of Solon; who was the first which put the Supreme Authority into the hands of the People; and gave the first hint unto that Democracy which afterwards prevailed in Athens by the help of Pericles, who, being one of the great Council of the Areopagites, took from them a great part of their Power in deciding Controversies and Suits in Law, putting them over to the Judgment of the Common people. A Government so dearly loved by the Athenians, that in all the Cities which they conquered, or restored to Liberty, or won to their Party from the Spartans, they caused it to be admitted: as on the other side the Spartans introduced and confirmed an Aristocracy (their own beloved Government) in all the places where they prospered. As for the Court of the Areopagites, of much fame in Athens, it consisted from the first beginning in nine chief Offices, of such as had born some of the nine chief Offices, who, being once admitted, held for term of Life. First instituted in the time of Demophon, the Son of Theseus, and called by the name of Areopagites, either for that they held their Court in the Street of Mars, by Arcis only, mentioned Aët. 17.22. or because Mars, being being accused for a Murder, did first plead before them. A Court which held in estimation under all these Changes, and so continued till the time of the Roman Empire.

But to return again to the Story of Athens. In or about the latter end of the life of Solon, Pisistratus altered the Free State, and made himself the absolute Master of the City: but he once dead, the People regained their Liberty, driving thence Hippias the Son of Pisistratus; who hereupon fled for Succour to Darius the Persian Monarch, occasioning by that means the first coming of the Persians into Greece. What success the Persians had in Greece the Histories of those Times abundantly inform us: Darius being vanquished by Miltiades at Marathon, and Xerxes by Themistocles at Salamis. Yet did not Athens cease to be clear but that it was taken by Xerxes, though indeed first abandoned and voluntarily dismantled by the Athenians. When the Persians were retired homewards, the People of Athens re-edified their Town and strongly fortified it with high and defensible Walls: which done, they put their Fleet to Sea, and spoiled the Coasts of Persia in all quarters, enriching their City with the Spoils, and enlarging their Power and Dominion by the addition of many Islands and Sea-Towns. Hereby they grew unto that Wealth and Potency, that they were suspected by their weaker Neighbours, and envied by their stronger, the Lacedaemonians especially; who, fearing to lose their ancient Priority over Greece, but pretending the Surprisal of Potidea, a City of Thrace, from the Corinthians, and some hard measure by them shewed upon the Megarenses, made War upon them. In the beginning of this War the Athenians not only resisted the whole Power of all Greece confederate against them, but so exceedingly prospered, that the Spartans fled for Peace, and could not get it. But the Scales of Fortune turned. For after they had held out 28 years, they were compelled to pluck down the Walls of their City, and submit themselves to the will and pleasure of the Spartans, now by the puillance and good fortune of Lysander become their Masters: by whom the Government was changed, and an Aristocracie (or rather Oligarchie) established under 30 Magistrates, known commonly by the name of the 30 Tyrants, expelled not long after by the Valour of Thrasybulus and his Associates, as hath been touched upon before. Not long after the end of this War, which the Historians call Bellum Peloponnesiacum, the Persians, seeing how the Spartans, not having now the State of Athens to oppose them, began to work upon their Empire furnished Conon, a noble Athenian Gentleman with a Navy so well provided, that he overcame the Lacedaemonians in a Fight at Sea, and thereby put his Countrymen into so good heart, that they made a party in the War called Bellum Sacrum, composed at the last by Philip of Macedon, who brought not only the Thebans, whom he came to aid, but the Athenians, Spartans, and the rest of the adverse party, under his Command. A Servitude from which they were never freed, till as well all the Cities which they conquered, or restored to Liberty, or won to their Party from the Spartans, they caused it to be admitted: as on the other side the Spartans introduced and confirmed an Aristocracy (their own beloved Government) in all the places where they prospered. As for the Court of the Areopagites, of much fame in Athens, it consisted from the first beginning in nine chief Offices, of such as had born some of the nine chief Offices, who, being once admitted, held for term of Life. First instituted in the time of Demophon, the Son of Theseus, and called by the name of Areopagites, either for that they held their Court in the Street of Mars, by Arcis only, mentioned Aët. 17.22. or because Mars, being cayed, and is now an ordinary Burrough, (by the Turks called Serines) but still preserveth the Reputation of an Episcopal See, the Bishop of it holding up the Title of Atheniensis.

2. MEGARIS is bounded on the East with Attica; on the West with the Bay of Corinth, on the North with Boeotia, and on the South with the Isthmus and the Gulf of Engia: So called from Megara, the chief City.

This is the least Province of all Greece, and not very fruitful, (the Country for the most part being hard and rocky) not beautified with many Cities. The principal of those which were are, 1. Pega, or Paga, situate on the Bay of Corinth and spoken of both by Pliny and Ptolemy; but not otherwise memorable. 2. Megara, (now Megara) first built by Megareus, the Son of Apollo, and from him thus named. Remarkable in former times for a Sect of Philosophers, called from hence Stoa Megarica, founded by one Euclide, a Disciple of Socrates; of whom see Laertius. More memorable in the Poets for Nisus, once the King of this little Territory on whose Head there is said to have grown a purple Hair, on which the preservation of his Life and Kingdom did depend: Which Jewel his Daughter Saylla is said to have delivered unto King Minos, her Father's Enemy, of whom, then besieging this City, upon the sight of him from an high Turret, she became enamoured. But he rejecting her and her Present both, after the taking of the City returned into Crete: which the unhappy Woman seeing, she threw her self after him into the Sea, and was turned into the Bird called Ciris. I leave the moralizing of the Fable unto the Mythologists: observing only by the way the antiquity of that politick practice, to love the Treason, and hate the Traitor. But the glory of this City did not end with Nisus. For, shaking off the Cretean Yoke, it became sui juris once again: and being conveniently seated on the very Isthmus, amounted to that height of Prosperity, that they contended with the Athenians for the Island of Salamis. And in this War they so crushed the power and spirit of Athens by one fatal Overthrow, that the Athenians, to prevent all the like Disasters, did ordain by Law; that whosoever mentioned the Recovery of Salamis was to lose his Life: so that Solon was compelled to feign himself frantick, the better, to propound the Enterprize. In which although the State of Athens got the Isle of Salamis, yet did the Megarenses continue a Free people, till brought under (with the rest) by the Macedonians, and with them made subject unto Rome.

3. BOEOTIA is bounded on the South with Megaris and the Bay of Corinth, on the North with the River Cephissus, on the East with Attica and a Branch of the Ægean Sea, and on the West with Phocis. Thus named from Bæ; which in Greek signifieth an Ox; because when Cadmus, weary of seeking his Sister Europa, (whom Jupiter had stoln out of Phoenicia) came to the Oracle at Delphos, he was commanded to follow the first Ox he saw, and where the Ox did rest it self there to build a City.

In the Country is nothing singular, but an ancient Custom of burning before the Door of an House in which a new-married Wife was designed to dwell, the Axle-tree of the Coach which brought her thither; giving her by that Ceremony to understand, (as Plutarch telleth us in his Morals) that she must frame her self to live and abide with him, without hope of departure. In this Country also are the Streights of the Mountain Oeta, from the neighbouring Baths called Thermopylae, not above 25 foot in breadth; which in the War that Xerxes made against the the Greeks were valiantly defended by Leonidas King of Sparta with no more than 300 of his men, who, having valiantly resisted that Army which in his passage out of Perfa had drank Rivers dry, and slain at least 30000 of them, died every man upon the place. To hide the greatness of which Loss, lest it should terrifie the rest of his Army which were coming on, Xerxes commanded all the slain men to be buried in several Pits, except a thousand; as if no more than they had been lost in that passage.

Places of most observation in it are, 1. Thebes, on a River of the same name, at the Fall whereof into the Bay it is pleasantly seated; shadowed on the North with a Branch of the Mountain Helicon and consecrated, as that was, unto the Muses, hence called Teippiades in the Poets. 2. Plataea; nigh to which Mardonius, General to the Persians, was overcome by the Greeks, with the loss of Mardonius himself and 160000 men on the Persian side; and on the other no more than 31 Spartans, 16 Arcadians, 52 Athenians, and about 600 of the Megarenses. In memory of which brave exploit, and to preserve the names and honour of those Worthies who there laid down their Lives for the Liberty of Greece, there was a Festival kept annually by the Plataeans in the month of September, with solemn Sacrifices, and a kind of divine acknowledgment unto the deceased, continued from the time of Arifides the Athenian, who first ordained them, to the days of Plutarch, who records it; but how long after I am not able to say. In this great Fight the commander in chief was a noble Spartan, called Pausanias, who, afterwards having a Design to make himself Sovereign of all Greece, and being discovered in the Practice, fled for Sanctuary to the Temple of Pallas. From whence because it was counted Sacrilege to constrain him by violence, it was unanimously resolved to wall up the Entrance his own Mother laying the first stone. It is recorded that before the fighting of this Battle, the Athenians had been told by the Oracle that they should be Conquerors, if they fought upon their own ground: whereupon the Plataeans, within whose Territories the Persians had prepared to fight, bestowed that Field on the State of Athens. In requital of which noble act, Alexander the Great re-edified and enlarged their City, having been first burnt and sacked by the Persians, and after levelled with the ground by the Lacedaemonians, because confederate with Athens in the War against them. 3. Leutra, remarkable for the great Overthrow which the Thebans, under the Conduct of Epaminondas, gave unto the Spartans and their King Cleombrotus, who was there slain: by which Victory they did not only preserve their own Liberty, but brought their Enemies to that fall of Courage and Reputation, that they could never rise again: the divine Vengeance overtaking them in that very place where some of their Nation had deflowered the Daughters of Scedafus, who had given them courteous Entertainment. For which when no Reparation could be had from the State of Sparta, the unfortunate Damocles flew themselves, to avoid the infamy of consenting to their own Dishonour, and were buried in those very Fields where this Battle was fought. 4. Ascrea; the Birth-place of Hephaestus, a man (according to Paterculus) elegantis ingenii, & carminum dulcedine memorabilis: though it hath pleased that proud Critick, Julius Scaliger, intending to deifie Virgil, to prefer the worst Verse in the Georgicks of the one before the whole Works of the other. 5. Labadaia, near the River Cephissus, the Inhabitants whereof were counted the most superstitious of all the Graecians: memorable for the Trochonian Den or Cave, and the Oracle there given by Jupiter, hence called Trochoniens: into which Cave none were permitted to enter and receive the Oracle, but after many Ointings, Washings, and the like Superstitious preparations, too long and many to be specified in this place and time. A Town which still preserves so much of its ancient Estimation, that from hence (as I conjecture) the whole Country of Achaia hath the name of Livadia, by which the Turks call it at this present. 6. Cheronia, or Cheronia, the Birth place of Plutarch; near unto which was fought that memorable Battle betwixt L. Sylla and the Romans against Archelaus, one of the Lieutenants of Mithridates King of Pontus, leading an Army of 120000 Souldiers, of which 10000 only escaped with life, the Romans losing but 14. 7. Orchomenus, no less memorable for another Victory obtained by the same L. Sylla against Dorilus, another of that King's Commanders, having an Army of 80000 men, of which 20000 lost their lives that day. After which Victories, when Sylla might easily have destroyed that King, he suddenly patched a Peace up with him, that he might hasten unto Rome, where Marinus and Cinna had trodden his Faction under foot; preferring by that act the pursuit of his own private Quarrels before that of his Country, endangered more by Mithridates after his return, than it had been formerly. 8. Aulis, a Port-Town on the Shores of the Aegean Sea, where the Graecians took shipping when they went to the War of Troy; here making Oath never to give over the Enterprize until they had destroyed that City. Concerning which thus the in Virgil,

Aulide iuravi.*

That is to say,

I took no Oath at Aulis, to destroy,

As did the Greeks the Town and State of Troy.

But the chief of this Country, and such as had a special Influence over all the rest, was the City of Thebes, situate on the Banks of the River Cephissus, where it was built by Cadmus the Phoenician, after all his wanderings. Famous in old times for the Wars between Ereocles and Polynices, the Sons of the unfortunate Prince Oedipus; and of his Mother and Wife Jocasta. The History of which War is the most ancient piece of Story that we find of all Greece; the former times and Writings containing nothing but Fables, little favouring of Humanity, and less of Truth; as of men changed into Monsters, the Adulteries of the Gods, and the like. In this Town lived Pelopidas and Epaminondas, who so crushed the Lacedaemonians at the Battels of Leuttria and Maninea, that they could never after re-obtain their former Puissance. This Commonwealth long flourished, and at last, being over-burthened in the Phocian War, was glad to submit itself to the Protection of the Macedonians, under the leading of King Philip; who by this means first got footing in Greece, into which afterwards he thrust his whole body. Upon the death of Philip, Thebes revolted from the Macedonians, but Alexander his Successor quickly recovered it: and to dishearten the Greeks in the like Attempts, he raised the City, felling all the Inhabitants of age and strength; only Pindarus's house he commanded to be left standing in honour of that laured Poet. At the Sack of this Town, one of the Macedonian Souldiers entered the house of a principal Woman, named Timoclea, ravished her, and rifled her Coffers, but still demanding more Treasure, she shewed him a deep Well, saying that there all her Money was hidden. The credulous Villain stooping down to behold his Prey, she tumbled him into the Well, and overwhelmed him with Stones. For which noble act the generous Prince not only dismissed her unhurt, but most highly commended her. It was after redified by Cassander, and followed for the most part, as the rest of the Romans did; the Fortunes of Macedon, it is reduced at this time to the state of an ordinary Burrough, and called Stibes by the Turks.

4. PHOCIS is bounded on the East with Boeotia, on the West with Doris and Locris, on the North with the River Cephissus, and on the South with the Bay of Corinth. A Country somewhat swelled with Mountains, but those of eminent note in the elder times. The chief whereof are, 1. Helicon, 2. Citharon both consecrated to the Muses, and both contending with Parnassus for height and bigness. 3. Parnassus, of so great an height, that in that great Deluge in which most of these parts of Greece were over-whelmed with the Waters, Dencalion and Pyrrha saved themselves and many others on the Top hereof: for which, and for its two Summits reaching to the Clouds, it is of great renown amongst the Poets; as in Ovid thus,

*Mons ibi verticibus petit ardens Astra duobus, Nominis Parnassus, Superaque cacumine Nubes.
Parnassus* there with his two Tops extends

To the toucht Stars, and all the Clouds transcends.

Places of most observation in it are, 1. Anticyra, situate near the Sea, and famous for the Helieborum there growing, an Herb very medicinal for the Phrenetic, whence the Proverb, Naviger Anticyram, applied to mad-men. 2. Pytho, or Pythia, said to be seated not only in the middle of Greece, but of all the World: Strabo relating how Jupiter, desirous to know the exact middle of the Earth, let loose two Eagles, one from the East, and the other from the West, which flying with an equal Wing, (so we must conceive) and meeting at this very place, shewed it apparently to be the Navel of the World. By reason of which convenient situation in the Heart of Greece, it was made a Sessions-Town for all the Graecians, and honoured with the Court and general Assembly of the Amphictyones; men chosen out of the prime Cities of Greece, who had power to decide all Controversies, and to make Laws for the common good. A Court first instituted by Acrisius, as Strabo telleth us; or, as Halicarnassians more probably, by Amphictyon the Son of Helles, from whom they seem to have their name. The Commissioners from the several Cities, with reference to the places for which they served, had the name of Phylagore; when assembled, they were called the Amphictyones: their Meetings were at the beginning of the Spring and Autumn. Some instances concerning their Authority will not be amiss. In the time of Cimon, the Cirrhaeans, having by Piracy wronged the Thessalians, were fined by this Council; and after that the Lacedaemonians, for surprizing Caemea. And the Phocians, for ploughing up the Land of Cirrha, which belonged to the Temple of Dionysus, were by them amerced: and because they continued obstinate, and paid not their Amercements, their Dominions were adjudged to be confiscate unto that Temple. But they, disobeying this Decree also, spoiled the Temple itself: for which War being proclaimed against them by the rest of the Graecians, who by the Assistance of Philip King of Macedon brought them to Obedience, the Council was again assembled; in which it was decreed that the Phocians should raze the Walls of their Cities, that they should pay the yearly Tribute of sixty Talents, that they should no more keep Hosts and Arms, till they had satisfied the Treasury of the Temple, nor any longer have a Voice in those Conventions. It was also then enacted, that the lost Suffrages of the Phocians should be vested in King Philip and his Successors, Kings of Macedon; on whom they also did confer the perpetual Priestship, and made them Princes of that Senate. A Court to which the Sanhedrim of the seventy Elders amongst the Jews, and, in our times, the Diets of the Empire, and the Affemblies of the Switzers, carry most resemblance. 3. Cirrha, on the Sea-side, the Port-town to Delphos. 4. Crissa, so called from Crissus the Son of Phocus, and grandchild of Acacus, situate on the edge of the Bay of Corinth; called sometimes from hence Crissus Sinus. 5. Scarpia, memorable for the Defeat of Critolaus, Captain of the Achaean Army, by Metellus one of the Roman Pretors: the Loss of which Battle drew after it the Destruction of Corinth. It was observed in the success of this great Fight, that a Band of Avicadians, escaping out of the Battle, came unto 6. Elatea, another City of this Province, and were there kindly entertained on memory of some former Alliances, till news came of the Overthrow of Critolaus; when they were ordered by the State of Phocis to relinquish the Town, (for Adversity seldom meeteth with returns of Friendship.) They were set upon and all slain by the Romans in the self-same place in which their Ancestors had unworthily forsaken the rest of the Graecians in their War against Philip King of Macedon, for the publick Liberty. 7. Daulis, a City appertaining to Terentius King of Thrace, who, having married Progne, the Daughter of Pandion King of Athens, ravished her sister Phlomis, and cut out her Tongue, the better to keep his Villany undiscovered. But Progne being made acquainted with the double Injury, first made him ignorantly eat his own Son Ityr, whom she had baked in a Pie; and after killed him, with the help of her ravished Sister. 8. Dolphos, renowned in old times for the famous Temple of Apollo, in which, with that of Jupiter Hammon in Mauritania (now reckoned as a part of Egypt) were the most famous Oracles of the ancient Gentiles; dark Riddles of the Devil, couched and contrived with so much Cunning, that the meaning of them was most hidden, when it was thought most easie to be discerned. An Instance of which is that given to Cresus, in the War by him projected against the Persian, which was thus delivered;

Cresus Havy penetrans magnam subvertet opum vim.
When Cresus over Haly goes,
A mighty Nation he o'rethrows.

Which he interpreting according to his own hopes, crossed the River, was vanquished by Cyrus King of Persia, and his Kingdom conquered. The like we find of Pyrrhus King of Epirus, who, before he made War against the Romans, consulted with the Oracle, and received this Answer;

Aio te, Bacida, Romanos vincere posse.
Which doubtful Prediction he thus construed, Te posse vincere Romanos, That he should overcome the Romans; but found it unto his cost that the meaning was, Romanos posse vincere te, That the Romans should overcome him: as indeed it happened. By another kind of the same Fallacy, which the Logicians call Amphibolia, did this great Enemy of mankind overthrow another, who, demanding of the Oracle what Success he should have in an Expedition which he was in hand with, received his Answer in these words,

Ibis redibis nunquam per bella peribis.
Which he thus pointing, Ibis, redibis, nunquam per, &c. engaged himself in the War, and was therein slain. Whereupon his Followers, canvassing the Oracle, found the meaning of it to be this, Ibis, redibis, nunquam, per, &c. The like Juggling he also used in those supernatural Dreams which Philosophers call Δαιμονιασματά. For Cesar, dreaming that he carnally knew his own Mother the night before he passed over the Rubicon, became Lord of Rome, the common Mother of the Romans: and Hippias, the Son of Pisistratus the Tyrant of Athens, having upon the same projects the same Dream, was killed and buried in the Bowels of his Mother the Earth. So that had Cesar miscarried in his action, and Hippias thrived; yet still had mander in this War. After which time the several Estates hereof enjoyed so much Liberty as the Romans, their new Masters, thought fit to give them: till they were finally made absolutely subject in the time of Vespasian, by whom Achaia was reduced into the form of a Province, Peloponnesus being reckoned as a part thereof. In the Division of the Empire by Constantine the Great, the West parts hereof being divided from the rest were called New Epirus; but both of them made Provinces of the Diocese of Macedon, under the Præfatus Prætorio for Illyricum; the principal Officer of this part being called the Proconsul of Achaia: continuing under him and his Successors, Emperours of Constantinople, till the Destruction of that Empire by the power of the Turks; but so that it remained not always under the Command of one sole Officer, the Politic of that State being altered, and this Country parcelled out into many Governments, especially after the taking of Constantinople by the Latines, or Western Christians. At that time Theodorus Angelus, a noble Græcian, and one of the (then) Imperial Family, seized on Etolia and Epirus; part of which last, and all the first, he left to Michael his Son, who held them, though with some dispute betwixt him and Michael Palæologus, the first Emperour of Constantinople after the Expulsion of the Latines. Charles, the last Prince of that Family, dying without Issue about the year 1430, bequeathed Etolia to another Charles, the Son of his Brother, and Acarnania (being the part of Epirus which the Princes of Etolia held), to his base Sons, Memnon, Turnus, and Hercules. But many Quarrels happening upon this Division, Amurath the second having then newly conquered Theffalonia, composed the Differences by taking all unto himself, Anno 1432. There were at that time other Princes of like Authority, as of Athens, Phocis, and Boetia; but the first the chiefest, as honoured not only with the Title of Dukes of Athens, but of Princes of Achaia also; such being the Fortune of that City, as to have the first and last great Sway in the Affairs of Achaia. For at the Translation of the Empire upon the Latines, Godfrey of Troyes, a French-man, was made Duke of Athens and Prince of Achaia, of whom Paulus Æmilius speaketh, Anno 1220: which Honour afterwards was conferred on Walter de Bren, a Kinsman of John de Bren, the last King of Jerusalem, Protector of Baldwin the second the last Emperour of the Latines, mentioned by the said Æmilius, Anno 1288. And though on the Defeat and death of this Walter by the Catalonians, then ransacking those parts of Greece, the Title of Duke of Athens was assumed by Frederick Alphonso, the Son of Frederick King of Sicily, and by other Princes of that House: yet, upon better ground, by the Heir general of this Walter it was conveyed in Marriage to Joan of Acocia, a Nobleman of the Realm of Naples, whose Son Walter (commonly called the Duke of Athens) for a time obtained the Sovereignty of the State of Florence, Anno 1342. but lost it suddenly again by his too much Cruelty. Francis de Acciavoli, the last Prince of this House, having been brought up in the Court of Mahomet the Great, as one of his Favourites, surrendered his Estate herein, at the persuasion of that Tyrant, in change for the Country of Boetia and the Dukedom of Thebes: which he no sooner had received, but he was sent by Mahomet to Zoganus his Lieutenant in Morea, by whom at first he was courteously received, at last cruelly murdered. And so the whole Country of Achaia fell into the possession of the Turks, Anno 1454, or thereabouts.

3. EPIRUS.

EPIRUS is bounded on the East with Etolia, on the West with the Adriatick, on the North with Theffaly, Macedon, and some part of Albania, and on the South with the Ionian Seas. So called from the Solidity and Firmness of it, the word Epiros in the Greek Tongue signifying as much as Terra firma, or the firm Land. But by the Turks at this day it is called Albania, which name they give to all the Lands and Countries in their possession lying upon the Adriatick and Ionian Seas.

In this Country was born Olympias, Mother of Alexander the Great; and Pyrrhus, who conquered the Realm of Macedon, and was the first Foreiner who made trial (though to his own Loss) of the Power and Puissance of Rome; accounted by Hannibal, next to Alexander, the second great Souldier of the world. Here is also Mount Pindus, sacred to Apollo and the Muses, dividing this Country from Theffaly, and therefore common unto both: as also the Acrocervannian Hills, so called, because they are so much subject unto Thunder and Lightning, eminent for their height, and much feared by Mariners, who, when they see a little Cloud rising on the top hereof, are sure of a Tempest. Finally, here are the famous Rivers Acheron and Cocynus, which, for their black waters and unfavourable taste, are said to be the Rivers of Hell; from which last the Sacrifices and Solemnities made in honour of Proserpine, whom Pluto ravished and brought hither, had the name of Cocynus. Whence, by a Metonymy, these Rivers are taken sometime for Hell itself; as in that of the Poet,

Since those in Heaven I cannot move,

The Powers of Hell I mean to prove.

The Soil hereof is very barren, and in many places full of Forests, and thin of people; but towards the Sea reasonably fruitful: plentiful of Oxen, Dogs, and Sheep, of more than ordinary bigness, and yielding the best breed of Horses. The people use a distinct Language from the Græcians, though of the Greek Tongue not utterly ignorant; and, by reason of the Barrenness of their own Country, become great Wanderers, especially in Summer-time, when they travel into Thrace, Macedon, and Asia Minor, hiring themselves to work in Harvest under the Turks, as also to thresh, winnow, and make clean their Corn; and in the Winter-time return to their Wives and Children. They are able of body, swift of foot, apt to undergo any Toil and Labour, having withal good Courages and high Projections: which makes such of them as delight not in works of Drudgery to look for action in the Wars, and otherwise to rob and spoil the neighbouring Mountains of Albania. Till their Subjection to the Turks, they were much used both by the Kings of Hungary and the State of Venice in their several Wars, serving on Horse or Foot, as occasion was: as Mercenary as the Switzers in the Western parts, but not so faithful to the party entertaining them.

Anciently it was divided into Chaonia, (which was the proper Epirus) lying on the West, and Acarnania, bordering on Etolia, from which it is parted by the River Achelous: the middle parts hereof being Amphilochia, Toesprotia, and Almene: all very populous in former times, and so continued till Paulus Æmilius, on the Conquest of Macedon, overthrew seventy of their Cities. Few of which being since re-edified, and the Country for a long time languishing under the Turks, here are not any very fair Towns or well-peopled Cities at the present to be spoken of; and therefore we must look on such as flourished in the times fore-going. The principal whereof were, 1. Dodona, one of the Cities of Chaonia, memorable for the Temple and Oracle of Jupiter, hence called Dodonaus; situate in a fair Grove, the Trees whereof are said to be Vocal, and to give the Oracle: though others say, It was delivered first by a pair of Pigeons, whereof the one afterwards fled to Dolphos, the other to the Temple of Jupiter Hammon in Aegypt. It was the ancientest Oracle of all Greece: and so perhaps was the Town the ancientest Town also. Said to be first built by Dodon, the Son of Jupiter and Europa; more probably so called from Dodanim, the Son of Javan, and Grand-child of Japhet, who first inhabited this Region; the whole Country (Greece I mean) being called Javan from the Father, (by which name commonly it occurreth in the Hebrew Text) this Town Dodona from the Son. 2. Cassope, a Port-Town, with a fair Promontory of the same name adjoining to it. 3. Ouchosium, by Strabo called Onchimus, and by Pliny Echinus, a Port-Town also, now called Santi Quaranta. 4. Panormus, on the Sea-side also, retaining still the old name, and but little else. 5. Antigolia, more within the Land, founded or repaired by Antigonus a King of Macedon, now called Argiro Castro, as Niger thinketh. 6. Phanice, once the chief Town hereof, which being sacked by the Illyrians, under Tenta their Queen, gave the Romans an occasion of Quarrel with them, upon Complaint made to them by the Epirots. 7. Pelodes, a Port-Town, the Principal in that part which was called Theprotia; as 8. Taron, on the River Thyamis, and 9. Sybot, an ancient Haven-Town, (now called Syot) was in that part whereof which was called Almene. 10. Argos, the chief City of the Amphilochians. This part hereof was first named Molossia, from Molossus the Son of Pyrrhus, and Andromache, remarkable for the best breed of Maffives, hence called Molossi: and afterwards Chaonia, by Helennus the Son of Priamus, whom Pyrrhus the Son of Achilles settled in this Country; who having unfortunately slain his Brother Chaon, caused it in memory of him to be called Chaonia, Chaoniamque omnem Trojana; Chaone dixit, as it is in Virgil. Of these Molossians, Pluto, the third Son of Saturnus, was sometimes King, called, from the flat and hollow situation of this Country, consisting much of deep Valleys, the King of Hell.

Towns of especial note in Acarnania were. 1. Amatorium, on the Bay of Ambracia, now called Vanzza. 2. Ambracia, the Regal Seat or Court of Pyrrhus, giving name unto a fair and capacious Bay, now called Golfo di Larta, from Larta an adjoining Town, situate in or near the place where Ambracia stood. It was once subject unto Periander, King or Tyrant of Corinth, who being slain by a Woman named Leonna, whom he kept as his Concubine, occasioned the Inhabitants from that time forwards, in memory of their Deliverance, to worship a Lion. Afterwards being taken from the Children of Pyrrhus by the Macedonians, and from them wone by the Etolians in the time of their greatness, it was besieged by Fulvius, a Roman Consul spoken of before. Who, seeing that he could not force it, was willing, at the Mediation of the Athenians, Rhodians, and other Friends of both parties, to conclude a Peace; but so that he despoiled this City at his going hence of much excellent Imagery, carrying away with him unto Rome the Pictures of the nine Muses most admirably well done by the hand of Zenxis, the rarest Painter of his times. 3. Buthrotum, a Roman Colony, by Pliny called Colonia simply; now a small Village called Butrinto. 4. Leucas, situate on the point of a Promontory of the same name also, anciently memorable for the Temple of Apollo. By leaping into the Sea from the top of this Promontory, such as unfortunately loved were cured of that malady: the first trial of that kind being made by Sappho that famous Poetress.

At that time it was joined unto the Land, but since by the violence of the Sea or the hand of man, it is made into an Island; according unto that of Ovid,

Leucada continuam veteres habuisse Coloni, Nunc Frætâ vivimus.

That is to say,

Leucas, in former times joyn'd to the Land,
Environ'd round with Waters now doth stand.
It was called Leucas, from the Whiteness of the Rock of Promontory, having before the Separation or disjunction of it been called Neritos, the chief Town of it varying with the name of the Isle and Promontory. Both Town and Island at this time is called S. Maure, taken by Bajazet the II. from the State of Venice, and by him given unto the Jews, (who do still inhabit it) at their expulsion out of Spain. 5. Nicopolis, a Colony of the Romans, of great both Wealth and Beauty in the time of S. Paul, who from hence dated his Epistle to Titus: called in that Poëscript Nicopolis of Macedonia, because Epirus at that time was part of the Province of Macedon, though afterwards a distinct Province of itself. It was first built by Augustus Caesar on a Promontory opposite unto Atium, on the other side of the Bay: that being the place where his Land-Souldiers were incamped before the Naval Battle betwixt him and Mark Antony, and was thus called either in memory of his Victory, or from a poor man and his Ass whom he met there the day before. For asking the man his name, he told him that his name was Eutyches, i. e. Fortunate; and that the name of his Ass was Nicon, i. e. Conquerour: which happy Omen made his Souldiers courageous and hopeful of Victory: and he in memory thereof erected here two brazen Images, the one of the Ass, the other of his Master. It is now a small Village called Preveza. 6. Atium, on the Sea-shore, nigh unto which Augustus and Antony fought for the Empire of the World. The Navy of the latter consisted of 500 Gallies; the former had 250 only, but those crowned with Victory: Antonius shamefully deserting his Souldiers to follow after Cleopatra, who on the very first Charge fled away for Aegypt. The Town being now ruined, the Promontory upon which it stood is called Caba di Figalo.

The Country was first peopled by Dodanim the Son of Javan, or at least by some of his Posterity coming hither from the Isle of Rhodes; whose Memory was preserved a long time in the Town of Dodona, by him, or from him, so denominated. Afterwards being parted into several Nations, and those Nations united in the common name of Epirots, it became a great and powerful Kingdom; governed by a Race of Kings descending from Pyrrhus the Son of Achilles, and continuing till the time Pyrrhus was Bachides. A man of such Courage and Magnanimity, that he did not only recover his own Kingdom, of which Cassander had deprived his Father; but got the Kingdom of Macedon from Cassander's Children; outed of which, he tried his Fortune with the Romans, Anno Mundi 363, U. C. 471. After his death this Kingdom was shrewdly shaken by the Macedonians, and shortly after subdued by Paulus Æmilius, who, as we now said, destroyed 70 Cities hereof in one day. For desirous to satisfy his Souldiers after his Victory in Macedon, he sent unto the Epirots for ten of the principal men of every City. These he commanded to deliver up all the Gold and Silver which they had, and to that end, as he gave out, he sent certain Companies of Souldiers along with them; unto whom he gave secret Instructions, that on a day by him appointed they should fall to sack every one the Town whereunto they were sent. A barbarous and bloody Decree, 70 Cities confederate with the Romans ruined in one day, and no fewer than 150000 Epirots made and fold for Slaves. But the chief motive which induced him to so great a Cruelty was, by discipling this Country, lying with a long and fair Sea-coast over against Italy, to give the Romans opportunity to land their Armies without any Resistance for the farther Progress of their Forces into Macedonia, Thracia, Mæsia, or where else they pleased. Which ungodly Policy was afterwards imitated by William the Conquerour, who laid waite all that part of Hampshire, since called New Forest, and therein 36 Parish-Churches, that he might have a safe Landing-place for his Norman Forces, if the English should at any time endeavour to make head against him. Being made subject to the Romans, it was a while part of the Province of Macedonia; but afterwards, when Macedonia was made a Diocese, it became a distinct Province of it self, called by the name of Old Epirus, to difference it from the Province of New Epirus, which lay Eastwards of it. At the Division of the Empire it belonged to the Constantinopolitans, and so continued till the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians: at what time Theodorus Angelus, a Prince of the Imperial Family, seized on Ætolia and Epirus, as before was said, and sped so well in his Designs, that he took the strong City of Dyrrazzo from the State of Venice, (to whom it fell in the division of that Spoil) and cunningly (if not treacherously) intercepted Peter the third Emperor of the Latins, whom, as some say, he caused to be Murdered at a Banquet. After his death, his whole Estate being divided into two parts, Ætolia with that part hereof which is called Chaonia, continued in his House till the time of Charles Prince of Ætolia and Epirus (spoken of before, after whose death it was subdued by Amurath the Second, as before was said. The residue hereof, together with that part of Macedonia which is called Albania, fell to the Family of the Castriots: the last of which, named John, (the Father of Scanderbeg) seeing himself unable to resist that Tyrant, who had already swallowed up all his Neighbour-princes, submitted his Estate unto him, and gave unto him all his Sons for Hostages. No sooner was the old Prince dead, but Amurath seized on his Estate, murdered his three Eldest Sons, and caused George, the youngest to be train'd up in the Law of Mahomet: who afterwards, escaping out of his Power and recovering all his Father's Countries, assumed also the Stile or Title of Prince of Epirus. After whose death, his Children, not being able to make good their Game, lost it to Mahomet the Great, as shall be shewn more fully in the Story and Description of Albania, which is next to follow.

4. A L B A N I A.

A L B A N I A is bounded on the East with Macedonia, on the West with the Adriatick, on the North with Sclavonia, on the South with Epirus. The Country is mountainous and barren; watered with few Rivers, and those of no great note amongst the Ancients; as 1. Lous, 2. Apfus, 3. Panyasus, 4. Celydnus: all of them falling into the Adriatick.

It took this name from the Albani, once the Inhabitants of this Tract, from whom the chief City hereof was called Albanapolis. Other Towns of most consideration are, 1. Spengrade, 2. Vestigade, (called by some the Holy City) situate in the Borders of Epirus, on the top of an Hill, where it is fenced about like an Eagle's Nest: one of the last Towns in all this Country which was taken by Scanderbeg at his recovery of his Birthright and Estate herein; but being once taken by him, held good courageously against the Turk, the Souldiers neither fainting in their Oppositions, nor corrupted by Morcy, till at the last subdued by a Superstition. There was in the Town one only Well, into which a treacherous Christian cast a dead Dog; at the sight of which, being the next day drawn up, the Souldiers gave up the Town; being so unreasonably superstitious, that so persuasion, nor the example of the Captain or the Burgo-masters, could make them drink those (as they thought) defiled waters. 3. Dyrrazzo, a Town of great strength, first called Epidamnium, and afterwards Dyrrbachium. Under the Walls of which Town was the first bickering between the Souldiers of Cesar and Pompey, not only to the present Loss, but also the utter Discomfiture of Cesar, as he himself confessed, if the R-semics Captain had known how to have overcome I must not omit the Valour of Scæva at this Siege, who alone so long resisted Pompey's Army, that he had 220 Dart sticking in his Shield, and lost one of his Eyes; and yet gave not over till Cesar came to his Rescue.

Parque novum Fortuna videt concurrere, Bellum Atque irum—densaque ferens in Pectore Sylvam.
Fortune beholds an unaccustom'd Sight,
An Army and a man together fight,
Whole breast a Wood of Arrows covered quite.

In the Division of the Eastern Empire amongst the Latines it fell into the power of Venice, taken at last after a long and tedious Siege, by Amurath the second, Anno 1474. 4. Dibra, in the Hill-Countries, near Epirus; the first Town which submitted to the Valiant Scanderbeg at his revolting from the Turks; supposed to be the Deburns of Ptolemy. 5. Croia, conceived to be the Epicuria of Ptolemy, the chief Town of all this Country seated amongst inaccessible Mountains, and made impregnable by Art: not got by Scanderbeg, but by a Wile, who, having got into his power, the Secretary of the principal Bassa, forced him to write Letters in his Master's name unto the Governour hereof, to deliver it unto him; which was done accordingly. Afterwards it was in vain besieged by Amurath the second, who under the Walls hereof gave up his wretched Soul to the Devil; and thrice besieged by Mahomet his Son and Successor, before he could again possess it, but taken at the last after Scanderbeg's death, as if the Genens or Tutelary Deity of the place had departed with him. 6. Petrella, a Town of great Strength, seated on the Top of an Hill (as almost all the Towns of Albania are) about 25 miles from Croia delivered unto Scanderbeg at his first sitting down before it: as also was 7. Petra Alba, three miles from Petrella, near the Borders of Macedonia, and situate like the other on the top of a Mountain, the River Emathus running under the bottom of it. 8. Stel-lusa, fifty miles from Croia, built on the top of an high Hill in the middle of a pleasant and fruitful Valley, with great and spacious Plains about it. 9. Dagna or Dayna, a place of great importance in the Hill-Country towards Sclavonia; for the possession whereof rose a War betwixt Scanderbeg and the State of Venice, but the Venetians being worsted at the Battel of Drino, relinquished their Pretensions to it. 10. Aulon, a Port-Town, now called Valona, situate over gainst Hydruntum or Otranto in Italy, distant from it about 60 miles. The Town is unwall'd, but fortified with a very strong Castle; a Town unfortunately fit for the invasion of Italy, and was accordingly made use by Achmetus the chief Bassa under Mahomet the Great, who from hence passed his Army over into Apulia, took the Town of Otranto, and had not the death of Mahomet, and the Combinations, thereon following amongst the Turks, altered the Design, might have opened them a very fair way for the adding of Rome unto Constantinople. 11. Appollonia, a Town of great note in the time of the Romans; a Sea-Town, furnished with a commodious Haven, which they held as their Entrance into Greece; to that purpose serving them as commodiously as Calais did the English in their Wars with France.

This

This Country anciently was a part of Macedonia, inhabited by the Talauntii, Epiræi and Albani, from which last (but not till these latter times) it had the name of Albania, but whether these Albani were a Colony of the Albanians of Asia, (though it is very probable) I determine not. When it was made a Province of the Empire it contained all Prevalitana and some part of Macedonia Salutaris; being under the Diocese of Dacia in the time of Justinian, but at first of Macedonia. Dismembred from the main Body of it when the Latines had subdued Constantinople, it fell unto the noble Family of the Castriots, who, though they took unto themselves the Title of Kings or Princes of Epirus, (most of which they held) as the Country of more Note and Eminence, yet was Albania the greatest Strength, and Croia the chief City thereof, the Seat of their Residence: they being called in that respect by some Writers the Kings of Albania. John Castriot, the Father of Scanderbeg, seeing himself unable to resist the Turks, became their Homager, and delivered four Sons for Hostages; whom Amurath the second in their Father's life time caused to be circumcised, and turn'd Mahometans: and after his decease murdered the three eldest, and seized upon Croia the chief City with the rest of the Country. But George, the youngest of those Sons, being reserved for better Fortunes, was carefully brought up by Amurath (who somewhat passionately affected him) in the Stratagems of War, though some of his Courtiers then told him that he nourished a Serpent in his Bosom, which would one day sting him. Amurath, to make trial of his Disposition, offered him on a time the Crown of Albania: to which he prudently replied, that he preferred the honour of his Service before all the Kingdoms of the World, and that he held his hand fitter for a Sword, then his Head for a Crown. Satisfied with which Answer, the Tyrant preferred him to the place of a Sanzack, or Provincial Governour, and gave him some office of Command in all those Armies which he set out against the Christians, Escaping out of the Battel wherein Caramen, the great Bassa, was overthrowen and taken Prisoner by Huniades, he got the Town of Croia by a piece of wit, as before was said; and in a very short time after made himself Master of Petrella, Petra, Alba, Stel-lusa, and all the rest of the Country, by the reputation and terrour of his first Success. Having recovered his Inheritance out of the hands of the Turks, he reconciled himself to the Church of Christ, styling himself the Souldier of CHRIST JESUS from that time forwards. Invaded by a vast Army of Turks, he overcometh Aly Bassa, and kills 20000 of his men. With no more than 20 Horse and 50 foot he assaulteth Mustapha in his Camp; in which 5000 Turks were slain; and 300 taken. With whom encountering not long after in the open Field, he slew 10000 of his men, took many prisoners, and Mustapha himself amongst the rest, whom he ransomed for 25000 Ducats. Falling upon the Host of Amurath, then besieging Croia, he killed Feris Bassa hand to hand in a single Combat: and in the time of Mahomet, who succeeded Amurath, vanquish'd Isaac the great Bassa, routed his whole Army, had the spoil of his Camp, took 20 of his fairest Ensigns, and slew 30000 of his Souldiers. Not to instance in the rest of his noble Actions, it is reported that in the course of his War against the Turks he killed no fewer than 3000 of them with his own hands; using a Turkish Scimitar in all his Fights, of great weight and bigness. Which when Mahomet on a Peace between them had desired to see, and afterwards returned again with this Curse of it, that he saw nothing in it more than ordinary: the gallant Prince sent back this Answer, that the Virtue of the Weapon depended on the Strength of his Arm, which he could not send him, for that he did reserve it for the death of his Enemies. Finally, having held his Cards against Amurath and Mahomet, two most fortunate Gamblers, for the space of 24 years, he set up his Rest at last a Winner; dying in Peace at Lissa, then belonging to the State of Venice, Jan. 17. An. 1466; and was there honourably interred. At the taking of which Town by the Turks about nine years after, his Body was digged up by them, not in spite, but honour, that man accounting himself happy who could get any of his Bones to preserve as a Relick, supposing that as long as he had it about him he should be invincible. But with him died the Liberty of his Country also, not long after subdued by the Turks, and made a Province of that Empire, as it still continueth: the name of Albania being by them extended over all Epirus, and so much of Dalmatia also as is under their power.

The Arms of this Kingdom (or rather of the Kings thereof) were Gules, an Eagle Sable.

5. MACEDONIA.

M A C E D O N I A is bounded on the East with the Ægean Sea, on the West with Albania, on the North with Mæsia Superior and a part of Thracia, and on the South with Epirus and Achaia.

It was first called Emonia, from Mount Hemus, which shutteth up that side hereof which is towards Mæsia; after Emathia, or Emathia, from a King of it called Emathus; Macedonia, from Macedo, the Son of Deucalion, and the Father of Caranus, the first King of the Line of Alexander; and finally Kittim, or the Land of Kethim, whereof see 1. Maccab. 1. 1. and 8. 5. from Kittim the Son of Javan, and Grandchild of Japhet, who was planted here. Anciently it was of more large extent than it is at the present, extending from the Ægean Sea unto the Adriatick, till the taking of Albania out of it, which hath streightned it upon that side, but the rest is as formerly.

The Country taking it together, is very fruitful and pleasant, though on the outward parts thereof begirt with rough Mountains and thick Forests: in former times much celebrated for its Mines of Gold and Silver, which are long since exhausted. It contained formerly the Provinces of Emathia, Pieria, Pelasgia, Thracia, Phthiotis, Thessalie, Mygdonia, Amphaxitis, Parasia, Etonia, and many others of less note, inhabited by 152 several Nations: now principally divided (besides Albania) into, 1. Thessalie, 2. Macedonia specially so called, and 3. Migdonia, which the Turks call Jamboli.

1. T H E S S A L I E hath on the East the Ægean Sea, on the West Albania, on the North Macedonia and Mygdonia, on the South Achaia. A sweet and delectable Country it is, the Pleasures and Delights whereof inclined the People to be very effeminate and dissolute in their course of life, made them in love with Luxury and Ease, and much like the Persians in Behaviour, whose Entrance into Greece they did therefore favour. Yet notwithstanding this Debauchedness, they were esteemed the best Horsemen of all the Grecians: by their excellent managing of which creature, (as if they had been one piece with it, and either lent the Horse their Minds, or borrowed his Body) they gave occasion unto the Fiction of the Centaurs, half Men, half Beasts.

It is now called Comenolitarii, and of old was very famous for many things, especially 1. for the Hill Olympus of so great height, that it seemeth to transcend the Clouds and is therefore frequently by the Poets used for Heaven itself. 2. For the Hill Othrys, inhabited by the Lapithæ, over whom Pirithous, was King. 3. for the Mountains of Pelion and Ossa, the Dwelling-places of the Centaurs, who, intending to ravish Hippodamia, the new Bride of Pirithous, on her Wedding-day, were slain by Hercules and and the Lapithæ. 4. For the delectable Valley of Tempe situate betwixt Ossa and Olympus, extending in length fix miles, and five in breadth, so beautified with Nature's Gifts, that it was supposed to be the Garden of the Muses. 5. and lastly, For the Dolopes and Myrmidones, (who did here inhabit) over whom Achilles had Command at the Siege of Troy: these last, by reason that they were a laborious and thrifty People, being fabled by the Poets to have first been Emigrants, transformed into men at the Prayer of Æacus, when he wanted Souldiers.

— Mores quos ante tenebant
Nunc quoque habent; parcum genus est patiensq; laborum
Quæstique tenax, & quod quæsitare servet.

The custom they of Emigrants still retain,
 A sparing Folk; and unto Labour set,
 Strangely addicted to all kind of Gain,
 And wary Keepers of what e're they get.

Places of most observation in it are, 1. Tricca, the Episcopall See of Heliodorus, the Author of that ingenious Piece called the Æthiopic History; which he so prized, that he chose rather to loose his Bishoprick then consent to the burning of his Book, which a Provincial Synod had adjudged to the Fire. A Piece indeed of rare Contexture and neat Contrivances, without any touch of loose or lascivious Language; honest and chaste Affection being the Subject of it, not such as old or modern Poets throw us in their Comedies or other Poems. For here we have no Incessant mixture of Fathers and Daughters, no Pandarism of old Nurses, no unbecomly Action specified where heat of Blood and Opportunity do meet; nor indeed any one passage unworthy of the chastest Ear. 2. Lamia, where the Athenians, after the death of Alexander, hoping to recover their Freedoms, besieged Antipater: which was the last honorable Enterprize undertaken by that great and renowned City, known in old Histories by the name of Bellum Lamiacum. 3. Larissa, situate on the South of Demetrias, but on the same Bay, memorable for the Birth of Achilles, from hence called frequently in the Poets Larissæus Achilles, which Birth of his is ascribed by others to the Town of Phthia, (from whence the Region called Phthiotis takes the nomination) frequently mentioned in the Poets upon that account: and possibly, being neighbouring Cities, the one might be the place of his Birth, and the other of his Habitation. 4. Demetrias, situate on the Bay called Sinus Pelagicus, (now Golfo dell' Armiro) of very great strength by Art and Nature. Which being held by the Macedonians, together with Chalcis in the Isle of Eubœa, and the City of Corinth, kept all Greece in awe, and were therefore commonly called the Fetters of Greece, the Græcians never thinking themselves at liberty till those Towns were dismantled by the Romans. 5. Pharsalus, nigh to which was fought the great Battel betwixt Cæsar and Pompey for the Sovereignty of the Roman Empire. A Battel more famous then bloody, 6000 only of 300000 which were in the Field on both sides, being therein slain. A Battel before which the Pompeians were in such a miserable Security, that some of them contended for the chief Priesthood, which was Cæsar's Office: others disposed of the Consulship and Preferences in the City of Rome: Pompey himself being so wretchedly, that he neither considered into what place it were best to fly if he lost the day, or by what means he might provide for his own Safety, and end the War, as if the War had been made against some ignoble Enemy, and not against that Cæsar who had taken 1000 Towns, conquered 300 Nations, took prisoners one million of men, and slain as many. 6. Philippi, so named from Philip the Macedonian, the first Founder of it; situate in the farther part of the same Plains of Pharsalia, and famous for as memorable a Battel as that before, and of no less consequence:

that namely betwixt Augustus and M. Antonius on the one side, against Brutus and Cassius on the other; these latter being rather overcome by Chance then Valour. For either of them (thinking the other vanquished) flew himself in the Field; being the two last that ever openly stood out for the common Liberty, and are therefore called by Crematius Cordus Ultimi Romanorum, or the last of the true Roman Spirits. 7. Gomphi, a very ancient City bordering on Epirum. 8. Pheræ, in which City Alexander the Tyrant reigned, against whom that noble Captain Pelopidas the Theban fighting was slain in Bartel: the Tyrant being not long after murdered by his Wife's Brother, and by that means all Theffaly recovering liberty. 9. Pegasa, or Pagasa, situate on the Bay called Sinus Pelagicus which from hence is sometimes named Pegajicus; in which the Ship called Argo was said to be built, so famous for the renowned Voyage of the Argonauts. The Hill Pelion spoken of before is not far from hence. 10. Pythion or Pisbœum, of great note (according to some) for the Pythian Games there celebrated in the honour of Apollo, who hereabouts killed the Serpent Python: the Conquerors in which Games were crowned at the first only with an Oaken Garland, but afterwards with one of Lawrel. Of which thus the Poet.

Nève operis famam posses abolere vetustas,
Infruitis sacros celebri certamine Ludos,
Pythia de domitis Serpentis nomine dictas, &c.

Thus made to speak English by G. Sandys;

Then left the well-deserved memory
 Of such an Act in future time should die;
 He instituted the so-famous Games
 Of free Contention, which he Pythia names
 Who Ran, who Wrestled best, or rak'd the crown'd
 With swiftest Wheels, the Oaken Garland crown'd.

These Games, together with the Olympick, Isthmian and Nemean, spoken of before, made the four annual Meetings amongst the Græcians, renowned for the universal Concourse of the noblest Spirits. 11. Doliche, which, together with Pythœum, and 12. Azorum, another City of this Tract, standing near together, are called in Livius the Historian by the name of Triopolis. 13. Hypata, the Metropolis of Theffaly, so called by Heliodorus in his Æthiopic History before mentioned, who placeth it near the Bay called Sinus Maliacus, now Golfo di Ziton and not far from Mount Oeta, bordering on the Province of Doris: upon which Mountain Hercules, being tortured with a poisoned Shirt sent by his innocent Wife Dejanira, is said to have burned himself; thence called Hercules Oetaeus. Of all which Towns, Lamia, Pagasa and Demetrias, are in the Region called Phthiotis; Larissa, Dolyche, Pythœum and Azorum, in that called Pelassia; Gomphi and Tricca in Ipsiotis; the rest in Theffalie properly and specially so named.

This Country, at first called Æmonia, afterwards Pelassia, then Pyrrhæa, from Pyrrhæa the Wife of Dencalion, and finally Theffalia, from Theffalus one of the Companions of Hercules, by Pliny is called Dryopis, Ephiotis by Strabo, Pelassia by Diodorus, and by Homer Argos; the name of some chief City or particular Province being figuratively used for the whole. It was divided commonly into four parts, 1. Theffalotis, 2. Ipsiotis, 3. Pelassiotis, and 4. Phthiotis, the name of Theffalie, or Theffalotis in the end prevailing, and accordingly distributed into several Governments, united finally in the person of Philip, the Father of Alexander, who partly by Force, but specially by Art and Practice, made himself Master of the whole. Continuing in a mixt condition betwixt free and subject under the Macedonian Kings of the 2. Race; it became subject with that Kingdom to the state of Rome: first reckoned reckoned as a part of the Province of Macedon; after a Province of it self, when Macedon was made a Diocese, part of which it was. But from a Province of that Diocese, and a Member of the Eastern Empire, it was made a Kingdom, given with that Title to Boniface Marquis of Montferrat in exchange for Candia, together with the City of Theffalonica, and some part of Peloponnesus, at the Division of that Empire amongst the Latines; which Title he affected, in regard that Reiner, the Brother of Boniface his Grandfather, had formerly been created Prince of Theffalie by the Emperour Emanuel, whose Daughter Cyri-Maria (or the Lady Mary) he had took to Wife. In him as it began, so this Title ended; Theffalonica falling to the State of Venice, Theffaly reverting to the Empire when the Greeks recovered it: from whom it was subdued, and added to the Turkish Empire, in the Reign of Amurath the second, Anno 1432.

2. MACEDON specially so called is bounded on the East with Migdonia, on the West with Albania, on the North with Mount Hæmus, on the South with Theffalie. The Country is for the most part fruitful as before was said, but not surfeiting with Delights as to make the people wanton or effeminate in their course of life; they being naturally good Souldiers, exact observers of military Discipline, and inured to Hardness, which their many signal Victories do most clearly evidence both in Greece and Asia.

The Greeks in the pride of their own wits reckoned them amongst the barbarous Nations; and yet, by a strange kind of contradiction, ascribe unto their Country the Seats of the Muses. For in this Country was Mount Pimpla, with a Fountain of the same name at the Foot thereof, both consecrated to the Muses, from hence called Pimplæides. Here also was the Hill Libethrum, and the Province of Pieria; from whence the Muses had the names of Libethrides and Pierides; by this last called more frequently than by any other name whatever, especially by the Greeks themselves. But the Birth of Aristotle in this Country doth more convince the Græcians of this foolish Arrogance than all the Muses in the world. A man so admirable in the general course of Learning, so universally comprehensive of all Arts and Sciences, that the best witted Græcian might have been his Scholar, and thought it a great Happiness, as King Philip did, that they had any Children to be tutored by him.

The principal Rivers hereof (besides Erizon and Aliacon spoken of before) are, 1. Axius, at present called Vardari, rising out of the Hill Scardus, a Branch of Mount Hæmus, and passing through the whole extent of this Country into Sinus Thermoicus, or the Gulf of Theffalonica, as it is now named: the fairest River of these parts, and of sweetest water; but such as maketh all the Cattel black which drink of it. 2. Chabrus 3. Echedorus; both rising out of the mid-land Countries, and both falling into the same Bay also. Besides which there are other three fair and capacious Bays ascribed to Macedon, though two of them belonging properly to Migdonia; that is to say, Singiticus, now Golfo di monte santo, and Toronicus, now the Gulf or Bay of Aiomara, and the third common unto Thrace also, which is Sinus Strymonicus, now the Bay of Contesa.

Towns of most observation in it, according to the several Regions and parts hereof, were for the Ætoliæ, 1. Hormæ, called afterwards Seleucia; 2. Europus, of which name there were four in Macedon; 3. Apollus, Of Sintica, 4. Trifolus, 5. Paracopolis, 6. Gaviscus, 7. Heraclæa, for distinction called Heraclæa Sintica; there being many others of that name in Greece. In Edonia, bordering toward Thrace, 8. Scoutia, 9. Berga, 10. Am- phipolis, on the River Strymon, with which it is encompassed, whence it had the name; seated so close on the edge of Thrace, that it is questionable to which of them it belongs of right; once garrisoned by the Athenians, and from them taken by Philip the Macedonian in the first rise of his Fortunes. 11. Grenides, bordering on Thrace also, and by some Writers laid unto it, but I think erroneously: repaired and beautified by Philip before mentioned, by whom it was called Philippi; and situate in a Country so rich in mines of Gold, that the said Philip drew hence yearly 1000 Talents, which make 600000 French Crowns or 1400000 of our English money. Afterwards made a Roman Colony, and accounted the chief City of Macedonia, as appeareth Acts 16. 12. to the People of which S. Paul writ one of his Epistles. Next in Emethia we have 12. Tyrrisa in the Mid-lands, bordering upon Theffalie, now called Cerefi. 13. Adessa, called afterwards Ægæa, and now Vodena; the first Town of all this Country taken by Caranus, the Founder of the first Race of the Kings of Macedon. 14. Berœa, on Sinus Thermoicus, honoured with the preaching of Paul and Silas; the Citizens whereof are by S. Luke commended for their readiness in receiving the Gospel. 15. Pella, on the same Bay also; the Birth-place of Alexander the Great, from hence called Æwenis Pellæus. 16. Pydna, upon the same Bay, at the Influx of the River Aliacon; in which Cassander besieged and took Olympias the Mother, Roxane the Wife, and Alexander the Heir apparent of Alexander, all whom he barbarously murdered. This Cruelty he committed, partly to revenge himself of Alexander, who had once knocked his head and the Wall together, and partly to cry quick with Olympias, who had before as cruelly murdered Aridamus the base Son of Philip, and Eurydice his Wife, with whom Cassander was supposed to be over-familiar. Memorable also is this Town for the great Battel fought near it betwixt Perseus the last King of Macedon and P. Æmilius the Consul, in which Perseus, having shamefully deferred his Army, lost both the Battel and his Kingdom, with no less then 20000 of his foot, which were therein slain; the Romans having so cheap a Victory, that it cost them not above an hundred or sixscore men. 17. Dium, not far from the Hill Olympus, and about a mile from the Sea, of which mile the River Helicon, becoming there a Lake, and called Baphyrus, taketh up one half. It is situate in the Borders towards Theffalie; the way unto it out of Tempe being streight and narrow, and almost impassable, by reason of the Spurs of the Mountains running overthwart it; which, had it been well defended by the Macedonians, would have kept their Country from the Romans, who that way attempted. But Perseus hearing that the Enemy had got into Tempe, only took care to get his Treasure out of Dium, and so abandoned both the Passage and the Town together. 18. Phylace, more within the Land; as is 19. Eriboæa. But these four last are in that part hereof which is called Pieria.

3. MYGDONIA bath on the East the Ægean Sea, on the West Macedon properly and specially so called, on the North Edonia and Sinus Strymonicus, on the South Sinus Thermoicus, or the Gulf of Theffalonica; so that it is almost a Peninsula, environed on three sides with Water.

Here is in this Country the Hill Aibon, standing in a Peninsula, (the Isthmus being once cut through by Xerxes but since closed again) said to be 70 miles in circuit, 3 days journey long, half a day's in breadth, resembling the shape of a Man lying with his Face upwards: the highest point whereof, covered perpetually with Snow, is said to cast a Shadow as far as Lemnos. It is exceeding fruitfull both in Grass, Fruit, Oil, and Wine, and wondrous plentiful in Hares, according to that of Ovid.

Quot Lepores in Atho, quot Apes pascuntur in Hybla.
 How many Hares on Athos feed,
 What Swarms of Bees on Hybla breed.

It is inhabited only by Greek Monks, whom they call Caloires, of the order of S. Basil, to whom the Hill, commonly called the Holy Mountain, hath been long since dedicated: the place being so privileged by the Grand Seignior, that neither Turk nor Græcian may inhabit in it, except such Græcians only as profess this life. Of these there are about 6000, dispersed in 42 Monasteries, built after a military manner, for fear of Thieves and Pirates, wherewith they were much infested in times past: frequented with great Concourfe of People coming thither to behold and adore some Reliques, (for which they are of much esteem;) the free Oblations of those Pilgrims, and some Benevolence from the Turks, which do much respect them, being the chief means of their Subsistence. The manner of their life is like that of the ancient Eremites: poorly clad, their Shirts of Woollen, which they both spin and weave themselves; none of them idle at any time, doing still somewhat for their Livelihood, and the advancement of the House of which they are, as dressing Vines, felling Timber, yea and building Ships. Few of them give themselves to Study, and some of them are of so gross an Ignorance, that they can neither write nor read. They are bound by their Order to lodge and entertain such Strangers as have occasion to pass that way, according to their rank and calling, and that of free cost too, if it be desired.

Towns of most note, according to the several Regions and parts hereof, are, for Mygdonia specially and properly so called, 1. Antigonis, so called from Antigonis a King of Macedon, the first Founder of it. 2. Xylopolis. 3. Terpillus. 4. Phisco. 5. Assorus; all mentioned by Ptolemy, but not else observable. 6. Apollonia, for distinction sake called Apollonia Mygdonia, to difference it from Apollonia in Albania, then a part of Macedon: famous for the Studies of Augustus Cæsar, who here learn'd the Greek Tongue. For Amphaxitis, there was 7. Arctonisa; 8. Stagira, now called Nicalia, renowned for the Birth of Aristotle, hence named Stagirites. 9. Thessalonica, situate on the bottom of Sinus Thermaicus, now called the Bay of Salonichi, by the name of the Town. Anciently the Metropolis or Head-City of Macedon; the Seat of the Præfatus Prætorio for Illyricum after the removal thereof from Sirmium; as also of the Primate of the Greek Church, who resided here. To the people of this City did S. Paul write two of his Epistles. It continued in great power and credit till the Fall of the Constantinopolitan Empire into the hands of the Latines: at which time, it was bestowed first on Boniface Marquess of Montferrat, the new King of Thessaly, after whose death it fell unto the State of Venice, who held it till the year 1432, when it was forced by Amurat the 2 to become Turkish. Which notwithstanding, it still preserves the reputation of a beautiful and wealthy City, inhabited by rich Merchants, who drive here a great Trade, especially for the commodities of the Indies; for beauty, Riches and Magnificence, little inferior unto Naples: and though the Turks and Jews make the greatest number of Inhabitants, yet here are reckoned 30 Churches for the use of Christians. As for the Jews, they swarm here in such great abundance, that in this City and that of Constantinople only there are reckoned 160000 of them; but generally hated and condemned by all sorts of People. 10. Siderocnpsa, of old called Chrysites, remarkable for its Mines of Gold and Silver; so beneficial to the Turk, that he received hence monthly 18000, and sometimes 30000 Crowns of claro. Next for Chalcidice, there was 11. Panormus, a Port-

Town, 12. Stratonica, in the Peninsula of Mount Athos. 13. Atho, or Athosa, in the same Peninsula, with a Promontory of the same name, high which it stood. 14. Acantus, now called Eriffo, on the Bay of the Holy Mountain. And finally in Paraxia we have 15. Ampelus, 16. Torona, giving name to the Bay adjoining, called anciently Sinus Toronica, now Golfo di Aemana. 17. Cassandra, on the Sea-side, so called from Cassander King of Macedon, who repaired and beautified it; being before named Potidaa. 18. Derris, 19. Merilus, 20. Pallene, situate in the Cherfonese or Demy-Island called Patalene, and by some Paralia: formerly consecrated to the Muses, but before that infamous for the War which the Giants are fabled to have made here against the Gods, at what time it was called Phlegra, the Fields adjoining Campi Phlegra, in which this great Battle is supposed to be fought: The occasion of the Fable was, (as both Theagenes and Eudoxus do expound the same) That the Inhabitants hereof in those elder times, being men of a most impious and insolent Life, got the name of Giants; whom when Hercules endeavoured to subdue and reduce to Reason, it happened that there fell a great Tempest of Thunder and Lightning, by which they were constrained to flee and submit themselves. Hence the Report that those Giants made War against the Gods. Others have placed these Phlegraan Fields in Thessaly, and perhaps more probably. Certain I am, that some place nearer to the Hills of Pelion, Ossa and Olympus, doth agree best with it: if at least Ovid were not out in his narration, who makes those Mountains to be heaped upon one another, for their better reaching to the Skies, and fighting upon even ground, as the saying is. For thus that Poet;

Affestasse ferunt regnum caeleste Gigantes,
Atque congestos struxisse ad Sidera Montes.
At pater omnipotens misso perfrigit Olympum
Fulmine, & excussit subiectum Pelion Ossa.

Which may be English in these words:
 The Giants once the throne of Heaven affected,
 And Hills on Hills unto the Stars erected:
 Till Jove with Thunder high Olympus brake,
 And Pelion did from under Ossa take.

But from those Fables to proceed to more real Stories. This Country was first peopled by Citium, the Son of Javan, passing over out of Asia minor: in memory whereof here was not only a Town called Citium, spoken of by Livie l. 42. but the whole Land of Macedon is in the Book of Maccabees called the Land of Chetium, 1 Maccab. 1. 1. and the Inhabitants hereof called Citium in the 8. Chapter of the same Book, v. 5. Spreading in tract of time from one Sea to the other, from the Ægean to the Adriatick, some Colonies of them passed from hence to Italy, and first inhabited that Country, as hath there been said. Such as continued in these parts, divided into several Tribes, as in all parts else, became in time to be united in the name of Macedons. A People not much taken notice of in the former times, living a poor and painful life, Goatherds and Shepherds for the most part, scarce able to defend their own Mountains from the next Invader, much less to dream of conquering either Greece or Persia: And therefore Alexander told them, and not much unfitly, (though by him spoken in passion, and to their Disgrace) that his Father Philip had first made them Gentlemen. For Philip having learned the Rudiments of War under Epaminondas, (being then an Hostage with the Thebans) and by that means becoming acquainted with the Temper and State of Greece, not only freed his own Kingdom from the Illyrians, Thracians, and other barbarous Nations, who had gained upon it; but taking advantage of the Factions raised amongst the Græcians, (which he knew how to feed and cherish for his own improvement) ment) brought them at first wholly to rely upon him, and after to be subject to him. Inasmuch that never any Monarchy had a swifter Growth, nor a more speedy Dissolution: there passing not full 40 years from the first of Philip to the last of Alexander; in which space it was both begun, perfected, and broken to pieces. For the Foundation being laid in Murder, Perjury, and Treason, as at first it was, was never likely to be blessed with a long Continuance.

Of these 24 Kings only 6 are famous: viz. 1. Caranant, the first King, originally of Argos, of the Race of Hercules, and by an Oracle commanded to lead a Colony into this Country, and to follow the first Flock of Cattel he saw before him. Being here arrived in a tempestuous stormy day, he espied a Herd of Goats flying the fury of the Weather: These Goats he followed unto Ædessa, into which, by reason of the darkness of the Air, he entred undiscovered, wone the Town, and in short space became Lord of all the Country. On which occasion as the Goat afterwards became the Arms and Ensign of the Kings of Macedon, so by that Beast those Kings were figuratively designed in the Holy Scripture: of which see Dan. 8. 5. 21. 2. Perdicas, the fourth King, who at Ægæ built a Burial-place for all his Successors, assuring his People, that as long as their Kings were there buried his Race should never fail; and so it happened. For the Kingdom of Macedon, after the death of Alexander the Great, who was buried at Babylon, was translated to the Sons of Demetrius. 3. Europus, who in his infancy was carried in a Cradle against the Illyrians his Enemies, and returned victorious: This the Macedons did, either because they thought they could not be beaten, their King being present, or persuading themselves that there was none so void of Honour and Compassion as to abandon an Infant, no way able to save himself from Destruction but by the Valour and fidelity of his Servants. 4. Alexander, the Son of Amyntas, famous for a notable Exploit on the Persian Embassadors, who, being sent from Megabyzus, requested a view of the Macedonian Ladies. No sooner were they entred, but perulantibus eas Persis contrèllantibus, as Justine relateth the Story, they were called back by this Alexander, sending in their steads young Springalls maidenly attired; who, upon the like Indignities offered slew these effeminate Asians. After which he behaved himself so discreetly, that the Persian Monarch gave him all Greece between Hæmus and Olympus. 5. Philip, Father to Alexander, who governed first as a Guardian to Amyntas, the Son of Perdicas his elder Brother; but afterwards took unto himself both the Kingdom and Title of King; which he continued in the Deposition of his Nephew and natural Sovereign, the Murder of the rest of his Brethren, and the Destruction of all such as opposed his practice. But, being otherwise a man of approved Abilities, he cleared his own Country of the Illyrians, subdued Achaia Thrace, and a great part of Peloponnesus, and was chosen General of the Greeks against the Persians. But as soon as he had made all things ready for this Expedition, he was slain by one Antipater, a young Gentleman whom he had formerly abused in the heat of his unnatural Lusts. 6. Alexander, the Son of Philip, who recovered such parts of Greece as on the death of his Father had befooled themselves with a hope of Liberty. He subdued Darius the great King of Persia, Taxiles and Porus Kings of India; founded the Monarchy of the Græcians; and in the height of his Successes was poisoned at Babylon (as it is conceived) by Cassander, one of his great Captains: his Revenue at the time of his death amounting to 300000 Talents yearly. After his death his new-got Empire was much controverted in the point of Succession, he himself dying without lawful Issue, and having at his death bequeathed it to him who was thought most worthy by his Army: and his Souldiers, according to their several affections and Relations, thought their own Leaders most deserving. At last the Title of King (and in effect nothing but the Title) was by consent of the Commanders cast on Aridenus, a Bastard of Philip, to whom Perdicas was appointed to be Protector, (for Aridenus was a little crazed in his Brain) and to be General of the Army: by whose design he was also married to Eurydice, Daughter to Amyntas, whom Philip had before disposed of that Kingdom. As for the Provinces, they were assigned unto the Government of the chief Commanders, viz. Egypt to Ptolemy, Syria to Laomedon, Cilicia to Philotas, Media to Pytho, Cappadocia to Eumenes, Pamphylia, Lycia and Phrygia major to Antigonis, Caria to Cassander, Lydia to Méander, Pontus and Phrygia minor to Leontatus, Assyria to Selencus, Persis to Penceles, Thrace to Lysimachus, and Macedon it self unto Antipater: the other parts of the Persian Empire being left to them unto whose hands they were committed in the time of Alexander. But this Division held not long: for Perdicas being once slain by Ptolemy, and Eumenes made away by Antigonis, these two became quickly too great for the rest; Ptolemy adding Syria and Cyprus to the Kingdom of Egypt, and Antigonis bringing under his Command not only all Asia minor, but Assyria, Media, and almost all the Eastern parts of the Persian Empire. Antipater in the mean time, succeeding in the Protectorship, banished Olympias the Mother of Alexander out of Macedonia, as bearing but a Step-dame's love unto Aridenus. But he being dead the returned out of Epirus, (the place of her Banishment) into Macedonia, where raising a strong Party amongst the people, she put Aridenus and his Wife Eurydice to death, proclaiming Alexander the Son of Alexander by Roxane; both slain not long after by Cassander the Son of Antipater, who, to make sure work, murdered also with the like Cruelty Hercules, the Son of Alexander by Barsine (another Persian Lady, as Roxane was) the last Survivor of that House. And so the Royal Family being rooted out, Antigonis took unto himself the Title of King; as did Selencus, who had now recovered all the Persian Provinces beyond Euphrates. The like did Ptolemy in Egypt; and Cassander in Macedon.

| 3648  | 1. Cassander Son of Antipater supposed to have been the Poisoner of Alexander, rooted out the Blood-royal of Macedon. His Reign was full of Troubles and Difficulties. 19. |
| 3667  | 2. Alexander and Antipater, Sons to Cassander, but   |

but not well agreeing, called unto their Aid Lysimachus and Demetrius, by whom they were both in short time murdered. 4.

- 3671 3. Demetrius, Son to Antigonus, the powerful King of Asia, after he had in one Battel against Selencus lost both his Father and all his Asian Dominions, settled himself in Macedon: but being there outed by Pyrrius, he fled to Selencus, and with him died. 6.

- 3677 4. Pyrrius, King of Epirus, was by the Souldiers, voluntarily forsaking Demetrius, made King of Macedon: but after 7 months the Souldiers revolted to Lysimachus, as being a Macedonian born. 1.

- 3678 5. Lysimachus, King of Thrace, being thus made King of Macedon, was in the end vanquished and slain by Selencus, the last Survivor of Alexander's Captains. 7.

- 3685 6. Ceraunus, or Ptolemy Ceraunus Son to Ptolemy of Egypt, having traitorously slain his Friend and Patron Selencus, seized on Macedon: but lost it, together with his Life, unto the Gauls, who then plagued these Countries. After whose death this Kingdom, being distracted amongst many Competitors, settled at last upon

- 3687 7. Antigonus Gonatus, the Son of Demetrius, who, for his Valour shewn in expelling the Gauls, was made King of Macedon. And though for a while he gave way to Pyrrius, then returning from Italy; yet after the death of Pyrrius he again recovered his Estate, but was outed once again by Alexander the Son of Pyrrius. 36.

- 3723 8. Demetrius II. Son of Antigonus, recovered Macedon from the power of Alexander the Son of Pyrrius. 10.

- 3733 9. Antigonus II. surnamed Dofon, left by Demetrius as Protector to his young Son Philip, usurped the Kingdom. He diverse times vanquished and crushed the Gracians, beginning then to cast off the Yoke of Macedon. 12.

- 3745 10. Philip, the Son of Demetrius. 42.

3787 11. Perseus, the Son of Philip, the last King of Macedon. The Subversion of which Estate was first begun in the time of his Father, who had not only warred upon the Aetolians and other of the Greeks whom the Romans had taken into their Protection, but sided with Hannibal against them. Upon which grounds they sent first Titus Qu. Flaminius, one of their Consuls, by whom Philip was vanquished at the Battel of Canosephalos, and his Kingdom made Tributary unto Rome. After which picking a Quarrel against Perseus also, managed with variable Success by Licinius, Martius, and others of their Commanders, they dispatched Paulus Aemilius with an Army into Macedon, to bring him to absolute Subjection. Who sped so well, that Macedon was made a Province of the Roman Empire, and Perseus led captive unto Rome, Anno 3789. In which Triumph, besides the Pomp of leading a Captive King in Bonds, Aemilius caused the ready Money which he brought out of Greece to be carried in 750 Vessels, every Vessel containing three Talents; which made so infinite a Sum, that the Roman people were free for many years after from all Taxes and Impostitions. A. M. 3789.

Macedon, thus made a Province of the Roman Empire, and afterwards divided into three parts or Provinces, that is to say, Macedonia Prima, Macedonia Secunda or Salutaris, and Prevalitana, in the new Modell of Constantine became a Diocese, the Diocese hereof containing the Provinces of Cresse, Achaia, Old and New Epirus, Macedonia Prima, and the greatest part of Salutaris; the residue of Salutaris and Prevalitana (which makes up the Country now called Albania) being laid to the Diocese of Dacia. It continued part of the Eastern Empire till towards the last fatal dissolution of it; though many times harassed and depopulated by the Scythians, Bulgarians, Rosses, and other of the barbarous People, at their several Invasions of it. Finally, it was conquered by the Turks, first, under the Conduct of Bajazet, their fourth King, taking Nicopolis, a Town heretofore bordering on Thrace, and lying North of Sinus Strimonicus now the Bay of Contessa; and after under Amurath the second their sixth King, making themselves masters of Thessalonica, the chief City of it, and therewith of all the Country. By reason of which many Invasions and last Desolation by the Turks, there is scarce one of all those many Cities before mentioned now of any eminence, except Thessalonica only; the rest being miserably destroyed. And for the Country it self, it is governed by a Turkish Sanzack, under the Beglerbeg of Greece; his annual Revenue being but 8000 Crowns, nor any thing else required of him then to maintain 100 Horse in ordinary pay for defence of his Province, and to find 400 Horse on extraordinary occasions, as the Grand Seignour shall command him.

6. T H R A C E.

TH R A C E hath on the East Pontus Euxinus, on the North the Hill Hemus, on the South the Aegean Sea and part of Macedon. It is a very large and goodly Province, extending 20 days journey in length, and 7 days journey in breadth; and, in relation to the Heavens, reaching unto the 44. Degree of the Northern Latitude; so that the longest Day in Summer is about 15 hours, three quarters.

By several men, according to the times they lived in, it hath been called by divers names: by Stephanus Asia, by Strabo Odrisia, by Lycophron Crefsonia, by some Writers, Scythia by Josephus the Hebrew Thyras. But generally it is called Thrace, or Thracia, and that, as some from Thrax the Son of Mars, as others, from Thracia, an Inchantress: more probably from the Ferity and barbarous condition of the first Inhabitants, the name in the Original Greek bearing that construction: most likely from Thyras, the Son of Japhet, who first planted here, in memory of whom it did retain the name of Thyras in the time of Josephus; besides many other footsteps and remembrances of him in the names of many of their Towns, and some of their Princes; of which we have already spoken in our general Preface. Finally, by the Turks it is called Romania; either from the many Roman Colonies which were planted here, or because Constantinople, the chief City of it, was anciently called Novus Roma: and by that name it is now called in most modern Writers.

The Country generally is neither of a rich Soil nor a pleasant Air: the Corn and other Fruits, by reason of the coldness of the Climate, leisurely ripening; the Vines yielding more Shade than Juice, and the Trees for the most part more Leaves than Fruit: yet in some parts there be many large and goodly Plains, where they reap good store of Corn, but of Pulse especially; and towards the Sea-side they have plenty of Wine, which Pliny much commended both for strength and goodness.

The People anciently were very bold and valiant, and called by some Armodi, because every man was a Law to himself. So that it was truly said by Herodotus, that if they had either been all of one mind, or under one King, they they had been invincible. Of Manners they were rude and savage somewhat near to Brutishness; buying their Wives, and selling both their Sons and Daughters, as in open Market: in that since imitated by the Turks, who possess their Country. The men were more courageous than comely, wearing Cloaths according to their Conditions ragged and unseemly. The Married-woman were in love to their Husbands so constant, that they willingly sacrificed themselves at their Funerals. The Virgins were bestowed not by their own Parents, but the common Fathers of their Cities. Such as brought neither Beauty nor Virtue for their Dowry, were put off according to their Money; most times sold as other Cattel in the Markets. In matters of Religion they worship Mars, Bacchus, Diana, Mercury, as did other Gentiles; swearing especially by the first, from whom they bragged themselves to have been descended. But their chief national Deity was one Zamolxes, sometimes a Native of this Country, who, having been brought up under Pythagoras, and returning home, prescribed them good and wholesome Laws; assuring them that, if they did observe the same, they should go unto a place when they left this World in which they should enjoy all manner of Pleasure and contentment. By this means having gotten some opinion of a Divinity amongst them, he absented himself, and after was worshipped as their God. Upon these Principles, when any one was born amongst them, his Parents and other Friends, sitting round about him, lamented bitterly his coming into the World, ripping up all the Miseries and Afflictions whereto he was to be exposed in this present Life, and so deplored his condition as absolutely miserable and unhappy. But, on the contrary, when any one chanced to die, they buried him with all Joy and Alacrity; highly rejoicing that by this means he was freed from the Crosses and Disasters of this wretched world. Which is expressed thus briefly (after his wonted manner) by my Author, Lugentur Puerperia; natiq; deflentur. Funera contra Festisunt, et veluti Sacra cantu laque celebrantur. A piece of such hard and orthodox Divinity, that I wonder how they hit upon it in those times of Darkness; and favouring very much of the Primitive Piety, by which the Obits of the Saints were kept as Festivals, no notice being taken of the day of their Births. According to that of the good old Writer, Non Nativitatem sed Mortem, Sanctorum Ecclesia pretiosam et festam judicat.

Here lived the Tyrant Polymnestor, who villainously murdered Polydorus, a younger Son of Priamus: for which fact Heecuba, the young Prince's Mother, scratched him to death. Here also lived the Tyrant Tereus, of whom before in Phocis; and Diomedes, who, using to feed his Horses with Man's flesh, was slain by Heracles, and cast unto his Horses. And, finally, here reigned King Coty, whom I mention not as a Tyrant but propose as a pattern of rare Temper both in mastering and preventing Passion. For when a Neighbour-Prince had sent him a Present of Glasses of the purest Metal, and no less accurate in the Workmanship or Fashion of them, (having dispatched the Messenger with all the due Complements of Majesty and Gratitude) he brook them all to pieces; least if by mishap any of his Servants should do the like, he might be stirred to an intemperate Choler.

Chief Mountains in this Country, besides Hemus spoken of already, are 1. Rhodope, the highest next Mount Hemus in those parts of the World; craggy and rough; and the Top thereof continually white with Snow: memorable for the Fate and Fable of Orpheus, who in a melancholic humour (having lost his Wife) betook himself to these Mountains, where with his Musick he affected both Woods and Beasts, who are said to have danced unto his Musick: from this place of his Abode called Rhodopeus, from his Country Thracine; Nonne carminibus vince nec Thracius Orpheus, &c. as the Shepherd boasteth in the Poet. The truth is that he was a man of an heavenly Muse, and by his Discates and good Counsel, laid down in Verse; first of all civilized this People, and weaned them by degrees from their Bestiality. Hence the occasion of the Fable. But for Mount Rhodope it self, it is in the midst of this Country, thwarting it from Mount Hemus towards the West, which, with the Spurs and Branches of it, and the Plains adjoining, lying betwixt the River Nessus on the West, and Melas or Niger on the East, made up that Province of the Empire called Rhodope, by the name of the Mountain. 2. Pangaeus, rich in Mines of Silver. 3. Melaprus, shooting towards the Sea, full of Rocks and Cliffs. And 4. Orbelus, lying towards Macedon, where there is a little Region from hence called Orbelia.

Principal Rivers hereof, besides Strymon spoken of before, the Boundary in some places betwixt this and Macedon; are, 1. Nessus, by the Gracians now called Melrus, by the Turks Charafas, which rising out of Mount Hemus, falleth into the Sea near the Isle of Thassus. 2. Athyra, in which name the memory of Thyras the Son of Japhet seems to be preserved; which, rising in Mount Hemus also, loseth it self in the Propontick; as doth 3. Bathyra, another River rising from the same Mount Hemus. 4. Hebrus, the most noted River of all this Country, rising out of Rhodope, and falling into the Aegean near the Isle of Samothrace: a River of so slow a Course, that it is not easy to discern which way it goeth; but memorable in the Poets for the Fate of Orpheus, who, being torn in pieces by the Thracian Women, had his Limbs thrown into it by those Furies. 5. Theraps, good against the Scab both in man and beast, issuing out of 30 Fountains; some hot, some cold; with the pleasantness of whose Waters Darius the King of Persia was so delighted, that he erected a Pillar in honour of it.

The chief Towns were, 1. Abdera, now called Prolystis, situate not far from the Fall of the River Nessus into the Aegean, the Birth-place of Democritus, who spent his whole Life in laughing at the Follies of others. 2. Potidaa; of old a Colony of Athens, from whom it revolted, and submitted to the State of Corinth. But the Athenians, not enduring the Affront, beleaguered it, and after two years Siege, and the expence of 2500 Talent, could not recover it again but on Composition. 3. Enos, on the Aegean Sea; a Town of great Strength and Safety, and therefore used by the latter Constantinopolitan Emperours for the securing of great persons. For hither Michael Palaeologus sent Jathartes, the Turkish Sultan, flying to him for Aid; and hither Mahomet the great sent Demetrius, Prince of Palaponezzus, when he yielded up his Country to him: both under colour of providing for their ease and Safety; but in plain terms to keep them in honourable Prisons. 4. Lysimachia, on the Sea-shore; once of great importance, built by Lysimachus, who after Alexander's death laid hands on this Country: afterwards garrisoned by Philip the Father of Perseus; on the withdrawing of whose Forces, for some other Service it was taken and raised to the ground by the barbarous Thracians, and all the People of it carried into Captivity; but by Antiochus the Great re-edified and new-peopled again, moved thereunto by the convenient situation and former glories of the place. 5. Philippopolis, so called from Philip King of Macedon, the Father of Alexander, who built and fortified it as a Bridge to hold in the Thracians; called also Trimontium, from three Hills on which it was situate; beautified in the time of the Romans, with a goodly Amphitheatre, continuing entire and whole till these these latter days, and might have lasted longer by many Ages, did not the Turks daily take away the Stones thereof, which are all of Marble, to make money of them. Here are also many other ancient Monuments, though the Town be much wasted and destroyed, the Scythians at one time killing in it above 100000 persons, which notwithstanding it is populous and well-frequented, by reason of the convenient situation of it on the River Hebrus, which they now call Mariza. 6. Trajanopolis, focalled from the Emperour Trajan, by whom it was either founded or repaired; indifferently well peopled, and still preserving its old name. 7. Selymbria, on the Coast of the Propontick Sea; beautified with a commodious Port for receipt of small Vessels, and many Bays adjoining capable of greater by Ptolemy called Selybria and Olybria by Suidas: 8. Asiopolis, upon Pontus Euxinus or the Black Sea, now Sisopolis. 9. Phinopolis, on the same Sea also. 10. Nicopolis at the foot of the Mount Hemus, there being another of that name near the River Nessus. 11. Perinthos on the Propontick Sea, near the Influx of the River Arfus. A Town of great note in the ancient Business of Greece; of great strength, and peopled formerly with men of such resolutions, that they maintained their Liberty against Philip of Macedon, after almost all the rest of Thrace had submitted to him. 12. Heraclea, at first a Colony of the Thebans, and afterwards of much request in the time of the Romans, as being beautified with the Palaces of Vespasian, Domitian, and Antoninus, Emperours of Rome, as also with an Amphitheatre cut out of one entire Marble, and accounted one of the World's seven Wonders; and finally, made the Metropolitan City of the Province of Europe, one of the Provinces of the Diocese of Thrace, whereof more anon. 13. Olynthus, called by Xenophon the greatest City of Thrace; as possibly enough it was in Power and Riches, though not in greatness of Extent. A Colony of the Athenians, rich in Trade, and Mistress of a fair and goodly Territory adjoining to it: the People whereof had been malicious Enemies to the Kings of Macedon, which principally endured Philip spoken of before, to set upon them. In which Attempt he sped so well, that what he could not get by Force he obtained by Money, bribing some of the principal Officers to betray it to him. For the recovery whereof Demosthenes set moved the People of Athens, in those elaborate Orations called the Olynthiacks. 14. Sestos, in the Thracian Chersonese, which, being a Peninsula abutting over against Troas on the Asian side, is now called Saint George's Arm. Opposite whereunto on the other side of the Water, is the Town or Abydos; remarkable for the Tragical Loves of Hero and Leander, celebrated by Musæus, on old Greek Poet. 15. Callipolis, on the Northern Promontory of this Chersonese, the first City of note that ever the Turks possessed in Europe; taken by Solyman, the Son of Orchanes the second King of the Ottoman Race, Anno 1358; from whence they easily and in little time spread themselves all over the rest of Thrace; the ordinary passage of late times betwixt Europe and Asia, by reason of the convenient Harbour and safe Anchorage. 16. Cardia, seated on the Western side of it, opposite to the Isle of Lemnos; the Birth place of Eumenes, who, being a poor Carrier's Son, attained to such an ability in the Art of War, that after the death of Alexander the Great, under whom he served, he seized on the Provinces of Cappadocia and Paphlagonia, and siding (though a stranger to Macedon) with Olympias and the Bloud Royal against the Greek Captains, vanquished and slew Craterus, and divers times drave Antigonus (afterwards Lord of Asia) out of the Field. But being by his own Souldiers betrayed, he was by them delivered to Antigonus, and by him slain. 17. Sardes, situate towards Mount Hemus, memorable for the Council there held against the Arians, Anno 331. 18. Adrianople, seated near the midst of Thrace, called anciently Uscudama; but got this name from Adrian the Emperour, who repaired and beautified it: made subject to the Turks by Bajazet, Anno 1362: from the first taking of it made the Seat of the Turkish Kings, till the taking of Constantinople by Mahomet the Great; by whom it was removed unto that City. 19. Pera, opposite to Constantinople, on the farther side of the Water, (as the word doth signifie in the Greek;) by some called Galata; once peopled by a Colony of Genoese, as the Mart and Factory of that State; taken by Mahomet the great, Anno 1453; but still replenished, for the most part, with Christian Merchants and Artificers.

But the chief glory of this Country, and of all the East, is the renowned City of 20. Constantinople, seated in so commodious a place for Empire, that it overlooks both Europe and Asia, and commands not only the Propontis and Bosphorus but the Euxine Sea. First founded by one Byzas, and from him named Byzantium; but being taken by the Persians, and from them recovered by the Spartans, (unwilling that the Persians should grow strong in Europe) it was repaired and fortified by Pausanias, one of their Commanders, 663 years before the Birth of our Saviour. In vain it was besieged by Philip of Macedon, and of great strength in the Flourish of the Roman Empire. The Walls were of a just height, every Stone whereof was joyned with Couplets of Bricks, that the whole seemed but one entire Piece; adorned besides with Turrets, Bulwarks, and other Arts of Fortification. Siding with Niger in his War against Severus the Emperour, it endured a Siege of three years against all the Forces of the Romans: during which time the people were so distressed by Famine, that men meeting in the Streets would draw and fight, the Conquerour feeding on the Vanquished. For want of Artillery to discharge on the Assailants, they cast down upon them whole Statues made of Bricks, and the like curious Imagery Houses they pulled down to get Timber for Shipping; the Women cutting off their Hair to inch out their Tackle: and having thus patched up a Navy of 500 Sail, it was left all by one Tempest. Compelled to yield by this Misfortune, the principal of the Nobility were put to the Sword, the Wealth of the Inhabitants given for a Prey to the Souldiers, the Walls thereof dismantled, and the Town left in rubbish. Yet there appeared so much of Majesty and Beauty in the very Ruines, Ut mireris utrum eorum qui primi exstruxerunt, vel eorum qui deinceps sunt demoliti, vires sint potiores, as Herodian hath it. Re-edified afterwards by the Emperour Constantine, he honoured it with his own name, and made it the chief Seat of the Roman Empire. The City was finished May 11. Anno 331; and, being so finished, was indowed with all the Privileges of Rome, an equal number of Senators, one of the Annual Consuls, and all other Officers of State, chosen out of both; the Citizens of the one being free of the other, and capable of all places of most Trust and Power. For that cause it was called NOVA ROMA, in some following times. This City he adorned also with magnificent Buildings, curious Statues, and such like Ornaments, transported hither from Old Rome: which City he spoiled of more costly Pieces than any twenty of his Predecessours had brought unto it. At this day the chief Buildings are the Turks Seraglio and the Temple of Saint Sophia; which as they differ not much in place and situation, so as little in Magnificence and State. The Temple of Saint Sophia was, if not built, yet re-edified, by the Emperour Justinian. It is built of an Oval form, surrounded with Pillars of admirable workmanship, adorned with spacious and beautiful Galleries, roofed all over with with Mosaic work, and vaulted underneath; very strong for the Fabrick, and pleasing for the Eye. The Doors are very curiously wrought and plated; one of which by the Superstitious people is thought to have been made of the planks of Noah's Ark. And yet this Temple is little more than the Chancel of the Ancient Church; which contained in length 265 foot, and 180 in breadth; and yet to our Saint Paul's in London may seem for the bigness to have been but a Chappel of Ease. But what it wants in Greatness, it hath gained in Beauty, and in the Elegancy of the Building, wherein it is thought to exceed all the Fabriks in the whole World. The Sides and Floor are all flagged with excellent Marble, and before the Entrance is a goodly Portico, or Porch, in which as well the Christians, who visit it out of Curiosity, as the Turks, who repair thither for Devotion, are to leave their Shoes. By Mahomet the Great, after the taking of the City, it was converted to a Turkish Mosque, as it still continueth, frequented by the Grand Seignior almost every Friday which is the Sabbath of that People. Near hereunto standeth the Palace or Seraglio of the Ottoman Emperours, on the North-East Angel of the City, where formerly stood the ancient Byzantium; divided from the rest of the City by a Wall containing three miles in Circuit, and comprehending goodly Groves of Cypress in intermixed with Plains, delicate Gardens, artificial Fountains, and all variety of Pleasures which Luxury can affect or treasure compass. The Palace it self, enjoying a goodly prospect in the Sea, was first built by Justinus the Emperour, afterwards much enlarged by the Ottoman Race, containing three great Courts one within another: the Buildings yielding unto those of France and Italy, for the near contrivances, but far surpassing them for Cost and Curiousness.

As for the City it self, it is said to be 18 miles in compass, and to contain 200000 living souls; yet would be more populous then it is, if the Plague, like a cruel Terrian Age, did not every third year so rage amongst them. It is fortified towards the Land with three strong and high Walls, the one higher than the other, the outermost highest of them all: towards the Sea with one Wall only, built after the old fashion with many Turrets, which very strongly flanker and defend the same. But formerly both the Town and Chersonese in which it standeth were defended from the Incurfions of the barbarous people by a strong Wall built on the very Isthmus of it, some ten miles from the City, reaching from one side to the other: the work of Aquasilius who succeeded Zeno, Anno 494. A City which a far off gives to the Eye a most pleasing object: to intermix with Gardens and beset with Trees, that it seems a City in a Wood; but being entred, it much deceiveth the expectation which it promised, the Buildings of it being mean, if not contemptible. The Streets for the most part are exceeding narrow, but raised on each side for the greater Cleanliness: the Houses but of two Stories high, some of rough Stone, and some of Timber, without any outward Grace or exterior Garnishing; in many places nothing but low Sheds or rows of Shops; and in some places long dead Walls belonging unto great mens Houses. The principal Beauty of the whole, next to some Monuments of Antiquity, which are still preserved, and the Tombs or Sepulchres of some of the Ottoman Kings, which are very sumptuous, are the Mosques or Temples of the Turks, about eight thousand in number; and the Port or Haven, so conveniently profound, that Ships of greatest Burthen may safely lay their Sides to the sides thereof, for the receipt or discharge of their Lading; and so commodiously seated on the Thracian Bosphorus, that there is no Wind, whatsoever it be, which brings not in some Shipping to it. But that which gives the greatest Pleasure to the sight from the Hills adjoining is the Situation of it on seven Mountains; most of them crowned with Magnificent Mosques, built all of white Marble, round in form, and finished on the top with gilded Spires, reflecting the Sun-beams with a marvellous Splendour. On the first whereof standeth the Ruines of Constantine's Palace, exceeding stately to behold. On the second, a fair Turkish Mosque, built on the Palace anciently belonging to the Greek Patriarch. On the third stands a stately Mosque, the Sepulchre of Mahomet the second: and a very large Hospital, for entertainment of Pilgrims and relief of the poor: the Annual Rents whereof are valued at 200000 Chequines. On the fourth and fifth the Sepulchres of Selimus the first, and Bajazet the second. On the sixth the Mosque and Sepulchre of Solyman the Magnificent, numbered amongst the present wonders of the World. And on the seventh the Temple of Saint Sophia, and the Turks Seraglio, spoken of already. In which respect it is called Πόλις ἡ τῶν ἑπτὰ ὀρίων by Nicetas, Urbs septicolis by Paulus Diaconus; and so acknowledged to be by Janus Donja, Phineas Morison, G. Sandys, and other of our modern Travellers, the Eye-witnesses of it. So that if there be any Mystery in the number of seven, or that the sitting of the great Whore on a seven-headed Beast, be an assured direction to find out the Antichrist; we may as well look for him in Constantinople, or Nova Roma, where the Great Turk, the professed Enemy of Christ and the Christian Faith, hath his Seat and Residence, as amongst the seven Hills of Old Rome, where the Pope resideth. Or, if his sitting in the Temple of God shew us where to find him; we may as well look for him in the Temple of Saint Sophia, now a Turkish Mosque, as in Saint Peter's Church at Rome, still a Christian Temple.

But to return again unto Constantinople. As it was made by Constantine the Imperial City, and consequently the chief City of the East in all Civil matters; so it came in little time to have a great Sway also in Affairs of Religion. The Christian Faith is said to be first preached in Byzantium by Saint Andrew the Apostle, the first Bishop thereof. Afterwards spreading over Thrace, and the Churches thereof being regulated by many Bishops, the chief Preeminence in matters which concerned those Churches was given unto the Bishops of Heraclea, Heraclea being at that time the Metropolis or principal City of the Province. But after that Constantinople was built by Constantine, and made the Imperial City, as before was said, it did not only over-top Heraclea, and draw unto it self the Metropolitan Dignity, but stood in Competition with the other Patriarchal Churches for the supreme Power: inasmuch as at the second General Council holden in this City it was unanimously decreed, that the Patriarch thereof should in degree of Honour be next unto the Bishop of Rome, and above those of Antioch and Alexandria; the same Decree being confirmed in the Council of Chalcedon also. By which not only all the Churches in the Diocese of Thrace, but also of Natolia, or Asia minor, (except Cilicia and Iuauria, which remained to the Patriarch of Antioch) containing no less then 28 of the Roman Provinces, were made subject to him. And though Pope Leo the first, pretending only the preservation of the Privileges of those two great Churches, but indeed fearing lest New Rome might in the end get the Precedency of the Old, did oppose this Act, and some of his Successors persisted in the same Resistance; yet they were forced in the end to give way unto it, especially after the Emperour Justinian had by his Imperial Edict confirmed the same; by whom it was finally ordained, Senioris Romæ Papæ primum esse omnium Sacerdotum, beatissimum autem Archiepiscopum Constantinopolitæ.

nepoleos, Novæ Romæ, secundum habere locum, that is to say, That the Pope of Rome should have the first place in all General Councils, and the Bishop of Constantinople, or New Rome, should have the second. Encouraged wherewith, and with the countenance and favour of the Emperor Mauritius, John Patriarch of Constantinople, in the time of Gregory the Great, took to himself the Title of Universal or Oecumenical Bishop, the Pastor-General (as it were) of the Church of Christ. And though Pope Boniface, by the Grant of that bloudy Tyrant Phocas, got that Title from him: yet the Patriarchs of Constantinople made good their ground, never submitting either themselves or their Churches to the Pope's Authority; being for that cause specially accounted by the Church of Rome for Schismatics, and accordingly reviled and persecuted with all kind of Indignities. How it succeeded with these Patriarchs in the times ensuing, and by what means their Jurisdiction was extended over all Greece, Moscovia, part of Poland, and many other Churches in the North and East, hath been said already. Certain it is, the constant Residence of the Emperours from the time of Constantine gave great ground unto it: of whom I should here add the names, but that I must first sum up the affairs of Thrace before the Building of this mighty and predominant City, and take a brief view of the rest of those Provinces which we have comprehended under the name of Greece.

Concerning which we are to know, that the ancient Inhabitants of it had the names of Strymonii, Bardi, Dolones, Sapai, Sai, and some others, united by most Writers in the name of Thracians. They were governed at first by the Kings or Princes of their several Tribes, as most Nations else; distinguished from the common People, as in other Pomps, so most especially by their Gods, which their Kings had to themselves apart, and were not to be worshipped by the best of their Subjects. These not agreeing well together for the common good, it gave the Athenians, Spartans, Thebans, and other Nations of the Greeks, a good opportunity to invade their Country, to seize on the Sea-Towns thereof, and plant Colonies in them: the Country in those times being meanly peopled, and consequently giving that advantage unto the Grecians as the Indies in these latter times have to the Spaniards, Portuguese, English, Hollanders, and all other Adventurers. Such of them as lay next to Macedonia, proving bad Neighbours thereunto upon all occasions, at last provoked Philip the Father of Alexander, to put in for a share; who, being chosen Arbitrator betwixt two Competitors for that Kingdom, (drawn at last into fewer hands) came not unto the Council with such poor Attendants as Justice and Piety, but with a great and puissant Army; wherewith having vanquished and slain the two Pretenders, he pronounced Sentence for himself, and made Thrace his own, compelling the Inhabitants to pay him the tenth part of their Revenue for his yearly Tribute. After the death of Alexander this Country was seized on by Lysimachus, as his part of the Spoil, who here built the City Lysimachia; from hence invading Dacia, Macedonia, and the neighbouring Regions: and he being dead, the Thracians, now accustomed to a foreign Yoke, were either Subjects, or at least Tributaries to the Macedonians. Aiding them in their Wars against the Romans, they incurred the displeasure of that People; who, having settled their Affairs in other places, and repulsed the Cimbri, thought it fit time to call the Thracians to account for their former Actions: but sped so ill in the Attempt, that Porcius Cato lost his whole Army in the Onset, cunningly intercepted in their Woods and Fastnesses. Didius the Pretor, coming in whilst the Thracians were buie in the Chase, gave them such a stop, that he deserved a Triumph for it, and made the Victory more easie to Metellus, who succeeded Cato in that Charge, and triumphed also over them; as also did Lucullus on another Victory A. V. C. 680. Broken with so many ill Successes, they were finally subdued by Piso in the time of Augustus; and became so obsequious to that fortunate Prince, that Rhitemalces, a great and puissant King thereof, aided him with a strength of Horse against the Pannonians and Illyrians, who had then rebelled. Afterwards being made a Province of the Roman Empire, in Constantine's new Model it became a Diocese under the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis; Thrace it self being cast into four Provinces, that is to say, Thrace specially so called Hæmimontum, Rhodope, and Europa; Scythia and the Lower Mæsia, spoken of before, being added to it: of which the Prebidents of Rhodope and Hæmimontum were not to be appealed from to the Præfectus Prætorio, as the others were, but only to the Præfectus Constantinopolis, the Imperial City. But as Alfonso King of Castile, furnished the Wife, was once heard to say, (never the wiser for so saying) That had he stood at the elbow of Almighty God when he made the World, he would have shewed him how some things might have been better ordered: so give me leave to play the fool, and to say this here, that had I stood at Constantine's Elbow, I would have counselled him to lay the Diocese of Thrace to the Præfectus Illyricum, who had originally only the Dioceses of Macedonia and Illyricum under his Command; and not have placed it under the Præfectus of the East, who had both Asia and all Aegypt under his Authority. For being that there lay Appeals from the Vickers or Lieutenants of the several Dioceses to their several and respective Præfects, how great a trouble must it be to the Subjects of Thrace on every occasion of Appeal to post to Antioch, there to complain unto the Præfect of the Orient, when Serminum and Thesalonica, the ordinary Residences of the Præfectus Prætorio for Illyricum, were so hard at hand? But Constantine was an absolute Prince, and might do what he listed. He had not else removed his Seat so far towards the East, and left the Western parts of the Empire open to the Barbarous people, out of a fancy only to preserve the Eastern. For that it was a Fancy only the event did shew: the Persians for all this prevailing more than ever formerly, and Thrace it self, though honoured with the Imperial City, and planted with so many Roman Colonies, so ill inhabited, that a great part thereof lay wast and desart many Ages after. Inomuch as the Goths, being by the Huns driven over the Danow, were by the Emperor Valens planted in this Country, (the Emperor having a design to use them in his following Wars,) where not contented with the Portion allotted to them, they bid fair for all, waisting the whole Province, taking divers Towns, and endangering Constantinople it self, from whence they were not driven (Valens himself being killed in the War against them) but by the coming of some Saracens to the Aid of the Citizens. Nor could the Residence of the Emperours so protect this Country, but that it was continually harassed and depopulated by the Slaves, Bulgarians, Rosses, Saracens, and other Barbarous people falling in upon it; nor hinder one Bryoninus in the time of Michael Ducas and Nicephorus Botoniates, from assuming to himself the Title of King of Thrace; nor finally prevent the Turks of the Ottoman Race from getting ground every day on the Lesser Asia, inroaching upon Thrace it self, and in the end obtaining the Imperial City.

And here perhaps it is expected, considering the Turks are now possessed of Thrace and the rest of Greece; that we should make relation of the Nature of that People, their Customs, Forces, Policies, Original, and Proceedings. But

But the discourse thereof we will defer till we come to Turcomania, a Province of Asia from whence they made their first Inundations, like to some unrefillible Torrent, into Persia, and after into the other parts of the World now subject to them. And therefore letting that alone till another time, we will proceed to our Description of the rest of Greece, consisting of the Islands scattered in the Pontick, Propontick, Egean, (Cretean, and Ionian Seas: leaving out such as properly belong to Asia, till our Description of that Country, though otherwise Greek Islands, and so accounted both for their Language and Original.

7. The Islands of the PONTICK and PROPONTICK Seas.

Before we come to the Descriptions of these Islands, we must first look upon the Seas in which they lie; beginning with the PONTICK first, because the greatest, and that which doth communicate and convey its Waters unto all the rest. A Sea made up originally of the Confluence of those mighty Rivers (the greatest in those parts of the world) which do fall into it, that is to say, the Danow, Boristhenes and Tanaïs, falling out of Europe, besides many other fair and large Rivers, (though of lesser note) to the number of at least an hundred, which pay Tribute to it: the whole compass of it being 2700 miles; in form by some resembled to a Scythian bow when it is bended. A Sea not so salt as many others, and therefore much annoyed with Ice in Winter, seldom remitted in the Spring on the Northern Shore. The Traffick of it is wholly in a manner engroffed by the Turk, who is Master of all the Sea-coast of it, save what belongs to the Polonians and Crim-Tartars, at first it was called Ægeus from the *Inhospitable*ness, of the neighbouring People, which being brought to some Conformity caused the Sea to be called Ægeus. By Florus it is called Mare Sini-strum, because in the way from Rome to Asia minor it lay upon the left hand, as the Mediterranean did upon the right. It is commonly called at this time Mare Maggiore, for its greatness; and the Black Sea, because of the great Mists thence arising. Others not unprobably affirm that it is called the Black Sea, from the dangerous and black Shipwrecks here happening; for it is a very dangerous Shore, full of Rocks and Sands: and for this cause there is on the top of an high Tower a Lantern, in which there is a great Pan full of Pitch, Rosin, Tallow, and the like, in dark nights continually burning, to give warning to Mariners how near they approach unto the Shore. This Sea, being the biggest of all those parts, gave occasion to them which knew no bigger to call all Seas by the name of Pontus, as Ovid, Omnia pontus erant, decrant quoque littora ponto; and in another place of the same Poet, —nil nisi pontus & aer: a better reason doublets of the name, than that of the Etymologists, Pontus, quia ponte caret. Of this Sea the chief Isles are Toynias, and Erybinus, little famous.

From hence the Sea binding Southwards is brought into narrower Bounds, not being fully a mile broad, and is called the Thracian Bosphorus: Thracian, for its Site nigh Thrace; and Bosphorus, for that Oxen have swam over it. It hath no Island worth naming. It is fortified on each side with a very strong Castle. That on the Asian side, being the elder and the lesser, is by the Greeks called Asio-castellum, by the Turks named Accechisar; the other, just opposite to it, is by the Turks called Genichisar, by the Greeks named Neocastellum, or New Castle. This last was the work of Mahomet, furnished the Great, in the beginning of his Reign; in bigger not inferior to a little City, built by him in or near the place of the ancient Damalis; enviored with a Wall 22 foot broad, and containing three great Towers, their Wall exceeding 10. yeards in thickness; exceedingly well stored with all sorts of Ordnance and Ammunition. By the English they are commonly called the Black Towers; partly because seated at the Entrance of the Euxine or Black Sea, and partly because they serve as a Prison for Malefactors of principal note, who seldom are discharged thence till released by death.

This Streight, having continued 26 miles in length, openeth it self into the Propontis, 300 miles in compass; confined with Thrace on the one side, and with Bithynia on the other; so as they which fall in the middle may descry the Land on all parts. Now called Mar di Marmora, from the Island Marmora, which, formerly called Proconessus, hath for its abundance of Marble purchased this new name. The Soil is apt for Vines, and not destitute of Corn, yielding also Good Pasturage for Goats, wherof here is plenty; with an incredible number of Partridges amongst the Rocks: the Country of Arifteen, a famous Poet, who flourished in the times of Cæsar. Anciently it had in it two Cities of the same name with the Island, called the Old and New Proconessus: the former first built by the Milesians, an Asian People; the latter by the Natives of this Island. But both these being long since decayed, it hath now only a small Village towards the North, with an Haven to it, inhabited by the Greeks, as is all the rest of the Island: such Christian Slaves as are in great numbers employed here by the Turks in digging Marble for their Mosques and other Buildings being only Sojourners; not House-keepers, and therefore not accounted amongst the Inhabitants. Here is also in this Propontick Sea the Isle of Cyzicus; but being it is on Asia side, we shall there speak of it.

The Sea having gathered her waters into a lesser Channel is called Hellepont, from Helle, Daughter of Athamas King of Thebes, who was here drowned. Over this famous Streight did Xerxes, according to Herodotus, make a Bridge of Boats to pass into Greece: which when a sudden Tempest had shrewdly battered, he caused the Sea to be beaten with 300 Stripes, and cast a pair of Fetters into it, to make it know to whom it was subject. Xerxes in this Expedition waisted over an Army consisting of two millions and 164710 fighting men, in no less than 2208 Bottoms of all sorts. When all the Persians footed the King in the unconquerableness of his Forces. Artabanus told him that he feared no Enemies but the Sea and the Earth; the one yielding no safe Harbour for such a Navy, the other not yielding sufficient subsistence for so multitudinous an Army. But his return over this Hellepont was as dejected as his Passage magnificent; his Fleet being so broken by the Valour of the Greeks and the fury of the Sea, that, for his more speedy Flight, he was compelled to make use of a poor Fishers-boat. Neither yet was his Passage secure: for the Boat, being overburthened; had sunk all, if the Persians by casting away themselves had not saved the Life of their King. The loss of which noble spirits so vexed him, that having given the Steersman a golden Coronet for preserving his own Life, he commanded him to Execution as a Co-author of the death of his servants. It is now called the Castles, or the Sea of the Two Castles; which two Castles stand one on Europe, the other on Asia side, in the Towns of Sestis and Ahydus. These Castles, commonly by the Turks called Dardanelli, are exceedingly well built, and abundantly furnished with Munition. They search and examine all Ships that pass that way; they receive the Grand Seignior's Customs, and are in effect the principal Strength of Constantinople. At these Castles all Ships must stay three days; to the end that if any Slave be run away from his Master, or Thieves have stolen any thing, they may be in that place pursued and apprehended. So that these Castles are as it were the Out-works of Constantinople, to defend it from all Invasions, and from any Forces which may come unto it by Sea out of the Mediterranean; as for the Safety thereof from such as may find passage out of the Ægean, there are situate at the very entrance of the Thracian Bosporus two strong Castles, the one above Constantinople on Europe side, the other on the Asian Shore, which before we spoke of. No European Isle of note is in either of the Straights. And therefore we pass on unto

8. The Islands of the Ægean Sea.

Hellepont, after a forty miles course, expatiateth its waters in the Ægean Sea: so called either from Ægeus, the Father of Theseus, who, misdoubting his Son's safe return from the Minotaur of Crete, here drowned himself; or, secondly, from Æge, once a principal City in the prime Island Eubœa; or, thirdly, because that the Islands lie scattered up and down like the Leaps of a wanton Goat, from the Greek ἄλγος.

The chief Islands of it are, 1. Samothrace, 2. Thasos, 3. Imbros, 4. Lemnos, 5. Eubœa, 6. Salamis, 7. Ægina, 8. the Cyclades, 9. the Sporades, and 10. Cythera: all which especially from Eubœa Southwards, are called the Islands of the Archipelago; the Sea being by the Greeks called the Archipelago, in regard of its greatness compared unto the narrow Seas which lie above it.

1. SAMOTHRACE is a small Island opposite to the Coasts of Thrace, where the Hebrus falls into the Sea; so called quasi Samos Thracia, to difference it from the Asian Samos, bordering on Ionia. Formerly it was called Dardania, from Dardanus the Trojan, who fled hither when he carried the Palladium thence. But Aristotle, writing of the Commonwealth of these Samothracians, telleth us that it was first called Lencosia, and afterwards Samus, from Saus the Son of Mercury and Rhene, the letter M being interposed. It is now called Samandraghi, and is plentiful in Honey and Wild Deer, and better stored with commodious Harbours than any other in these Seas. It hath a Town of the same name with the Island, situate on an high Hill on the North part hereof overlooking a capacious Haven; of late, by the Pirates frequent infesting of these Seas, wholly in a manner, desolate.

2. THASSUS, another little Island on the same Coast, opposite to the Influx of the River Nessus, lying betwixt that and Athos in Macedonia, at the Mouth of the Strymonian Bay: by Pliny called Æria and Æthria, by Ptolemy Thalassia, at the present Tasso. It is in compass betwixt forty and fifty miles, sufficiently fruitful, well replenished with Woods, and yielding good store of the best Wines, mountainous in some places, but those Mountains fraught with Quarries of excellent Marble, which the Romans called Thasian, from the Island, and in the times of Philip and Alexander the Great so rich in Mines of useful Metals, that those Kings received yearly 80 Talents for their Customs of them. It hath one Town of the same name with the Island, situate on a large Plain in the North part of it, bordering on a goodly Bay, which serves for an Haven to the Town: and on the South parts where the Country is more mountainous and hilly, there are two Towns more, each of them situate on an Hill, but the names thereof occur not amongst my Authors.

3. Imbros, another small Island, now named Lembro, is situate betwixt Samothrace and the Thracian Chersonese, in compass about thirty miles, but more long than broad, stretching North and South, and distant from Samothrace about ten miles. The Island is mountainous for the most part, except towards the West; where it hath some pleasant and well-watered Plains: in it is a Town of the same name, situate at the foot of the Mountains once sacred unto Mercury, but not else observable.

4. LEMNOS, an Island of more note, lieth betwixt Thrace and Macedon, not far from Imbros, memorable amongst the Poets for the fabulous Fall of Vulcan, who, being but an homely Brat, hardly worth the owning, was by Juno in great Passion thrown out of Heaven, and, falling on this Island, came to get his Halting. Howsoever, he was anciently worshipped by the People hereof, and from hence called Lemnius. It is in compass about an hundred miles, but more long than broad, extended from the East to the West; on every side well furnished with convenient Creeks and some pretty Havens, by which the want of Rivers is in some fort recompensed.

The Country is for the most part plain, if compared unto the adjacent Islands, but otherwise swelled with rising Mountains; the interposed Valleys being very fruitful of Wheat, Pulse, Wine, Flax, Cheefe, Wool, Flax, Linnen, and all other necessities; only Wood is wanting. And though here be no Rivers, as before was said, yet have they good Fishing on the Seacoast for their use and sustenance; and in some parts hot Baths for Health and Medicines. But the chief Riches of this Island is in a mineral Earth here digged, of excellent virtue for curing Wounds, stopping of Fluxes, expelling Poisons; a Preservative against Infections, and the like; called Terra Lemnia, from the place, and Terra Sigillata, from the Seal or Character imprinted on it. For being made up into small Pellets, and sealed with the Turk's Character or Signet, it is then (not before) sold unto the Merchants; by whom it is dispersed over most parts of the Christian World. Upon the sixth of August yearly they go to gather it; but not without much Ceremony, and many religious Preparations, brought in by the Venetians, when they were Lords of this Island, and still continued by the Greek Monks or Calvoires, who are the principal in the work. There is one Hill only where it groweth, the Top whereof being opened, they discover the Vein, resembling the casting up of Worms; and having gathered as much of it that day as the Priests think fit, it is closed again; certain Bags of it being sent to the Grand Signiour yearly, the residue sealed up, and sold to the foreign Merchant.

But to return to the Topography of the place. The Eastern parts hereof are said to be fat and fruitful, the Western very dry and barren: in both containing 57 Towns and Villages, all of them inhabited by the Greeks, except only three, and those three garrisoned by the Turks, who, being Lords of the whole Island, have new named it Stalimene. In former times, from two prime Cities in it, it was called Dipolis. Of which the first was called Lemnos, by the name of the Island, as a large and well-peopled now as ever formerly, but of no great estimation when it was at the best, seated upon an high Hill looking over the Sea, with a handsome Market place, on which Mount Athos casts a Shadow, though distant 87 miles from it. It was formerly by another name called Myrina; but that held not long, the name of Lemnos still remaining. 2. The second of the two Cities was then called Hephestias, memorable for the Temple of Vulcan, hence called Hephestiades; since desolate and destroyed, stroyed, and a new Town built in the place of it, being called Cochino. This Town is not great, but of a reasonable strength, memorable for the stout Resistance which a notable Pirago, named Marullus, made against the Turks in the time of Mahomet the Great, the Venetians then being Lords of the Island. For suddenly landing, when they were not looked for, with a purpose to surprize this Town, they found more Resistance at the Gates than they did expect: none being more commended than this Maiden, who, seeing her Father slain, took up such Weapons as lay by him, and manfully made good the place, until the rest of the Citizens, awakened with the Alarm, came unto her Rescue, and forced the Enemy to retire. Near hereunto is the Hill on which Vulcan is said to have fell, more eminent for the Mineral earth here only gathered: And not far hence Pliny reports a Labyrinth to have stood in the days of old, little inferior unto those of Crete or Ægypt; the Ruines of it being so decayed, that Bellonius, who took great pains in it, was not able to trace them. 3. The third place of note is Strira, though an ordinary Village, yet memorable for the Chappel in which the Greek Calvoires begin their Orisons on the sixth day of August, before their gathering of the Earth so often mentioned. In this Country anciently reigned Tioas, the Son of Bacchus and Ariadne, during whose time the Women of the Island upon some displeasure murdered all the men, the King only excepted, preserved by Hypsipyle his Daughter, whom they made their Queen, and by whom Jason with the Argonauts were kindly entertained for two years together, that they had almost forgot their intended Expedition for the Golden Fleece; she her self being got with Child by Jason at his being there, the other Women probably following her Example. Following the Fortune of the other parts of Greece, it came at last under the power of the Constantinopolitan or Eastern Emperours. In the Subversion of that Empire by the Latins or Western Christians (of which more hereafter) it fell to the share of the Venetians, who held it till the year, 1463, or thereabouts.

Besides these on the Coast of Thrace, there are also some of less note on the Shores of Macedon. The principal whereof are, 1. Peperithus, as Ptolemy, Euonymus, as Pliny calls it, containing about 40 miles in compass, now called Saragino, as Castaldus, or Lemene, as Niger hath it; fortified on the Eastern part with a Castle built upon a Rock. Others of less note are, 2. Scyathos, now Sciatia, 3. Scopelos, 4. Halonesus, 5. Cycnethus, now Ponico, and 6. Dromus: of which little memorable. All which, together with those formerly described on the Coast of Thrace, being but the Accessories of the several Continents upon which they border; followed the Fortune of the principal, and were conquered in them.

5. EUBOEAE, known to the Ancients by the names of Mæris and Abantis, to the Moderns by that of Negropont, frontiereth all along the Coast of Achaia, parallel to which it is in Fertility; one part hereof being torn away from it by an Earthquake, and lying still so near unto it, that between the Island and the Continent is only a little Enuripus, which ebbeeth and floweth seven times in one day. The reason of which when Aristotle could not find, it is said that he threw himself into the Sea, with these words, Quia ego non capio te, in capies me. In this Island is the Promontory Caphrea, where Nauplius, the Father of Palamides, placed his false Fires, to the Destruction of so many Greeks. For understanding how his Son Palamides, whom he deemed to have been slain by the hand of Paris, was treacherously circumvented by the Policy of Ulysses and Diomedes, he conceived such a Displeasure against the whole Host of the Græcians, that he intended their general Destruction. To this end he caused Fires to be made on the tops of the most dangerous and inaccessible Rocks in this whole Island: which the Greeks taking (according to the Custom of the time) to have been the Marks of some safe Haven, made thitherward, and were there most miserably cast away, there perishing 200 Ships, and many thousand men. But when Nauplius understood how Diomedes, and Ulysses, whose Ruine he principally intended, were escaped, he drew, and himself for very Vexation in this very same place, Palamides, this Nauplius's Son, is said to have invented four of the Greek Letters, viz. Α, Ζ, Ε, Θ, to have first instituted Centinels in an Army, and to be the first inventor of the Watch-word.

It is in le. gth. 150 miles, stretched out from the North-west to the South-east; in breadth not above twenty, where it is broadest, the whole compass 365 Italian miles. It is the Queen of the Ægean Sea, not only for Greatness, but for Fertility, and Strength; plentiful in Corn, Wine, Oyl, Fruit, and Wood fit for Shipping; enriched with many fair Harbours and capacious Bays, and those well fortified; watered also with the Rivers of Circus and Melas, two Rivers of so strange a nature, that if a Sheep drink of the former, his Wool turneth white, but coal-black, if he drink of the latter. For the credit whereof I refer the Reader unto Strabo. Here is also said to be a Stone called Amiantus, which is drawn into thread like Hemp, and good Cloth made of it; which, when it is stained, in stead of being sent unto the Fullers, is thrown unto the Fire and so cleaned. But whether this be so or not, (for I put it only upon hearsay) certain it is that it was once enriched with Mines both of Brass and Iron, though those now decayed; and likewise with Quarries of pure Marble, which continue still.

The Island, before it was conquered by the Turks, was very populous; but the people, most delighted to live in Villages; the Cities and walled Towns being only three. 1. Carysso, anciently Caryssus, with little or no variation, but by Pliny called Æges and Chironia; memorable for its marble Quarries, of which were made the Pillars called Columna Carysso. 2. Chalcis, now Negropont, by the Turks named Eribus, seated on a Plain near the Water's side, there growing into a fair and goodly Bay called the Gulf of Negropont; a populous, strong and wealthy City, so fortified with Walls and Bulwarks, that in the judgment of most men it was held invincible when the Turks first sate down before it. Nor was it purchased by the Turk (though Mahomet, who had took Constantinople, undertook the business) at a lower price than the loss of forty thousand men, who were spent upon it; but taken at the last, and the people put unto the Sword, without consideration of Sex or Age. A Town in former times of so great Wealth and Power, that it sent Colonies abroad into Macedonia, (a principal Region of the which was hence called Chalcidice) as also into Sicily and some parts of Italy; and had a strong Influence on the Affairs of Achaia also, as being situate so near the Continent, that it was joyned to it by a Bridge. When it was in the hands of the Kings of Macedon, this Town, together with Demetrias in Thessaly, and the Castle of Acrocorinth, were called the Fastners of Greece: inasmuch that when the Roman Senate commanded Philip, the Father of Perseus, to set the Græcians at liberty, the Græcians made answer, that, in vain was their Liberty restored them, unless these three Towns were first dismantled. Permitted by the Romans to live according to their own Laws, in memory of that Benefit they refused to declare against them in behalf of Antiochus, who thereupon made himself Master of the Town, and consequently of the Island. But forced to leave the place upon the loss of the Battle at Therapyle, it became free again; till finally made subject unto Rome with the rest of Greece, and with it made a part of the Eastern Empire. In the Division whereof amongst the Latins it fell to the share of the Venetians; who from hence used with their Gallies to infest the Shores of Turkey, and disturb their Trade. Provoked wherewith especially with their taking of Ennus, a City of Thrace, under the Conduct of Nicolas Canalis, the Venetian Admiral, who in that Enterprize had taken 2000 Turks; which he carried with him into this Island, Mahomet the Great resolves upon the Conquest of it, and with a puissant Army sets before the Town. And though it cost him dear, yet at last he got it, and therewith all the Island also; which depended on the Fortunes of it, An. 1471.

6. SALAMIS is nigh unto Megaris, one of the Provinces of Achaia, famous for the Overthrow of the populous Navy of Xerxes by the Athenians and their Confederates. What was the number of the Souldiers and Gallies of the Persian side hath been already declared. The whole Græcian Fleet consisted of no more than 270 Vessels, whereof 127 were rigged and set forth at the charge of the Athenians only, the rest by the Associates. Yet was the Admiralty committed to Enrybiades a Lacedæmonian; the Athenians preferring the main care of the common Safety before an unseasonable contention for Priority. The Spartans, seeing the inequality of Forces, intended not to have hazarded the Battle, but with full sail to have retired to Peloponessus; into which Country the Persians had made Incursions; respecting more the Welfare of their own Country yet defensible, than the desperate estate of Attica. This Design was by Themistocles (as careful for the estate of Athena as they for Sparta) signified to Xerxes; who, getting between them and home, compelled them to a necessity of fighting, but to his own Ruine. For, in the Conflict more than 200 of his Ships were sunk, and most of the rest taken; the Confederates having lost of their Navy forty only. Between the Athenians and the Megarenses were many Contentions for this Island; the Fortune of the Athenians in the end prevailing. It hath in it a City of the same name, the Royal Seat of Telamion, the Father of Ajax, so famous in the War of Troy; more memorable for giving Birth to Solon the Legislator of Athena, one of the seven Wise men of Greece.

7. ÆGINA, now called Engia, an Island situate over against Sinus Saronicus, being that Bay of Corinth which openeth into the Ægean, hence called Golfo di Engia; the Realm of Æacus, made for his Justice and Integrity one of the three Judges of Hell; the other two being his Brother Rhadamanthus, and Minos the King of Crete. It had formerly been called Oenone, said Oenope, but took this name from Ægina, the Daughter of Asopus a King of Boeotia, on whom Jupiter is said to have begot both Æacus and Rhadamanthus. The people hereof are properly called Æeginenses and Æginotæ, much spoken of in the Wars of Athena, from which they are distant about 12 miles. The Ground hereof is very stony, but good for Barley; of which it is very plentiful; inhabited in former times by a laborious and thriving People, to whom they gave in those days the name of Myrmidones, (the Island being also called Myrmidonis) quod Formicarum more Terram foderent; because Enme-like they digged up and under the Earth, to make it the more fit for Tillage; who dwell at first in Caves without any Houses. Hence the occasion of the Fable of turning Brimmes into Men at the prayer of Æacus. Both Tale and People after

(I know not how) were carried into Thessaly, where before we found them.

8. The CYCLADES, so called because they lie in a Circle round about Delos, are in number 53. They are also called the Islands of the Arches, because they are in the Sea called Archipelago. They stand so close together, that in a clear day a man may see 20 of them at a time, for which cause it is with good reason accounted to be a dangerous place for Sailors in a Storm. The chief of these Cyclades are, 1. DELOS, quasi Δῖλος signifying apparent; because when all the Earth had abjured the receipt of Latona at the request of Juno, this Island, then under water, was by Jupiter erected aloft, and fixt to receive her; and in it was the delivered of Apollo and Diana: of which thus Ovid;

Erratica Delos

*Errantem accepit, tunc cum levis Insula nabit.
Illic inuumbens sub Palladis arbore, Palmæ,
Edidit invita geminos Latona noverca.
Unsettled Delos floating on the Wave,
A little Island, entertainment gave
To wandring Laton, spight of Juno's Head, Under Minerva's Palm-tree brought to Bed.*

Notable also is this Island for the Temple of Apollo, and a Custom, neither permitting men to die, or Children to be born in it; but sending sick Men and great-bellied Women to Rhene, a small Island, and not much distant. By a more ancient name it is called Otrygia; and by that name mentioned in many of the Poets, both Greek and Latine. The chief Town of it, called also Delos, is situate on a Plain environed with Rocks, near the Hill called Cynthus, whence Apollo had the name of Cynthius, and Diana of Cynthia; as of Delius, and Delia, from the Island. In this Town had Apollo both his Temple and Oracle, delivered here more plainly than in other places, whence (as some say) it was called Delos, the word in Greek signifying manifest or apparent: made famous by the resort of people from all places hither, especially from the neighbouring Islands, who sent yearly multitudes of men and troupes of Virgins to celebrate his Solemnities with Herds of Sacrifices. More wealthy afterwards by the removing of the Trade of Corinth hither; that Town being utterly destroyed by the Romans, and this made choice of by the Merchant; partly by reason of the Immunities of the place, but principally in regard of the convenient situation betwixt Europe and Asia. It continued in great Wealth and Power till Mithridates laid it wast, and at last, on the ceasing of the Oracles, was utterly forsaken, both Town and Island are now called Sailes. By which name also Rhene, an adjoining Island, (before mentioned) is at this day known; chained to the other by Polycrates the Tyrant of Samos; and now united to it, at the least in name.

2. TENOS, by Aristotle called Hydrusa, by some Ophiusa, by the Moderns Tina. The chief Town of it is of the same name, so called from one Tenes the Builder of it, and giving name to the Island: memorable for a Fountain called Dipnosus, of which Aristotle and Athenæus do both affirm, that the Waters will not mix with Wine: the only Island of this Sea which remaineth under the power of the State of Venice, the rest being subject to the Turk, deserving therefore the first place in our Description of those Islands that encompass Delos, though anciently.

3. ANDROS (prima inter Cycladas) was reckoned chief amongst the Cyclades, or first at least in order, because next to Delos: originally called Canros, afterwards Antandros, and at last Andros, from Andrus the Son of Enrimachus, who founded the chief Town in it, of the same same name also. Memorable for a pleasant Fountain mentioned by Pliny, the waters whereof on the Nones of January yearly had the taste of Wine. It still retains the name of Andros, or Andri.

4. NAXOS, now Niesia, one of the biggest of the Pack, as being about 80 miles in compass. In ancient times it was called Veneris Insula, or the Island of Venus; afterwards Dionysia, by reason of its abundance of Wine, and the goodnels of those Wines together, consecrated to Bacchus, whom the Greeks call Dionysius. From its wonderful plenty of Wheat called by some Sicilia minor, or the Lesser Sicily; but at last Naxos, from one Naxus, who had the conduct of a Colony of Carians hither. But notwithstanding this new name, Bacchus did still retain the honour to be worshipped in it, in regard of his love unto the place; marrying here Ariadne, (as the Poets fable) whom Theseus had left upon the Rocks: whose Coronet or Chaplet, being by his means made one of the heavenly Constellations is by Colymbella called Ardor Naxius, by the name of the Island; though commonly by Astronomers Corona Ariadnes, from the name of the Lady. The Women of this Island are said by Pliny to be delivered generally in the eighth month, as Bacchus was born with it that term. But it is more certainly famous in true Story for the Beauty and Fertility of it, and for a kind of excellent Marble called Ophites or Serpentinus; the ground whereof is green, diapered with blew or purple Spots, in much esteem amongst the Romans. When these Islands fell to the Venetians, they conferred this on one John Quirino, a Patrician or Gentleman of that City (as they did divers of the rest on other undertakers) from whom it came to the Noble Family of the Crispo's, who held it till the year 1572, when James the last of that House lost it to Selymus the second.

5. GYAROS, a little Island, into which the Romans used to banish Delinquents. Hence that of Juvenal, cited by G. Sandys.

*Aude aliquod brevis Gyaris vel carcere dignus, Si vis esse aliquid: Probat landatur, & alget.
If thou intend'st to thrive, do what deserves Short Gyarus or Gyves: praise'd Virtue starves.*

6. PAROS, now Pario, by some of the Ancients called Pattia, by others Minoa; but it obtained this new name from Parosia Son of Jafon; memorable for Quarries of the whitest Marble, of which commonly the Statues of the Gods were made, called from hence Marmor Parium by the Latins. It is in compass about 50 miles, running in a long Plain from East to West, having once a Town of the same name seated in the North, once famous, but now utterly ruined. The Inhabitants hereof were noted to be very careless of keeping their Promises and Contracts: whence παροισμός grew into a Byword, applied to those who made no reckoning of their Promises. There is now a Town in it called Cephala, but it is of no great note.

7. SCYROS, opposite to Magnesia in Asia Minor, famous for the Birth of Noopolemus or Pyrrhus, and that it was the Lurking-place of Achilles. For his Mother Thetis, being forewarned by an Oracle that he should be slain in the Troyan War, sent him to Lycamedes King of this Island, where he was brought up in Women's Attire amongst the King's Daughters, and deemed a Virgin; till by getting Pyrrhus on Deidamia the King's Daughter it was proved to be otherwise. Others relate that Ulysses discovered him; by a Mile, who, coming thither like a Pedler or Peddler-merchant with Arms and other Ware, to avoid distrust, exposed his Merchandise to the view of the Damocles; when the other Ladies falling on the Tires and Laces, Achilles took into his hand the Spear and Shield. Which when Ulysses had observed, he made him leave that Company, and away for Troy. The handsomeness of the fraud take from Ovid, thus:

*Conscia venturi Genitrix Nereia Fœti
Diffimulat Culm Natum, & deceptat omnes
(In quibus Ajaxem) sumptis fallidi Pectus
Armægo formicis animum motiva virilem
Mœchis infernis, &c.*

Thus Englished by G. Sandys in his Translation of the Metamorphoses;

The whole Design in order to relate:
Thetis, fore-knowing great Achilles Fate,
Disguis'd her Son, so like a Virgin drest,
That all mistook, and Ajax with the rest.
When Arms with Women's Trifles, which might blind
Suspect, I brought to tempt a manly Mind.
Yet was the Hero Virgin-like array'd,
Who taking up the Shield and Spear, I said,
O Goddess-born, for thee the Fate of Troy.
Her Fall reserves: why doubt'st thou to desert?
Great Pergamus? then made him off those Weeds,
And sent the Mighty unto mighty Deeds.

There is another of this name betwixt Negetum and Lefbos, which Orellius conceives to be the Scene of this Action; but the general opinion is for this, (though that be the greater Isle) to which the situation of it amongst the rest of those Islands where reigned so many of the Greek Kings interested in the War of Troy seems to give good countenance; the name and power of Greece not reaching into those days so much towards the North.

8. MELOS, situate betwixt Greece and Peloponessus, and equally distant from them both. The Promontories of Scyllæum in the one, and that of Diaphanum in the other, shooting out against it, inhabited in former times by a Colony of Phœnicians, who coming out of Syracusæ Town of that Country gave them name unto it; being called Atelab afterwards by the Greeks, from its abundance of Honey. The Birth-place of Diagoras the Philosopher, surnamed Atelab, but more properly Atelab in the first; the first who in those dark times of Ignorance absolutely denied that there was a God. Protagoras, Dean in Athenum vocavit, Diagoras exceptis, faith Atelab of him. It is now called Mile, round in form, and containing 80 miles in compass. The Soil is sufficiently fruitful in Corn and Oyl, but defective in Wine. Here is great plenty of Marble curiously bespotted, and no small store of Milstones; as also great quantities of Fish, and Prismstones, and some Sulphury or hot Springs good for many Diseases. The chief Town of it is called Mile also.

9. SERIPHUS, 200 miles from Delos, memorable of old for the Education of Æacus, the Son of Danae. It is reported of this Island, that the Frogs bred there are naturally mute; but such as are brought from other places keep their natural sound: from whence, Proverbially, silent and fullen persons were called Rana Seriphia. It is now called Serphus or Serphone, a stony and rocky Island, and hath a Town of the same name.

10. CIOS, by some called CEOS, and now Zeoo, opposite to the Promontory of Archaia called Stenium in compass about 50 miles; made towards the West in fashion of a Crescent or half-Moon, mountaneous and hill descent towards the North; by Pliny said to have been torn from Euboea by a sudden violence in the Sea many men perishing in the waters. Of old times it was beautified with three fair Towns: 1. Julis, 2. Carthæa, and 3. Carallus; all which there is nothing now remaining.

Others there are whose names occur amongst the Ancients: 1. Micones, now called Adeltos; 2. Cytherus, now Canro; 3. Siphnus, now Siphano; 4. Therapsa, now Samarinæ; 5. Cimolus, called formerly Richinæ, but now Polino; 6. Oliarus, now Quinnimæ; 7. Sicinnus.

tant was slain by Theseus, like enough that the annual Tribute of 7 Children, which the Athenians paid to Minos, was laid up in some Prison, Minos and Taurus being the Keepers or Gaolers. As for the action of Pasiphae, I think it not altogether impossible to be true, considering how Domitian, to verify the old relation, exhibited the like beastly Spectacle in his Amphitheatre at Rome: for thus saith Marcellus,

*Junctam Pasiphaen Didæo, credite, Tauro
Vidimus; accepit Fabula prisca fidem.
Nec se miretur. (Cæsar) longæva Vestigat:
Quicquid Fama canit, donat Arena tibi.
The Fable's prov'd a Truth, our eyes did see
The Cretan Bull sport with Pasiphae.
What cause hath then Antiquity to glory?
We saw it done, the only heard the Story.*

Finally, there was the so-much-celebrated Labyrinth, made by Dædalus for the including and safe-keeping of the Minotaurus; so full of various Windings and turnings, that when any one was got to the end thereof, it was impossible for him to come out but by the help of a Clew of thread. By this Minotaur (half a Man, half a Bull) the Children of the Athenians, paid yearly to Minos in way of Tribute, are said to be murdered, till he was killed by Theseus, Son of Aegæus, King of Athens, with whom Ariadne the Daughter of Minos falling in love, taught him a means to kill the Monster, and gave him the Clew of thread, before spoken of, to conduct him out again: the Moral or History whereof hath been shewn before. Nor must it be forgotten, that Strabo the Geographer, who flourished in the time of Tiberius Cæsar, was of Cretan Parents, (though born in the City of Amasia in the Realm of Pontus;) which adds unto this Island as much true Renown as any of the Fictions or Stories (be which they will) of former times.

Things most observable at the present are these that follow. 1. That it breeds no Serpents, no venomous Worm, or ravenous or hurtful creature, so that their Sheep graze very securely without any Shepherd. 2. If a Woman bite a Man any thing hard, he will hardly be cured of it, which if true, then the last part of the Privilege foregoing (of breeding no hurtful creature) must needs be false. 3. They have an Herb called Alimos, which if one chew in his mouth he shall feel no Hunger for that day, if Quædæ may be believed, who speaks it. 4. Here is (besides many other medicinal Herbs) that called Distamnium, or Distamnus, of special virtue against Poison, either by way of Prevention or present Cure, peculiar only to this Island: it affordeth great store of Lundanium, a Juice or Gum forced with incredible labour out of a certain Tree called Cistus, of which the Mountains yield abundance; good to cause Sleep, if moderately and carefully taken; but if not very well prepared and taken with moderation, it brings the last Sleep upon a man, out of which he is not to be awakened till the Sound of the last Trumpet raise him.

Chief Mountains of it are, 1. Ida, now Piloriti, situate in the midst of the Island, begirt about with many fair and pleasant Villages, sheltered by it from the violence of Wind and Sun; the Hill being so high, that from the Top hereof both sides of the Island may be easily seen. Here Jupiter is said to have been secretly nursed, from hence called Idæus. And at the bottom of it the Cretans use to shew some tracts of the ancient Labyrinth, being indeed no other than the Ruines of some larger Quarry: the Labyrinth made by Dædalus being so defaced in the time of Pliny, that he knew not where to find any Ruines of it. 2. Diite, now called Sethia, in some places Lusithi, so high, that all the Winter long it is covered with Snow; yet all the sides thereof are garnished with Cypress-trees: a Mountain of such fame, that the whole Island sometimes had the name of Diitea, the City Diitynna, the Promontory

Diitynnum, and the Herb Distamnus, all seeming to take name from hence. 3. Leuci, a long Chain of Hills, so named from the Whiteness of them, now called di Madarra, and by some La Spachia.

Rivers of any eminence here are few or none. The principal of those that be, are, 1. Milopotamus, 2. Scasimus, 3. Epicius, and 4. Divotro, towards the North; 5. Populæus, towards the East; and 6. Limens, towards the West: none of them navigable, or capable of Ships of Burthen, scarce of little Barks. But that defect is supplied by the neighbouring Sea, which affordeth many Creeks and Bays, some capacious Havens, and great store of Fish, among which a kind of bearded Mullet, reckoned among the Delicacies of the ancient Romans. By the convenience of which Harbours, their Fish-trade, and the situation of it in the midst of the Sea, the People anciently were esteemed to good Sea-faring men, that when the people of those times did tax a man with any incredible report, they used to say, Cretensis nescit Pelagus, meaning thereby the matter to be as improbable as for one of Crete to be no Sailor.

In former times there were reckoned in this Island an hundred Cities, whence it was called Hecatompolis, of which about 40 were remaining in the time of Ptolemy, for so many of their names he gives us. Those of most note were, 1. Gnosus, the Seat-royal or Court of Minos, whence Ariadne the Daughter of Minos had the name of Gnosius; in former times called Ceratus, from a little River of that name running not far off. 2. Cydon, or Cydonia, a midland City, (as the former) memorable for an excellent kind of Apples, which the Latines called Poma Cydonia, amongst whom they were in great request, as they are at this day (though by the name of Adam's Apples) amongst the Turks: the most ancient of all the Cities of Crete, many of which were at first Colonies of this; for which reason it was called commonly Mater urbium. 3. Elenuthera, as Ptolemy, Erythraa, as the printed Copies of Florus corruptly call it; one of the first Cities taken here by the Romans. 4. Mileum, mentioned by Strabo, though omitted by Ptolemy; the place in which S. Paul left Trophimus sick, as is mentioned 2 Tim. 4. 20, which happened when the Apostle hovered about that Coast, as is said Act. 27. 7, 8, &c. For that it could not be that Mileum to which he congregated the Elders of Ephesus, appeareth by his being at Hierusalem, Act. 21. 17, and other circumstances of the Story. 5. Gortyna, nigh to which stood the Labyrinth made by Dædalus; memorable also for a Reed, growing on the River Lenæus, (near to which it stood) of which they made their strongest Arrows, by Virgil's Æneid. 11. called Spicula Gortynia; as also for a light Garment much used by Hunters, which Claudian calls Gortynium vestem, apprelling Diana the great Huntress with it. 6. Distamnium, as Ptolemy, or Diitynna, as Pliny calls it; so named from the Hill Diite, near to which it is situate: one of the chief Cities of the North parts of this Island; as 7. Ampelus, so named from its plenty of Vines, was upon the South. 8. Minos, a Port-town, (now Altemara) so named from Minos, in the East; and 9. Corycum, on a Promontory of the same name, in the West side of it.

But these, and almost all the rest spoken of by Ptolemy, being so destroyed by Time and Wars that the Ruines of them are hardly visible, we must behold it in the present condition and estate thereof; divided into four parts or Provinces, according to the names and number of the four chief Cities; that is to say, 1. Sittia, 2. Candia, 3. Retimo, and 4. Canea.

In the first part, called SITTIA, lying towards the East, are 74 Villages, and but 17 Parishes, of which six only are of the Church of Rome, the residue holding ding the Communion of the Church of Greece. The principal whereof are, 1. Sittia, or Cyria, conceived by some to be the Cyprus of Ptolemy; a small Town but populous, and very well fortified. 2. Gierapetra, betwixt Sittia and Candia, seated on the Sea-side, on a lofty Rock, at the bottom whereof is laid to be a dangerous Whirl-pit, supposed to be the Panormus of Ptolemy. 3. S. Macor, the dwelling-place of one of the Bishops of the Latines.

2. In the second part hereof, called the Territory of CANDIA, lying directly West of Sittia, are reckoned 465 Towns and Villages, making up amongst them 99 Parish Churches, whereof 77 are of the Communion of the Church of Greece, the other 22 only of the Church of Rome. Of these the principal are, 1. Candia, an Archbishop's See, the Metropolis or Head City of the Island, which takes name from hence. It is situate on the North-Coast hereof towards the Ægean, beautified with a safe and commodious Haven, and fortified so strongly, that it seems impregnable, affirmed by some to be the Mantium of the Ancients; but I find no such place in Ptolemy, or in Orelinus his Theophrastus. The City is fair and large, built for the most part of Free-stone, with low Roofs, after the manner of Italy, the Streets broad and spacious from whence a fair and pleasant plain leadeth to a place called the Cave of Minos, reported by the common people to be the Sepulchre of Jupiter. 2. Malvoisin, 3. Themæ, 4. Cafel novo, 5. Bonifacio, 6. Belvedere, 7. Mirabello, of which little memorable.

3. In the third part, being the Territory of RETIMO, formerly Rhitymna, lying North-west of the Territory of Candia, are accounted 265 Towns and Villages, making up 44 Parishes, whereof 36 are Græcians, and but 8 of the Latines. The chief of which are, 1. Retimo, on the Shore of the Northern Sea, as Candia is, well fortified, and a Bishop's See, but not else observable. 2. Milopotamo, an Episcopal See also, so called of the River Milopotamus, on which it is seated, 3. Agistiman, 4. Mandrus, 5. Lappa; hardly worth the naming.

4. In the fourth and last part hereof, being the Territory of CANEA, taking up all the West of the Island, are conteyned 240 Towns and Villages, distributed into 47 Parishes, of which 33 are of the Greek Church and the 14 remaining of the Church of Rome. Those of most note are, 1. Canea, built by a Colony or Plantation of Venetian Gentlemen, on the North Coast also, supposed to stand in the same place where once Cydon did; second to none but Candia for Wealth and Beauty, but far before it for the commodiousness of the Port, commonly called Porto della Suda, capable of more than a thousand good Gallies at a time; and therefore strongly fortified with two Citadels or Castles, on each side of the Haven one, as the Door and Entrance of the Country. 2. Chisamo, in Latine called Cisamus, old and decayed, the Walls thereof only holding good against the Ruines of time; situate in a low Moorish place towards the Ægean. 3. Selino, built upon a Hill on the Sea-side, opposite to Chisamo. 4. Sfachia, or Spachia, situate at the foot of the Mountains of old called Leuci, now della Spachia, from this Town: unvalled, but fortified with a Castle, built for a place of Refuge against the Incurfions of such Pirates as annoyed the Coasts, in which the Governour for this part hath his chief Abode. By which account it will appear that in the whole Island are no more than 1044 Towns and Villages, and 207 Parish-Churches, of which there be but 48 which are accounted Members of the Church of Rome, the residue, 159 in number, retaining their Communion with the Church of Greece.

As for the Story of this Island, we can ascend as high as the times of Saturn; for his Antiquity affirmed to be the Son of Uranus and Vesta, or of Heaven and Earth; who, better favoured by his Mother obtained the Kingdom of Crete, his elder Brother Titan being quite excluded. Hereupon Wars arising betwixt the Brethren; it was ordered thus, That Saturn for his own Life should enjoy the Kingdom, which after his decease should return to the Titans; and for the performance of this Contract, the Sons of Saturn were to be strangled as soon as born. But Cybele the Wife of Saturn unawares to her Husband, preserved first Jupiter, and after other of her Sons; which coming to the knowledge of Titan and his Sons, they made War against Saturn, but in conclusion were subdued by the Aid of Jupiter: whence grew the Fable of the Titans warring against the Gods, Saturn and Jupiter his Son being after reckoned in that number. The Titans being vanquished, a new War arose betwixt Saturn and Jupiter, occasioned only (as many unratul Wars since these times have been) by Fears and Jealousies: which ending at the last in the Flight of Saturn, Jupiter became sole King of Crete, reigning there in great power and honour till the time of his death; and dying was interred at Gnosus, with this Inscription or Epitaph in old Greek Letters, Ὁ Δὲ τῶν Κρητῶν, that is to say Jupiter the Son of Saturn. After his death he was worshipped by the blind Gentiles as the chief of their Gods, and honoured frequently with the Title of Πατὴρ ἀνδρῶν τε θηῶν τε the Father both of Gods and Men: though most incongruously and absurdly, as Lactantius noteth, there being many thousands living in and before the times of Saturn, when Jupiter was yet unborn. But to proceed; he being dead, Minos, begotten by him on Europa, succeeded here; who, wisely taking the advantage which the convenient situation of the Island gave him, made himself Master of the Seas, and afterwards enlarged his Dominions by the Conquest of the Megarenses and Athenians, upon which last he imposed, amongst other hard Conditions, a Tribute of seven Male Children yearly to be kept as Hostages; which determined after three years by the Valour and good Fortune of Theseus. But Minos being slain in Sicily, and his Posterity extinct, the Cretans would no longer admit of Kings, but governed themselves after the manner of a Commonwealth or Free State: The Laws and Ordinances whereof, first devised by Minos, were of such esteem that they were much imitated by Lycurgus, and are at large described by Aristotle in the 2. Book of his Politics, ch. 8. Under this Government it continued till the Romans, having taken in all the rest of Greece, picked a Quarrel with them. For though it was pretended that they had been aiding unto Mithridates in his War against them; yet Florus states the matter rightly, affirming that the War was undertaken on no other ground, but sûle nobilem Insulam vincendi cupiditate, out of a covetous desire only of subduing such a wealthy Island. And to this War they went with so proud a Confidence, that M. Anthony, who commanded in it, carried more Chains with him to bring home his Prisoners than Arms to conquer them. An Infolence which he paid right dear for, his Navy being vanquished by the Cretans, the bodies of his slain Soldiers hanged upon the Masts, and himself perishing in the Action by a fit of Sickness. Mitellus, who succeeding him in that charge, went on more successfully, first taking Gnasius, Elenuthera, or (Erythraa, as Florus calls it) and Cydon, their principal Cities, and not long after all the Island, during the vanquished Islanders with such Inhumanity, that most of them poisoned themselves to avoid his Cruelty: rewarded with no other Honour for so great a Victory, than that he got the surname of Creticus; his Triumph being denied by the Faction of Pompey, against whose will he had put himself upon that Service. This being added to the Roman Empire, it was after united unto Cyrenaica by Augustus Cæsar, Cæsar, both making up one Province only, governed by a Proconful till the death of Nero; afterwards separated from it, but the time I find not. During the Reign of Constantine, in 36 years together there fell no Rain, so that this Island was in a manner wholly desolated. But Helena, the Mother of Constantine, having obtained Rain for it by her prayers to God, it was again new peopled by several Colonies brought out of Egypt, Syria, Greece, and the parts adjoining. By Constantine made a Province of the Diocese of Macedonia, it continued a Member of the Eastern Empire till the time of Michael Palæologus, when it was subdued by the Saracens; from them recovered by the more fortunate conduct of Nicephorus Phocas, who came unto the Empire, Anno 963. In the division of the Spoil amongst the Latines, it was first given to Boniface Marquis of Montserrat; by him surrendered willingly to the State of Venice, who had a mind to be possessed of all the Islands of that Empire: he being recompensed with the Kingdom of Thessaly, the fair and wealthy City of Thessalonica, and many Towns and Territories in Peloponnesus. Under that State it still continueth, in vain attempted by Selimus the second in the year, 1571, at what time he invaded and conquered Cyprus; and gallantly defended for this year last past against all the Forces of Ibrahim the late Grand Seignior. What the Success of this War will be, we shall see hereafter.

For the Defence hereof against the Insurrections of the Inhabitants, who did at first ill brook the Venetian Government, there are some standing Forces kept in constant pay; besides such as are maintained in several Garrisons, the City of Canea having in it no fewer than six Companies of Souldiers, Candia 2000 Souldiers, and the lesser Cities proportionably: over which there is set so strong a Guard, that a Natural Cretan is not permitted to enter weaponed into any of them. And for the preservation of their Interest in it from foreign Power, they have furnished the Island with 70 or 80 Gallies for the defence of the Shores; and have exceedingly fortified the Haven of Suda with two strong Castles, this Haven being capable of more than 1000 Vessels, and therefore meritoriously reputed the Door and entry into the Country. It is reported that the King of Spain, Philip the second, did offer unto the Venetians for this Haven money more then enough; but it could not be accepted. For though the Spaniard seemed only to intend the Retreat and relief of his own Navy when he should undertake any Expedition against the Turks; yet the wife Venetians saw, that by this Haven he might at all times awe, and when he listed surprize, the whole Country.

II. The other Islands of this Sea, as of lesser note, will be pass'd over in few words. The first of which is called CLAUDE, mentioned Aët. 27. 16. situate on the South-west of Crete, by Mela called Gaulos; wherein Pliny's time was a Town or City named Gaudos, now called Gozo, with the Island. 2. DIA, now Standia, a very small Island, and of little note. 3. LETOA, on the South-east of Crete, now called Christina. And 4. ÆGILIA, or Ægialia, by Pliny Ægila, more in the Sea towards Peloponnesus; now called Cecirigo by Sophianus. Of which and others of less note (if less may be) there is no more to be said, but that they have always followed the Fortunes of Crete, on which they seem to have their principal Dependence.

10. The Islands of the IONIAN Sea.

THE IONIAN Sea is so called either from Ionius, the Son of Dyrrhachius, whom Hercules having ignorantly killed threw into this Sea, giving that name unto it: to preserve his memory, as Dydymus is of opinion, or from Ionis a Region in the Extremity of Calabria, as Solinus; or from Io, the Daughter of Inachus, as Lycophron the Poet hath it. It containeth all that part of the Mediterranean which lyeth from the Ægean or Cretan Seas unto the Adriatick from which it is parted about Epidamnus, (otherwise called Dyrrhachium) as is said by Ptolemy; or rather at the shooting out of the Acroceraunian Hills, as is affirmed by Pliny and other Writers; and so along the shores of the two Calabria's to the Isle of Sicily. Chief Isles whereof which pass in the account of Greece (for of those lying on the Coast of Italy we have spoken elsewhere) are, 1. the Strophades, 2. Zacynthus, 3. the Echinades, 4. Cephalenia, 5. Corcyra, and 6. Ithaca.

1. The STROPHADES are two small Islands, now called Strivali, lying against Messene in Peloponnesus, famous for nothing but the Harpyes, ravenous Birds, affirmed to have the faces of Women, but the Talons of Vultures, sent by the offended Gods (as the Fable goeth) for the punishment of Phineas King of Arcadia, who had put out the Eyes of his Sons by a former Wife at the instigation of their Stepdame: For which he was so plagued by these Harpyes, that he could set no Meat on his Table wherefore he was, but these ravenous creatures first devoured it, and then bewrayed the Dishes in which it was. Much pitted by the Argonauts, whom he had courteously entertained, they sent Zethus and Calais, the winged Issue of Boreas and Oriithyia, who drave them thence, and having pursued them to those Islands, turned back again: whence the name of Strophades. Under which Fable was convey'd the sad condition of ignorant or unhappy Princes, devoured by Flatterers, Informers, and false Accusers, by whom their name and Government was made distastful; till by good Council they had purged their Courts of such ugly Monsters: concerning which Alphonsus King of Naples was used to say, that these Harpyes had left the Strophades and dwelt at Rome. They are inhabited only by some few Greek Friars: and in one of them there is a Spring of Fresh Water, which hath his Fountain in Peloponnesus, and passing under the Sea ariseth here. The Greek Priests are called Caloires, quasi καλοὶ ἱερεῖς, boni Sacerdotes; about 30 in number. They wear long Hair, never eat Flesh, but seldom Fish; feeding usually on Herbs, Olives, Oyl, and the like. They never go out of the Islands, neither do they on any occasion permit Women to come amongst them. They all labour for their Sustenance, some in Tillage, some in Vineyards, some in Fishing; so that among very many of them, three or four only can read. But of these somewhat hath been said elsewhere already.

2. ZACYNTHUS, or Zant, is 60 miles in compass, and distant from Peloponnesus 20 miles; so called of Zacynthus, Son to Dardanius. The Country is wonderfully stored with Oyl, Wines and Currants: of which last they made yearly 150000 Zecchines for their own Coffers, and 48000 Dollars which they pay for Custom to the Seignior of Venice. They were a very poor people when the English used to traffick there first; but now they grow rich and proud. At our Merchants first frequenting the Country, they much marvelled to what end they bought so many Currants, and demanded whether they used to dye Cloaths or fat Hogs with them, for so they themselves did: but now they have learned a more profitable use of them. Here are also very good Salt-pits, Fresh water plenty, but little or no Wood, and less Corn: their ground being husbanded, as the case stands with them, to their better advantage; but so that that many times they are ready to starve, if either the Wind or the Sea prove cross unto them, and hinder them from fetching their Provisions both of Flesh and Corn out of Peloponnesus, in which respect they are fain to hold fair Quarter with the Turks, considering how easie it is for him to distress them for want of Viual. The Island is much troubled with Earthquakes, commonly once a week; in regard whereof they build their Houses very low; and when they perceive them coming, the Priests are to ring the Bells, to stir the people to Prayers. They have a Custom here at Weddings to invite many young men, whom they call Compeers, of which every one giveth the Bride a Ring: which done, it is accounted as detestable a Sin as Incest for them to accompany her in any carnal kind: and therefore they chuse such to be their Compeers who have formerly been suspected of too much Familiarity with her.

The Island is very populous and well inhabited, but the people of a spiteful and vindicative nature, not to be reconciled, if angry. It containeth in it 48 Towns and Villages, the chief whereof, which passeth by the name of a City, is called also Zant, stretched out about the length of a mile on the foot of a mountain, but in breadth not answerable; beautified with a fair and convenient Haven opening towards Greece, safe from the danger of Pirates, though not of Winds, capable of great Fleets of shipping both for bulk and number, and so frequented from all parts, that he who hath a mind to go out of it need not stay for a passage. Yet, notwithstanding this great Concourse and resort of Strangers, the Town is rather rich than well-built or beautiful, the Streets hereof being uneven and rugged, and the Buildings by reason of the often Earthquakes, very low. On the East side of it, on a round steep Mountain, standeth a very strong Castle, a little City of it self, well garrisoned, impregnable fortified, and of a very difficult Entrance: which commandeth not the City and Harbour only, but a great part of the Sea adjoining. Upon the Wall thereof continually stands a Watchman, to descry what Shipping is at hand, and hangeth out as many Flags as he discovereth Vessels. And over the Door of the Town-Hall (the better to instruct the Magistrates in their publick Duty) it is said these Verses are inscribed:

Hic locus 1. odii, 2. amoris, 3. puni, 4. conservati, 5. honorati, 1. Nequitiam, 2. Pacem, 3. Crimina, 4. Furam, 5. Probos. Thus Englished by George Sandys, whence I had the Latine, This place doth 1. hate, 2. love, 3. punish, 4. keep, 5. requite, 1. Voluptuous Riot, 2. Peace, 3. Crimes, 4. Laws, 5. the Upright.

In matter of Religion, the people, being generally Greeks both in Birth and Language, are for the most part of that Church also; but some adhere unto the Latine; each party having their own Bishop: of which the Greek Bishop hath his Cathedral in the Church of S. Nicolas, near unto the Haven which it giveth name to, and therein a Monastery of Caloires, or Monks of Basil; the Latine Bishop hath his Residence and Cathedral within the Castle, and therein a Convent of Franciscans. The Jews have in this Town their Synagogue also: but there are not many of them, if not lately encreased. In Civil matters they are subject to the State of Venice, the Governour hereof (whom they call the Providore) having his Residence in the Castle, assisted by a Chancellor and two Counsellors, (all Gentlemen of Venice) whom they change every third year. The Fortunes of this Island in former times, and by what means it fell to the Venetians, we shall then anon.

3. The ECHINADES are certain little Islands, or rather great Rocks, now called Curzolari, famous for nothing but the great Battel of Lepanto, fought nigh them betwixt the Venetians and the Turks; the Turks having in their Navy 207 fail of Ships, the Venetians and their Confederates but 145 of all sorts. But it pleased God to give the Victory to the weakest; the Issue of it being such, that the Turks lost 29000 men who were killed in the Fight, 39000 more which were taken prisoners, 140 of their Gallies, 400 pieces of Ordnance, and 200 Christian Captives which were then redeemed: the Christians buying this great Victory with the death of 7656 men or thereabouts; too great a price, could it have been purchased with a less. A Victory obtained not far from the point of Athium, wherein Augustus overcame the Navy of Marcus Antonius, and thereby got the Empire to himself alone, of which before he was but Joint-tenant with his Adversary. So that this place seems to be marked out for a Stage of eminent Actions; and that this later Naval fight was but the second part of the first.

But to return unto these Islands, they stand just against the Mouth of the River Achelous, of which thus the Poet, Turbidus objectas Achelous Echinas exiit.

Fierce Achelous with the Sea is mixt

Where the Echinades (great Rocks) are fixt.

These Islands are in number five, seigned by the Poets to be so many Naiades or Sea Nymphs, whom Achelous the River-God upon some displeasure metamorphosed into these Rocky Islands. But the truth is, that they were caused by the Dirt and Mud which this River carried with it into the Sea, where at last is settled to firm Ground. Of which himself saith thus in Ovid,

Fluctus nostrique marisque

Continuam deducit humum, pariterque revellit

In totidem mediis quot cernis Echinadas undis.

The fury of the Sea-waves and mine own

Continual heaps of Mud and Earth drew down,

Which, parted by the inter-running Seas,

Made, as thou seest, these five Echinades.

5. CEPHALENIA, the most populous Island of this Sea, is situate over against Acarnania, part of the Province of Epirus; having on the South-east Zant, on the North-west Corcyra or Corfu; in length containing 80 miles, 40 in breadth, the whole compass being reckoned at 160. Once called Terrapoli, from the number of four Cities in it; but three of them were decayed in the time of Ptolemy, who takes notice of no more but one, and that of the same name with the Island. It is woody and mountainous in most places, but the Mountains intermixt with Valleys and the Woods with Champain: plentiful in Wheat, Honey, Currants, Manna, Oyl, incomparable, though not long-lasting, Muscadels; as also in Cheese, Wool, Turkeys, and Powder for the dying of Scarlets. So destitute of Water, as having no River, and not many Fountains, that when their Cattel would drink, they gape both morning and evening to receive the Dew distilling insensibly from the Clouds.

The People are for the most part Greeks; some few Italians, naturals of the Seignior of Venice, being intermixt: the whole number of the Inhabitants computed at 6000 Families, the number of the Towns and Villages to 200 or thereabouts. The principal whereof are, 1. Cephalenia, now Cefalona, fortified with good Works and a very strong Castle. 2. Argasoli, a Haven-town, distant six miles from Cefalona: the Port whereof is capable of a sufficient Navy. 3. Sidro, another Port-town also, lying towards the South.

As for the Fortunes of this Island, it was first called Melana, after Teleboe: and being known by that name was made subject to Thebes, by the Valour and good Conduct of Amphitryo, the Theban General, by whom Prerelas, the King hercof, was slain in Battel. During which War, and the Stay of Ampibirry in this Island, it happened that Cephalus, a noble Athenian, having by misadventure killed his Wife Procris with an Arrow which he shot at a Deer, not daring to abide in his own Country, fled unto Ampibirry his old Friend, then newly victorious over the Teleboans; who, pitying his case, made him the Governour of this Island, since, from his name, called Cephalenia. Having continued for some time in the power of the Teleboans, it passed, together with Zant and some other Islands into the hands of the Macedonians; from whom, in the declining of their Affairs; the Acheans got the Isle of Zant, and the Etolians Cephalenia. But long they had not held them when the Romans began to look towards Greece, who under colour of setting the Continent at liberty, made themselves Masters of both the Islands, that so they might at leisure possess the whole, as in fine they did. In the Division of the Empire they fell, as parts of Greece, to the Constantinopolitans: and on the takings of that City by the Western Christians, they fell, with almost all the rest of the Islands, to the State of Venice, the Governours whereof, retaining Corfu and some other of most Importance in the hands of the Seignior, permitted these (as many other of less note) unto private Adventurers. At the conclusion of the Peace betwixt Mahomet the Great and the state of Venice, these two, with Nerios, or Leucas, (spoken of in Epirus) were seized on by that Tyrant in despite of that Treaty or Conclusion, as belonging unto private persons, not to the Republick: but were recovered afterwards by the Venetians in the Reign of Bajazet the second, in the name of the State, and as parts thereof are still governed and defended by them.

5. CORCYRA, (now CORFU) more anciently was called Phœcia; but took this latter name from a Nymph so called, whom Neptune is reported to have here deflowered. It is situate over against Epirus, from thence 12 miles distant, stretched out from East to West in the form of a Bow, the length thereof being 54 miles, 24 the breadth, and so it is the biggest of these Seas. Commodiously seated for the Trade and Estate of Venice, as the Centre of their Dominion and Command by Sea.

The Southern parts hereof are mountainous and defensive in Water, much subject to be blasted with Southernly Winds; and therefore they few little Corn, and plant less Fruits. The Northern parts are level and delightful, adorned with whole Groves of Limons, Oranges, Fig-trees, Olives, and Pomegranates; enriched with plenty of Grain, abundance of Wines, great store of Oyl and Olives, and most excellent Honey; blest with a very temperate and healthful Air, made odorous by most pleasant and sweet-smelling Fruits, which grow most plentifully in each part hereof. Alcinous, who so courteously entertained Ulysses after his Shipwreck, was once King of this Island; whose Gardens, answerable to the natural Delights and Sweetness of it, are so much celebrated by the Poets. One of which thus;

*Quid bisera Alcinoi referam Pomaria, vòsqne
Qui nunquam vacui prodissis in æthera Rami?*

Which may be Englished in these words,

Why should I name Alcinous fertile Ground,
And Trees which never without Fruit are found?

Towns of most note and strength herein are, 1. Pagopolis, 2. Castello S. Angelo, of good esteem in respect of many others, but far short of 3. Corfu, the chief and strongest of the Island, which the Turks have found by their frequent Repulses to be impregnable. For it is situate at the foot of a Mountain, on the top of which are built two inaccessible Fortresses, as being strongly fenced with a natural Rock; the one called the Old Fortrefs, and the other the New: justly esteemed the chief Bulwarks of Venice, whose Trade and Power would soon decay should these Forts be lost. For which cause the two Governours (for each Fort hath one) are sworn before the State of Venice, never to hold Intelligence with one another by word or writing; lest by the Treachery of the one, the other might be wrought also from his Faith and Duty. Neither is their Command here for more than two years; their Commission then terminating, and new Successors being sent them. The Town is inhabited for the most part by Gracians, as is all the residue of the Island; beautified with one of the most commodious Havens in all the Adriatick, and the Residence of an Archbishop. A Town of such publick Concernment, in regard of the Strength and Situation, that it is accounted of as the Key of Venice, and one of the strongest Bulwarks of Christendom against the Encroachment of the Turks. The Story of it since dismembered from the Eastern Empire, at the taking of Constantinople by the Latines, we have had before.

6. ITHACA, now called Val de Compare, lieth on the North-east of Cephalenia, being in compass 50 miles: most famous for the Birth of Ulysses, the Son of Laertes, of which thus the Poet;

*Effugimus Scopulos Ithacæ Laertia Regna,
Et terram alticrem sœvis exsecramur Ulyssis.
From th' Ithacan Rocks, Laertes Realm, we fled,
And curs'd the Land which dire Ulysses bred.*

It was also called Dulichium, or else there was some other Island of that name, not far from Ithaca, whereof Ulysses was also King, who is hence called Dulichium Heros among the Poets: and in this Taunt of Ajax to him, Dulichium vertex significth the Head of Ulysses,

Sed neque Dulichius, sub Achillis casside, Vertex Pondera tanta feret.

Achilles Helm's too great a weight, I trow,
For weak Ulysses Head to undergo.

But as weak a man as Ajax thought him, he was the Master-Wit of Greece for the times he lived in, and one that did as good Service in the War of Troy as the best Swordsman of them all. A War to which he went somewhat unwillingly, as fearing the sad Consequences and events thereof; inasmuch that he feigned himself mad, ploughing the Shore, and sowing Salt instead of Corn. But Palamedes, to make trial whether this was real, or but counterfeited only, cast young Telemachus, the Son of Ulysses, before the Plough, which he observing, either drove the Plough besides him, or lifted it over him. Discovered by this means, and engaging with the rest in the Trojan War, he found out the Design of Thetis, and brought Achilles to it also: in the course whereof, by his Wit and Courage, he did very good Service; allied with Dionides in the action against Rhesus King of Thrace, and with Palamedes in foraging the Country for Provisions. By his Policy was the Palladium stoln out of Troy, and consequently the City taken and destroyed, whose Fate depended on the preservation of that fatal Relick. After the ending of the War, which held out ten years, he was withheld from Ithaca ten years longer by Winds and Tempests and the Displeasure of the Gods which favoured Troy; in which he saved himself from the Incantments of the Sirens, the Allurements of Circe, the Cruelty of Poliphemus, and after many Dangers came home in safety. A man of so compleat a Vertue, that Homer maketh him the Pattern of a Temperate and Prudent man in the Books called Odysses, (by his name, as the Greeks pronounce it;) as he doth Achilles, in his Iliads, of a compleat and perfect Souldier.

The

The Country is generally very rocky and barren, exceeding plentiful of Goats, but no Hares live in it; inhabited for the most part by Pirates and Exiles, men banished out of civil Society, and willingly acknowledging no Superior over them; but subject, if to any, to the State of Venice, which hitherto hath maintained these Islands against the Turks, though many times attempted by them in the most prosperous times of their Arms and Victories. For the Venetians being gratified, at the taking of Constantinople by the Latines, with almost all the Islands of the Ægean and Ionian Seas, (as being a People strong in Shipping, and so most able to preserve the Possession of them) some of the greatest and most considerable, either for their Riches or commodiousness of Situation, were furnished with convenient Garrisons in the name of the State. The rest they did bestow on the better sort of Citizens, to be defended and made good at their own Cost and Charges; who accordingly possessed themselves of one, two or more of them, as they were of ability to set out their Gallies for the keeping of them: the Seigniorship having nevertheless a Care of all, and to that end keeping a Fleet at Sea continually under one of their Admirals; whereby they did not only preserve those Seas from the Genova Pirates, but for long time defended all their Islands also, as well against the Greeks as the Turkish Emperours. But all the Isles of the Ægean being lost to the Turk, except Cythera and Tenos on the European, and Carpathos or Scarpanto on the Asian side; they have now only Crete with the Isles adjoining, and those of the Ionian Sea under their Command, and these (but specially the Isle Crete) endangered at the present by the Turkish Tyrant.

Thus having taken a view of the several Provinces and Isles which belong to Greece, according to the ancient and present state of each particular: let us next take a view of the Gracian Emperours, who have had here their principal Residence, and possessed the whole (though for a while their Empire was extended over all the East) as they here follow in this ensuing Catalogue of

The CONSTANTINOPOLITAN, GRACIAN, or Eastern Emperours.

3. Julian, surnamed the Apostate, Son of Constantius the Brother of Constantine the Great; at first a Christian, afterwards a professed Enemy of the Gospel: fortunate in his Wars against the Almans, Franks, and other Transalpine Nations, whilest he was a Christian; prodigiously slain in the Persian War, When become a Persecutor.

382

6. Gratian, the eldest Son of Valentinian, succeeded his Father in the West, and his Uncle Valens in the East, after whose death he left Italy and the West to Valentinian his younger Brother. 383

7. Theodosius, a Spaniard born, revenged the death of Gratian on the Tyrant Maximus, and of Valentinian the 2. on the Traitor Eugenius. 399

8. Arcadius, the eldest Son of Theodosius, succeeded his Father in the East, as his Brother Honorius did in the West: the Roman Empire after this last Division of it being so distracted and torn in pieces, that it was never since united.

9. Theodosius II. Son of Arcadius, made Peace with the Goths, whom he employed against the Huns and Persians; his more dangerous Enemies, and caused the Ephefine Council to be called against Nestorius.

478

12. Zeno, the Son-in-law and Lieutenant of Leo, sent Theodoric and the Goths into Italy against Odoacer. A Tyrant and a great Drinker; in one of his drunken Fits buried quick by his Emperors. In his time Constantinople was almost wholly destroyed by Fire, in which perished, amongst other things, 120000 Volumes of good Manuscripts.

497

13. Anastasius, a mean Officer of the Court, by the power and favour of the Emperors created Emperour: a great Patron of Eutyches, yet fortunate in his Wars against the Persians and Arabians. In his time Constantinople besieged by the Scythians, was likely to have fallen into great Distress, if Proclus, a Famous Mathematician, like another Archimedes, had not fired their Gallies.

521

14. Iustin, the Son of a Thracian Shepherd, and Captain of the Guard unto Anastasius, a Catholic Prince, and Patron of the Orthodox Clergy, whom he called from Banishment.

528

15. Iustinian, the Sister's Son of Iustin, with whom he was at first Consort in the Empire, recovered Africk from the Vandals by Belisarius.

FINIS

- rius, and Italy from the Goths by Narjes; and finally reduced the Laws of Rome into form and method.
- 566 16. Iustin II. Nephew of Iustinian, instituted the Exarchate of Ravenna, and lost a great part of Italy to the Lombards. Unable of himself to oppose the Persian, he chose
- 577 17. Tiberius, one of his chief Commanders, to be Confort with him, who afterwards succeeded in the sole Command.
- 584 18. Maurice, a Cappadocian born, fortunate in his Wars against the Persians, from whom he recovered Mesopotamia in the time of Tiberius, by whom at his return he was married to Constantina his Daughter, and declared his Successor. Refusing to ransom some of his Souldiers, taken Prisoners by Caganus King of the Avars, he lost the Affections of his Army.
- 604 19. Phocas, a common Souldier, in a military Tumult chosen Emperor; murdered the Emperor Mauritius, with his Wife and Children, and made Pope Boniface Supreme Bishop or Head of the Church: slain in a popular Tumult by the Common people for his Lufts and Cruelties.
- 611 20. Heracius, a Nobleman of Constantinople, chosen by the general consent, repaired the Ruines of the Empire, vanquished the Persians, recovered Hierusalem out of their hands: and brought home the Crofs unto Constantinople in triumphant manner; whence the Feast called Exaltatio Crucis, September 14. In his time Mahomet began to disperse his Dotages.
- 641 21. Constantine, or Constantine II. Son of Heracius, unfortunate in his Wars against the Saracens, who prevailed in all places. Picking a Quarrel with the Romans, he defaced Rome, robbing it of all the choicest Ornaments which the Goths and other barbarous people had left; and ransacking the Isle of Sicily, was there slain by the Women.
- 670 22. Constantinus III. Son of the former Constantine, from his long or early Beard surnamed Pogonatus, repulsed the Saracens from Constantinople, but could not hinder the Bulgarians from passing over the Danow.
- 687 23. Iustinian II. Son of Constantine the 3. subdued Mesopotamia, Armenia, and some part of Persia, forcing the Saracens to sue for Peace, and become his Tributaries. Against whom Leontius on the one side, and Abdimarus, on the other, severally taking Arms, were declared Emperours. Iustinian, taken by Leontius, hath his Nose cut off, and his person committed to Custody: but making an Escape, by means of Trebellin King of the Bulgarians, recovered his Imperial Dignity; and being too violent in the pursuit of his Revenge, was finally murdered at the Altar by the command of
- 713 24. Philippus Bardanes, Admiral of his Navy, elected Emperor. by the Souldiers, a great enemy of Images, which he caused to be cast out of the Church, thereby incurring the Displeasure of
- 715 25. Anastasius II. called also Artemius, his principal Secretary, who thrust himself into the Empire; forced to relinquish it by that Army which he had raised against the Saracens: in

- which Tumult the City of Constantinople was sacked and spoiled.
- 717 26. Theodosius III. made Emperour in this Tumult by the Souldiers, hearing of the Approach of Leo, Commander of the Eastern Armies, resigned the Empire, and took Orders to preserve his Life.
- 718 27. Leo Isaurus, in whose time Caliph Zulciman besieged Constantinople the space of three years, and when by Cold and Famine 300000 of the Saracens were destroyed, they desisted. At this Siege was that Fire invented which we, for the violence of it, call Wild-fire; and the Latines, because the Greeks were the Authors of it, Græcus ignis: by which the Saracens Ships were not a little molested. He was also a great Enemy to Images, and for this cause hated by the Pope and Clergy of Rome, who gave him thereupon the Nick-name of Iconomachus.
- 741 28. Constantinus IV. Son of Leo, surnamed Copronymus, for that when he was baptized he bewrayed the Font, followed his Father's Zeal in removing Images, which created him much Trouble, one Ariabaudus being chosen Emperour against him, but at last defeated.
- 777 29. Leo III. Son of Constantine Copronymus, honoured with the Adjunct of Porphyrogenitus, but commonly called Leo the 4. (Leontius the Usurper (as I conjecture) being reckoned for one;) an enemy to Images, and fortunate in his Wars against the Saracens.
- 782 30. Constantine V. the Son of Leo and Irene, first governed the Empire with his Mother, by whom at last supplanted, and deprived of Sight, he died of Melancholy.
- 798 31. Irene, Wife of Leo the 3. first Confort with Constantine her Son, and afterwards sole Emperess of Constantinople: for her better support in which Estate she sided with the Popes of Rome, and called the second Council of Nice for defence of Images. In her time Charles, surnamed the Great, was by the Pope and People of Rome created Emperour of the West, for the Popes, knowing their own Greatness to grow out of the Ruines of the Temporal Power, committed the Empire of the West unto the French Princes: whereby the Greek Emperours became much weakened; and the French, being the Pope's Creatures, were in tract of time brought to their Devotion. In following times, when Frederick Barbarossa was by Pope Alexander the 3. pronounced non-Emperour, Emanuel of Constantinople sued for a Re-union of the Empires: but the crafty Pope returned this answer, Non licere illi conjungere quæ majores ejus de industria disjuxerunt: Let no man presume to joyn what the God of Rome, the Pope, hath put asunder.
- 803 32. Nicephorus, a Patrician, made Emperour by the Souldiers, persuaded that Irene had made choice of him to be her Successor: slain in a pitch Field against the Bulgarians.

- 830 36. Theophilus, the Son of Michael Balbus, an enemy of Images, like his Father, and as unfortunate as he, losing many Battels to the Saracens, at last he died of Melancholy.
- 842 37. Michael III. Son of Theophilus, first ruling with his Mother Theodora, who took unto her self the supreme Command; and after of himself sole Emperor, his Mother being made a Nun.
- 866 38. Basilus, surnamed Macedo, from the place of his Birth, made Confort in the Empire by Michael the Son of Theophilus, whom he basely and treacherously murdered; killed casually by a Stag.
- 886 39. Leo VI. for his Learning surnamed Philosophus, the Son of Basilus, a vigilant and provident Prince: most of his time, with variable Success, was spent against the Bulgarians.
- 912 40. Constantine VI. commonly called the VII. Son of Leo Philosophus, first under his Uncle Alexander, next under Zoe his Mother, and after under Romanus Lacopenus, governed the Empire; by which last he was so miserably depressed that he was fain to get his livelihood by Painting. But Lacopenus being deposed and turned into a Monastery by his own Sons, Constantine at last obtained his Rights, and restored Learning unto Greece.
- 961 41. Romanus, the Son of Constantine.
- 963 42. Nicephorus, surnamed Phocas, first Governor or Protector of the young Emperor Romanus; after whose death, created Emperor by the Army, he recovered Antioch, Cilicia, and the greatest part of Asiaminor, from the power of the Saracens: slain in the night by John Zimisces, his Wife Theophania being privy to it.
- 971 43. John Zimisces, Emperor in the place of Nicephorus Phocas, governed the Empire better than he did obtain it, vanquishing the Bulgarians, Rosses, and others of the barbarous Nations, and left it at his death to the Sons of Romanus.
- 977 44. Basilus II. surnamed Porphyrogenitus, as many of the Emperours had been before him, in regard that at their Births they were wrapped in Purple, (which the Greeks call Porphyrie) the Imperial Colour; he subdued the Bulgarians, and made them Homagers to the Empire.
- 1027 45. Constantine VII. or VIII. Brother of Basilus, and with him Partner in the Empire: after whose death he governed three years by himself but did nothing memorable.
- 1030 46. Romanus II. for his Prodigality surnamed Argyropolis, Husband of Zoe, the Daughter of Constantine the 8. drowned in a Bath by the Treason of his Wife and her Adulterer.
- 1035 47. Michael IV. surnamed Paphlago, from his Country, first the Adulterer and afterwards the Husband of Zoe; but died very penitent.
- 1042 48. Michael V. surnamed Calaphates, a man of obscure Birth; adopted by Zoe whom he deposed from the Government, and turned into a Monastery. Out of which being again taken in a popular Tumult, he put out the Eyes of Calaphates; and, being then 60 years of age, bestowed both the Empire and her self upon
- 1043 49. Constantine IX. surnamed Morumachus, formerly Husband to a Niece of Romanus the 2.
- 1055 50. Theodora, Sister unto Zoe; after the death of Constantine, managed for two years the Affairs of the Empire with great Contentment of all people. But grown in age, he surrendered it to
- 1057 51. Michael VI. surnamed Stratioticus, an old, but military man, deposed within 3 years by
- 1060 52. Isaacus, of the noble Family of the Comneni, valiant, of great Courage, and diligent in his Affairs: which, having managed for two years, he left it at his death, with consent of the Senate and people, to
- 1063 53. Constantine X. surnamed Ducas, a great Justiciar and very devout, but exceeding covetous, whereby he became hated, of his Subjects and condemned by his Enemies.
- 1071 54. Romanus III. surnamed Diogenes, married Endoxia, the Wife of Constantinus Ducas, and with her the Empire. Taken Prisoner by the Turks, and sent home again, he found a Faction made against him; by which Endoxia was expelled, himself at his return deposed, and so died in Exile.
- 1075 55. Michael VII. the Son of Constantinus Ducas, surnamed Parapinatus, by reason of the Famine which in his time happened, made Emperor in the aforesaid Tumult. But being found unable for so great an Honour, (the Turks prevailing in all places) he was deposed again, and put into a Monastery.
- 1081 56. Nicephorus II. surnamed Botaniates, of the House of Phocas, succeeded in the place of Parapinace; deposed within three years by the Comneni.
- 1084 57. Alexius Comnenus, Son of the Emperor Isaacus Comnenus, obtained the Empire: in whose time the Western Christians with great Forces prepared for the Recovery of the Holy Land: of whose purposes being very jealous he denied them passage through his Country; but was in the end forced to find them Victuals and other Necessaries.
- 1113 58. Calo-Joannes, the Son of Alexius, had a good hand against the Turks, from whom he took Laodicea and some other places of Importance. He also vanquished the Scythians or Tartars passing over the Ister, most of which he either slew in Battel, or sold as Captives; permitting the remainder to abide on this side that River. He also conquered the Servians and Bulgarians, transporting many of them into Bithynia.
- 1142 59. Mannuel, or Emanuel, the younger Son of Calo-Joannes, an under-hand enemy to the Western Christians, and an open enemy to the Turks; by whom being entrapped in the dangerous Streights of Cilicia, and his Army miserably cut off, he was on honourable terms permitted to return again.
- 1180 60. Alexius II. Son of Mannuel, deposed and barbarously murdered by Andronicus, the Cousin.

Cousin-german of his Father, with his Wife and Mother.

1183 61. Andronicus Comnenus, confined by Mannuel to Oenine in Paphlagonia, by reason of his dangerous and ambitious practices, after his death, pretending to reform the State, came unto Constantinople: first made Protector, afterwards Confort in the Empire with young Alexius: whom having barbarously slain and got the Empire to himself, he was not long after cruelly torn in pieces in a popular Tumult.

1185 62. Isaacus Angelus, a Nobleman of Constantinople, and of the same Comnenian Race, designed to death by Andronicus, was in a popular Election proclaimed his Successour; deposed by Alexius his own Brother, and his Eyes put out.

1195 63. Alexius Angelus, deprived his Brother, and excluded his Nephew from the Empire; but it held not long.

64. Alexius Angelus II. Son of Isaac Angelus, who being unjustly thrust out of his Empire by his Uncle Alexius, had recourse to Philip the Western Emperour, whose Daughter Mary he had married, who so prevailed with Pope Innocent the 3. (upon a promise for subjecting the Church of Greece to the See of Rome) that the Army prepared for the Holy Land was employed to restore him. On the approach whereof Alexius the Usurper fled; Alexius the young Emperor is seated in his Father's Throne, and not long after slain by Alexius Ducas. In revenge whereof the Latines assault and win Constantinople, make themselves Masters of the Empire, and divided it amongst themselves; allotting to the Venetians Candia, many good Towns of Peloponnesus, and most of the Islands; to Boniface Marquis of Montferrat the Kingdom of Thessaly; to the others of the Adventurers other liberal Shares; and finally to Baldwin Earl of Flanders the main Body of the Empire, with the Title of Emperour. The Seat of the Empire of the Greeks being transferred unto Nice, a City of Bythinia in the Lesser Asia, by Theodorus Lascaris, Son-in-law to Alexius, the Usurper, continued there till the regaining of Constantinople by the Greeks again, after it had been 60 years possessed by the Western Christians.

Emperours of the LATINES in CONSTANTINOPLE.

1200 65. Baldwin, Earl of Flanders, first Emperour of the Latines reigning in Constantinople, taken in fight by John King of Bulgaria, coming to aid the Greeks, and sent Prisoner to Ternova, where he was cruelly put to death.

1202 66. Henry, the Brother of Baldwin, repulsed the Bulgarians out of Greece, and died a Conquerour.

1215 67. Peter, Count of Auxerre in France, the Son of Peter, youngest Son to Lewis the Gros of France, and Husband of Toland the Daughter of Henry, succeeded in the Empire after his decease. He was cunningly entrapped by Theodorus Angelus, a great Prince in Epirus, whom he had besieged in Dyrrhachium: but of an Enemy being perswaded to become his Guest, was there murdered by him.

1220 68. Robert, the Son of Peter, having seen the miserable usage of his beautiful Empress, whom a young Burgundian, formerly contracted to her, had most despitefully mangled, cutting off both her Nose and Ears, died of Heart's grief as he was coming back from Rome, whither his Melancholy had carried him to consult the Pope in his Affairs.

1227 69. Baldwin II. Son of Robert by a former Wife, under the Protection of John de Brenne, the titular King of Hierusalem, succeeded in his Father's Throne: which having held for the space of 33 years, he was forced to leave; the City of Constantinople being regained by the Greeks, and the poor Prince compelled to sue in vain for Succours to the French Venetians, and other Princes of the West. And though both Philip the Son of this Baldwin, and Charles of Valois, Father of Philip de Valois the French King, in right of Catherine his Wife, Daughter of that Philip, did sometimes please themselves with the Title of Emperours of Constantinople, yet neither of the two had ever any footing or possession there.

The Empire restored unto the GRECKS.

1260 70. Michael VIII. surnamed Palaologus, extracted from the Comnenian Emperour, Emperour of the Greeks in the City of Nice, most fortunately recovered Constantinople; the Town being taken by a party of 50 men secretly put into it by some Country-Labourers under the Ruines of a Mine. Present in person at the Council of Lions, at the persuasion of the Pope he admitted the Latine Ceremonies into the Churches of Greece; for which he was greatly hated by his Subjects, and denied the honour of Christian Burial.

1283 71. Andronicus II. vexed with unnatural Wars by his Nephew Andronicus, who rebelled against him.

1328 72. Andronicus III. first Partner with his Grandfather, afterwards Sole Emperour.

1341 73. John Palaologus, Son of Andronicus the 3. In whose Minority Constantin his Protector usurped the Empire, and held it sometimes from him, and sometimes with him, till the year 1357, and then retired into a Monastery, leaving the Empire unto John, during whose Reign the Turks first planted themselves in Europe.

1384 74. Andronicus IV. the Son of Joannes Palaologus.

1387 75. Emanuel Palaologus, the Son of the said John, and Brother of Andronicus the 4. In whose time Bajazet the sixth King of the Turks did besiege Constantinople; but found such notable Resistance, that he could not force it.

1417 76. John II. Son of Andronicus the 4.

1420 77. John III. Son of Emanuel Palaologus, in person at the Council of Florence for reconciling of the Churches in hopes thereby to get some Aid from the Western Christians, but it would not be.

1444 78. Constantinus Palaologus, the Brother of John the 3. In whose time the famous City of Constantinople was taken by Mahomet the Great 1452, the miserable Emperour, who had in vain gon from door to door to beg or borrow money to pay his Souldiers, (which the Turks found in great abundance when they took the City) being lamentably trod to death in the Throng. Now concerning this Empire of the Greeks, we may observe some fatal Contraries in one and the same name. As first, that Philip the Father of Alexander laid the first

Found-

Foundation of the Macedonian Monarchy, and Philip the Father of Persus ruined it. Secondly, that Baldwin was the first, and Baldwin the last Emperour of the Latines in Constantinople. Thirdly, that this Town was built by a Constantine, the Son of Helena, a Gregory being Patriarch, and was lost by a Constantine, the Son of a Helena, a Gregory being Patriarch also. And fourthly, the Turks have a Prophecy, that as it was won by a Mahomet, so shall it be lost by a Mahomet. So Augustus was the first established Emperour of Rome, and Augustulus the last: Darius, the Son of Hystaspes, the Restorer; and Darius, the Son of Artamius, the Overthrower of the Persian Monarchy. A like note I shall hereafter tell you of Hierusalem. In the mean time I will present you with a fatal Observation of the letter H, as I find it thus verified in Albion's England.

Not superstitiously I speak, but H this letter still hath been observed ominous to England's Good or Ill. First Hercules, Hefione and Helen were the cause Of War to Troy; Aeneas Seed becoming fo Outlaws. Humber the Hun with foreign Arms did first the Brutes invade:

Helen to Rome's Imperial Throne the British Crown conveyed.

Hengist and Horsus first did plant the Saxons in this Isle: Hungar and Hubba first brought Danes, that swayed here long while.

At Harold had the Saxon end, at Hardie Cnute the Dane. Henries the first and second did restore the English Reign.

Fourth Henry first for Lancaster did England's Crown obtain.

Seventh Henry jarring, Lancaster and York unites in Peace.

Henry the eight did happily Rome's Irreligion cease.

A strange and ominous Letter, every Mutation in our State being as it were ushered by it.

What were the Revenues of this Empire since the Division of it into the East and West, I could never yet learn.

That they were exceeding great may appear by three circumstances. 1. Zonaras reporteth that the Emperour Basilius had in his Treasury 200000 Talents of Gold, besides infinite Heaps of Silver and other Moneys. 2. Lippus relateth, how Benjamin a Jew in his discourse of Europe's faith, that the Custom due to the Emperours out of the Victuals and Merchandize sold at Constantinople only did amount to 20000 Crowns daily. 3. We find that at the Sack of Constantinople there was found an invaluable mass of Gold, Silver, Plate and Jewels, besides that which was hid in the Earth. For so the covetous Citizens chose rather to employ their Wealth, then afford any part of it to the Emperour, who with Tears in his Eyes went from door to door to beg and borrow Money, wherewith he might wage more Souldiers for the defence of the Town.

The Arms of the Empire were Mars, a Cross between four Greek Beta's of the second: the four Beta's signifying (as Bodin saith) Basileus, Basileus, Basileus, Basileus.

It may perchance be expected that we should here make an additional Catalogue of those Turkish Emperours who have reigned in Constantinople since the taking of it; and, being they are possessed of Greece, and do now inhabit it, that we should here also speak of the Turks themselves, their Customs, Forces, Policies, Original, and Proceedings. But the discourse of those things we intend to reserve for Thurcomania, a Province of Asia, from whence they made their first Inundation into Persia, and afterwards into other parts of the World now subject to them, the only Province which retains any thing of their name. And though the Peninsula called anciently Taurica Cherfoneus (now part of Tartaria Precopensis) be within the Bounds of Europe also; yet we will defer the description and story of it till we come to the Affairs of the Tartars, and will here conclude our Discourse of Europe, and prepare for Asia.

And so much for GREECE, the last of the Provinces of EUROPE.

Of ASIA.

ASIA is bounded on the West, with the Mediterranean, and Aegean Seas, the Hellepont, Propontis, Thracian Bosphorus, and the Euxine Sea, the Palus Maeotis, the Rivers Tanaïs and Duina, a Line being drawn from the first of the two said Rivers unto the other, by all which parted from Europe; on the North, it hath the main Scythick Ocean; on the East, the Straits of Anian (if such there be;) the Indian Ocean, and Mare del Zur, by which separated from America, on the South, the Mediterranean, or that part of it which is called the Carpathian Sea, washing the shores of Anatolia, and the main Southern Ocean, passing along the Indian, Persian, and Arabian Coasts: and finally, on the South-West, the Red Sea or Bay of Arabia, by which parted from Africk. Environed on all sides with the Sea, or some Sea-like Rivers, except a narrow Isthmus in the South-West, which joyns it to Africk, and the space of ground (whatsoever it be) betwixt Duina and Tanaïs, on the North-west, which unites it to Europe.

It took this name, as some will have it, from Asia, the Daughter of Oceanus and Thetis, the wife of Iapetus, and (by him) Mother to Prometheus: as others say, from Asius the Son of Atis, a King of Lydia, from whence that Country first, afterwards all Anatolia, or Asia minor, and finally, the whole Continent had the name of Asia. Others again (but more improbably) derive the name from Asius the Philosopher, who gave the Palladium unto the Trojans; in memory whereof that Country first, and after the whole Continent did receive this name: But these Originations being very uncertain, Bochartus (out of his great affection to the Punick or Phœnician Language) will have it called so from Asia, a Phœ- nician word, signifying Medium, or the middle; because Anatolia, or the lesser Asia, which gives name (as he conceiveth) to the Greater also, lieth in the middle, as it were, betwixt some parts of Europe and Africa. And so far the Conjecture doth find countenance from some ancient Writers, that Asia is said by Pliny to be inter Africam & Europam, to be betwixt Africa and Europe; by Mela, medium nostris æquoribus excipit, to be embraced in the middle of the two Seas (he meaneth Pontus Euxinus, and the Mediterranean.) and finally, by Eustathius (conceive them all of Anatolia, or the Lesser Asia) μέστω ἀπὸ τοῦ ἑξῆς διαδεδωκεν, to have a middle situation betwixt Europe and Africa. But by what name, and on what grounds soever it be called by the Greeks and Latines, it is otherwise, and with better reason called in Holy Scriptures by the name of Semia; as being that portion of the world, wherein the whole Posterity of Sem had their seats and dwellings, if the observation of Maginus be of any weight.

It is situate East and West, from the 52 to the 169 degree of Longitude, and North and South, from the 82 degree of Latitude, to the very Equator; some only of the Islands lying on the South of that Circle: so that the longest Summers day in the Southern parts, is but twelve hours only; but in the most Northern parts hereof, for almost four whole months together no night at all. And for a measurement by miles, it stretches in length 5200, and in breadth 4560 miles.

This Country hath heretofore been had in especial honour, 1. For the Creation of man, who had his first making in this part of the world; 2ly. Because in this part of it stood the Garden of Eden, which he had for the first place of his habitation; 3ly. because here flourished the four first great Monarchies of the Assyrians, Babylonians, Medes, and Persians; 4ly. Because it was the Scene of almost all the memorable actions, which are recorded by the Pen-men of the Scriptures; 5ly. Because that here our Saviour CHRIST was born, here wrought the most divine Miracles, and here accomplished the great Work of our Redemption; 6ly. And finally, Because from hence all Nations of the World had their first beginning on the dispersion which was made by the Sons of Noah, after their vain attempt of Babel.

The chief Mountains of this great Continent, not limited within the bounds of any one Province (for of those we are to speak in their several places) are 1 Mount Taurus, which having its beginning in Lycia, a Province of Anatolia, passeth directly Eastward to the Indian Ocean, and reckoning in its several windings and turnings, with its spurs and branches every way, is said to be 6250 miles long, and 357 miles broad. This Mountain, or rather ridge of hills, divideth the Greater Asia as the Equator doth the World, into North and South: memorable for three difficult passages from the one to the other: the first out of the rest of Anatolia into Cilicia, called Pyle Cilicia; the second out of Scythia, or Tartary, into Turcomania, called Caucasus Portæ; and the third out of Scythia into Persia, called Portæ Caspiæ. Of which, and of the whole course of this Mountain, more at large hereafter. 2 Imaus, which beginning near the shores of the Northern Ocean, runneth directly towards the South, dividing the Greater Asia (as the Meridian doth the World) into East and West, and crossing Mount Taurus in right Angles, in or about the Longitude of 140. This on the North of Taurus hath no other name among the Latines than Imaus only; and by that name divideth Scythia, into Scythia intra Imaum, and Scythia extra Imaum: but by the Tartars is called Altay, by some Writers Beligon. And on the South-side of that Mountain is known in Ptolomy by the name of Bitige, extending from Mount Caucasus, or some other Branch of the Taurus, to the Cape of Comari, in the Southern Ocean: supposed by some to be mount Sephar, mentioned Gen. 10. 30. of which we shall say more also when we come into India.

The estate of Christianity in this vast Continent is in ill condition, discountenanced and oppressed, though not quite extinguished. For all the great Princes and Commanders of it being either Mahometans or Pagans, the most that can be hoped for of the Christian Faith, is a toleration or connivance; and that not found but with an intermixture of such afflictions, as commonly attend discountenanced and disgraced Religions. Yet is not Christianity so over-powered either by Mahometism, or Paganism, but that in Asia the Lesser, Syria, Palestine, and Armenia, a great part of the Inhabitants do retain the Gospel, under their several Patriarchs and Metropolitans: differing in some few points from one another; but in many from the Church of Rome, with which they hold neither correspondencie nor Communion. Nor want there many Christian Churches in the Empire of Persia, nor in those of Tartary, China, and the Indies, antiently planted in those Countries; besides the late increase thereof in the Eastern Islands by the diligent preaching of the Jesuites, and some late Fathers there settled by the English and Hollanders: of all which I shall write in place convenient.

In reference to the Roman Empire, whose Dominion did not often extend beyond the River Euphrates, this Continent contained only three Dioceses, or Juridical Circuits; that is to say, the Diocese of Pontus, Asia properly so called, and the Oriental: which with the Dioceses of Thrace and Egypt, were under the Command of the Prefectus Prætorii Orientis; the greatest Officer of power and jurisdiction, next to the Emperours themselves, in the Roman Monarchy. And these three Dioceses contained in them to the number of thirty seven Provinces, viz. the Provinces of Bithynia, 2 Heleni-pontus, 3 Pontus Polemoniacus, 4 Galatia prima, 5 Galatia Salutaris, 6 Honorius, 7 Paphlagonia, 8 Cappadocia prima, 9 Cappadocia secunda, 10 Armenia prima, and 11 Armenia secunda, contained in the Diocese of Pontus, and governed by the Vicarius, or Lieutenant thereof. II. the Provinces of Pamphylia, 2 Lycia, 3 Caria, 4 Pydlia, 5 Lycæonia, 6 Lydia, 7 Phrygia Pacatiana, 8 Phrygia Salutaris, 9 Asia specially so called, 10 Hellespont, and 11 the Isles of Anatolia, making up the Diocese of Asia: whereof the three last were governed by a peculiar Officer, called the Proconsul of Asia; the others by the ordinary Lieutenant, or Vicarius. III. The Provinces of Asia, 2 Cilicia prima, 3 Cilicia secunda, 4 Cyprus, 5 Phœ-nices, 6 Phœnices Libani, 7 Syria, 8 Syria Salutaris, 9 Palestine prima, 10 Palestine secunda, 11 Palestina Salutaris, 12 Embratenfis, 13 Ojrene, 14 Mesopotamia, and 15 Arabia, constituting the Diocese of the Orient, under the Comes Orientis. The rest of Asia subject unto the Parthians or Persian Kings, besides those of India (and of many Regions and Countries, not then discovered) was never conquered by the Romans; and therefore not within the compass of this distribution.

At this time Asia stands divided amongst six great Monarchs; that is to say, the Turk, commanding all those parts and Provinces, which antiently belonged to the Roman Empire. 2ly. The Persian, ruling in all the Provinces beyond Euphrates, possessed by the Persian Kings in the time of Alexander the Great, or the Asacide or Parthians in the times of the Romans. 3ly. The Great Cham of Tartary, commanding overall the North parts of Asia, antiently known by the name of Scythia. 4ly. The King of China, governing in that large and populous Country. 5ly. The King of Barma, whose Dominion comprehends all or the greatest part of India beyond the River Ganges. And 6ly. The Great Mogor, whose Empire is extended over all India on this side of that River. And some there be who in the descriptions of this great Country, follow this division. But for our parts, for the better understanding of the Greek and the Roman Stories, and the estate of the Assyrian, Babylonian and Persian Monarchies, to which the holy Scriptures do so much relate; we shall consider it as divided unto the Regions of 1 Anatolia, or Asia Minor. 2 Cyprus 3 Syria. 4 Palestine. 5 Arabia. 6 Chaldeæ. 7 Assyria. 8 Mesopotamia. 9 Turcomania. 10 Media. 11 Persia. 12 Tartaria. 13 China. 14 India. And 15 The Oriental Islands.

ANATOLIA, or ASIA MINOR.

ANATOLIA, or ASIA MINOR is bounded on the East, with the River Euphrates, by which parted from the greater Asia; on the West, with the Thracian Bosporus, Propontus, Hellespont, and the Aegean Sea, by which parted from Europe; on the North, with Pontus Euxinus, called also the Black Sea, and Mare Maggiore; and on the South, by the Rhodian, Lydian, and Pamphylian Seas, several parts of the Mediterranean. So that it is a demy-Island, or Peninsula, environed on all sides with waters, excepting a small Isthmus or neck of Land extending from the head of Euphrates to the Euxine Sea, by which joyned to the rest of Asia.

It was antiently called Asia Minor, to difference it from the residue of this great Continent; afterwards Anatolia; and the Asiatice, from the more Eastward situation of it, in respect of Greece; and now Natolia by

by the Turkey, with little deviation from the former name. But here is to be observed, that as this Lesser Asia was a part of the greater; and the Diocese of Asia, a part of Asia the Less: so was Asia properly and specially so called, but a part only of the Asian Diocese; the Lydian Asia, a part of Asia properly so called; and the Proconsular Asia, but a part of that. The limits of Asia the Less, and the several Provinces contained in the Asian Diocese, have been shewn already. And as for that part hereof which had the name of Asia properly and specially so called, it containeth only the two Phrygias, both the Mysia, Æolis, Ionia, Lydia, and Caria, which falling unto the Romans, by the last Will and Testament of Attalus, the last King of Pergamus, were by them made into one Province, and called Asia, after the name of the whole Continent, this being as it were the earnest penny, to make sure the rest. So witnesseth Strabo, where he saith, Πουδὸς ἀναρχίας ἀνεσθίεναι τὴν ἡμετέραν Ἀσίαν ἀποκαταστήσαντες, ἐκδύναμιον τῆς ἡμετέρας, Lib. 13. And for the Lydian Asia, that contained only so much of the Roman or proper Asia, as antiently did belong to Lydia; that is to say, Lydia it self, together with Æolis, and Ionia, and some parts of the Greater Mysia adjoining to it. Which as it had originally the name of Asia, from Asia a chief City of it near the foot of Mount Tmolus, which both Strabo, and the Great Etymologist have taken notice of, before that name became to be communicated to the greater Continent: so it retained that name to it self several, distinct both from the Greater and the Lesser Asia; as also from the Asia propria of Ptolomy, and others of the ancient Writers. And of this Asia only it is, which the Scriptures speak; both in the Books of the Acts, and the Revelation: the seven Churches mentioned in the one being found in this Lydian Asia, and the passages in the other concerning Asia, not to be understood of any, but of this alone. For whereas it is said Acts 16. that when they had gone throughout Phrygia; and the Region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the Word in Asia; after they were to come Mysia, they assayed to go into Bithynia, and came down to Troas: most clear it is, that neither Galatia, nor Bithynia, though Regions of the Lesser Asia; nor Phrygia, Mysia, or Troas all Regions of the proper Asia, were any part of that Asia which the Scripture speaks of. So also where it is affirmed, that upon St. Pauls preaching and disputing for two years in Ephesus, all they which dwelt in Asia heard the Word of the Lord, Acts 19. 10. it is not to be meant of any but the Lydian Asia, whereof Ephesus at that time was the principal City. So also Acts 19. 22, 26, 31. and Chap. 20. 18. Finally, for the Proconsular Asia, which together with Hellespont and the Isles, made up a Government apart, exempt from the Command of the Vicarius, or Lieutenant of the Asian Diocese, it contained only Æolis, and Ionia with the South part of Lydia, or the Countries lying about Ephesus. So witnesseth St. Hierom from the Christian Writers, where he affirms, That although all the whole Peninsula have the name of the Lesser Asia, Specialiter ubi Ephesus Civitas est, Asia vocatur; yet more particularly the parts adjoining unto Ephesus have the name of Asia. And this appeareth by the distribution of the Provinces before laid down, where Lydia is reckoned for a Province of the Asian Diocese, distinct from the Proconsular Asia, which we now insit on.

So having cleared our way in regard of the name, proceed we next unto the Region, or place thus named, according to the notion in the largest latitude, extending from the Hellespont to the River Euphrates, and from the Euxine Sea to the Mediterranean. By which account it reacheth from the 31 to the 72 degree of Longitude, and from the 36 to the 45 degree of Latitude: the length hereof from the Hellespont to the River Euphrates, being estimated at 630 miles; the breadth from Sinus Ælicus in Cilicia, to the City of Trabezond, at 210. As to the situation of it, in reference to the Heavenly Bodies, it lyeth almost in the same position with Italy, extending from the middle Parallel of the fourth Climate, to the middle Parallel of the sixth. So that the longest Summers day in the Southern parts, is about fourteen hours and a half, and one hour longer in those parts which lie most towards the North.

The temperature of the Air is exceeding found, and the soil generally exceeding fruitful, abounding in most excellent pastures, which breed a notable race of Horses, of very good service in the Wars, if backed with European Riders; it being a by-word amongst the Turkey: That the Horses of Asia, and the Horsemen of Europe are of greatest action. It was antiently very plentiful of all fruits both for use and pleasure, as still it would be, were it cultivated as in former times. Once very populous, and replenished with goodly Cities, now in a manner waste and desolate, lamenting the destruction of 400 Towns: some of them destroyed by Earthquakes, (the falling-sickness of most great Cities in the East) but most by War, and have little now to boast of but the commodiousness of the Havens, which are very many; though most of them but meanly traded, as in a Country ill manured, and of little Manufactures.

The people antiently, especially those of Greek origin, and the Nations bordering on the Euxine, were very warlike and indutrious: the rest, especially the Lydians, and those of the greater Phrygia, as idle and effeminate, wholly addicted to their pleasures. All of them at this time affected with the same disease; inasmuch that the Turkey, (unless compelled thereunto by extreme necessities) never inrol their Children in the number of Janizaries. The greatest part of them generally profess the Christian Faith, but overpowered by Mahometanism, which is here most prevalent: all followers of the Church of Greece, and subject all (except those of Issauria and Cilicia) to the Patriarch of Constantinople. And as they are of the Communions of that Church, so they retain the Greek Liturgies for Sacred Offices; not so well understood amongst them as in former times, when it was more generally spoken there than it is at the present: now over-topped in most places by the Turkish and Slavonian Tongues. And though in former times, by reason of the many Greek Colonies planted in this Country, the Conquest of it by Alexander the Great, and the subjection of it to the Syrian Kings of the Macedon Race, that Language became generally understood amongst them; inasmuch as three of the Greek Dialects, viz. The Dærick, the Ionian, and the Æolic, were spoken here; yet did it never so prevail, as to become the Vulgar Language of the people, or to extinguish any of the Vulgar Tongues. For it is said of Mithradates King of Pontus, that he understood two and twenty Languages; without any Interpreter; which were no other than the Languages of so many Nations subject to himself, whose Dominion was contained for the most part within Asia Minor.

Principal Mountains of this Country, are Hermione in Pontus, Argæus in Cappadocia, Ida in the Lesser Phrygia, Olympus in Mysia, Tmolus in Lydia, Amanus in Cilicia, and finally Antetaurus, and Scordiscus in Armenia Minor: Out of which, for the most part, flow the chief Rivers hereof, that is to say, 1 Iris, (now Castamach,) 2 Thermodon, 3 Halis (now Osimangrueh,) 4 Parthenus (now Dilyo,) 5 Sangarius (now Sangry.) All

All of them falling into the Euxine Sea. 6 Ascanius. 7 Rhyndacus. 8 Asaprus, and 9 Granicus, falling into the Propontis. 10 Simoeis. 11 Scamander, called also Xanthus, ending their short course in the Hellepont. 12 Oaicus. 13 Hermus. 14 Cayrus. And 15 Meander, losing themselves in the Aegean. 16 Calpis. 17 Xanthus, called also Lycus. 18 Limicrus. 19 Catareites, discharging into the Mediterranean, and 20 Melas, adding to the waters of the great River Euphrates. Of most which we shall speak more particularly in their several places.

In reference to the State of Rome, it contained the whole Diocese of Pontus, except Armenia the Greater, the Asian Diocese intirely, without any exception; and the peculiar jurisdiction of the Proconsul of Asia, together with the Provinces of Isauria and Cilicia, parts of the Diocese of the East. But because the names of many of those Provinces were of new invention, and some of them of as short continuance, we will consider it according as it stood divided anciently, and before the Romans had made any conquests in it, into the Provinces of 1 Bithynia. 2 Pontus. 3 Paphlagonia. 4 Galatia. 5 Cappadocia. 6 Armenia Minor; which (together with Armenia Major) made up, though in other names, the Pontick Diocese. 7 Phrygia Minor. 8 Phrygia Major. 9 Mysia the greater and the lesser. 10 Asia, specially so called, comprehending Aeolis and Ionis. 11 Lydia. 12 Carya. 13 Lycia. 14 Lycanonia. 15 Pisidia. 16 Pamphylia. 17 The Province of the Rhodet, all comprehended under the command of the Vicarius and Proconsul of Asia. 18 Isauria. 19 Cilicia, parts of the Diocese of the East, as before was said.

1 BITHYNIA.

BITHYNIA is bounded on the East with Pontus, and the River Sangarius; on the West, with part of the Euxine, and Thracian Bosphorus, and part of the Propontis; on the North, wholly with the Euxine; and on the South, with Mysia, and Phrygia Minor: Formerly called Bebrycia, afterwards Mygdania, and at last Bithynia, and that as some say from Bithynius, once a King hereof; more probably from the Thyni, a people of Thrace, who passed over the Bosphorus, and subdued it, called therefore by some Writers Thracia Asiatice. So witnesseth the Poet Claudian, saying:

Thyni Thracas erant, quæ nunc Bithynia fertur.

By Justin the Historian it is called by the name of Mithropontus, by reason of its neighbourhood to the Euxine and the Pontick Regions.

The Country naturally rich, and in those parts hereof which lie next the Bosphorus, opposite to Constantinople, so plentifully enriched with fruitful hills, and pleasant Orchards, when kept by the more curious Christians, that it was thought not to be inferior to the so much celebrated Tempe: now robbed of all those former beauties by the carelessness of the Turks, who affect neither art, nor sumptuousness, in their retirements and delights.

Chief Rivers hereof are Phyllis. 2 Sangarius, now called Sangri, both falling into the Euxine Sea; this last arising from Mount Dindymus, in the furthest parts of Phrygia Major; and making two long reaches in his journey hither. 3 Ascanius, which rising also in Phrygia Major, but more near the borders of this Country, falleth into the Propontis, making the Bay called Sinus Ascanius; which with a Lake in the same Country, called Lacus Ascanius, doth plainly manifest, that the Bi- thynians are derived from Askenaz, the Son of Gomer, and grand-son of Japhet.

The principal Towns hereof are 1 Scutari, over against the Haven of Constantinople, called anciently Chrysopolis, for that there the Persians received their tribute from the other Cities of all these parts of Asia Minor. An ample Town, well garrisoned within, and surrounded round about with most pleasant Orchards, and honoured with the neighbourhood of a Royal Seagravia. Not far off is a Tower, called the Maiden-Tower, serving both for a Fort and Watch-Tower; and being furnished for defence with 20 Pieces of Ordnance. 2 Chalcedon, on the same shore also, a Colony of the Megarenses, called blind by the Oracle, for neglecting Byzantium, and choosing the less convenient place for their habitation. And yet did Constantine the Great resolve upon the same place also for his Regal City; but changed his resolutions on a kind of miracle: it being observed, that when his workmen began to draw the Platform, some Eagles conveyed away their Lines to the other side of the Bosphorus, and let them fall directly upon Byzantium. Memorable after that for the fourth General Council there assembled by command of the Emperor Martinianus, for repressing the Heresie of Nestorius; in which were 530 Bishops: now so decayed, that it can only shew some few of the ruins of it; Scutari being risen on the fall thereof. 3 Nicomedia, so called from Nicomedes King of Bithynia (the Son of Ziper, and Grandchild to that Bithynian King, who so valiantly defended his own and his Countries liberty against Calanus, one of Great Alexanders Captains) by whom founded: Situate on the top of an Hill, environed with a pleasant and delightful Plain, honoured with the Seat and Residence of many of the Roman Emperours, when their affairs called them into the East, before the building of Constantinople; on that occasion made the Throne on which many of Gods Saints received the Crown of Martyrdom, especially in the Persecution under Dioclesian. In those times wealthy, and of fame, now much decayed; but notwithstanding well inhabited both by Greeks and Turks, for the commodiousness of the fresh springs which are thereabouts. 4 Libussa, betwixt Nicomedia, and the River Ascanius; memorable for the death and sepulture of the famous Annibal, who to prevent his being made prisoner to the Romans, when Prusias King of Bithynia intended unworthily to betray him, here made away himself by poyson. 5 Prusias, founded by another Prusias, whose name it beareth a large and wealthy City as most in Asia: honoured for a long time with the residence of the Turkish Kings, till the removal of their Seat to Adrianople, by Mahomet the first; and still ennobled with the sepulture of the Princes of the Ottoman Race, except the Emperours themselves. By the Turks called Bursa. 6 Nica, or Nicaea, by the Turks called Neichia, but most commonly Nicice, situate near the Fens of the River Ascanius, occasioned by the frequent overflowings of that River: by some affirmed to be the Metropolis of Bithynia; but I think Nicomedia hath more right to claim that honour. First named Antigonis, from Antigonus the founder of it; and afterwards Nicaea, by the name of Nica, Wife unto Lysimachus: both of them Captains of the Great Alexander; which last had the happiness to survive the overthrow of the former, and was the longest liver of those Great Commanders. Sufficiently famous both in Ecclesiastical and Civil Story, for the first General Council there holden, by the appointment of Constantine the Great, Anno 314, for settling the peace of the Church, then miserably distracted by the Arian Heresie. The number of Bishops there assembled, no more than 318. yet of such high esteem for Learning and Piety, that that never Council hath been held in so great an honour. Here was also held the Council by the Empress Irene, for establishing the veneration of Images; that passing by the name of the Nicene Council, the Acts thereof might be of greater reputation amongst ignorant men. In which it was decreed by such dubious Arguments, as Let us make man after our own Image, once mainly insisted on by a Legate of the Eastern Churches, that they should be revered and adored in as ample and religious manner, as the blessed Trinity itself. This City was also the Imperial City of the Greek Emperours, after the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians, and there continued till the expulsion of the Latins, under these

1200

1 Theodorus Lascaris, Son-in-law to Alexius Angelus the Usurper, upon the taking of Constantinople by the Latins, passed over into Asia, and fortifying the City of Nice, made it the head City of this Kingdom, containing Bithynia, both the Phrygia, both the Mysias, Lydia, Aeolis, and Ionis.

1223

2 John, surnamed Ducas, the Husband of Irene, Daughter of Theodore Lascaris, succeeded his Father-in-law in the Empire; to which he added Pontus, most of the Isles of the Aegean, and not a few places of importance in Thrace itself.

1256

3 Theodorus II. the son of Ducas.

4 John II. the son of Theodore the second, an Infant of about six years old, supplanted first, and after cruelly deposed and deprived of sight.

1259 5 Michael Paleologus, descended from the Imperial family of the Comneni, first took upon him as Protector of the Infant-Emperour, and afterwards as his associate in the Empire: in which confirmed by many fortunate successes, as well against the Latins, as some Greek Usurpers in Thessaly and Peloponnesus, especially the taking of Constantinople, he deprived the young Emperour of his sight, made himself sole Emperour, and left it unto his posterity, who held it with a great deal of trouble and continual disquiet, till the year 1452. when conquered by Mahomet the Great, as before was said. But this recovery of Constantinople was the loss of Nice, taken not long after the removal of the Imperial seat, by Sultan Ottomar, Anno 1299, who presently thereupon took on himself the style of King, from which before he had abstained.

As for the fortunes of Bithynia itself, I look upon the Bithynians as a Thracian people, whom both Strabo and Herodotus speak of, as the founders of the name and Nation. Of such a King of theirs as Bithynius I find some mention in my Authors; and possibly it might be he who had the leading of the Thyni, or Bithyni in this expedition, that being the name rather of this Nation, than his proper Family. But for the line of Kings which held out till the flourishing of the Roman greatness, they began to reign here some few generations, before the time of Philip, and Alexander, the Macedonians: by which last, having other employment, and lying out of the road towards Perfia, they were little troubled. Calanus, one of Alexanders Captains, made an expedition into their Country, and was vanquished by them: and afterwards they had to do with one of the Lieutenants of Antigonus, (one of Alexanders greatest Princes) who though he humbled them for the present, yet got he neither title nor possession by it. And thus they held it out till the time of Prusias, so shuffling with the Macedonian and Syrian Kings, that betwixt both they still preserved their own estates. This Prusias, when the Romans became so inconsiderable, as that no danger need be feared from Greece, or Syria, pieced himself with them; and having aided in their wars against Philip, and Antiochus both, and most unworthily promised to deliver Annibal (who had fled to him for succour) unto their Embassadors, made all sure to this side. His son and successful Nicomedes, being outed of his Kingdom by Mithridates King of Pontus, and restored again unto it by the power of the Romans, held it as their Fendatary, as did Nicomedes his next Successor, surnamed Philometor: who dying without issue in the time of Augustus, gave his whole Kingdom to the Romans. By them, with the addition of that part of Pontus which lay next unto it, it was made a Province of their Empire, by the name of Pontus and Bithynia, continuing so till the division of that Empire into the Eastern and Western; when falling to the share of the Constantinopolitans, and with them to the power of the Turkish Tyrants, who do still possess it.

2 PONTUS.

PONTUS is bounded on the East, with Colchis, and Armenia; on the West, with Bithynia, and the River Sangarius; on the North, with the Euxine Sea; and on the South, with Phrygia Major, Paphlagonia, Galatia, and Cappadocia. So that it taketh up the whole length of Anatolia, or Asia Minor, from Bithynia to the River Euphrates, which parts it from Armenia Major, but not of answerable breadth; and gives name to the Sea adjoining, a Ponto regione illi adjacentie ita appellari, as Ortelius hath it, called from hence Pontus by the Latins, the adjunct of Euxinus coming on another occasion, which we have spoken of before. A Country of a large extent, and therefore divided by the Romans (when Masters of it) into these four parts, viz. Metapontus, or Pontus specially so called, 2 Pontus Galaticus, 3 Polemoniacus, and 4 Pontus Cappadocius.

1 PONTUS S, especially so called, or Metapontus, bordering on Bithynia, and bounded on the East with the River Partemius, which divided it from Paphlagonia, had for the chief Cities thereof, 1 Claudiopolis, so called in honour of Claudius, the Roman Emperour; as 2 Flaviopolis, in honour of Flavins Vespasianus; and 3 Julianopolis, in honour of the Julian Family: all midland Towns. 4 Diopolis, on the Euxine Sea, so called from a Temple consecrated to Jupiter, of great resort. 5 Heraclaea, a Colony of the Phocians, called for distinction sake (there being many of that name) Heraclaea Ponti: memorable of late times for being the seat or residence of a branch of the Imperial Family of the Comneni; when at the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians, David and Alexius Comneni fled into these parts: the first fixing here his Royal residence, commanded over this part of Pontus, and Paphlagonia; the other possessing himself of Cappadocia and Galatia, made Trabezond his Regal or Imperial City. But these two Empires, though of the same date; were of different destinies: that of Heraclaea and Pontus, being partly conquered by the Greek Emperours residing at Nice, and partly seized on by the Turks in the beginning and first fortunes of the Ottoman Family; the other keeping up the Majesty and State of an Empire, till the year 1461, when subdued by Mahomet the Great. 6 Phylhum, at the mouth or influx of the River Phyllis, upon which it is seated. 7 Amastri, the farthest Town of this part towards the East, on the Sea-side also, once of great strength; but taken by Lucullus, together with Heraclaea, Synope, Amisus, and other Towns, in the war against Mithridates, the great King of Pontus.

2 Eastward of Pontus, specially so called, or Metapontus, as Justin the Historian calls it, yeth PONTUS GALATICUS, so named, because added to Galatia in the time of the Romans. The chief Cities whereof were 1 Synope, pleasantly seated on a long point or Promontory, shooting into the main, remarkable in ancient story for the birth and sepulture of Mithridates, before mentioned; and in the later times for being the chief seat of the Islandians, a noble family of the Turks, who had taken it with the rest of this Tract from the Comneni, and held it till the same year in which the Empire of Trabzon was subdued by Mahomet. First built by the Milefians, and continuing in a free estate, till taken by Pbar-naces, a King of Pontus, and made the Metropolis of that Kingdom. 2 Castamona, the head City of the Principality of the Islandians, before mentioned; preferred by them for strength and convenience of situation, before Heraclea, or Synope. 3 Themisycra, now called Favogoria, seated on a spacious Plain near unto the Sea, and anciently giving name to the Province adjoining. 4 Amasia, the Birth-place of Strabo the Geographer, remarkable in the Ecclesiastical Histories for the Martyrdom of St. Theodorus, and of late times for being the residence of the eldest Sons of the Grand Signior, sent hither as soon as circumcised, never returning back again till the death of their Father. Accepted now amongst the Cities of Cappadocia, and the chief of that Province: a midland Town, as also is 5 Cabira called afterward Disiopolis, memorable for the great defeat which Lucullus gave there unto Mithridates, more for the trick which Mithridates there put upon Lucullus. For being well acquainted with the covetousness of the Romans, he saw no better way to save himself and the rest of his forces after the defeat, than to scatter his treasures in the way which he was to take; that by that means his enemies might slacken the pursuit to collect the spoils, and he preserve himself to another day; and so accordingly it proved. 6 Comana Pontica, so called from another of that name, called Comana Pontica; to which other, being of Cappadocia, or Armenia Minor, Mithridates came in safety by the trick aforesaid, and thence escaped unto Tigranes the Armenian King, with 2000 horse.

3 Eastward of Pontus Galaticus lies POLEMONIACUS, so called by the Romans either from Polemonium a chief Town of this tract, or from Polemo the last King hereof, after whose death this Kingdom came unto the Romans. Places of most importance in it. 1 Polemonium on the Sea-side, spoken of before. 2 Hermanassa, a Sea-Town also. More in the land, 3 Neo-Cesarea (now Nizaria) the Metropolis of Polemoniacus, when made a Province of it self. 4 Zela, enlarged by Pompey, and called Megalopolis; by Constantine laid unto the Province of Helienopolis. 5 Sebastia, so called in honour of Augustus, whom the Greeks called Sebastos, a place of great strength, and one of the first Towns in the Lesser Asia, which held out against Tamelaus: in revenge whereof, when he had took it, he caused 12000 men, women, and children, to be most cruelly buried alive in some hollow pits, which he had digged for that purpose. Nigh to this City is Mount Stella, where Pompey gave Mithridates his fatal overthrow: where also Tamelaus with an Army of 80000 of his Tartars, encountered with Bajazet the Turk, coming to the relief of Sebastia, with an Army of 50000 fighting men. The issue of which fight was this, that Bajazet having lost 200000 of his souldiers, was himself taken prisoner, and carried by the insolent Conquerour in an iron cage, against the bars whereof he beat out his brains. 6 Barbinissa, 7 Megalosus, 8 Gonzalvia, &c. not much observable in story.

Thermodon, on the banks whereof the Amazons, a sort of warlike women, are said to dwell: so called either quasi aqua, because they used to cut off their right paps, that they might not be an impediment to their shooting; or from α and αλφα, sine paps, because they used not to eat bread: or from α and αλφα, because they used to live together. They were originally of Scythia, and accompanied their husbands to these parts about the time of the Scythians first irruptions into Asia, in the time of Sesostris King of Egypt. The Leaders of this people into Cappadocia were Phinos and Scolopibus, two young men of a great house, whom a contrary faction had banished. They held a great hand over the Themisycra, who inhabited this Region, and the Nations round about them. At last they were by treachery all murdered. But their wives now doubly vexed, both with exile and widowhood, and extremity of grief and fear producing its usual effect, desperateness, they set upon the Conquerours under the conduct of Lampedo and Marpesia, and not only overthrew them, but also infinitely enlarged their Dominions, and for some time continued in great reputation: the names of whom, or of so many of them at least as occur in story, we shall here subjoin.

The Amazon Queens.

1 Lampedo, First Queen of the Amazons in these parts.
2 Marpesia, parts.
3 Oriara.
4 Antiope, whose sisters Hippolite and Menalippe, challenged Heracles and Theseus to single combat, and were at last hardly vanquished, to their eternal credits.
5 Penthesilea, who came with a troop of brave Virago's, to the aid of Priamus King of Troy: she invented the Battel-Axe, and was at last slain by Pyrrius, son to Achilles. Long after her death reigned Thalestris, who came to Alexander, being in Hyrcania, and plainly told him that she came to be his bedfellow; which done, she returned: and at last by little and little this female Nation was extinct. They used in matters of copulation to go to their neighbouring men thrice in a year; if they brought forth Males, they sent them to their fathers; if females, they kept them, and trained them up in all discipline of war and courage. Of these more elsewhere.

4 The most Eastern part of Pontus, called CAPPADOCIA, for that it bordered on that Province, and for a time was added to it by the Romans; extended from Polemoniacus to Colchia, and the River Euphrates, the utmost boundaries of this Country. Places of most consideration in it, 1 Pharnacia, built by Pharnaces, a King of Pontus. 2 Cerasus, by Constantine laid unto the Province of Polemoniacus, from whence Cherries were brought first to Rome, An. V.C. 680. called therefore Cerasa by the Latines; brought first into Italy by Lucullus, at the end of his war with Mithridates; no less deserving for that service to be made a God (as wittily Tertullian scoffs it) than Bacchus was for his transplanting of the Vine from the Eastern Countries. 3 Jeppoli, on the Euxine Sea, as the others are. And so is also, 4 Trapezus, now Trabzon, the Imperial City of the Comneni here reigning over Cappadocia, Galatia, and these parts of Pontus. An Empire founded first by Alexius Comnenus (Nephew of the great Tyrant Andronicus Comnenus by his son Emanuel) who at the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians, fled into these parts, which willingly submitted unto his command, Anno 1200. Here his posterity flourished in great prosperity, preserving the Majesty of the Empire in a better measure, than the Constantinopolitans themselves; till the time of David the last Emperour, in whose reign the City of Trabzon, and therewith all the whole Dominion belonging to it, was taken by Mahomet the Great; the the poor Emperour led prisoner unto Greece, and there cruelly murdered. A famous Empery, and specially for the trade of fish, caught by the people on the shores of the Euxine Sea; here salted, and from hence transported in great quantities to Constantinople, Caffa, and other places. And for the better help herein, it is said that there is a Mountain not far from this City, affording a black stone, which being beaten in a Mortar serves instead of salt, wherewith they season the fish which they send abroad. A City honoured heretofore with the residence of the Lord Deputies, or Lieutenants of the Grecian Emperour, for defence of the out-parts of the Euxine against the Perfians; and now the Station of such Gallies as are maintained by the Grand Signior, to scour the coasts of the Black-sea, and secure their trade. More in the land stand 5 Jepphiram, 6 Axa, 7 Coalia, 8 Cordyle, and many others named in Phology, but not else observable.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Country were called LEUCOSTRI, or White Syrians, governed by a race of Kings descended from the Royal house of Archermenes King of Persia. The first of them called Mithridates, one of the seven Competitors for the Persian Kingdom, on the death of Cambyses. But that honour falling on Darius (of which more hereafter) he seated himself in these remote parts of Asia Minor; the Ancestor of many great and puissant Princes, but none more memorable than one of his own name, Regem Orientis post Alexandrum Magnam Maximus, the most potent King of all the East since the time of Alexander the Great, as my Author hath it. A Prince of great abilities both in war and counsel, and one who longer held it out against the Romans, than Pyrrhus, Annibal, and the great Kings of Macedon, and Syria, had done together. This was that famous Mithridates, who being once a friend and confederate of the Romans, took their part against Aristonicus, who would not consent to the admission of the Romans unto Pergamus, according to the will of Attalus. Afterwards conceiving an ambitious hope to obtain the Monarchy of Asia, in one night he plotted and effected the death of all the Roman Citizens dispersed in Anatolia, being in number 150000: in like manner, as in after times the English, taught perhaps by this example, murdered all the Danes then resident in England; and the Sicilians massacred all the French, inhabiting Sicilia, as we have formerly declared. He dispossessed Nicomeder, son to Prusias, King of Bithynia; Ariobarzanes, King of Cappadocia; and Philemouer, King of Paphlagonia, of their estates; because they persisted faithful to his enemies of Rome. He excited the Grecians to rebel, possessed himself of Athens, and divers places of importance in Greece, Ibacia, and Asia; and allured all the Isles, except Rhodes, from their obedience to the Romans. And finally, having disturbed their victories, and much shaken their estate, for the space of 40 years, he was with much ado vanquished by the valour and felicity of L. Sylla, Lucullus, and Pompey the Great; three of the greatest Souldiers that ever the Roman Empire knew. Yet did not the Roman puissance so much pluck down his proud heart, as the rebellion of his Son Pharnaces, against him; which he no sooner heard, but he would have payoned himself: but having formerly so used his body to a kind of poison alloyed, (which from his inventing of it, we now call Mithridate) that the venom could not work upon him, he slew himself. He is said to have been an excellent Scholar, & to have spoken perfectly the Languages of 22 Nations; the Languages of so many Nations which were subject to him. But neither his learning nor his courage could preserve him from those common miseries, which ordinarily attend a falling greatness. And so ended this long and tedious war, exceeding troublesome to the Romans, but withal very beneficial. For under colour of having given aid to Mithridates, they took in Crete, Galatia, Colchia, Iberia, and both Armenias: In sum, as it is truly said by L. Flor. Totum pend Orientem & Septentrionem involvit, that in his ruins he involved both the East, and North. But to proceed; after his death the Kingdom continued unto his posterity, but Tributaries to the Romans, till the time of Nero: when Polemo the last King hereof dying without issue, it was cantoned and divided into many parts, and laid unto the Provinces of Bithynia, Galatia, and Cappadocia; only that part of it which was called Polemoniacus, retaining the dignity of a Province, distinct and separate. And so it remained till the reign of Constantine the Great, who changing the names, lessening the bounds, and increasing the number of the Provinces, left only the Province of Pontus and Bithynia in the state he found it. And for the rest, he cast it into two new Provinces, that towards the East, retaining the name, but not the bounds of the old Polemoniacus, wherein were the Cities of Trapezus, Neo-Cesarea, Cerasus, Comana Pontica, Palemonium, and Petræorum Civitas, called afterwards Justiniana; of which Neo-Cesarea, was the Metropolis. That towards the East, separated from the Province of Pontus & Bithynia, by the River Parthenius, he caused to be called Helienopolis, by the name of Helena his Mother: and thereunto assigned the Cities of Amasia the Metropolis of it, Ibora, Enchebata, Zela, Andrapus, Aegum, Climachus, Sinope, Amisus, and Leontopolis. But this division held not long, both being united into one, and called Helienopolis, by Justinian; continuing after that a member of the Roman Empire, till the coming of David & Alexius Comneni from Constantinople; whereof the one reigned in Heraclea, and the other in Trabzon, as before is said. But their estates being overthrow, it remains wholly to the Turks, who do now possess it.

The Arms of the Emperours of Trabzon, the greatest Princes of these parts, till the Turks subdued them, were Or, an Eagle volant Gules.

3. PAPHLAGONIA.

PAPHLAGONIA is bounded on the East, with the River Halys, by which parted from Cappadocia; on the West, by the River Parthenius, which parteth it from the Province of Pontus and Bithynia; on the North, with that part of the Kingdom of Pontus which was named Galaticus; and on the South, with Pbrygis Major, and Galatia. So called of Paplagos the Son of Phineus, estated in it by his Father, who had newly conquered it.

The Country was but small, and of little power, and consequently the Cities were not very many, and of no great note. The principal of such as were, were 1 Gangra, observable for a Council holden there in the Primitive times, Anno 339. commonly called Synodus Gangrensis. 2 Conica, or Coniata, of so convenient a situation, that it was entrenched and fortified by Mithridates, when he was Master of this Country. 3 Pompeopolis, raised out of the foundation of some lesser Town by Pompey the Great, and by him so named. 4 Germasopolis. 5 Xasna. 6 Andrapa, called afterward Nova Claudiopolis, to difference it from another City of that name in Pontus.

This Province, though but small in circuit, was heretofore the seat of four different Nations, viz. 1 The Tibareni, of whom it is said that they never waged war on any enemy, but they faithfully certified them before-hand, of the time and place of their fight. 2 The Heptacomete. 3 The Mosyneci, both which were a people so beastly and shameless, that they used to perform the work of generation in publick; not knowing that Multa sunt honesta factu.

factu, que sunt inopia vifu. And 4 The Heneti, to whom the Veneti, as we have already said, do owe their first original. The Kings which ruled in this Country, derived themselves from Philomenes, who assisted Priamus King of Troy in his defence against the Greeks: in memory of whom, this Region for a while was called Philomenia. Applying themselves unto the times, they were always favourable to the strongest, serving the Persian, and submitting to Alexander as he passed that way; and so maintained their estate without much molestation, till the time of Mithridates King of Pontus: who finding them firm unto the Romans, then growing to great power in the Levant, for Asia, depriving Philomenes, then King hereof, and took the Kingdom to himself, fortifying the chief Towns and places of it. Restored again unto his Kingdom by the power of the Romans, he gave it to them at his death. But the Country being very much wasted, and most of the Cities of it destroyed and desolate in the course of that War, it was not thought worthy a particular care, and therefore laid unto Galatia. Not reckoned a distinct Province in the time of St. Peter, who writing to the Jews, dispersed in Pontus, Cappadocia, Galatia, Asia, and Bithynia, takes no notice of this Paphlagonia; nor was it otherwise esteemed than as a member of Galatia, in the time of Ptolemy. Afterwards it was joined to Pontus, by the Emperour Constantine; part of it after that, with some parts of Pontus and Bithynia, being made into a new Province by the Emperour Theodosius, and called Honorius, in honour of his Son Honorius; whereof Claudiopolis, a City of Pontus, properly so called, was made the Metropolis. But by Justinian the name of Honorius being abolished, and that of Paphlagonia revived again, the whole Country, as before limited, was governed by an Imperial Officer, whom he called Pretor Justinianus: continuing under the command of the Constantinopolitans, till the taking of that City by the Latins. After which made a Member of the Empire of Trabesond, till the conquest of it by the Turks, by whom called Rom.

A GALATIA.

GALATIA is bounded on the East, with Cappadocia; on the West, with the River Sangarius, and some part of Pontus specially so called, or Metapontus; on the North, with Paphlagonia, on the South, with Lycania. So called from the Galls, who having ranged over Greece, passed into Asia, and brought a great part of it under their command; but being broken by Attalus King of Pergamus, and drove out of Myfia and the lesser Phrygia, were at last confined to this Country. It was also called Gallo-Grecia, from that mixture of Galls and Grecians, who uniting into one body when they came for Asia, were commonly called Gallo-Greci. By Suidas, Grecio-Galli, and the Country futable Grecio-Gallia. Which mixture of Grecians notwithstanding, the Galls (being both the greater and prevailing Party) not only preserved their own Language, but in short time made it the common Language of the whole Country. And it continued so till S. Hieronymus says, who telleth us in the Preface to his Commentaries on St. Paul's Epistle to this people, that it was Similitis Treverensium, a language like to that of the Treveri, or people of Triers. A sure and certain Argument of their first Original.

The Country very plentiful of all manner of fruits, even unto voluptuousness; and providently provided of the stone called the Amethyst, which is said to preserve from drunkenness the man that weareth it. The name doth signifie as much, derived from a privativum, and uivertus, ebrius, which cometh from uivere, signifying wine.

The people had a custome in their publick funerals, to cast letters fairly written, into that last and fatal fire, wherein the dead body was to be burned; supposing that their friends should read them in the other World. Much given to Sacrifices, in the number and frequency whereof they excelled all Nations: inasmuch that Athenus telleth us of one Ariamnes, a rich Galatian, that he feasted the whole Nation for a year together with the Sacrifices of Bulls, Sheep, Swine and other Provisions, boyled in great Chaldrons made for that purpose, and distributed amongst them in Tents and Booths erected for that entertainment. A brave flash of vain-glorious hospitality.

Rivers of note here are not any, but what are common unto them with their neighbouring Nations, as Halys, Sangarius, and some others. The Towns of most consideration in it were, 1 Ancyra, on the banks of the River Sangarius, the chief City of the Tectosages, a Gallick Nation, and the Metropolis of the whole Country; memorable in Church-story for a Synod here held in the Primitive times, Anno 399. called Synodus Ancyra, but of most note at the present for the making of Chamlets: now called Angauri. 2 Olenus. 3 Agrinoma, Cities of the same people also. 4 Tavium, or Tanium, (for I find both names) the chief City of the Trocmi, or Trogmi, where was a brazen Statue of Jupiter, whose Temple there was a privileged Sanctuary. 5 Androsia. 6 Phabarena, Cities of that Nation also. 7 Therma, a Roman Colony, so called of the hot Baths there: the chief City of the Tolistobigi, as Ptolemy, or Tolistobigi, as Strabo nameth them. 8 Talacchoboura, belonging also to that people.

Besides the Nations above-named, here dwelt also the Byceni and Proseliminites; who had also their peculiar Cities, mentioned by name in Ptolemy, but of little or no observation in the course of story. Of all which Nations, only the Tectosages, were of the Gallick Original; who with others of their Country-men under the conduct of Belgus and Brennus, having ransacked Pannonia and Ilyricum, fell at last into Macedon; where having tyrannized a while, and laid waste the Country, they were at last vanquished and expelled by Antigonus Genatas. After this overthrow, under the conduct of Lammorius, and Lutarius, they ferried over the Hellepont, and subdued almost all Asia Minor on this side the Taurus; employed thereby those petty Kings and States against one another: their reputation grown so great, that no Prince thought himself secure without their alliance, or able to make war without their assistance. The very Switzers of that age; as mercenary, but more faithful unto those that hired them. But being over-rigorous in compelling their neighbouring Princes to become their Tributaries, and too severe in the exacting of their Tributes, they incensed Attalus King of Pergamus, by whose favour they had settled about the Hellepont, to become their enemy. Vanquished by him, they were constrained to contain themselves within the bounds of this Province, which from them in the following times was called Galatia and Gallo-Grecia. Here for a while they kept their ancient courage and estimation, molesting many times their neighbours, and sometimes setting themselves to hire in the wars of others: but in the end they lost both courage and esteem, and were Galls only in name, retaining little in them of their Ancestors' valour. For as most plants and trees lose much of their virtue, being transplanted into another soil: so these men lost their native courage, strength, and hardiness, being weakened by the Asian pleasures and delicacies. And as Tully saith, for a man to be good in other places, is no mastery; but in Asia to lead a temperate life, is indeed praise-worthy: so might one have said to the Galls, that to be courageous & patient of travel amongst the mountains, tains, was no whit to be admired, but to have continued so amidst the delights of Asia, had been indeed meritorious in them. But these men were so far from assailing the Romans in the Capitol, that they lost their own Country to Manlius, a Roman General. A war, which Manlius undertook for no other cause, but that they had been aiding to Antiochus against the Romans; nor was there any memorable act performed herein; but that of Chionie the Kings Wife, who being ravished by one of the Roman Captains, took her advantage whilst he busied himself in telling the money agreed on for her ransom, to cut off his head, which she presented to her husband. But Manlius got little honour by his success, not being welcomed with a Triumph at his coming home, according to the Roman custom, because he undertook the war of his own accord, without Commission from the Senate. And yet the Senate was content to enjoy the fruits of it, keeping the Galatians as their Subjects, and the Kings their Federates. This hapned An. U.C. 564. After which time I find Deiotarus, by consent of the Romans, to reign here as King: who siding with Pompey in his war against Cesar, incurred the anger of the Victor; and had died for it, had not Tully pleaded his cause, and obtained his pardon. But he being dead, his Country in the time of Augustus was made a Province of the Empire; Lollius Paulinus being the first President or Governour of it; enlarged afterwards with the addition of Paphlagonia, and some part of Pontus, from whence called Galatians. Reduced to its first bounds by the Emperour Constantine, and divided into two Provinces by Theodosius, the one called Galatia Prima, the other Salutaris from its medicinal waters. Of both which Ancyra remained the Metropolis. In the falling of the Eastern Empire, it was partly seized on by the Turks, not totally come into their hands, till the subverting of the Empire of Trabesond upon which it depended. By the Turks at this day called Changer.

5 CAPPADOCIA.

CAPPADOCIA is bounded on the East, with Armenia Major, and some part of Armenia Minor; on the West, with Galatia; on the North, with Pontus Polemionicus, and Cappadocia; and on the South, with Lycania, and the rest of Armenia Minor. So called of the River, as Pliny telleth us, which runneth betwixt it, and Galatia.

The Country very plentiful of wine, and most kind of fruits, rich in mines of Silver, Brass, Iron, and Allom; affording also besides a mean sort of Alabaster, good store of Cryстал, Jasper, and the Onyx stone: But the greatest wealth hereof is their breed of Horses, infinite almost in numbers, and fit for any service they can be put to. And this is universal in all parts of the Country, but not the other; there being some parts of it mountainous and very barren, especially about the spurs and branches of the Antitaurus, which is a chain of hills, thrusting out of the Taurus, and bending themselves unto the North, upon the edges of this Country, and the two Armenias. Here is also in this Country the mountain Argens, said to be of so great a height, that from one of the summits or tops thereof, a man of perspicuous eyes may discern the Euxine on the one hand, and the Mediterranean on the other.

The People of this Country in the time of the Romans were of ill report, so vicious and lewd of life, so monstrously addicted to all kind of wickedness; that besides the share they had in the old Greek Proverb, of Τειχισμένοι καὶ αὐτοὶ, they had some Proverbs to themselves, Κατασκόπος καὶ κατασκόπος ἴσας, that is to say, a man of Cappadocia, and a Cappadocian Monster, being used proverbially, to signifie a man most extremely wicked. The words so used by Gregory Nazianzen, speaking of Gregory or George, the Arian Patriarch of Alexandria, if either Suidas or Erasmus, two right learned Critics, understand him rightly. And they made good the Proverb in the times of the Gospel, Gregory that bloody butcher of Alexandria, Anaxentius, Asterius, Eustathius, principal Patrons of the Arians, and that Arch-heretic Ennomius, being all of this Country. Yet such is the influence of Christianity, where once entertained, that this lewd disposition of the Cappadocians was so corrected and restrained by it, that this Country afforded as many godly Prelates, and courageous Martyrs, as any other whatsoever. Highly commended for it by Nazianzen before remembered, who with Gregory Nyssen, and St. Basil, all learned and religious Bishops, were all Cappadocians. And amongst many Martyrs of great faith and constancy, St. George, a noble Cappadocian, Colonel or Tribune of Soldiers under Dioctesian, more celebrated in the Churches both East and West, than any other Saint in the Calendar, the blessed Apostles and Evangelists excepted only, and for that reason made Patron of the Order of the Garter by Edward the Third. Finally, it is reported of these Cappadocians, that they were not only morally wicked, but naturally venomous also; inasmuch that if a Serpent did bite any of them, the mans blood was a poyson to the Snake, and killed him.

Principal Rivers of this Country, were 1 Halys, spoken of before, which had here its Fountain and Original; the end of Cragus Empire both in rise and fate, the utmost bounds of his dominions on that side: which purposing to pass over in his way to Media, which he intended to invade, he was encountered with, and vanquished by Cyrus the great King of Persia. 2 Iris, which ariseth in this Country also, and passing through it, and a part of Pontus, dischannelleth it self, as the other doth, in the Euxine Sea.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Mazaca, beautified and enlarged by the Emperour Tiberius, after the uniting of this Province to the Roman Empire; and in honour of Augustus Cesar, by him called Cesarea, the Metropolis of Cappadocia, and the Episcopal See of renowned St. Basil. 2 Nyssa, the See of Gregory, surnamed Nyssenius, the brother of Basil. 3 Nazianzum, the Episcopal See of another Gregory, surnamed Nazianzenus; three men, which as for the piety of their conversation they were not equalled in those times: so for their admirable abilities in all kind of learning, nothing more inferior to the most eminent of the ancient Grecians. 4 Tyana, the Metropolis of Cappadocia secunda, after the subdivision of it by the Emperour Valens. 5 Archelesi in the Prefecture of Guadagnacreta, so called from Archelus a Cappadocian King, the founder or repaire of it. 6 Comana, for distinctions sake called Comana Cappadocia, to difference it from another of that name in Pontus, by Ptolemy placed, I know not why, in Armenia Minor, as is also Nyssa before mentioned. Memorable in old times for a Temple consecrated to Bellona, whose Priests and other inferior Officers of both Sexes, amounted in the time of Strabo to 6000 and upward; for maintenance of whom the Priests received the Revenue of the Region next adjoining to it; in honour next unto the King, and commonly of the same kindred also. 7 Dio Cesarea, called formerly Cabira, as we find in Strabo. 8 Faustinopolis, so called in honour of Faustina, wife of the Emperour Antoninus. 9 Andraca, 10 Pharia. 11 Salambria. 12 Campe, spoken of by Ptolemy, with many others as obscure, and not worth the naming. Of more note, though not found in the ancient Writers, is 13 Erzirum, situate on the very confines of the the Greater Armenia for that cause made the Rendezvous, or place of meeting for the Turkish Souldiers when there is any expedition in hand against the Persian; at which place also after the ending of the War for the present year, they are disbanded and sent home to their several quarters. And 14 Pterium, not named in Ptolemy, but memorable for the great Battle fought in fight thereof, between Crasus King of Lydia, and Cyrus of Persia; in which Crasus having lost the field, and with it his Kingdom, found the Oracle true (though not in the sense that he expected) that Crasus passing over the River Halys, should overthrow a great estate, as indeed he did; but it was his own, and not the Persian.

That the Cappadocians are derived from Togarmas, the Son of Gomer, hath been so fully proved already in our General Preface, that we shall not trouble our selves to repeat it here; Nor shall we need to say more in confuting of their opinion, who would fetch Cajthorim out of Egypt from the rest of his brethren, to plant him in this Country, than hath there been said. Their fortunes in the former times I find little of: subjected by the Persian, with the rest of Asia Minor, after the overthrow of Crasus, who before had given the Law unto it, as to the Phrygian, Paphlagonian, Bithynian, Mysian, and others of the neighbouring Nations. By Cyrus given together with Astus his Sister, to Pharnaces a Noble Persian, who had saved him from the fury of a ravenous Lion running upon him with full mouth, as he was hunting. A noble loyalty, and no less royally rewarded. From him descended Ariarathes King hereof in the time of Alexander the Great, continuing steadfast in his duty to the Crown of Persia, when almost all the rest of the Kings of Asia yielded to the Enemy. Nor did Alexander call him to account in his march for Persia. But after his decease, Perdiccas having the command of the Army, set upon him, vanquished him, and most cruelly crucified him, together with as many of his kindred as could be found. One of his Sons, who fortunately had escaped this slaughter, spying his time when the Macedonians were at wars amongst themselves, recovered his estate again, and passed it over to his off-spring: continuing in his line, without any subjection, till the time of that Ariobarzanes, who by Mithridates was deprived of his dominion, as was told before. Restored again unto his Kingdom by the power of the Romans, he became their Homager, holding, as did his Successors, by their courtesy only: Continuing yet in state of Kings, till the death of Archelaus the last King hereof; who having angered Tiberius for not attending on him when he lived at Rhodes, during the life time of Augustus, as did others of the Tri-buty States and Princes, was by him then possessed of the Empire, cited unto Rome under colour of projecting somewhat against the State. Where the old Prince, even spent with Age, the Gout, and some other Diseases, had without question been condemned by the servile Senate, but that one of the witnesses deposed, that he had said, That if ever he went back into Cappadocia, Tiberius should find, quales nervi sibi essent, what a man he was. Which moved such a laughter in the Senate, the old King being neither able to sit nor stand, that he was dismissed; Tiberius thinking that he could not punish him more effectually, than to let him live. A favour which the old King continued to the best, and in the way of gratitude bequeathed his Kingdom at his death to the Empire of Rome. Being added to the Roman Empire, it was exceedingly enlarged by the addition of the greatest part of the Kingdom of Pontus: and so it stood in the time of Ptolemy, who reckoneth Pontus Galaticus, Cappadocius, and Polemoniatus, as parts and Members of this Province. Divided besides those into these eight Prefectures that is to say, Clanianiensis, Sargarsene, Gardiocreta, Cilicia, Tyanidis, Lycania, Antiochiana, and Catoonia. But Pontus, Lycania, and Antiochiana (he means Pisidia as I take it) being made Provinces of themselves, by the Emperor Constantine, it returned unto its natural bounds, and made one Province of the Empire, of which Casaria, as is said before, was the Metropolis; and so remained, till the Emperor Valens, a great Patron of the Arian faction, of purpose to despight St. Basil, who opposed that Heretic, created another Province out of it, called Cappadocia secunda, whereof the Metropolis was Tyana. After this it continued part of the Eastern Empire, till the erecting of the new Empire of Trapezond, together with which it fell unto the hands of the Turks; by whom the whole Province, with the addition of Pontus, is now called Anatolia, after the name of that City, which the Beglerbeg of Anatolia honoureth with his residence, and is said to yield yearly to the Grand Seigneur 60000 Ducks.

ARMENIA MINOR.

ARMENIA MINOR is bounded on the East, with Euphrates, which parteth it from Armenia Major; on the South, with Mount Taurus, which separates it from Cilicia; on the West, and North, with a long chain of Hills, called Mont Scordiscus, by some called Mont Amanus, by others Anti-Taurus, according to the change of places; by which divided from Cappadocia. Of the reason of the name hereafter.

The Country of the same nature with Cappadocia, before described; in some parts overgrown with Mountains, by which, and by the River Euphrates so inclosed and fenced, that it is difficult of entrance in others pleasant and delightful, well watered with sweet streams, and some fair Rivers issuing out of the Mountains, the principal whereof is Meles, so called from the blackness of the water thereof, which falleth into the Euphrates.

Divided in the time of the Romans into these four Regions, that is to say, Laviana, Aravenna, Melitene, lying on the Euphrates, Mariana more within the land towards Cappadocia, each of which had their several Cities, whose names are to be found in Ptolemy. The principal 1 Melitene, the chief City of the Region, so called, and the Metropolis of the lesser Armenia, called afterwards Malaxia, and now Snur; the Territory thereof abounding in Oyl and Wine, not inferior to the best of Greece. The City said by Onesiphorus to be a Colony of the Romans, much spoken of by Eusebius, and other Writers of Ecclesiastical story, for the piety of the Christians there inhabiting in the fiery times of Persecution. 2 Nicopolis, and 3 Oromandus in the Mountain Countries; the former built by Pompey, in memory of his victory there obtained against the forces of Tigranes, King of Syria, and both Armenia's. 4 Garnace, a well-fortified Town, mentioned by Tacitus in the twelfth book of his Annals, and by him called Gornus. 5 Cuenjun, and 6 Arabyssus, memorable for the exile of St. Chrysostome, Patriarch of Constantinople, confined unto these places by the power and malice of the Empress Eudocia, by whom hated for his Orthodoxie in points of faith; who dying afterwards at Comana of Cappadocia, was there interred.

This Country was once part of Cappadocia, till the Armenians by their incursions and Colonies possessed themselves of it, and gave unto it the name of Armenia Minor; continuing part of their estate till the war of Mithridates against the Romans; who being discomfited by Lucullus, fled with two thousand Horse to the Court of Tigranes the Armenian, who had married his daughter. By whom at first neglected, and not suffered to come into his his presence; but afterwards on the apprehension of the common danger, more esteemed and set by: inasmuch that his royal entertainment there, and the refusal of Tigranes to yield him up when required by the Romans, occasioned Lucullus to bring his forces into these parts, subduing all before him to the banks of Euphrates. His Victories being seconded by Pompey, and confirmed by Augustus, this Country was made a Province of the Roman Empire: the greater Armenia, lying on the other side of that River, though conquered also in that war, not being taken into the account of the Roman Provinces, till the time of Trajan Augustus, thinking it an high point of wisdom (as no doubt it was) not to extend the Empire beyond those banks. After this it continued Roman, till the declining times of the Eastern Empire, when waisted by the Persians, and subdued by the Turks; by whom called Gemech, or as some say Pegia.

And so much of the Provinces of the Pontick Diocese, lying within Anatolia, or Asia Minor; converted to the Christian faith by the two great Apostles of the Jews and Gentiles, as appeareth by S. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, and St. Peter's to the Strangers dispersed in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia.

7. ASIA PROPRIA.

Come we now to the ASIAN Diocese, and first to that part thereof which Ptolemy and others (for the reasons spoken of before, call Asia Propria. Anciently the most rich and flourishing part of all this Peninsula; and so affirmed to be by Tully, who telleth us, That the Tributes which the Romans had from other places, hardly sufficed to defray the publick charges for defence thereof, Asia vero tam opima est & fertilis, ut & ubertate agrorum, & varietate fructuum, & magnitudine pastuum, & multitudine eorum rerum que exportentur, facile omnibus terris antecellat. But as for Asia (saith he) it is so fertile and so rich, that for the fruitfulness of the fields, variety of fruits, largeness of pasture-grounds, and quantity of commodities which were brought from thence, it very easily excelled all other Countries. The fortunes of the several Provinces we shall see anon. Brought under the command of the Persians, they continued subject to that Crown, for some generations; but at last taken from them by the Greeks, under the prosperous Ensigns of victorious Alexander. After whose decease, the Empire being divided among his Captains, Asia fell to the share of Antigonus, whose Son Demetrius seized on the Kingdom of Macedonia, and left Asia to Seleucus Nicator, King of Syria and the East, being also one of Alexander's heirs. The sixth from this Seleucus, was Antiochus called the Great, who waging war with young Ptolemy Philopater, King of Egypt, committed by his father to the protection of the Romans, and otherwise practising against their estate, provoked the Senate of Rome to send Scipio (surnamed from his Asian victories) Asiaticus, against him, who compelled him to forsake Asia, which the Romans presently took into their possessions. But finding it agreeable to the present estate of their Affairs, (the Kingdom of Macedonia standing in their way) to make further use of Eumenes King of Pergamus, and the people of Rhodes, who had been aiding to them in the former war, they gave unto Eumenes, the Provinces of Lycania, Phrygia, Mysia, Ionis, Lydia, and Caria to the Rhodiens; knowing full well, that they could easily take them back again, when they saw occasion. More hereof in the story of the Kings of Pergamus, on the decease of Attalus the last King thereof; these Provinces returning fully to the power of the Romans.

It contained only after the account of Cicero, the Provinces of Phrygia, Mysia, Caria, Lydia, as he reckoneth them up in his Oration for Flaccus: computing the two Phrygias for one Province only, and comprehending Æolis and Ionis, under that of Lydia. But for our more punctual and particular proceeding in it, we will consider it as divided into 1 Phrygia Minor, 2 Phrygia Major, 3 Mysia, 4 Æolis and Ionis, or Asia more especially so called, 6 Lydia, and 6 Caria.

8. PHRYGIA MINOR.

PHRYGIA MINOR, is bounded on the East, with Mysia, interpoling betwixt it and the Greater Phrygia on the West, with the Hellepont; on the North, with the Propontis; on the South, with the Ægean Sea. Called Phrygia from Phryx, a River in the Greater Phrygia; or as some say, from Phryxus, the son of Ashamas King of Thebes, who flying from the treacherous snares of his Mother-in-law, did here seat himself. Minor was added to it to distinguish it from the other Phrygia, which being the bigger of the two had the name of Major. It was also called Phrygia Hellepontica, from its situation on that Streight, and Traus, from Traus the chief City of it, by which name it occurth in the book of the Acts. It was called also Epistene, but the reason of the name I find not, except it came from the Episteni, a people dwelling on the East parts of Bybina, and consequently near this place.

Chief Rivers of it Scamander, on whose Banks stood the renowned City of Troy, honoured by Hesiod with the Title of Divine Scamander: in which the Virgins of this Country a little before they were to be married, used to bathe themselves, and to say these words, Ἀδελφὸν μὲν Σκαμάνδρῳ παρδάρλας, that is to say, Take O Scamander my Virginity. Which opportunity Cimon an Athenian taking, clapped a Coronet of Reeds upon his head, like a River god, and so deflowered Callirhoe a noble Virgin, then betrothed to another; occasioning thereby the leaving off of this foolish custom. It was also called Xanthus by the Poets, Xanthumque bibissent, as in Virgil, and watered a little Region called Lycia, whence Ovid in his first Epistle useth Lyciam hestiam, (Sanguine Illeptemus Lyciam refecerat hestiam) to signify a Trojan Spear. But of this more anon in the greater Lycia. 2 Asopus, parting this little Region from the greater Lycia, the boundary of it on the North, as the Promontory called Leidum, is the furthest point of it towards the South. 3 Simoes, now called Simores, falling into the Hellepont, not far from the Promontory called Rhætenum (memorable for the Statue and Sepulchre of Ajax); but rising out of Mount Ida, an hill of this Region, on which Paris (being by his Father exposed to the fury of wild Beasts) judged the controversy of the golden Ball in favour of Venus; respecting neither the great riches of Juno, nor the divine wisdom of Pallas, but transported with a sensual delight, fatal in the end to the whole Country.

Cities of most observation in it, 1 Dardanium, or Dardania, the Town and Patrimony of Eneas. 2 Affor, mentioned Acts 20. 13, by Pliny called Apollonia; who telleth us, that the earth about it is of such a nature, that it will consume a dead body in forty days. 3 Trajanopolis, whose name declareth its founder. 4 Lyrnessus, on the Sea-side, opposite to the Isle of Lesbos, destroyed by Achilles and the Greeks in the first beginnings of the Trojan war, who brought thence amongst other captives the Lady Briseis, reserved by Achilles to himself for his part of the booty, and after taken from him by Agamemnon, which caused such a deep displeasure in him, that he would not go into the field till she were restored.

5 Sigam, the Port-town to Troy, near a noted Promontory of the same name. 6 Troy, situate on the River Scamander, the beauty and glory of the East, called Ilium, and Pergamus, for the reason to be shewn anon. A famous Town, from the people whereof, all Nations desire to fetch their original. The beauty of it may be (as some write) yet seen in the ruins, which with a kind of Majesty entertain the beholder: the walls of large circuit, consisting of a black hard stone cut four-square; some remnants of the Turrets which stood on the walls, and the fragments of great Marble Tombs and Monuments of curious workmanship. But certainly these are not the ruins of that Ilium, which was destroyed by the Grecians, but 7 Troas, or New-Troy, built some four miles from the situation of the old by Lyfimachus, one of Alexander's Captains, who peopled it from the neighbouring Cities, and called it Alexandria, or Troas Alexandri, in honour of Alexander the Great, who begun the work, but lived not to bring it to any perfection. In following times called Troas only, and by that name mentioned, Att 20. 6. then the Metropolis of this Province, now a ruin only; but every day more ruinous than other by the Turks, who carry daily the stones and Pillars of it to Constantinople, to adorn the houses of the Bassas. 7. Scamandria, a strong piece, but of latter foundation, cunningly surpris'd by Ottoman the first King of the Turks, in the time of a Funeral. Now concerning old Ilium, the buildings, glories, and fall of it, take this story with you.

The KINGS of TROY.

- A.M.
2487 1 Dardanus, son to Corinthus King of Corinth, having killed his brother Jasius, fled into this Country, where he built this City, calling it Dardania; according to that Verse of Virgil, Dardanus Iliacæ primus pater urbis, & autor. Both of Troy Town, and Trojan race, Dardanus the first founder was.
- 2518 2 Erichonius, of whom little memorable-75.
- 2593 3 Tros, the son of Erichonius, who so much beautified and enlarged the City of Dardania, that from thenceforth it was called Troja, and the people Troes. By supporting the unnatural malice of Saturn against his son Jupiter, he lost his own son Ganymedes: who being taken prisoner by Jupiter, who carried the Eagle for his Ensign, is by the Poets said to have been snatched up to Heaven by an Eagle, 60.
- 2653 4 Ilus, the son of Tros, who built the Regal Palace called Ilium; and did withal so enlarge the City, and added so much Ornament and beauty to it, that it is frequently called Ilium, and the People Iliaci. The many Towers and Turrets of it, were of his erection, which being by the Greeks called Iliques, and sometimes Iliques, occasioned the whole City to be called Pergamus, 54.
- 2707 5 Laomedon, who new built Troy, which afterwards Hercules and the Grecians (justly conceiving displeasure against the treacherous King) twice took and defaced; Laomedon himself being slain the latter time. 36.
- 2743 6 Priamus who re-edified Troy, but giving leave to his son Paris to ravish Helena wife to Menelaus King of Sparta, forced the Greeks to renew their ancient quarrel: who, after a ten years siege, forced the Town, having lost of their own men 660000. and killed 666000 of the Trojans, and their Associates,

A. M. 2783. so as that of Ovid was most true,

Jam seges est ubi Troja fuit rescandaque fœce
Corn fit for sythes now grows where Troy once stood,
And the soil's fatt'd with the Phrygian blood.
Concerning the taking of this Town, two things are to be considered. First, whether the Grecians in these ten years lay continually before it; and it seems they did not: but rather that they did beat up and down, wasting the Country, and robbing the Seas for the first nine years; and in the tenth only laid a formal siege. This is the more probable, because that in the tenth year of the war, Priamus is recorded by Homer in the third of his Iliads, to have sat on a high Tower, and to have learned of Helen the names and qualities of the Greek Commanders; which he could not be thought ignorant of, if they had so long together lain in eye-reach. Secondly, by what means the Town was taken; and here we find a difference. For some Historians tell us, that Aeneas and Antenor, being either weary of the war, or discontented that it was not managed by their sole advice, or otherwise corrupted by the Grecians, betrayed it to the Enemy: but this Virgil could not brook as prejudicial to his Aeneas, whom he intended to make the pattern of a complete Prince. He therefore telleth of a Wooden-horse, wherein divers of the Greek Princes lay hidden, which by Sidon one of the Grecians, was brought to Troy gates; and that the people desirous of that monument of the Enemies flight, made a breach in their walls, the gate not being high enough to receive it. And that this fiction of Virgil might be grounded on History, it is thought by some, that over the Scæan Gate where the Greeks entered, was the portraiture of a large and stately Horse: and by others, that the walls were battered by a wooden Engine, called an Horse, as the Romans in after ages used a like Engine called a Ram. Neither of which is much improbable; but with me persuade not the integrity of Antenor or Aeneas, for whose sakes the fable of the wooden Horse was first invented.

The City being thus destroyed, the Trojans who remained in the Country, when Aeneas and Antenor had forsaken it, began to think of some other place for their habitation, which having often shifted, they fixed at last by advice of an Oracle, some four miles from the former, giving it the name of Ilium. A poor and sorry Village when Alexander came thither, who in the Temple of Minerva, (the only one they had) and a mean one too) offered up his own shield, and took down another, which he used after in his fights against the Persians, honouring it with gifts, and promising the people to rebuild and enlarge their City. But what he lived not to make good, was performed by Lyfimachus, who gave it the name of Alexandria, next called the Alexandrian Troas, at last Troas simply. A free City it continued till the war of Mithridates against the Romans; in the course whereof Fimbria a Roman Questor having seditiously slain the Consul Valerius Flaccus in Bithynia, and made himself Master of the Army, being refused entrance here as a Thief and a Rebel, besieged the City, and in the space of eleven days took it. And when he boasted that he had done as much in eleven days as Agamemnon and the Greeks could do in as many years, one of the Ilians tartly answered; That they wanted an Hector to defend them. Afterwards Julius Caesar, emulous of Alexander's attempts, and descended from Julius of Trojan race, restored them to their liberty, and enlarged their Territories: a Colony, and an University of the Romans of no mean esteem. But time and war, and the barbarity of the Turks, have brought it unto rubbish, as before was said.

In the distributing of the Provinces of the Roman Empire, Empire, this little Region, with that of Mysia Hellepontica adjoining to it, made up the Province called by the name of Hellepontus, subject with Æolis, Ionis, and the Asian Isles, to the exempt Jurisdiction of the Præconsul of Asia. Following the fortunes of Constantinople till the taking of that City by the Latines, it became then subject to the Greek Emperours residing at Nice; conquered not long after by the Turks of the Selzucian family. In the division of whole Empire on the death of the second Aladine, the whole Province of Hellepont, with part of the greater Mysia and Æolis, adjoining to them, and some part of Lydia, were seized upon by Carasus, a man of great power amongst the Turks, who here erected a small Kingdom, called from him Carasia, or Carasilli; long since swallowed up by the Ottoman Race, in the time of Orchanes, Son of Ottoman, and the second King of that house.

8. PHRYGIA MAJOR.

PHRYGIA MAJOR is bounded on the East, with Galatia; on the West, with Mysia, interposed betwixt it and the Lesser Phrygia; on the North, with Metapontus, or Pontus specially so called; on the South, with Lydia. Called Phrygia for the reasons before laid down; the word Major being added for distinctions sake, because the greater of the two.

The People of this Country were anciently more superstitious than the other Asians, as appeareth by the rites used in the Sacrifices of Cybele, and some other Goddesses: said to be also the Inventors of Augury, and other kinds of Divination. And yet for the most part men of after-wits, and all for had I wist; whence the Proverb, Serô sapiunt Phryges, applied to those who wanted foresight, and knew better to lament misfortunes than to keep them off; and used not to bethink themselves of what would follow, till it was too late. A people noted for effeminacy and lightness of conversation; and for fear they should not of themselves be wanton enough, their very Musick was so fitted as to dispose them to lasciviousness. Where by the way, I find three sorts of Musick spoken of amongst the Ancients: the first, that which Aristotle calleth ἰδνῶν, because it settled and composed the affections; and Boetius, the Lydian Musick, because much used by that people, before corrupted by long ease and ill example. It consisted principally of long notes or Spondees, such as is that supposed to be which Elisba called for, 1 Kings 3. 15. to invite the Spirit of prophesie to him; and was played by David before Saul; to drive away the ill spirit from him. And of this sort was the Church-Musick of the Primitive times, fitted to calm mens passions, and raise their devotions, Ut per oblectamenta aurium (as St. Augustine hath it) assurgat animus ad pietatis affectum, that by the pleasure of the ears the passions might be calmed, and the soul inflamed with pious and devout affections. The second sort is that which Aristotle calleth ἡδονῶν, or ἠδύνη (as the other ἰδνῶν or moral) commending it before the other in the education of youth, because more stirring them to action; consisting of Dactyles, or one long note, and two short ones, by him and Boetius both called Dorian, as most peculiar to that people. The third and last by the Philosopher called ἐκδυσανῶν, or ravishing, because it untheght the affections, and stirreth men to lascivious gestures, and wanton thoughts; consisting of short notes or Tribachies. Boetius terms it Phrygian, as most in use amongst this loose and ungoverned Nation; such as the French-Musick in our age. A sort of Musick forbidden to be used by Aristotle, but upon the Theatre, for contentation of the rude and unpolished people, by reason of that influence which it had upon mens behaviours. Musikâ Musikâ (saith the Orator) mutantur & mores; Curandum itaque ut Musica quàm gravissima & sudatissima reusuratur, that is to say, the change of Musick maketh an alteration of manners; care therefore is to be taken in the Common-wealth, that the Musick be composed and grave, and such only used. But see how this siddling humour hath led me out of the way; I return again.

The Country very rich and pleasant, well watered with the Rivers Sangarius and Marfyas. Of which the former hath its Spring or Fountain in this Country, but his fall in the Euxine; on the banks whereof standeth the City Gordium, and many others of good note. The latter was so called from one Marfyas, who striving with Apollo for preeminence in Musick, was by him head, which fact (say the Poets) was so lamented, that from the tears of the mourners grew this River. The chief Towns 1 Gordium, the seat of Gordius, who from a Plowman being raised and chosen King of this Kingdom, placed the furniture of his Wain and Oxen in the Temple of Apollo, tied in such a knot, that the Monarchy of the world was promised to him that could untie it; which when Alexander had tried and could not undo it, he cut it with his Sword. 2 Midas, the seat of Midas, son to this Gordius, who being not a little covetous, intreated of Bacchus, that what ever he touched should be turned into gold; which Petition granted, he was almost starved, his very victuals turned into Gold, till he had repeated his wish; and afterward for preferring Pan's Pipe before Apollo's Harp, his head was adorned with a comely pair of Asses ears. 3 Colosse, where dwelt the Colossians, to whom St. Paul writ one of his Epistles. 4 Pessinus, where the Goddess Cybele being worshipped, was called Des Pessinencia. The Romans were once told by an Oracle, that they should be Lords of the world, if they could get this Goddess into their possession. Hereupon they lend to the Phrygians to demand it. The Phrygians willing to please a potent neighbour, especially the Romans, being their Country-men, as descended from Aeneas and his Trojans, granted their requests, and the Goddess is shipped away for Rome. But behold the unluckiness of fortune: The Ship, Goddess and all made a stand in Tiber; neither could it be advanced forwards by force or Art. It hapned that one of the Vellal Virgins, named Claudia, being suspected of unchastity, resolved to put her self upon this experiment: and fastning her girdle to the Ship, prayed to the Goddess, that if she were causelessly suspected, the ship might be suffered to go forward, which was no sooner heard than granted, Claudia drawing the ship up the water to Rome; where I leave the people wondering at the miracle, as well they might. But to return unto the City, it stands in the borders of Galatia, and is by some made to be the City of Gordius, and the Gordian knot placed in it also; but neither rightly. Not far off stood the Mountain Dindymene, overlooking the City, in which the Priests of Cybele had their usual residence, thence called Dindymene. 5 Apamea, situate not far from the banks of Meander, anciently a most flourishing Emport, and the Metropolis of the whole Country, till Constantine divided it into the two Provinces of Salutaris, and Pacatiana: making 6 Symada, the Metropolis of the first. 7 Hierapolis, and 8 Laodicea, two noted Cities in those times, the principal of the other Province. 9 Julioptolis, and 10 Tiberiopolis, so called from the Emperour to whose honour dedicated. 11 Daryleum, &c. Not known unto the ancient Writers, but of more note in modern stories; are 1 Sagusa, the habitation of Ereugus, Father of Ottoman the first King of the Turks. 2 Chara-chisar, by the Grecians called Melampyrus, or the Black Tower, 3 Cillexnza, 4 Einegiel, places places of consequence and importance, taken by the said Ottoman from the Christians, in the first rise of his fortunes.

As for the Phrygians, they descended (as was shewn before) from Gomer the eldest Son of Japhet, and Arkenax, the eldest Son of Gomer: of which, Gomer first placed himself in the mountainous Countries of Albania, and afterwards in the more pleasant Plains of the Greater Phrygia, where the City of Chimmaris (the posterity of Gomer being generally called Chimmarians) did preserve his memory. And as for Arkenax, he first took up his dwelling in the Lesser Phrygia, and the banks of the Hellepont; where was anciently a City and Territory called Afcania, some Isles adjoining called Isule Afcanie, the name of Afcenius also very frequent in Troy itself. An ancient people they were doubtless, esteemed the ancientest of the World by Plaminius King of Egypt, upon this Experiment. Desirous to inform himself to what Nation the privilege of great Antiquity did of right belong, he caused two children to be kept in a fold, where they were suckled by Goats: all mankind being prohibited upon very great penalties to have recourse to them. All the language which the children learned from their speechless Nurses, was no more than Bee, which in the Phrygian language signifieth bread; and being of no signification at all in any other which was then known to the Egyptians, gave up the Verdict on their side: But other Nations of the world not yielding to this sentence, by a Writ of Error, or an Ad melius inquirendum, impannell'd a new Jurie; wherein it was pronounced on the Scythians side, Scytharum geni semper antiquissima. Whereby the way, Goropius Becanus makes the like use of this experiment, to prove the High Dutch to be the Original or Mother-tongue of the world; because Becker in that language signifieth, as with us, a Baker, or a maker of Bread. In this Country reigned Niobe, who preferring her self before Latona, the mother of Phœbus and Diana, had her children slain before her face by an unseen means, and was her self turned into a stone, as the Poets fable. Here also reigned Tantalus, who being rich, and wanting wisdom to make use of it, is feigned to stand in Hell up to the chin in water; and that too under a tree whose fruit toucheth his lips: yet both the one and the other sile from him, when he offereth at them. Of which thus Ovid.

— Tibi Tantalæ nulle

Dependuntur aquæ; quæque imminet, effugit arbor.
In English thus,

Thou canst not, Tantalus, those waters taste;
The tree just at thy lips, flies off as fast.

But this race of Kings being worn out by the tyranny of time or war, the Phrygians were made subject to the Kings of Lydia; continuing under their command till the Conquest of Lydia by the Persians, with which they fell together to the Crowa thereof, not made the stronger by the accession of effeminate Subjects. Gained from them by the Sword of Alexander, they fell unto Antigonus one of his great Captains, and on his overthrow at the battle of Issus, to Seleucus the Conqueror, the first King of that race: following the same fortune after that with the rest of Asia, till they came to be possessed by the Romans, and made a Province of that Empire. But Constantine laying to it the Greater Mysia, made two Provinces of it: the one called Salutaris, from some miraculous cures wrought by the Arch-Angel Michael, as was then generally believed; the other called Pacatianæ, from Pacatianus, who in the time of the said Constantine was Præfett for the Prætorium of the East, and divers years before had begun his honours with the Lieutenantship of Britain: In the declining of the Constantinopolis

tians, it became a prey unto the Turks of the Selzucian Family; possessed by them till the death of Aladine, the last King of that race: when seized upon, together with the Greater Mysia, and those parts of Lydia which lay next unto it, by Aidin, a great Turkish Prince, and made a peculiar Kingdom, called by his name Aidinia, or Aidinili; extorted shortly from his heirs by the house of Ottoman.

9. MYSIA.

Interposed betwixt the two Phrygias lyeth the Country of MYSIA bounded on the East, with Phrygia Major; on the West, with Phrygia Minor, and the Agean Sea; on the North, with parts of Bithynia, Propontis, and the Hellepont; and on the South, with part of Lydia, Eolis, and the Agean. So called from the Mysians, the Inhabitants of it.

Whether these Mysians were Originally a Phrygian Nation, or some interlopers which thrust in afterwards amongst them, I find not determined. Most probable it is, they were natural Phrygians, being as superstitious in the worship of their several Deities, as any Phrygian of Ibema all; and that they had this name given them by the Lydians, from the abundance of Beech-trees which grow amongst them, by them called Mysæ. A people of so base & contemptible quality, that it grew into a common Proverb to call a fellow of no worth, Mysiarum postremus.

The principal Mountain of this Country is that called Olympus, situate in the North-parts hereof bordering towards Bithynia: which as it is called Olympus Mysius, to difference it from Olympus in Greece; so the people of the Greater Mysia, where this Mountain is, are called Olympenii, to difference them from the Mysii or Masi of Europe. And as for Rivers, those of most note besides Æfepus, parting it from Troas, or the Lesser Phrygia, are, 1. Caietus, on whose banks stands the City of Pergamus, and from thence passeth into the Agean Sea, at the Bay of Eleæ; and 2. the famous River of Granicus, which hath his fountain in Mysia Major, and passing through Mysia Minor, falleth into the Propontis. A River memorable for the Victory which Alexander obtained on the banks hereof, in his first essay against the Persians: by whom upon the first noise of his preparations he was so slighted, that Darius King of Persia, gave command to his Lieutenants residing in Asia Minor, that they should take him alive, whip him with Rods, and so convey him to his presence. A notable example of the pride and folly of the Persians. But Alexander soon taught them another Lesson. For though the Persians were possessed of the higher banks of the River, with an intent to stop his passage; yet he resolved to charge them in the face of their strength: knowing full well, that if he could beat them on a place of so great advantage, he should not only lessen them in point of reputation, but beget an opinion of himself that he was invincible. And so accordingly it proved, the Persians being vanquished by him, and all the Kingdoms and Provinces of this Asia submitting to him on the noise of the Victory (as an enemy not to be resisted upon equal terms) some few Towns excepted. And therefore it was wisely advised by Machiavel, that he who takes upon him to defend a passage, should with his ablest forces oppose the Assailants, because in all Invasions where the Nations invaded have been beaten upon a great advantage of place, as defence of Rivers, Streights, and Mountains, they do not only dishearten their Souldiers from dealing afterwards on even ground with that Enemy, but leave no hope unto their fellows and partakers, of being succoured and defended by such weak Protectors. Which caution if the Persian Commanders had observed either here, or at Pyla Cilicia

Cilicia, spoken of hereafter, Alexander had not so easily subverted the Persian Monarchy. But the fatal period of it was now drawing on, and the men either naturally Cowards, or else prodigiously befotored.

It is divided commonly into Mysia Minor, or the Lesser Mysia, which lying on the West towards Troas and the Hellepont, is called sometimes Mysia Hellepontica; and joyned unto Troas by the Emperour Constantine, made up that Province which he called the Consular Hellepont; and Mysia Major, called from Olympus which was in it, Mysia Olympena, and the Inhabitants Olympenii; which joyned by that Emperour to the Western parts of Phrygia Major, made up that Province which he caused to be called Phrygia Salutaris, for the reason formerly delivered.

Places of most observation in the Lesser Mysia, were 1. Abydus, standing on the narrowest of the Hellepont, opposite unto Sestos in Thrace; first built by the Milesiens with the consent of Gyges King of Lydia, to whom the Country then belonged; Memorable both in the ancient and modern stories. In ancient story for the famous resolution of the Inhabitants, when besieged by Philip the father of Perseus King of Macedon. For being brought by him into some distress, and hopeles of good conditions from him, the young men of the Town who had bound themselves by oath to die rather than fall into his hands, set fire thereof, and barbarously slew themselves, with as many of the women and children as could be met with. Which news being brought to Philip, moved so little compassion, that he said he would give the Abydens three days leisure to die; and therefore would not suffer any of his souldiers to enter the Town, then set open to him, either to take the spoil thereof, or hinder this bloody execution, till the three days end. In Modern story no less memorable for the taking of it by the Turks, in the reign of Orbanes the son of Ottoman, through the treason of the Governours Daughter: who bewitched with the person and valour of Abderach-men, a young Turkish Gallant, whom she had beheld from the Towers of the Castle, threw a Letter to him as he drew near the wall; wherein the manifested her affection, and promised to make him Master of that Fortref, if he would persuade his General to raise the siege, and come with a strong Party in the dead time of the night to receive it from her, which was done accordingly. The Town continuing ever since in the power of the Turks, well fortified, and one of the two Castles spoken of before, which defend Constantinople on that side from all force by Sea. 2. Cyzicus, seated in the Propontis, in an Island of the same name also, but so near the Continent, that it joyned to it by two bridges. The Metropolis of the Consular Hellepont, by consequence an Archbishopps See in the prosperous times of Christianity; as were all other Cities in the Roman Empire, which were the Mother-Cities or Metropoles of their several Provinces. A Town of wonderful strength and beauty, when first known to the Romans, called therefore by L. Florus, the Rome of Asia, who gives this Character also of it, Cyzicum nobilitas opibus, arte, manibus, portu, turribusque maris; Asiaticæ plage litorea illustrat, that is to say, that the noble City of Cyzicum by the excellency of the Walls, Bulwarks, Haven, and Towers of Marble, doth beautify and illustrate the shores of Asia. Honoured amongst many other goodly and magnificent buildings, with a glorious Temple, the Pillars whereof being 4 Cubits thick, and 50 Cubits high, were each of one entire stone only: the whole Fabrick all of polished Marble, every stone joyned unto the other with a line of Gold. In vain besieged by Mithridates in the time of his war, who lost before it by the Sword, Pestilence, and Famine, no fewer than 300000 men, and yet could not force it. Afterwards ruined by an Earthquake, the Falling-Sickness of the East, as before is said, it could never be restored to its former lustre: the very ruins of it daily made more ruinously by transporting the Stones and Marbles to Constantinople, for the Embellishing of that City: 3. Lampiscus on the same Propontis, in which the beatty god Priapus was worshipped in as beatty a figure: Quem non denudis (as wittily Lactantius scoffeth it) ne quid apparat risu dignum, supposed to be the same with the Syrian or Phœnician Baal, so often mentioned in the Scriptures. For this and on some other reasons, Alexander had conceived against it such an high displeasure when he was in Asia, that he resolved to raze it to the very ground. And seeing Anaximenes coming to him as an Embassadour from the Town to obtain his favour, commanded him to hold his peace; and swore as by way of prevention, that he would deny whatsoever he requested of him: whereupon Anaximenes entreated him to destroy the City, which now for his Oaths sake he could not do; and so this wicked City at that time escaped. 4. Parium, so called, as some say, from Paris the son of Jafon, a Colony at first of the Mysians, of the Romans afterwards: Troas and this, the only two Roman Colonies in all the Province. By Homæ called Adrestia; as Lampiscus in the same Author, is called Phrysa. More in the land, are 5. Scepis, 6. Hirgerme, both mentioned by Pliny, but of more antiquity than fame.

Chief Cities in MYSIA MAJOR or OLYMPENÆA are 1. Daima, in the North-parts, not far from Olympus. 2. Apollonia, near a large Lake sacred to Apollon, in the same parts also. 3. Pala Scepis, or Scepis Vetus, on a Bay of the Agean Sea, joyning upon Troas, or the Lesser Phrygia. 4. Adramyttium, mentioned Aët. 27. where St. Paul took ship to go to Rome. 5. Antandrus, on the same Sea also, now called St. Dimiteris, named at first Chimmaris from the Gomeriites or Chimmarians here inhabiting (which sheweth that Mysia anciently was a part of Phrygia) afterward Edonis, and at last Antandrus, and that either because built or repaired rather by the men of Audros, an Island of the Agean, spoken of before, amongst the Cyclades; or because the Gresians having taken Polydorus the son of Priam, from the King of Thrace, received this City for his ransom or rather in exchange for him as the word doth intimate. 6. Præfescene, on the same coast also, More in the Land. 7. Præfescius, 8. Trajanopolis, 9. Alydda, of which little memorable. 10. Pergamus, the Regal City of this tract, situate in a goodly Plain on the banks of the River Caycus, of a small Town or Fortref made a stately City by the Kings hereof, and beautified with an excellent Library containing 200000 Volumes; for the writing or transcribing whereof, Parchments was here first invented, which from hence to this day is called Pergamenum. Here also were those costly hangings first invented, which we now call Tapestry; by the Romans called first Aulea, from Aula, signifying a Hall; the Hall of Attalus King hereof (by whom invented) being the first room furnished and adorned herewith. Here was born Galen the famous Physician, living very healthfully to the age of 140 years; his health preserved to so great age, by these means especially, 1. Never eating or drinking his fill. 2. Never eating any thing that was raw. 3. Always carrying about him some sweet Perfumes. Finally, this was one of the seven Churches to which St. John writ his Revelation. For though it were originally a City of Asians, yet being near unto the borders of Lydia, it was reckoned as a City of Lydian Asia; within the limits whereof those seven Churches were all comprehended. As for the Kings hereof, which flourished here for some some ages in such wealth and splendor, they came but from a poor and obscure original. The first of them one Philetarus, an Eunuch, belonging to Antigonus, one of the Great Alexanders greatest Captains; and after his death to Lysimachus King of Thrace, by whom trusted with his money and accounts. Fearing the fury of his Master then grown old and tyrannous, he seized on the Castle of Pergamus, and therein on 90000 Talents, which he offered with his service unto Seleucus, the first King of Syria. But both Lysimachus and Seleucus dying shortly after, he kept the money to himself, and reigned in this City as an absolute King; leaving the Kingdom at his death to his brother Eumenes, no better man than a poor Carter, till raised by the fortunes of this Eumenes. Eumenes furnished with money, though of no great territory, was able by the Galls and other Mercenaries, not only to preserve himself against the Syrian Kings, who laid claim to his City, but also to enlarge his bounds as he saw occasion. But the main improvement of this Kingdom happened in the days of Eumenes the second, the son of Attalus, the brother and Successor of this Eumenes: who being useful to the Romans in their wars against Philip of Macedon, and Antiochus the Great, King of Syria, was liberally rewarded by them with the Provinces of Lydia, Phrygia, Æolia, Ionis, Troas, and both the Myas; which they had taken from Antiochus in the end of that war. The rest of the affairs hereof, till it fell in time unto the Romans, take here in this short Catalogue of

THE KINGS of PERGAMUS.

- A. M.
3668 1 Philetarus, the first King of Pergamus, of whom before 20.
3688 2 Eumenes, brother, or as some say, the brothers son of Philetarus, vanquished Antiochus, surnamed Hierax, in a fight near Sardis, and awed Seleucus Callinicus, both Kings of Syria, 22.
3710 3 Attalus, brother of Eumenes; restored Ariarathes the Cappadocian to his Kingdom, and discomfited the Galls, compelling them to keep themselves within the Country since named Galatia. A Confederate of the Romans; and by them much courted.
3754 4 Eumenes II. son of Attalus, gratified by the Romans with the spoils of Antiochus. He was an hereditary Enemy to the Kingdom of Macedon, which he laboured the Romans to destroy, as in time they did; and thereby finding no more use of these Pergamian Kings, began to grow to less liking with them.
3782 5 Attalus II. Brother of Eumenes, to whom the Kingdom was offered by the Romans in the life of his Brother, then less gracious with them; but he most gallantly refused it, to the great indignation of the Roman Senate.
3792 6 Eumenes III. Brother of Attalus the second, and Tutor or Protector to his Nephew Attalus, in whose minority he governed the Estate, as King.
3813 7 Attalus III. son of Attalus the second, succeeded on the death of his Uncle Eumenes, and having held the Kingdom but five years only, deceased without issue, and bequeathed it by his last Will unto the Romans. But before the Romans had possession of so great a Legacy, Arifonius the base son of Eumenes, made himself Master of Mindus, Colophon, Samos, and many other Towns and Estates hereof. Against whom the

Romans making war were aided by the greatest part of the Asian Kings; not seeing their own danger and destruction to draw near unto them, by letting such a potent neighbour come amongst them, to undo them all. But the Romans got little by this war, though they had the better of it. For being now made Masters of the Riches and Sweets of Asia, they took with them their Vices also: growing thereby to great riot and unparalleled luxury; which overcame the rigour and severity of their former discipline, and made them apt for Faction, and those bloody quarrels, which proved the ruine of their State. So truly was it said by Justine, Sic Asia facta Romanorum, cum apibus suis vitia quoque sua Romanam transfudit. This Kingdom, taking it in the largest extent thereof, being thus subdued and settled as a Roman Province, had the name of Asia, according to the name of the Greater Continens; by Ptolemy, and others, called Asia Propria: continuing under the subjection of the Roman Emperours, till the translating of the Imperial seat unto Constantinople; as after that unto the Emperours of the East, till conquered piece-meal by the Turky of the Selaccian family. Which being ended in the person of Mahomet the second, those parts hereof which lay next Troas, made up the Kingdom of Carajian, or Carajia; as those which had been laid to the Greater Phrygia, made up the Aidinian: both of them swallowed up long since by the Ottoman Kings, the Accessories running the same fortune as the Principals did.

10. ASIA SPECIALIUS DICTA.

Besides the Propria Asia spoken of before, containing all the Provinces of the Pergamon Kingdom, there was one part hereof which anciently had the name of Asia, before it was communicated to the greater Continens, or this whole Peninsula. This for distinction sake the Romans called the PROCONSULAR ASIA; because committed to the government of one of their Pro-consuls (who had his residence in Ephesus, the principal City of this Province) together with the Consular Hellespont and the Province of the Ister of Asia. This we have spoken of before, as also how the Country lying about Ephesus, had more especially the name of Asia, than any other: so specially, that Erasmus thereupon interteth, that by Asian the New Testament, (but more particularly in the Acts) is meant that part of Asia only in which Ephesus standeth.

This being agreed on for the name, we shall bound it on the East with Lydia, whereof it was anciently a part; on the West, with the Ægean Sea; on the North, with Myas; and on the South, with Caria. And having so bounded it, we shall divide it into the two Regions of EOLIS, and IONIA: that of Eolia lying on the North, towards Myas; as Ionis doth upon the South, towards Caria: possessed both of them by Greek Nations, and of them so named.

Principal Towns in EOLIS, are 1 Acarnes, over against the Isle of Lesbos, the Royal Seat sometimes of the Tyrant Hermias; who being once a Scholar of Aristotle, but unworthy of so good a Master, seized on this City, and here committed to great cruelties, that at last he was taken by the people, sewed in an Oxes hide, and so baited to death. 2 Pisane, on a little River so named, falling into Caicus, not far from the influx or fall thereof into the Ægean; in which Town they had an Art of making Bricks which would swim on the water. 3 Elaea, on the mouth of Caicus, the Port-Town to Pergamus. 4 Myas, afterwards in honour of Augustus, called Sebasteopolis. 5 Cene, by Arabo called Cene; by Mela, Cinne; not far from a Promontory of the same name. 6 Cume, the principal and greatest of all Æolia, the Birth-place of Ephorus a Learned man of Elder time; and the habitation of Sibylla, surnamed Cumana, to a residence her from Sibylla Cumea, so named from Cume, a City of the Realm of Neples. 7 Phocæa, a Colony of the Æthioli, so named from the multitudes of Sea-Calves (the Greeks call them Phocæ) which thrust themselves ashore at the building of it. The people hereof over-burdened by the Persians, and impatient of so great servitude as was laid upon them, forsook their Country, binding themselves by a fearful Oath, never more to return unto it; and after many and long wanderings came at last into Sabir, where they founded the famous City of Marseilles.

The Inhabitants of this little Region are by Josephus said to be descended of Elisba the son of Javan, who therefore calleth them by the name of Elisai. And it is possible enough that so it was, Elisba being planted in Greece, where he gave name to Eli, one of the Provinces of Peloponnesus; from whence some of his Race in succeeding times might pass over into Asia, and possess those Coasts. For that they were a Greek people, is confessed by all; the Æolick Diallect or phrase of speech, taking name from hence. Not otherwise much mentioned in the course of story, than as partakers of the same fortunes with the rest of their Asian Neighbours before related, and so not necessary to be now repeated.

IONIA, as a larger tract, requires a more particular and punctual description. For here the River Lyceus falleth into the Meander, and here Meander and Caystus, two of the most famous Rivers of Asia Minor (of which more hereafter) fall into the Ægean. Here is the renowned City of Ephesus, honoured with one of the worlds seven wonders, the long abode of St. Paul, and the death and sepulture of St. John; the Promontory Trogillium, with a little Isle adjoining of the same name, mentioned Acts 20. 15.

Principal Cities of this tract, are 1 Myas, on an arm of the Sea, allied by Araxerxes, together with Lampascus, and Magnesia, to Themistocles; when being banished his own Country, he fled to his greatest Enemy for entertainment; and there met with more safety than Athens would, and more honour than it could afford him; So that he might well say (as he often did) Perissem' nisi perissem. And on the other side, the King was so overjoyed at his coming to him, (as having now on his side the man who had most hindered him in the Conquest of Greece) that many times in his sleep he was heard to clap his hands, and say, Habeo Themistoclem Atheniensem. In after-times, the water drawing further off, the soil brought forth such an innumerable number of Fleas, that the Inhabitants were fain to forsake the City, and with their Bag and Baggage to retire to Miletus: nothing hereof being left but the name and memory in the time of Pausanias. 2 Erythra, memorable for the habitation of one of the Sibyls, from hence called Sibylla Erythraea; of which Prophetesses we shall speak more when we come to Africk. 3 Lebedus, of most note in the elder times, for those publick Playes which were here annually held in the honour of Bacchus. 4 Clazomenæ, situate on a small Ilet, near unto the shore, of much esteem amongst the Romans for the wines there growing and no less honoured by the Asians for a beautiful Temple of Apollo seated near unto it. 5 Priene, the birth-place of Bias, one of the seven Wise-men of Greece. 6 Ipsus, renowned for the great Battle betwixt Antigonus and Seleucus, two of Alexander's chief Commanders; the Victory wherein falling to Seleucus, with the death of his Adversary, obtained him in all the Conquests of his Master, except Egypt only. 7 Tepos, the birth-place of Anacreon, that lascivious and drunken Poet, hence surnamed Tenius; the Ovid of the Grecians, both for wit and wantonness: of both which it may well be doubted, whether the smoothness of the Verse, or the wantonness of their expressions, be the more predominant. 8 Smyrna, a fair and ancient City, on a Bay, thence named the Bay of Smyrna: the greatest part whereof lay towards the Sea, but the fairest on the side of an hill overlooking the waters. Destroyed by the Lydians; it was re-edified by Antiochus and Lysimachus, two of Alexander's great Commanders; of good account in the time of the Romans, and one of the seven Asian Churches, to which St. John inscribed his Revelation. Much traded and frequented to this very day, especially for Chamlets, Grograins, and such Stuffs; made for the most part at Ancyra, the chief Town of Galatia, and here vendred to the foreign Merchant. For government of the Trade whereof, and of other commodities of the parts, the English Merchants have an Officer called the Consul of Smyrna. In old time there was in it, amongst us, a goodly Temple dedicated unto Homer, said to be born in this City, and to have writ his Poems in a Cave hard by. 9 Colophon, most memorable for the Inhabitants of it, so skilled in Horse-manship, that the side on which they served in War was sure of Victory; whereupon Colophonians addre, to put a good end to any business, grew into a Proverb, It was also another of those Cities, which so ambitiously contended for the birth of Homer; of which there were seven in all, as the old Verses tell us, saying,

Septem urbes certant de stirpe insigni Homeri, Smyrna, Rhodus, Colophon, Salamis, Chios, Argos, Athenæ. Whether Homer purposely concealed his Country, that all places might challenge him for theirs, I am not able to say; but sure I am, that Paterculus speaketh it in the commendation of Hesiodus (the next Greek Poet after him in course of time) that he had specified his birth-place: Qui si id vitaret in quod Homerus incidit, patriam & parentes testatur est. 10 Ephesus, the Metropolis of the Roman Asia, and the seat of the Primate of the Asian Diocese: memorable in the purest times of Christianity, for being the Episcopate: See of Timothy the Evangelist, the first Bishop thereof; 2ly. In that St. Paul directed to the people of it one of his Epistles; and 3ly. for the burial of St. John the Apostle, who by some learned men of the elder times, is said to have gone alive into his Grave, and that he is not dead, but sleeping; building that thought upon that saying which went abroad amongst the Brethren, That that disciple should not die. Job 21. 23. And no less memorable amongst the Gentiles for that sumptuous and magnificent Temple here consecrated to Diana, which for the largeness, furniture, and workmanship of it, was accounted one of the Wonders of the World. The length thereof said to be 425 foot, 220 foot in breadth; supported with 127 Pillars of Marble, seventy foot in height; of which twenty seven were most curiously engraven, and all the rest of Marble polished. The Model of it contrived by one Ctesiphon, and that with so much Art and curiosity of Architecture, that it took up two hundred years before it was finished. When finished, it was fired seven times, the last time by Erastrius; only to get himself a name; which happening on the same night in which Alexander the Great was born, gave occasion to that witty but witty Poet, that Diana (he was counted one of the Goddesses of Midwifery.) could not attend the preservation of her Temple, being then busied at the birth of so great a Prince.

As for those Ioners, or Ionians, they were no doubt the descendants of Javan, the fourth son of Japhet, as hath been shewn before in our general Preface: but whether they came hither out of Greece, or passed from hence into that Country, hath been made a question: The Athians also boasting of themselves to be Aborigines, men growing as it were out of the Soil it self; without any Ancestors, report that those Ionians were a Colony of their Plantation. But Heckius in Strabo doth affirm the contrary, saying, That the Athenians or Ions of Greece, came from those of Asia; for that Asia was anciently called Ionis; Plutarch in the life of Theseus doth declare expressly. Most probable it is, that Heceus was in the right; these parts of Asia lying so directly in the way from the Valley of Shinar into Greece, that Javan may very well be thought to leave some of his company here, when he ferried the rest over to the opposite Continent. I know Panjanis, ignorant of their true antiquity, deriveth them from Ion, the son of Xuthus, and grandchild of Demolion; whence he came so near the truth, though he mist the men, that it was the Glandorf of that man who escaped the flood, from whom both the Athenians and those Ionians had their true original. In regard of which relations betwixt the Nations, the Athenians gave aid to those Ionians against the Persians; who on the overthrow given to Cresus, pretended to the Lordship or Dominion of Asia, and conquered them in the time of Cyrus, the first Persian Monarch. Upon which ground, and the sending of Hecstus aid to them upon their revolt in the time of Darius, that King first undertook the invasion of Greece; Xerxes, the succeeding Kings pursuing that first quarrel with great animosities. After this yielding to the times, they followed the fortune of the strongest, subject successively to the Persians, Macedonians, Romans, Constantinopolitans, and Turks, till the death of Aladdin, before mentioned: when both Bolis and Ionis got a new name, and are now called Sarcas, from Sarcas, a Turkish Captain, who on the death of that Aladdin, seized upon this Country, and erected here a petit Kingdom long since subdued by those of the race of Ottoman.

11. LYDIA.

LYDIA is bounded on the East, with Phrygia Major, and some part of Pisidia, from which separated by a branch of the Mountain Taurus; on the West, with Bolis and Ionis, or Asia specially so called; on the North, with the Greater Mysia; on the South with Caria, so called from Lud, the son of Sem, by some of whose posterity it was first inhabited. In the full Latitude and extent thereof, as anciently, comprehending Bolis and Ionis, the adjoining Provinces, it made the Lydian Asia, spoken of before; within the verge whereof all the seven Churches were contained, mentioned by St. John in the Revelation.

The people of this Country are said to have been the first Coynters of Money, the first Hucksters and Pedlers, and the first inventors of Dice, Ball, Chess, and the like Games: necessity and hunger thereunto enforcing them, according to that of Perkins, Arta Magister, ingenique largitor venter. For being sorely vext with famine, in the time of Asis, one of the Progenitors of Omphale, they devised these Games; and every second day playing at them, beguiled their hungry bellies. Thus for 22 years they continued playing and eating by turns; but then seeing that themselves were more fruitful in getting and bearing children, than the soil at that time in bringing forth sustenance to maintain them, they sent a Colony into Italy under the conduct of Tyrrhenus, the son of Asis, who planted in that Country, called at first Tyrrhenia, and afterward Tuscania.

This Country was also called Meonia, and was thought to have been the native soil of Homér, in regard that Coleophon and Smyrna, two of the seven contending Cities, and those which seem to have most colour for their claim, were anciently accounted as parts of Lydia, as was said before. Hence Homér hath the name of Meganes and Meonim Vites; and in some Authors Carmen Meonim is used, for Homér's Poetical abilities, as Carmen Meonim confingere, in Ovid. Bacchus is also called sometimes by the name of Meonius; but for a very different reason, viz. because anciently there were no trees in all this Country but the Vine only.

Principal Mountains of this Country are 1. Sipphus, and 2. Timolus, this last of most account in regard of the great fruitfulness of it, covered over with Vines, and yielding abundance of the best Saffron. Chief Rivers of it are 1. Hermus, which rising out of Phrygia Major, passeth only by the skirts hereof, and so falleth into a fair Bay of the Aegean, opening towards the Isle of Claxomene. 2. Paolus, which rising at the foot of Mount Timolus, falleth not long after into Hermus; famous amongst the Poets for its golden Sands. 3. Caystus, no less notable for the abundance of Swans which swim therein, whose Fountain is in Phrygia Major also, near the borders hereof; and his fall into the Aegean also over against the Isle of Samos. 4. Meander, which rising out of a branch of the Taurus, in the furthest parts of the said Phrygia, towards Lycania, passeth by Magnesia, and endeth his course in the same Sea, near the City of Ephesus. A River famous for its many turnings in and out, 600 at the least, as Priscus counteth them. Of which in general thus the Poet.

Et lassus in se, sepe reorquies aquas.*

That is say:

Meander wandering in the self-same soil,
Whose waters meeting do as oft recoil.

And in another passage thus,

Quique recurvatus ludis Meander in undis.

Meander plays his watry pranks,

In his so many winding banks.

The Country by reason of these Rivers was exceeding fruitful, abounding in all sorts both of wealth and pleasures, well cultivated and manured above ground, and underneath enriched with prodigal veins of Gold and Silver, and some precious Gems. Which made the people, after their overthrow by Cyrus, to become more sensual and voluptuous, and less fit for action, than any plot of their new Masters could have brought them to, had not the natural delicacies of the soil it self contributed to the advancement of their design. And yet before, they were sufficiently infamous for their luxury and excess of riot, when best seen in wars: so that it is a marvel they were able to prevail on the neighbour Nations, and bring them under their command; as in the times of some of Cresus's Predecessors, it is said they did. Unless perhaps they did participate of the temper of Meonias, the great favourite of Augustus Cæsar, of whom Paterculus hath left this Character: Ubi res vigilanti exigeret, erat sane infimius, providens, & agendi sciens; simulac aliquid ex negotio remitti posset, ovis ac molitibus pendula faminam suens: No man more vigilant than he in times of business, nor woman more effeminate in his times of leisure.

Principal Cities of this Country were, 1. Sardis, on both sides of Paolus, the Seat Royal of Cresus, and the Kings of Lydia, till the Conquest of Lydia by the Persians. After which time, being taken by the Grecians, it so startled Xerxes, that he commanded one of his attendants to say aloud every day whilst he was at dinner, That the Grecians had taken Sardis, continuing that Alimento till it was recovered. Which course (I note this only by the way) was commonly observed in the Parliaments of France, as long as Calixtus did remain in the hands hands of the English; and might be profitably revived, till again recovered from the French. Overthrown by a most terrible Earth-quake (to which Disease most of the Asian Cities had been very much subject) it was re-edified again at the cost of Tiberius, continuing long after the Metropolis of this Province, and one of the seven Churches of the Lydian Asia, of which the Holy Spirit took such special notice. The others (besides Pergamus already mentioned in the Greater Mysia; and Ephesus, and Smyrna in the Proper Asia) were 2. Philadelphus, near or on the Banks of the River Caystus, the second City in account next to Sardis it self, and honoured with the dignity of a Metropolis, as appeareth by the A.C.s of the Constantinopolitan Council, where Eustathius Bishop thereof doth subscribe himself, Belenus & Th. Philadelphus Metropolitans, Bishop of the Metropolis of Philadelphus, in the Province of Lydia. 3. Thyatira, honoured with the same Privilege also, as appears by the constant Order, observed as well in the Civil, as Ecclesiastical Catalogues of the Cities belonging to this Province. The Reason whereof (for otherwise it was contrary to the practice both of Church and State, to have in one Province more than one Metropolis) was the respect had to those several Churches in regard of their Primitive Antiquity, and the Foundation of them by St. John the Apostle, as it was generally believed. 4. Ladicea, by Pholomy placed amongst the Cities of this Province, as it stood in his time, and before; but afterwards laid by Constantine to the Greater Phrygia, and made the Metropolis thereof (which honour Hierapolis had before enjoyed) it being well observed by Strabo, that the Romans did not dispose of their Provinces according to Nations, and ad id præparatum præparatum præparatum, in Strabo voluntas Anaxandros, but according to those Districts, or Circuits, in which they kept their Courts of Justice. Next unto these, there were of especial consideration, 5. Magnesia ad Meandrum, so called because situate on that River, to difference it from 6. Magnesia pene Sipylum montem, another of the same name near the Hill Sipylus. The first assigned over to Themistocles, together with Myus and Lampascus, as was said before. The other memorable for the great Battel fought near unto it, betwixt Antiochus and the Romans; the loss whereof falling unto Antiochus, occasioned the loss of all his Asian Provinces on this side of Taurus, and the payment of 15000 Talents for the charge of the War, besides some other hard Conditions then imposed upon him. 7. Alabanda, opposite to Magnesia on the other side of Meander, the People whereof, immediately on the overthrow of Antiochus, not only sent Embassadors to Rome to congratulate with them, as many other Nations did; but built a Temple to it, and appointed Anniversary Games to be celebrated in the honour of that new-made Goddest. A thing more to be wondered at in the Roman Senate for receiving, than in this poor People for bestowing on their City so divine an honour. 8. Trallis, on the banks of Caystus, to the Inhabitants whereof, Ignatius that Reverend Bishop and Godly Martyr writ the Epistle ad Trallenses.

That the Lydians were derived from Lud the Son of Sem, is testified by the general consent of such ancient Writers, as treat of the dispersions of the Sons of Noah; to which opinion the nearness of the Names of Lud, Lydin, and Lydi (or Ludu, as the Grecians call them) seems to give good countenance. Nor shall there dispute it further, as a point unquestioned, the tale of Lydus, I know not what Nobleman, that should name this Country, being taken up amongst the Greeks for want of more certain truths. Once settled here, they grew up suddenly to a Kingdom; amongst the ancient Kings whereof are numbred Manes as the first, Goths, and Asis, and then Asius (from whom Lydia first, and after, all the Continent, had the name of Asia) as his immediate Successors. After them I find mention of one Cambleser, said by Athenæus to be so great a Gommandizen, that in his sleep he eat his Wife, and finding her hand in his mouth next morning, slew himself for shame: and of another named Andramyter, as infamous for his filthy lusts, as Cambleser for his gluttony. But the Race of these Kings ending in Omphale, the Mistress of Hercules, who made that valiant Champion spin amongst her Damocels; the Heraclides or Posterity of Hercules succeeded next; of whom there is no constant and continued Succession till the time of Ardisius, the nineteenth in order of that Line, who began his Reign not long before the building of the City of Rome. Under his Successors the Affairs hereof so exceedingly prospered, especially under Halyates the Father of Cresus, that Phrygia, Bithynia, Phrygionis, Mysia, Caria, Bolis, Doris, and Ionis, acknowledged themselves Vassals to this Crown: Conceived both in Wealth and Power to be equal to the Egyptian, Babylonian, or Median Kingdoms, till the Conquest of Syria and Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar gave him the pre-eminence. But being come unto the bright, it received a fall in the Person of Cresus the Successor of him who so much advanced it. The Kings hereof, from the time of the said Ardisius, take in order following.

- |      |   |   |
|------|---|---|
| A.M. |   |   |
| 3190 | 1 | Ardisius , 36.   |
| 3226 | 2 | Halyates , 14.   |
| 3240 | 3 | Melos , who overcame the people of Sardis , 12.   |
| 3252 | 4 | Candaules , who shewing his Wife naked to Gyges , was by him slain; who marrying his Wife, succeeded him in his Kingdom. The whole Story is this: Candaules had to Wife a Woman of unparalleled beauty, and supposing the greatness of his happiness not to consist so much in his own fruition, as the notice which others might take of it, intended to show her in Natures bravery to Gyges , the Master of his Herds. Gyges , as he first dissuaded him from an attempt to do so, but seeing no persuasion could prevail, he condescended. When he had seen the naked Queen, and was ready to depart Candaules cried to him, Esto fidelis Gyges , which words the Queen marking, and seeing the back of Gyges as he left the Chamber, the next morning sent for him: When holding a Ponyard in her hand, she gave him his choice, either presently to be slain, or else to kill the King, and take her to wife, with the Kingdom of Lydia for her Dower. Of which two evils he made choice of that which he thought the least, and so killed Candaules . |
|      | 5 | Gyges , the first of this new Line, added Ionis to his other Dominions. A Prince of so great wisdom, for the time he lived in, that all other Kings his neighbours fate (as it were) in the light to him; and he as in the dark to them: occasioning thereby the fiction of a Ring, he had, by which made invisible, when and as often as he pleased.   |
| 3305 | 6 | Ardis II, the son of Gyges , 37.  |
| 3342 | 7 | Sardisates , 15.   |

3357 8 Halyattes II. of whom before.
3406 9 Craesus, the last King of Lydia, subdued Darius and Æolis; after which Victories, he was overcome by Cyrus King of Persia: in which Battle, a son of Craesus, who had been dumb from his Cradle, seeing a Souldier ready to kill his Father, suddenly broke out into these words, Rex est, cave ne occidas. After his overthrow, and the Captivity of Craesus (one of the richest Kings that ever was of old) Lydia was made a Persian Province, A. M. 3420.

The Lydians after this rebelled, but being again subdued, Cyrus bereaved them of all their hopes of service; dispoiled them of all their Armour, and trained them up in all manner of loose and effeminate living; weakening by this means a powerful Nation, which before that time had not only maintained its own liberty, but awed all the Provinces adjoining. After this they continued Persian till the Conquest of Asia by the Macedonians, in the division of whose spoils they fell to the portion of Seleucus and the Kings of Syria: following the common fortune of the rest of this Asia, till they came under the power of the Romans. Made by them one of the Provinces of their Empire, it had the Lower Mysia, or Mysia Olympica annexed unto it; by means whereof the limits of each became so confounded, that the Towns and Cities of the one, are many times ascribed to the other. In the falling of the Eastern Empire it was made (as all the rest of Anatolia) a prey to the Turks; that part of it which lieth next to Æolis, subject to the Carassian Family; as the other parts towards Phrygia Major were to the Aidinian.

12 C A R I A.

C A R I A is bounded on the East, with Lydia; on the North with Lydia and Ionia; on the West, with the Ionian or Egean Sea; and on the South, with the Carpathian. So called from Cares, the son of Phoroneus King of Argos, once the Lord hereof, who is said to have invented the Science of Divination by the flying of Birds, called Augury; though others ascribe it to the Phrygians, and others unto other Nations, all alike uncertain.

In this Country is the Hill called Latmus, the dwelling, or rather retiring place of Endymion, who being much addicted to the study of Astronomy, found out the changes and courses of the Moon, and is therefore by the Poets feigned to have been her Paramour. Others add, that Jupiter hid him in a Cave under this Hill, and cast him into a dead sleep; (which notwithstanding, the defended sometimes to kiss him) whence came the old By-word, of Endymionis somnum dormis. Here is also in this Country the River Salmacis, said to be feebly all such as either drink of it, or bathe in it: from whence the Poets raise the fiction of Salmacis and Hermaphroditus, described by Ovid; and the Proverb of Salmacida spolia sine sanguine & sudore, mentioned by Tully in his Book of Offices, and there used for effeminate and wanton exercises.

Places of most note in it, 1 Mileus, not far from the hill Latmus, the birth-place of Thales, one of the seven Wise-men of Greece, from hence called Milesius; and the Mother of no fewer than 75 (or as Pliny saith of 80 Colonies, dispersed in several places of Greece and Asia: anciently honoured with the Oracle of Apollo, surnamed Didymus, whose Temple being burnt by Xerxes, was again rebuilt by the Myleians, to so vast a greatness, that it remained without roof; compassed about with a Grove, and dwelling houses, and sumptuously set out with costly workmanship. This is that Mileus mentioned Athen. to which St. Paul called together the Bishops of Ephesus, and of other the adjoining Cities, Ab Ephejo & reliquis proximit Civitatibus, saith St. Irenæus, the renowned Bishop of Lions, lib. 3. cap. 14. Anciently it was called Leptis and Anastoria. 2 Mindus, which being but a small Town, had so great Gates, that Dionegenes the Cynick cried out, and said, Te menos Mindus, tunc brevis tua City non erit out at your Gates. 3 Heraclea ad Latmum, so called because situate at the foot of that Mountain, to difference it from many others of that name. 4 Borgylus, or Borgylus, as Pliny calleth it, where anciently Diana had another Temple, though not to be compared with that of Ephesus. 5 Misasa, in old times famous for two Temples sacred unto Jupiter; the way to which for 60 furlongs was paved with stone for the easier travelling of Pilgrims, and the better ordering of Processions; the principal of the Citizens serving there as Prigis, which office they held unto their death. 7. Primasus, memorable for the Stratagem by which it was taken by Philip of Macedon, the Father of Persus. Who meaning to force it by Mine, and finding the earth so stony that it would not work, commanded the Pioneers notwithstanding to make a noise under the ground, and caused great Mounts of Rubbish to be raised secretly in the night, at the mouth of the Mine, as if the Work went very well forwards. At last he sent word unto the Townsmen, that two parts of their wall stood only upon wooden props, to which if he gave fire, they should find no mercy; which heard, the Citizens yielded up the Town unto him. So useful in the Art of War is a piece of Wit, that it prevails sometimes more than Mines or Batteries.

In the South-west of the Province, chafing it (self) to the Sea like a spacious Promontory, stands the Country of DORIS, so called of the Dores, a Greek People, who there inhabited. The principal Cities whereof were 1 Cnidus, not far from a Foreland or Promontory of the same name, famous of old times for the Marble Image of Venus, called hence Dea Cnidia. 2 Cressa, a noted Haven-Town in the time of Ptolemy. 3 Halicarnassus (now called Nesi) the birth-place of Herodotus and Dionysius, named hence Halicarnassus, two famous Historians, and the seat-Royal of Artemesia Queen of the Carians (called from hence sometimes the Queen of Halicarnassus) who in the honour of her husband Mausolus, built a stately Monument, accounted one of the Worlds seven Wonders, of which T. S. Martialis, speaking of the Roman Amphitheatre erected by Domitian,
*Aere nec vacuo pendente Mausolea
Laudibus immodicis Cares ad astra ferant.*

That is to say,
Mausolus Tomb filling the empty Air,
Let not the Carians praise beyond compare.

That the Carians were so called from Cares, the son of Phoroneus, King of Argos, hath been said before. But Bochartus will rather have them so called from Car, which in the Phœnician Language signifieth a Sheep or a Ram; with numerous flocks whereof they did once abound. And this may seem more probable, in regard that the Ionians next neighbours to Caria, borrowing this word from the Phœnicians, called Sheep by the name of Cara, Kara Ionis et ægyptiaca, saith Hesychius, the old Grammarian. From whomsoever they had their name, certain it is, they were a very warlike people. Et armis pugnaque amantes, (saith Pomponius Mela) ut alienis ciuibus bella appetere, when they had no wars at home, would seek out for action. A little before the time of Xerxes, Mausolus reigned here, whose wife Artemesia (lately mentioned) aided that King in his undertakings against Greece. Afterwards, in the time of Alexander the the Great, we met with Ada Queen hereof, who aided him against the Persians; adopting him for her son and Successor; Subject after her decease to the Macedonians, it followed the same fortune with the rest of these Provinces, till the defeat of Antiochus near Magnesia: in the division of whose spoils it was given to the Rhodiens, incorporated not long after to the State of Rome, and made a Province of the Empire. Wreathed from the Eastern Emperours by the Turks of the Selæucian Family, the greatest part hereof, on the death of Aladine II. was raised unto a petit Kingdom by the name of Mentesia, so called from Mendos (or Mindus) the chief City of it; the residue being laid to the Caraman Kingdom, both long ago subdued by the Ottoman Family: that of Mentesia by Mahomes surnamed the Great, who dispossessed Elias the last Prince thereof, Anno 1451.

13. L Y C I A.

L Y C I A is bounded on the East, with Pamphylia; on the West, with Caria; on the North, with parts of Lydia, and Phrygia Major; on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea. Environed on three sides with the Mountain Taurus, which part it from the Countries above mentioned, by consequence naturally strong, and not very accessible: the Sea for the space of 20 miles shutting up the fourth. And here is to be observed, that besides this, there was a little Region of the same name, not far from Troy, not much observed by our Geographers either old or new; but mentioned sometimes by the Poets; as in Virgil, Æneid. 4. Quasi ubi hybernæ Lyciam, Xanthique fluens, &c. which is meant: plainly of the Phrygian, or Trojan Lycia; the word hybernæ being added because of its Northern situation in respect of this. Of this somewhat hath been said before in Phrygia Minor. In which also that there was a River called Xanthus, appears not only by those words of Virgil which are cited there, but by two passages in Oenone's Epistles unto Paris not less evident.

The people hereof were sometimes called Xanthi, from Xanthus the chief River hereof, which rising in two Springs from the foot of Mount Cadmus, passeth by a Town called Xanthus also, and falleth into the Sea. But generally they were called Lyci and the Country Lycia; from Lycus the son of Pandion King of Athens; who either conquered them, or did some memorable act amongst them, which deserved that honour.

The principal Mountain of this Country, and indeed of Asia, is the Mountain Taurus, which hath his beginning in this Province, extending Eastward to the great Oriental Ocean: of which somewhat hath been said already, and more is to be said hereafter, when these hills are grown unto the greatest.

One of the branches of it, and the most notable in this Country, is that called Chimæra, vomiting flames of fire like Sicilian Ætna: the bottom whereof was infested with Serpents, the middle parts grazed upon by Goats, and the higher parts made dangerous by the dens of Lions. Hence by the Poets made a Monster, having the head of a Lion, the body of a Goat, and the tail of a Serpent; according unto that of Quid in his Metamorphosis: Quoque Chimæra iugo mediis in partibus Hircumque Pellus et ævis Leo, caudam Serpens in habet. In English thus, For his body was divided in three parts, Chimæra from a Goat her mid-part takes, From Lions head and breast, her tail from Snakes.

This dangerous Mountain was first planted and made habitable by the care of Bellerophon, a noble Grecian, who is therefore feigned by the Poets to have killed this Monster employed upon this business by Jupiter the King of Lycia, to whom he had been sent by Prætor King of Argos, who was jealous of him; and sent his Letters to require that King to kill him. Whence came the saying, Bellerophonis litteras portare; applied to those who were unawares employed to carry Letters tending to their own destruction: such as those carried by Uriah to Joab the General, by command of David.

This Country was so populous, that anciently there was reckoned threecore Cities in it, of which six and thirty remained in the time of St. Paul; now nothing left of them but the names and ruins. Those of chief note were 1 Myra, the Metropolis of Lycia, when a Roman Province; by consequence an Archbishopric See; when Christian. St. Nicolas one of the Bishops hereof in the Primitive times, is said to have been a great Patron of Scholars: his Festival annually holden on the sixth of December, is celebrated in the Church of Rome with several Patrimies; and still in some Schools here in England (as in that of Burford in the County of Oxon, where I had my breeding and my birth) for a feast and a play-day. Of this City there is mention Acts 27. 5. 2 Telmessus, the Inhabitants whereof are famous for South-saying, and accounted the first Interpreters of dreams. 3 Patara, or Patras, (formerly called Sataros) beautified with a fair Haven, and many Temples; one of them dedicated to Apollo, with an Oracle in it, for wealth and credit equal unto that of Delphos. 4 Phaselis, on the Sea-side also, a nest of Pirates in the times of the Roman greatness, by whom then haunted and enriched, as Algier is now; but taken by Servilius, a Roman Captain, at such time as Pompey scoured the Seas. And unto the Phases of this Town the former ages were indebted for the first invention of those swift Vessels, which the Romans called a Phaselus, by the name of the Town; we may render it a Brigantine. 5 Cragerus, with the Mountain of the same name, thrusting out eight points or Promontories near to the Chimæra. 6 Rhodia, or Rhodiopolis, as Pliny calleth it, most probably of the Foundation of the neighbouring Rhodiens. 7 Solyra, on the borders hereof towards Pisidia, the people of which were conquered and added unto Lycia by the sword of Bellerophon, whom Johannes with a mind to kill him, according to the request of Prætor, employed in that service. 8 Corydalla, near the Mountain called Masgrum, the Massætes of Pliny. 9 Podale, the chief Town of Myliæ; as to Oenone is of OE-balia, two little Regions in this Country.

The Lycians were in former times a puissant people, extending their power upon the Seas, as far as Italy. Subjected to the Persian not without great difficulty; the people with such obstinacy defending their liberty, that some of them being besieged by Harpagus, Lieutenant unto Cyrus, the first Persian Monarch, they first burnt their wives, children, servants, and riches; in a common fire, and then made a furious rally upon the Enemy, by whom put all unto the sword. To Alexander in his march this way towards Persia, they submitted without any resistance. After whose death they fell with the rest of these parts into the hand of Seleucus. On the defeat of Antiochus at the battle of Magnesia, it was given to the Rhodiens for their assistance of that War; but governed as a Free Estate by a Common-Council of 14 Senators, elected out in their principal Cities: over whom was one chief President, or Prince of the Senate, whom they called by the name of Lyciarchus. In these remained the sole power of imposing taxes, making War and Peace, appointing Justitaries and inferior Magistrates; and all things appertaining to the publick Government. A shadow of which power they retained when brought under the Romans, and a shadow only: the Supreme power being no longer in the Senate of Lycia, but in that of of Rome. Nor had their Lyciarchus any thing but an empty name, and the vain privilege of ordering and disposing the publick Games, wherein by his Office he presided. When made a Province of the Empire, it had the same fortune as the others had, till it fell into the power of the Turks; after the death of the second Aladine made a part of the Kingdom of Caramania; of which more anon.

14 LYCAONIA.

LYCAONIA is bounded on the East with Armenia Minor, from which parted by a branch of the Mountain Taurus; on the West, with the Greater Phrygia; on the North, with Cappadocia; and on the South, with Pisidia. So called from the Lycæones a People of Lycia, or from the Lycæonians, Inhabitants of Lycæonia, a Town of Phrygia Major; who enlarging themselves into these parts, gave this name unto it. Either of which I should prefer before their conceit, who derive it from Lycæon King of Arcadia, dispossessed by Jupiter of that Kingdom; or think that Lycæon was a King of this Country, and not of that.

Places of note herein, 1 Iconium (now Cogui) the Metropolis hereof when a Roman Province: A place of great strength and consequence; situated advantageously in the Mountains for defence and safety, and therefore chosen for the Seat of the Turkish Kings in Lesser Asia, at such time as they were most distressed by the Western Christianians; who under the Command and presence of the Emperour Conrade did in vain besiege it, forced to depart thence with great loss both of men and honour. Afterwards made the Seat-Royal of the Aladine Kings, the former Race being extinguished by the Tartars; and finally of the Kings of the house of Caraman, whose Kingdom called the Kingdom of Caramania, contained all the South part of the Lesser Asia, that is to say, part of the Province of Caria, all Lycia, Pamphylia, Isauria, Cilicia, Pisidia, and this Lycæonia. 2 Lystra, the birth-place of Timothy the Evangelist; where Paul and Barnabas, having miraculously healed a Cripple, were adored as Gods; and not long after, on the instigation of some Jews which came down from Antioch and Iconium, most despitefully treated; Paul being stoned into the bargain, though it pleased God to raise him to life again, Acts 14. v. 19, 20. Such was the divine pleasure of Almighty God, that he did consent to the stoning of St. Stephen the Protomartyr, and took charge of the cloaths of his Executioners, should suffer in the same kind wherein he had trespass'd, and feel some smart remembrance of his former Actions. 3 Derbe, honoured by the preaching of the said Apostle. 4 Laranda, so called by Ptolemy, and still preserving its old name, the second place for reputation next unto Iconium. 5 Adoppilus. 6 Paralair. 7 Canna. 8 Caratha, with others named by Ptolemy, but not else observable.

Nor indeed were the Lycæonians themselves, from whomsoever they descended, of any great note or observation in the former times: subject to Cappadocia when it was a Kingdom, and reckoned as part of it in the time of Ptolemy, when made a Province of the Empire. Disembred from it by some of the following Emperours, either to create new Offices and Preferments for some Courti-Favourites, or to satisfy the ambition of some Prelates, aspiring to the dignity of a Metropolitan, it was made a Province of it self. Torn from the Empire by the Turks, it was at first a member of the Seleucian Kingdom, as afterwards of the Caramanian. Which last founded by Caraman a great Prince, of the Turks, on the death of Aladine the second, the last King of the Seleucian Family, was a great eye-sore unto those of the House of Osman from the time of Amirab: the first, who first warred upon it, to the Reign of Bajazet the second, who in fine subverted it, Anno 1486, as shall be shewn hereafter, when we come to Cilicia, the last of the Provinces of that Kingdom, in the course of this Work.

15 PISIDIA.

PISIDIA hath on the East, Armenia Minor; on the West, some parts of Lycia and Phrygia Major; on the North, Lycæonia; on the South, Pamphylia, and some part of Cilicia; from which parted by the main body of Mount Taurus. So called from the Piside, the Inhabitants of it; but the reason of their name I find not amongst my Authors.

The Country small, but furnished with great plenty of all provisions, as appeareth by that passage of Livie, where speaking of the Expedition of Manlius into these parts, he telleth us that he came into the Fields of Sagalassa (one of the Cities hereof) being of a rich soil, and plentiful of all manner of Fruit, Inde ventum est (saith he) in agrum Sagalassarum, ubi erem ferilemque omni genere frugum: But this is to be understood only of the Plains and Champian, the Mountainous parts hereof being (like others of that nature) poor and barren.

Towns of most observation in it, 1 Antioch, the Metropolis hereof, when a Province of the Roman Empire, called for distinction sake Antiochia Pisidia; mention of which is made Acts 4. and of the Jews Synagogue therein, honoured by St. Paul's preaching, the sum of whose divine Sermon is there repeated. Built by Seleucus, the first King of Syria of the Macedon Race, and by him so called in honour of his Father Antiochus. 2 Seleucia, the foundation of the same Seleucus, called also, to distinguish it from others of that name, Seleucia Pisidia. 3 Lysinnia, on the borders hereof towards Phrygia. 4 Selge, a Colony of the Lacedæmonians. 5 Sagalassa, situate in the most fruitful part of all this Country, as appears by that of Livie before-mentioned. 6 Cremna, which only had the honour of a Roman Colony. 7 Termessus, strongly situate in the Streights of the Mounts, the hilly Country about which hath the name of Milyer. 8 Olbanassa. 9 Platanessus, of which little memorable.

As for these Piside, they were originally descended of the Solyms, Inhabitants of the Borders of Lycia. A valiant People, and so affirmed to be by Livie, who calleth them longe optimas bello. Nor did he speak it without cause, this small Nation holding out against the Persians, and not conquered by them, when their great neighbours were subdued. Against these, Cyrus the brother of Artaxerxes Mucron King of Persia did pretend a Quarrel, as if they had trespassed on the borders of his Province. Which though perhaps they had not done, yet this gave him good occasion to levy an Army, pretending revenge on them, but intending to dispossess his Brother of the Persian Monarchy: But Tisaphernes Lieutenant to the King in Asia, seeing greater Preparations than were sufficient to oppose the weak Pisidians, made the King acquainted with his suspicions, who accordingly provided for resistance. The Army of Cyrus consisting of 12000 Grecians, and 100000 Persians; the Kings Forces were no fewer than 900000 fighting men. They met at Cannæ, not far from Babylon, where Cyrus lost both the Victory and this Life. The Grecians who had made their side good, and stood in honourable terms of Composition, being by Tisaphernes betrayed, lost the best of their Company. The rest under the the conduct of Xenophon, made safe retreat home in despite of 200000 men which followed at their heels. This Xenophon was an Agent in and the Historian of this Expedition, by whose example the Spartans first, and after them the Macedonians, were encouraged to attempt the Conquest of Persia. But to return to these Pisidians, they fell, with others of their neighbours, under the power of the Macedonians, and were made part of the Dominion of Seleucus. Abandoned by Antiochus to the will of the Romans, and settled in obedience by the Military progress of Manlius, spoken of before; they were in Ptolemy's time annexed to Pamphylia, as a part thereof. Afterwards made a distinct Province of it self, and so continued till those parts of the Eastern Empire were subdued by the Turks: first part of the Seleucian and Aladine Kingdoms, after of the Kingdom of Caramania; whereof more anon.

16 PAMPHYLIA.

PAMPHYLIA is bounded on the East, with Isauria and Cilicia; on the West, with Lycia, from which parted by a branch of the Taurus; on the North, with Pisidia, separated from it by the main body of that Mountain; and on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea, which in those parts which lie next to it, is called Mare Pamphylium. The reason of the name I find not, unless we think with Metaphrastes, that it was so named, quod ex omnibus gentibus constata esset, because inhabited by a mixture of many Nations; for so Pamphylia in the Greek Tongue doth expressly signifie. And probable enough it is, that lying near unto the Sea, with an open Shore, opposite to Africk, near Syria, and not far from Greece, several Nations from those Parts might repair unto it; and from thence the Name.

The Country for the most part is very Mountainous, over-run with the branches of Mount Taurus; but these branches feed great store of Goats, of whose hair are made abundance of Chamlets and Groggrains, not inferior unto Silks for fineness. Towards the Sea, which for the space of an hundred and fifty miles coasts along this shore, more pleasant, populous, and fruitful; well watered, and as well planted. The principal Rivers hereof, being 1 Cataractis. 2 Cestrus. and 3 Eurymedon; nigh to which last, Simon the son of Miltiades, Captain General of the Athenian Army, overthrew in one day both the Sea and Land Forces of the Persians. The manner thus: Having by plain force broke their Navy, of which he took and sunk no fewer than forty Ships, and three thousand Gallies, he stowed the Persian Vessels with his best men, attired in the Habit, and wearing the Colours of the Persians in the tops of their Ships. In their approach the Camp was opened, and all prepared to entertain their victorious Countrymen; but the Greeks once in, suddenly put them to the Sword, and took twenty thousand of them Prisoners.

Principal Cities of it, 1 Attalia, founded by Ptolemy Philadelphus King of Egypt, and for long time the greatest and most flourishing City of all this Province; well fenced, and seated very commodiously for Trade, on a very fair Bay, now called Golfo di Sattalia, by the name of the Town, but little altered. And though the Romans did confer the honour of the Metropolitan City upon Aspendus, yet still Attalia had the start in point of Riches, and is to this day a wealthy and well-traded Empery, the wealthier for the fair Tapestries which are herein made. Of this Town there is mention Acts 14. v. 25. 2 Perge, famous in old times for a Temple of Diana, and the yearly Festivals there held in honour of her, from hence called Diana Pergea; more famous in the fulness of time, for St. Paul's Preaching in it, mentioned Acts 14. v. 25. 3 Syde, renowned in times of Gentilism, for a Temple of Pallas. 4 Magydus, on the Sea-side, not far from Syde. 5 Aspendus, an in-land Town, but strongly situate, made the Metropolis of the Province in the time of the Romans; remarkable for the Fiddlers or Musicians of it, who with one hand both held their Harps and plaid upon them, keeping the other free for more gainful uses; whence the Proverb of Aspendus Citariista, an Aspendian Harper, by which they signified a Thief. The Town first founded by the Argives, the Colony sent thither being led by Mopsus, from whom the Country hereabouts had the name of Mopsia. 6 Olbia, not far from Attalia. 7 Caracennim, and 8 Colobressus, two of the Towns of that part hereof which had the name of Cilicia aspera; as 9 Cretopolis, and 10 Menedemium, of that part which was called Carbalia.

Of these Pamphylians there is little to be said in point of story, but that they were for the most part on the suffering hand; subject from time to time to those mightier Princes; who would not let their neighbours rest in quiet by them. Being on the same side of Taurus, and of easie access, they became first Vassals to the Syrians, and after to the Persian Kings. When Alexander passed that way, in his March towards Persia, he took all the Sea-Towns of it: The whole brought under with the rest of the Asian Provinces, by Antigonus first, after by Seleucus the great King of Syria. In the expiration of whose Line, this people and their neighbours of Cilicia, being left to themselves, and tempted by Mithridates to his Faction, began to be troublesome on the Seas; and proved notable Pirates, and were the first Authors or Inventors of those Gallies of an hundred and forty, or an hundred and sixty Oars apiece; which the Italians call from hence by the name of Pamphyli. But forced to leave this Trade at last, being warred upon by the Romans with great Forces both by Sea and Land (a fuller narrative whereof we shall have in Cilicia) in the conclusion of that War, they lost that liberty which so small a time they had enjoyed, and were made Vassals unto Rome. Afterwards made a Province of the Asian Dioceses, they ran the same fortune with the rest, till subdued by the Turks; and at the death of Aladine, were seized on by Caraman, and so became a part of his Kingdom; of which we shall hear more when we come to Cilicia. And so much for the Provinces of the Asian Dioceses (the Provinces of the Isles excepted, whereof more anon) converted to the Christian Faith by three great Apostles; but most especially by Saint Paul, of whose Travels through most Cities and Regions of it, there is such pregnant evidence in the Book of Acts. And that Saint Peter and Saint John had also their parts herein, appears by the Revelation of the one, and the first Epistle of the other: Paul planting, John and Peter watering, but God himself giving the increase. Pass we on next unto ISAVRIA and CILICIA, which though Provinces of the Dioceses of the Orient, were parts of the Caramanian Kingdom: of which having taken a Survey, and so cleared our selves of this Peninsula, we will then sail about such Islands as make up the remainder of the Asian Diocese.

17 ISAVRIA. 18 CILICIA.

These two, though distinct Provinces, I have joyned together, because the first was only a part of the last; Cilicia anciently comprehending both: The fortunes of both being the same also in point of story, which makes the conjunction the more natural.

ISAVRIA, a mountainous and hilly Province, seated on both sides of Taurus, hath on the East and South, the rest of Cilicia, whereof anciently it was a part; on the North, Pisidia; on the West, Pamphylia. So called from Isavrus, the chief City of it, when first made known unto the Romans; which being taken by Servilius the Proconsul, employed by Pompey in that Service, reduced the conquered Country under the command of Rome, and gave unto the Conquerour the first name of Isavricus.

The quality of the Soil, and whole Estate of this small Province, take thus from Ammianus Marcellinus, who had seen these Countries. Ciliciz latere dextro adnexa Isauria, uberi palmitis viret, & frugibus multus; quam mediam, flumen navigabile Calicadnus intersecundit, &c. i. e. "On the right hand of Cilicia lieth Isauria, a Province of a wealthy Soil, plentiful of Vines, and much other Fruits, which the River Calicadnus parteth in the very midst. Beautified, besides many Towns, with two principal Cities. 1 Seleucia, founded by Selencus; and 2 Claudiopolis, into which Claudius the Emperour brought a Roman Colony. For as touching 3 Isavrus, heretofore a walled City, and of most esteem, it hath been long ago destroyed, as yielding too secure a Refuge to the neighbouring Rebels; inasmuch that now there are scarce any visible Tracts of its former greatness. And not much after, He due Provincie bello quondam Piratico ceterius mixta Prædorum, à Servilio Proconsule misse sub jugum, factæ sunt æligales. i. e. "These Provinces (Cilicia and this) heretofore in the Piratical War joyning with those Robbers, were brought under by Servilius the Proconsul, and made subject to the State of Rome. And here we have in brief the nature of the Country, the names of the chief Rivers, and the principal Cities, with so much of the Story as relates to the first subjugation of it. What further doth concern it we shall hear in Cilicia, upon the which it did depend.

2 CILICIA is bounded on the East with Syria, or rather that part thereof which is called Comagena, separated from which part by a branch of the Mountain Taurus, called Amanus; on the West, with Pamphylia; on the North, with Isauria, and Armenia Minor; on the South, with the Mediterranean, and Syria, specially so called. It was thus named, as the old tradition was, from Cilice the Brother of Cadmus the Phœnician, a near neighbour to it; but as Bochartus (of whose humour I have told you often) from Calukim, a Phœnician word signifying Stones, quia lapidosa est Regio, because in some parts, especially in that which is called Cilicia Trachæa, or Cilicia Aspera, it was very stony. It is now called Caramania, as the last Province of the Caramanian Kingdom, which held out for those falling Princes, when the rest was conquered by the Turky of the Ottoman Race.

The Country laid by Marcellinus to be terra dives omnibus bonis, wealthy and fruitful of all necessities, Which Character holdeth good, chiefly in the Eastern parts, which heretofore had the name of Cilicia Campestris: the Western parts lying towards Pamphylia, formerly called Cilicia Aspera, being rough and stony. But generally where the Lands lie in several, and are duly cultivated; it answereth to the former Character; being also very well watered, and having a fair and large Sea-coast for the space of three hundred miles and upwards. Which notwithstanding, it is not much traded, and but meanly inhabited; a great part of the Country lying in large and common Fields, to which none can lay any proper claim, and therefore planted only with Goats and Sheep: out of which the Commoners on all sides raise good profit by Cheese and Butter, by their Fleeces chiefly. Here is also a good breed of Horses, of which six hundred yearly are culled out for the special Service of the Grand-Signeur. But as they have some profitable and useful Creatures, so they have others as dangerous and hurtful to them; especially those which the vulgar Greeks call the Squillachi, of a mixt making betwixt a Dog and a Wolf, which go in troops, and are so bold, and thew withal, as they use to let upon a man as he is asleep, and leave him neither Hat, Cloak, nor Fardel, nor any thing they can conveniently get from him.

Chief Rivers heretofore are, 1 Pyramus, now called Mulmistra, which rising on the North side of the Taurus, and forcing his passage through that Mountain, makes such a noise in falling down the precipices and rocks thereof, as resembleth at a great distance a clap of Thunder. 2 Orymagdus. 3 Calicadnus, spoken of before. 4 Cidnus, which riseth in the Anti-Taurus; a River of a violent course, and so cold a water, that as Pliny writes, it cureth the Gout: the waters of which proved very dangerous to Alexander the Great, the coldness of them striking violently into his stomach; and deadly to Frederick the first Emperour of the Germans, as he here bathed himself, the violence of the stream tripping up his heels, and he not able to recover, was presently drowned.

Of their chief Hills I need add nothing, having already said that the Country is parted by Amanus from Syria, and by Taurus it self from Pisidia and Armenia Minor; not easy of entrance by the first, but very difficult by the last: The Streights thereof called Pyle Ciliciz, or the Ports of Cilicia, being indeed so freight, and almost impassable, that had they been guarded or regarded by the Persians, as they should have been, the Progress of Alexander's Victories might have ended there. But Arsines, who had the charge of them, durst not stand his ground, and so left them open to the Enemy, whom by those Ports he put into the possession of the Kingdom of Persia. With better faith, though no better fortune, did the Souldiers of Pescennius Niger make good these Streights against the Emperour Severus; the Monarchy of the World lying the second time at the stake, and to be tried for in this Cock-pit. For the Nigrians possessed of these Streights and Entrances, courageously withstood the Severian party; till at last a sudden Tempest of Rain and Thunder continually darting in their faces (as if the very Heavens had been armed against them) they were fain to leave the Passage, and therewith the Victory to the adverse Faction: having sold that at the loss of 20000 of their own lives, which Alexander had the happiness or the hap to buy for nothing.

In the borders of this Country towards Pamphylia, lived a Tribe or Nation called the Soli, originally of Atica: But in long tract of time disused from converse and communication with their Countrymen, they spoke that Language so corruptly, that from their barbarous manner of pronunciation, and as rude expression, came the word Solæsimus. Yet amongst these were born three men of eminent note, that is to say, Chrysippus the Philosopher, Philemon and Aratus the Poets; out of the Writings of which last, St. Paul vouchsafed to use this Passage, Ἡ γὰρ ἡμεῖς ἐσμὲν ἱ. e. for we are also his off-spring, Acts 17. v. 28. That blessed Apostle thought himself never the worse Preacher, for being brought up in humane Learning at the feet of Gamaliel; nor held it any disparagement to the Influences of the Holy Ghost, to make use of it in his Sermons and divine Discourses: and therefore to prevent those Cavils which ignorance or misprision might chance to make in times succeeding, he hath hath thrice vouchsafed the words and testimony of the Heathen Writers; viz. of Epimenes, Tit. 1. v. 12. of Alexander, 1 Cor. 15. v. 33. and that of Aratus before mentioned. So lawful is it in this kind, for those of the Spiritual Israel to rob the Aegyptians; and to make this Exodus serviceable to their Mittis Sarah.

Principal Cities of this Province, 1 Sola, the habitation of the Soli, before remembered; by some said to be built by Solon the Armenian; but generally affirmed to have been planted by those of Rhoder and Aricea; mistakenly called Heliopolis, by Qu. Curtius, which is as much in Latine as Solis Civitas, or the City of the Sun. On the site hereof then decayed and ruinous, the Town having been destroyed by Tigranes the Armenian King, in his late Wars against the Romans, did Pompey build his City of Pompeopolis after his victory over the Pirates; who not only Lorded it over the Seas, and consequently obstructed Trade and Merchandise, but wasted and spoiled the Villages of Italy it self. Pompey being Victor, and having inflicted exemplary punishment on the Ring-leaders, with the rest, peopled this new Town, and the Country adjoining, allowing them competent possessions, lest want and necessity should again enforce them to the like courses. An action truly commendable, and worthy so great a Captain, rather to take an occasion of offending from the people, than after offence done, to punish them. Heliopolis in the Uopia, somewhat bitterly, though perhaps not unjustly, inveigheth against the Laws of England, for ordaining death to be the punishment of theft, Cum multo potius providendum fuerit, ut aliqui ejus proventus vite; ne cuiquam sit tam dira furandi primum, deinde perendi necessitas. Whereas (saith he) the Laws ought to make provision for putting men into some orderly course of life, and not let them run upon the necessity of stealing first, and then being hanged for it. 2 Tarsus, the birth-place of St. Paul the Apostle; for that sufficiently famous, were there nothing else to commend it to consideration: But it was a Town withal of great note and consequence, the Metropolis first, of all Cilicia; and after the division of Cilicia Prima. The Inhabitants whereof had the privilege of Roman Citizens. Situate in a goodly Plain on the banks of the Cydus, and by some said to be the work of Sardanapalmus the last King of Assyria; it being engraven on a Monument erected to him, that in one day he had built this Tarsus. And 3 Anchiala, another City of this Country, near the Sea-side, and not far from the Promontory Zephyrium. Of the same date (if the said Monument speak truth,) but neither of the same fortune nor continuance, that being utterly decayed, but Tarsus still remaining of great wealth and strength. Much spoken of in the Wars of the Holy Land, and in the Stories of the Caramanian and Ottoman Kings. And though the Tarsians to ingratiate themselves with Julius Cæsar, would needs have their Country called Julio-polis; yet the old name survived the new, and it is to this day called Tersia or Tersassa by the vulgar Greeks: but Hamsa by the Turky; as Bellonius telleth us. 4 Adena, the Adana of Polomy, a large Town, but unvalled, instead whereof defended by a very strong Castle. Situate in a fruitful soil, both for Wine and Corn, wherewith the Town is always furnished for the use of those that are to travel over the Taurus, who commonly take in here three days provision. 5 Epiphania, the birth-place of George the Arian Bishop of Alexandria; thrust on the world of late by some learned men (but of more industry than judgment) for George the Cappadocian Martyr. 6 Mopsuestia, as famous, or infamous rather, for giving title to Theodorus Mopsuestenus, Bishop hereof, and a great Patron of the Nestorian heresies, in the time of S. Chrysostome. The City otherwise of good note, and of great consequence, in the course of the Roman Wars, described at large by Ammianus Marcellinus, 7 Mus, upon a spacious Bay, called Helles Sinus, Asien; near the borders of Syria; memorable for the great battle here fought betwixt Alexander and an handful (in comparison) of his Macedonians; and that vast Army of Darius, (himself there in person) consisting of 600000 undisciplined Asians; whereas Alexander lost their lives, that the dead bodies strewed to have buried the grounds. For partly by the unskillfulness of the Commanders, who chose so ill a place to fight in, that they could make no use of their mighty numbers; and partly by the effectment of the Asian Souldiers, unable to endure the charge, there fell that day no fewer than 200000 of the Persians, 40000 of them being taken Prisoners, amongst them the Wives and Daughters of Darius, and not above 100 of the Alexandrians, if Qu. Curtius be not partial in relating the Story. A victory which assured Alexander of his former purchases, and opened a way unto the rest: the Persians not being able to make head again, till he had pierced into the bowels of their Empire, and added Syria, and Aegypt to his former Conquests. Of so great consequence is one full Victory to the losing and getting of a Kingdom. This Town it self now called Aiazæ, and the great Bay on which it standeth Golfo di Aiazæ. 8 Alexandria, built by command of the Conquerour near the place of battle, commodiously for Trade; as upon the Sea; but otherwise in a Fenny and Boggy Soil, which make the air there to be very unwholesome to men not used to it: little now remaining, but a few houses on the Sea-shore built of straw and mud; hardly affording it the reputation of a forry Village, and would not long continue such, but that it is the nearest Haven to the Town of Alippo (whereof more in Syria) which draweth unto it the rest of some Christian Factors, whose houses are of Clay and Timber; but of them not many. The Town at first called Alexandria, as before was said, diminished first to Alexandretta, now called Scanderone. 9 Nicopolis, another of Alexander's foundations, so named in memory of his great Victory before mentioned. 10 Amavarka, a City of great Antiquity in the time of Strabo, and the Metropolis of the Province of Cilicia Secunda. 11 Heraclæa, mentioned by Belonius, and by him placed in a fruitful and well-cultivated Plain, at the foot of Mount Taurus a fair and large Town, as he reporteth it, and distant from Adana towards the Northwest about three days journey. But I find no such Town in Strabo, or Polomy, or any other of the Ancients. 12 Scandalaro, a City of Cilicia Aspera, of that part of Cilicia, which lieth towards Pamphylia; heretofore with the adjoining Territory governed as a State distinct, when all the rest of this Country was under the Kings of Caramania: against whom the Prince heretofore, being a Mahometian, had preferred his liberties, by the assistance of the Knights of Rhoder, and the Kings of Cyprus. And when the Caramanian Kingdom was subdued by Bajazet, he made to good conditions for himself, that he had other lands and estates in the Lesser Asia assigned to him in exchange for this, and so surrendered this to the will of the Conquerour.

The first Inhabitants of this Country were of the Progeny of Tarshish, the son of Javan, by whom, or some of his posterity, to preserve his memory, the City of Tarsus was first built. Increased in tract of time by some new Colonies out of the Neighbouring parts of Syria, it followed for the most part the fortunes of its successively together subject to the Alyrians, Persians, and Macedonians. In the declining fortunes of the house of Selencus they began to stand upon their own legs, and might have continued longer in so good a posture, had they not hearkened to, ill Counsels. Tempted by Mithridates to join with him against the Romans, of whose greatness all the Eastern States were grown very jealous; and being naturally good Sea-faring men, they began together with the Pamphylia, to infect the Seas. At first they ventured no further than the shores adjoining. But after emboldened with success, and finding that the Romans were sufficiently embroiled in domestic troubles, and a sharp war with Mithridates, fell upon the Coasts of Greece, and in fine of Italy it self; Publius Servilius the Proconsul first employed against them, gave them an overthrow at Sea; and following his good fortune, set upon them in their Harbours and retiring places. In which pursuit he not only took from them Phageli, a strong Town in Lycia, one of their Reveries, and others of their best and strongest Receptacles; but waisting the whole Country of Cilicia, fell upon Samus, the most defensible Town thereof, which he took and ransacked. No sooner was Servilius departed home, but they broke out more violently than before: filling all the Creeks and Ports of the Eastern Seas with their Frigates, Brigantines and other light Piratical Vessels, insomuch that Pompey himself thought it to be an action not unbecoming his greatness, to undertake the War against them. And he pursued it to such purpose, that having armed 500. sail of all sorts, and stowed his ships with 130000 men, he set upon them all at once; and in the space of one sole month made an end of the War. An action not sufficiently to be wondered at, if we consider either the speediness of it, done in so little time as a month; or the cheapness of the Victory, purchased without the loss of one Roman Vessel; or finally, the importance and consequence of it, the Pirates from that time not daring to infect the Seas; and all Cilicia subjected to the State of Rome. How they were afterwards disposed of, hath been shewn already. After this they did very good service unto Pompey in his War against Cesar; of whom thus Lucan, reckoning up his Allies and Aids:

Aique Cilix iusta, nunc non Pirata, carina.
And the reformed Cilician now
No Pirate, in his fleet did row.

Nor were they phant unto him only, as unto their Conqueror; but generally to him kind and tractable in the time of Cicero, one of the first Proconsuls or Lord Deputies which were sent to govern them; that he writ merrily to Rome, that he found all quiet in his Province: save that the Panthers (some of which, one of his Friends had prayed him to send to Rome, for the adorning of his triumph) were for fear of him fled into Pamphylia. At the first conquest by the Romans, it was divided only into Campestrem and Tracheam, as was said before; of which Campestris was reduced immediately to the form of a Province. Aspera or Trachea was a while continued under the Government of Kings, till the time of Vespasian, and then made a Province as the other. By the succeeding Emperours, on some reasons of State (if not those intimated in Lycania) the number of Provinces being increased (though the bounds of the Empire were no larger than they had been formerly) the whole was divided into three: that is to say, Cilicia prima, taking up all Campestris wholly; Cilicia secunda, containing the Maritime parts of Cilicia Aspera; and Isauria, taking up the Mountainous part of this last division. Laid by the Emperor Constantine to the Dioecesis of the Orient; and consequently subject in spiritual matters to the Patriarch of Antioch, where the Presidius Prasoris Orientis had his usual residence. In the falling of the Eastern Empire, it was conquered by the Saracens in the time of Muhaveas or Abuavi, the sixth Caliph. Continuing under their command till their declination, it was recovered by the Greek or Eastern Emperours, and from them conquered by the Turks in the course of their victories. But the first race of Turkish Kings being worn out by the Tartars, and the Aladinian Kings ending in Aladine the second, it was part of the new Kingdom of Caramanians, continuing theirs till the destruction of that line by Bajazet the second, Anno 1486, by whom incorporated with the rest of the Ottoman Empire.

Thus having made our progress over all the Provinces of the Lesser Asia, and shewn how every one of them was made subject to the Turkish Tyranny: we must next draw down the succession of such Turkish Kings as have reigned herein, till it was wholly conquered by the Princes of the house of Ottoman. Concerning which we are to know in the way of Preamble, that the Turks having made themselves Masters of the Kingdom of Persia, and following their successes into Syria also, fell to a breach amongst themselves. For making up whereof it was descended unto by Akan, the then Persian Sultan, that Meloch and Ducas, two of his discontented Kinsmen, should be infeoffed in the Cities of Aleppo and Damascus, and their several Territories, with whatsoever they could conquer from the Caliph of Egypt, possessed at that time of most part of Syria, Cilicia, and some of the adjoining Provinces. It was also then agreed upon, that a third, but nearer Kinsman, called Cutlu Moser, another of the Leaders of the opposite faction, should have leave to conquer for himself, whatsoever he could win from the Christian Princes: And he accordingly being furnished with a competent Army, subdued the Provinces of Media and Armenia in the Greater Asia, with Cappadocia, Pontus, and Bithynia in Asia Minor. Which, and the rest of their affairs, take here in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Turkish Kings in Asia Minor of the Selzuccian Family.

- 1075 1 Cutlu Moser, Nephew to Tangrolipix, the first Persian Sultan of the Turks, won Media, part of Armenia Major, Cappadocia, Pontus and Bithynia.
- 2 Solyman, son of Cutlu Moser, for a while dispossessed of most of his cities by the Western Christians, in their first passage towards the Holy Land; the Northern parts of which by those Christians were restored to the Grecian Empire, never recovered afterwards by the Kings of this house.
- 3 Mabomet, the son of Solyman, recovered some part of his estates in the Lesser Asia; but outed of them, and subdued by
- 4 Musfat, Sultan, or Lord Deputy of Iconium for the Kings of Damascus; but of the same Selzuccian Family, who was thereby possessed of all the Turkish Provinces in the Lesser Asia.
- 5 Calisultan, the son of Musfat (to whom his Father left Iconium, with the adjacent Provinces) wrested Amasia, and Ancyra, from his brother Jagupasan; Sebastia, and Cesaria, from his brother Dadune: which with their several Territories were bequeathed unto them, by the will of their Father. He overthrew the Emperor Emanuel Comnenus, and united Phrygia to his Kingdom.
- 6 Reucratine, the third son of Calisultan, having dispossessed his three brethren, Musfat, Cappadocian, Catechphos, of the estates left them by their Father, became sole Monarch of all the Turkish Provinces in the Lesser Asia. In the latter end of whose reign, Oceana the

Tartarian Cham having driven the Turks out of Persia, many of them under the conduct of Aladine, a Prince of the same Selzuccian Family, joyined themselves to their Countrymen here, with whose help they won Cilicia from the Grecian Emperours, who in the reign of Calo-Johanner, (the Turks being then embroiled by the Western Christians) had not long before regained it; and after the decease of Reucratine, advanced him to the whole estate.

The Turkish Kings in Asia Minor, of the race of Aladine.

- 7 Aladine, descended in a direct line from Cussane, the last Turkish Sultan in Persia, having with many of his Nation feated himself in Cilicia, first made Sebastia, one of the Cities thereof, his chief seat or residence: which after the death of Reucratine, he removed to Iconium, as the ancient Regal City of the former Kings.
- 8 Azalide, by some called Azadine, eldest son of Aladine, waisted the most part of his reign in wars with his brother Jathatine, whom at last he forced into exile.
- 9 Jathatine, on the death of his brother possessed the Kingdom, slain afterwards in single combat by Theodorus Lascaris, Emperor of the Greeks, at Nice.
- 10 Jathatine II, Son of the former, driven out of his Kingdom by the Tartars, and died in exile: the Turks becoming Tributaries and Vassals unto the Tartarian.
- 11 Majst, and Cei-cubades, of the same Selzuccian Family (but whether the sons of the second Jathatine, I am not able to say) substituted in his place; as Tributaries to the conquering Tartars.
- 12 Aladine II, son of Cei-cubades, succeeded his Father in the Kingdom, but as Vassal and Leigeman to the Tartars. After whose death, leaving no issue of his body, the great Princes of his Family, divided amongst them his Dominions. To Saracban fell Eolia, Ionis, and part of Lydia, from him named Saracban, Saracban, or Saracha-Illis to Aidin the rest of Lydia, Phrygia Major, and the greatest part of the Greater Mysia, from him called Aidin, or Aidin-Illis to Carasus, the Lesser Phrygia, with the rest of Mysia, from him denominated Carasus, or Carasus-Illis; to the Family of the Isfendiars, the Cities of Heraclea, Sinope, and that part of Pontus which lieth next to Bithynia. There were also lesser Togarchies or subdivisions, from whence we find a Prince of Smyrna, a second of Amasia, a third of Amisus, a fourth of Scandolore, besides many others. But the main body of the Estate was seized by Caraman, who for his share had the whole Provinces of Lycia, Lycania, Pisidia, Pamphylia, Isauria, Cilicia, with the Regal City of Iconium, the greatest part of Caria, (the rest of it appertaining to the Prince of Menesia), with part of Cappadocia, and Armenia Minor, and some Towns in Phrygia, continuing in his Family for as many descents (as either of the former had held before) in great power and lustre, under

The Turkish Kings in Asia Minor, of the house of Caraman.

- 13 Caraman, the first raiser of this Family, Contemporary with Ottoman the first King of that race.
- 14 Aladine, son of Caraman, and Son-in-law of Amurath, the first of the house of Ottoman, by whom subdued, but pardoned and restored unto his Estate, on the humble entreaties of his wife.

- 15 Aladine II, Son of the former, subdued by Bajazet the first, and hanged by Tertimiser, one of Bajazet's great Commanders.
- 16 Mabomet, son of Aladine the second, recovered his Kingdom on the death of Bajazet; vanquished and led captive by the mighty Tamerlane. Afterwards waited upon and vanquished by Mabomet the son of Bajazet, deemed his peace, by yielding up unto him many of his principal Towns; and was finally slain at the siege of Attalia.
- 17 Ibrahim, the son of Mabomet, and son-in-law of Amurath the second, against whom unadvisedly raising War, he was forced to submit and become his Tributary: after whose death, rebelling against Mabomet the Great, he was then also vanquished, and a reconciliation made betwixt them.
- 18 Ibrahim II, by some called Pyramus, the son of Ibrahim the first, supported Zemes, brother of Bajazet the second in his War against him; for which Bajazet having settled his affairs, invaded and subdued the Kingdom of Caramania, killed the unfortunate King in battle, and so united that Estate unto the rest of the Dominions of the house of Ottoman. The strange successes of which house, from the first rising of it to these present times, shall be deferred till we come unto Turcomania; from whence this Nation first attempted and achieved the conquest of Persia, and which only of all their large possessions doth retain any thing of their name. In the mean time we will survey the Islands of this Lesser Asia, and so proceed to their possessions in the Greater, as they lye before us.

19 The Province of the ASIAN ISLES.

The Province of the ASIAN ISLES comprehendeth all the Islands in Asia Minor, from the mouth of the Hellespont to the Rhodes, reckoning that for one: united first into a Province by the Emperor Vespasian, next reckoned as a part of the Asian Dioecesis; and afterwards, together with the Province of the Hellespont, and that of Asia properly and specially so called, making up the peculiar or exempt jurisdiction of the Proconsul of Asia. Those of most consideration are, 1. Tenedos, 2. Lesbos, 3. Chios, 4. Samos, 5. Coos, 6. Icaria, 7. Patmos, 8. Clarus, 9. Carpathos, 10. Rhodes. Others of less note, having nothing memorable but their names, are scarce worth the naming.

1. TENEDOS, is situate at the mouth of the Hellespont, over against the noted Promontory called of old Sigeum (but now Cape Janizarie) a Promontory of Troas, or the Lesser Phrygia, from which distant not above five miles. The Isle it self in circuit no more than ten; swelling with a round Mountain towards the North, in other parts level in both producing as good Wines as the best of Greece. It took name, as the general Tradition was, from Tenes the son of Cycnus, King of a little City in the Lesser Phrygia, who being falsely accused by his Stepdame for soliciting her to that incestuous mixture which she had violently importuned, and he as piously refused, was by the command of his Father put into a chest, exposed to the mercy of the Sea, and here miraculously preserved. Here for a time he is said to reign, with great commendation for his justice; and afterwards going to the aid of the Trojans, to have been slain by the hand of Achilles: of whom therefore it was not lawful to make gave over the Siege. At last they became subject to the Romans with the rest of Greece, and followed punctually the same change of fortunes, as did those of Lesbos, which we have spoken of before; till given by Andronicus Palaeologus, one of the last Greek Emperours, to the Justinians, a noble Genesian Family, alliant to him in his wars. Under them it continued as Tributaries to the Turks (after the Turks had made themselves Masters of Constantinople) to whom they annually paid eighteen thousand Ducats, till the year 1566. When Solymann the Magnificent picking a quarrel with them for some suspected correspondency with the Knights of Malta, commanded Piali, one of his greatest Bells, to seize the Island. And he accordingly presenting himself before the City, with a strong Fleet of eighty Gallies, did so astonish and amaze the Inhabitants of it, that without any other summons than the sight of his Navy, they surrendered themselves unto his disposing, upon Easter-day being the fane day he came before it. Since that time it hath continued Turkish, all save their Religion, enjoyed by them with like liberty as in former times.

4 S A M O S, is on the South-east of Chios, distant above five miles from the shores of Ionia, about eighty, or eighty seven in compass, environed for the most part, especially on the North-west, with inaccessible rocks, but beautified with a fair and capacious Haven; of little use by reason of Pirates which infested those Seas. The soil sufficiently enriched with most kind of fruits, abundantly plentiful of Oyl and Olives, but of Vines altogether unimproved; which is the more to be admired in regard all the Islands and shores about it, produce them in so great a plenty. It stretcheth from the East to the West; and on the South part of it stood the City of Samia, near unto the Haven before spoken of. In former times populous, and well inhabited, as was the rest of the Island, now wholly desolate in a manner, because of the Pirates, and in most places very much overgrown with woods; becoming thereby very useful to those public enemies, who find here Timber enough for Shipping, and can upon the sudden put a ship to Sea, for pursuit of their Robberies. The chief commodity it affordeth besides those above, is a medicinal Earth, useful for Chirurgery and Physick: of which in former times were those Vessels made, called Vasa Samia, in great request amongst the Romans.

Anciently it had the names of Dryusa, Anabemusa, Melampylus, and Cyparissa; cutworn by that of Samos, which it still retaineth. Memorable in old times for the birth of Juno, of one of the Sibyls, hence called Samia; and finally of the wife-man Pythagoras (a wiser than any of the seven wise Masters so renowned amongst them) who first brought Philosophy into Greece, and from thence into Italy. Once a free Commonwealth of no small esteem, the institutes whereof are mentioned by Heraclides, in his Books of the several Commonwealths then being; afterwards made subject to the Tyrant Polycrates, a man so fortunate, that for a long time he never fell into any mischance. Fearing lest such a long calm would bring on a tempest, he fell into the Sea a most precious Ring, by him deviously effected, that so it might be said he had some misfortunes. Which after he had found again in the belly of a fish, brought accidentally to his Table, he was overcome by Orantes a Persian, and brought to a miserable death. Leaving a notable example, that fortune is certain in nothing but uncertainties; and like a Bee with a sharp sting, hath always some misery following in the train of a long concatenation of felicity. From this time forwards it ran the same fortune with the rest of these Islands; subject successively to the great Monarchies in former times, as of late times to the Venetians, Greeks, and Turks, who do now enjoy it.

5 I C A R I A, (now called Niceria) lyeth not far from Samos, to the West-ward of it, narrow, but extended out in length; the whole compass seven and thirty miles; neighboured by two great Rocks, or little Islands, of old called Melanibii, now the Fernaces; formidable at all times to Mariners, in the night especially. Meanly inhabited at the present, though abounding in pasturage, and yielding sufficiency of corn; Havenless, and therefore the less frequented, yet that defect supplied by commodious Roads. In former times called Doliche, then Macris, after Iscifesa; which name it held till the flight of Dedalus out of Crete, who justly fearing the anger of Minos, for being Pandar to his wife in her loves with Taurus, secretly with Icarus his son, fled out of that Island. And because he would be sure to out-strip the Rovers who pursued him, he added sails unto his Boat, which it is said he first invented. But Icarus, coming after in another Bark, delighted with the new device, clapped on too much Canvass, and bearing too great a sail, was here cast away. Hence the new name both to this Island, and the Seas adjoining to it, and the occasion of the Fable of Dedalus putting wings upon his shoulders, when he fled from Crete; and of his flying too high, whereby the wax melted which his wings were fastened with, and so he perished in the water. Of which thus Ovid.

Dum petit infirmis nimium sublimia pennis
Icarus, Icaris nomina fecit aquis.

In English thus,

Whilst Icarus weak wings too high did soar
He fell, and gave name to the Icarian shore.

6 P A T M O S, now called Palmosa, is situate on the South of the other two; A little Island, not above 30 miles in compass. Mountainous, but indifferently fruitful, especially of wheat and pulse; of other commodities, and fruits, not so well provided. On one of these Mountains stands a Town of the same name with the Island; having on the top thereof a Monastery of Greek Caloires; and on the bottom a fair haven (I mean in reference to the Island.) Forty fail of Ships are said to belong unto it; by the trading whereof they bring in those provisions which the soil affordeth not; the soil about the Town being so incomparably barren, that nothing groweth on or near it, but on such earth as is brought thither from other places. Unto this Island (as to others in other parts of the world) did the Roman Emperours use to confine offenders. A punishment laid by Domitian on St. John the Divine, who in this place writ his Revelation to the Churches of Asia. So much the Text affirms for certain, as to the writing of it in this Island. And the Inhabitants by tradition point unto an house on the North-side of the Town, in which it was written, and not far off the Cave where it was revealed. Both places equally honoured by the Greeks and Latines. They also shew a dead mans hand, which they affirm to be his, the nails whereof grow again as oft as cut. But the Turks (saith Maginus) claim it for the hand of one of their Prophets. Let them dispute the controversy, whilst we hast to

7 C L A R O S, another Island not far off, containing about 40 miles in compass. Well stored with commodious Harbours, but very mountainous; some of those hills of such an height, that from the tops thereof, the City of Ephesus in Ionia, (though distant at least eighty miles) may be easily seen. It is now called Calama. Neighboured by Lero (of old called Ileron) a little Island, not above eighteen miles in circuit, but very populous, inhabited both by Greeks and Turks, and furnishing the neighbouring Countries

Countries with some store of Aleat. Sacred in former times was Clarus to Apollon, reckoned by him amongst his honours, in his brags to Daphne; where he declares,

Mori Delphica refer.

Et Clarus, & Tenedos, Parazaque, Regia Servit.
That is to say,

The folk of Delphos, Clarus, and Clarus.
And Royal Papae, my Vassals are.
8 C O O S, C O S, or C O U S, for by all these names it was called of old, is situate over against Caria, in the very bottom of the Aegean, that is to say, in that part thereof which is called Myrmyron, the Myrmyron Sea. A Sea so called, as some say, from one Myrmyron, Coachman or Charioter of Oenomaus, who having betrayed his race with Pelops, and importunate for his reward, was by Pelops precipitated into this Sea. Pliny less probably conceiveth that it took name from Myrmyron, a little Island not far from Euboea, a little too far off to extend its name to the shores of Caria. And therefore considering that Lydia anciently was called Myrmyra, and that in those times Aolis and Ionia, lying on this Sea, were accomplished but as parts thereof, I think we may resolve with more probability, that it derived this name from that Lydian Myrmyra.

In this Sea stands the Isle of Coos, now called Lange, affording Skylets as they pass by a most beautiful prospect, lying for the most part flat and level, but swelling towards the East with some graceful Mountains, out of which issue many sweet and pleasant springs to refresh the Island which maketh it more than ordinary fruitful. Productive of Cypriss trees, Turpentine, and sundry other, both delightful and medicinal; but most especially celebrated for those rich wines, which the Good fellows of Rome so much loved to quaff, called Vinum Coi. It is in compass 70 miles, having a Town of the same name, in the suburbs whereof stood anciently the Temple of Aesculapius, famous and rich with the offerings of those, who having by his assistance (as they supposed) recovered health, came hither to make payment of their vows, and express their gratitude. It is now fortified with a strong Castle, held by a Garrison of Turks; and besides this, two Villages only in the Island, and both inhabited by Greeks.

In elder times it had the name of Merope, Caria, and Nymphæa, and at last Coos. Memorable in being the Country of many famous men who were here born; viz. of Hippocrates, the Reviver of Physick, then almost decayed, who is hence called Hippocrates Coi. 2 Sinius, a Physician also. 3 Ariston, a Peripatetic Philosopher. 4 Philetas, as good an Orator, as a Poet. 5 Nicias, who for a time oppressed the liberty of this people. And 6 of Apelles, the famous Painter; who to express his Art in the Picture of Venus, (rising naked out of the Sea) assembled together all the most beautiful women of this Island, uniting in that piece their divided perfections. Which famous piece being afterwards hanged up in the Temple of Stomatime, one of the principal of this Island, was thence conveyed to Rome by Augustus, and there dedicated to Cesar, as the mother of the Julian family: the Coans in regard hereof, being eased of a great part of their annual tributes. Not much less memorable for that fine thin stuff (such as now called Tissanis) so much in use amongst the chief Ladies of Rome; which at once shewed them clothed and naked. Periclidus Antisthenes velle, ita, ut nuda conspici possint, as my Author hath it. These they called Vestimenta Coa, and Vester Coi, so often mentioned by the Poets, especially in their Amatoria; as Coa puelle Vestis, in Tibullus; Indue me Coi, in Propertius; Sive eris Coi, saith the Poet Ovid. So in others also, too many, and too long to be added here. I pass to 9 C A R P A T H O S, situate on the South of Caria, in the Mediterranean, from this Island, called hereabouts the Carpathian Sea. A rugged and unpleasing soil, full of difficult Mountains, but those Mountains stored with quarries of most excellent Marble, in circuit about 60 miles extending, more in length than breadth. Here, tofore beautified with four Cities, and thence named Carpathus. But three of the four Cities are long since perished, that of Carpathus being still remaining, and still the principal of the Island; both now called Scarpanto. Some other Towns it hath all along the shore, and every one of them furnished with some Port or Haven; but small, and for the most part very unsafe. Situate in the middle as it were betwixt Crete and Rhodes. It hath continued hitherto in the possession of the State of Venice (if not taken from them very lately), to whom being given with other of the Islands of these Grecian Seas, at the taking of Constantinople by the Western forces, it had the fortune or felicity to continue theirs, when almost all the residue were subdued by the Turks. The people Greek, of the communion of that Church, notwithstanding their subjection to a state of Italy.

10 R H O D E S, situate in the Rhodian or Carpathian Sea, lyeth over against the coast of Lycia in Asia Minor, from which distant about 20 miles. Formerly called Oppidus, Alteria, Eliques, Trinacchia, Pellus, Corymbia, Alalyria, and at last Macaria; it is called finally and fortunately in the name of Rhodes. So named by the Grecians from the abundance of Roses, which the soil produceth. Rhodes in that language signifying a Rose, the Isle of Roses, as it were; but as the Poets say of Rhoda a Nymph of these Seas, here desecrated by Apollon, or rather of Rhoda, one of the daughters of Apollon, begot on Pegeus. For to one of them this Island is ascribed.

Insula Delia Rhodos, a Sole et Cypride nata est Rhoda, from whom this Isle took name. Of Venus and Apollon came.
The Island 140 miles in compass, situated with a most temperate air, and a fertile soil, producing fruits in very great plenty, full of excellent pastures, adorned with trees which always do continue green, and in a word, embellish with the gifts of nature that it gave occasion to the Fable of those Golden Shagwines, which were once said to have fallen upon it. The mines hereof so excellent, and so rich of taste, that by the Romans they were used in their second courses, or reserved for the sacrifices of the Gods; as too good for mortals, as affirmed by Virgil in the Georgicks. The cause of which perpetual flourishing, and continual spring, is to be ascribed to the powerful influences of the Sun; so dearly cherishing this Island, or so much in love with it, that it is constantly affirmed, that no day passeth wherein he shinneth not clearly on it, be the air in all other places never so much over-cast with clouds, or obscured by mists. Feigned for that cause to have been naturally a meer Marsh, altogether inhabitable, if not covered with waters; till loved by Rhodus, and exalted above the waves by his vigorous influences.

Of the People we shall speak anon; Look we in the mean time on the places of most observation. 1 Lindus, (now Linda) a petty town but formerly of more esteem; of note in those times for the Temple consecrated to Minerva, by Danaus King of Egypt, landing here when he fled out of that Kingdom. As also for the birth of Chares, the Architect of the huge Colossus, whereof more presently, but specially for the nativity of Cleobulus, one of the seven wise men of Greece: the other six being Solon of Attica, Periander of Corinth, Chilon of Sparta, Bias of Præne, Thales of Miletum, and Empedocles of Agrigento. Seven men of whom the Grecians most intemperately bragged, as if the World could neither afford them equals, or an equal number: for which decided handily by Lactantius, an old Christian Writer, who scoffs their paucity, and calleth it a miserable and calamitous age, In quo septem soli fuerunt qui hominum vocabula intermitterent; in which there were no more than seven who deserved to be accounted men. 2 Rhodes, anciently, as now the chief City of it, the Island from hence taking name, and formerly, as well as in latter times, depending on the fortunes and strength hereof. No place in elder times held superiour to it, for the convenience of the Haven, magnificent buildings, delightful Orchards, and other excellencies. Situate on the East part of the Isle, on the declining of an hill, and near the Sea, where it enjoyeth a safe and common Haven: treble walled, fortified with thirteen Turrets, and five strong Bulwarks, besides divers Scones, and other out-works; this Town, and Famagusta in the Isle of Cyprus, being conceived to be the two strongest holds in the Turkish Empire. In former times, one of the principal Universities of the Roman Empire; this Rhodes, Marsilia, Tarsus, Athens, and Alexandria, being reckoned the old Academies of that Monarchy. And to this Town, as a most noted place of Study, Tiberius (afterwards Emperour) did withdraw himself, when Augustus had declared his two Nephews Lucius and Caius, for his Heirs; pretending only a desire to improve himself in the ways of Literature; whereas the true cause was his envy at their preferment. Honoured in those times with that huge Colossus, one of the seven Wonders of the World, made by Chares of Lindus, before mentioned. Composed of Brass, in height seventy Cubits, every finger of it being as great as an ordinary man; and consecrated to the Sun, as the proper Deity of the Island. Twelve years in making, and having stood but 66 years was pulled down in an instant by an Earthquake, which terribly shook the whole Island. The Rhodian being forbid by an Oracle to erect it again (or possibly pretending such an Oracle to save that charge) yet held the brass and other materials of it (in a manner) sacred. Not meddled with, nor sacrilegiously pilloined till Muhammad, the General of Ottoman, the Mahometan Caliph, finding in himself no such scruple of conscience, (after he had subdued this Island) made a prey hereof, loading nine hundred Camels with the very brass of it. From this Colossus was the Island sometimes called Colossa, and the people Colossians: not those Colossians (as some have very vainly thought) to whom St. Paul writ his Epistle, those being of Colosse, a Town of the Greater Phrygia, as hath there been noted. Here was also in this City anciently a Temple of Bacchus, enriched with many presents both of Greeks and Romans; of both which People the Rhodian were then held in a fair esteem; but the God and the good Wines in greater Towns of less note, are 3 Villanova, 4 Rufficare, and sometimes others, but as little memorable.

This Island was first peopled by Dodanis the son of Javan, and the Grand-child of Japhet, whom the Greeks call commonly, but corruptly, Rhodian; mistaking the Hebrew Letter Daleth for that of Resh, letters so like as easily it might draw them to that mistake. Finding this Island too narrow for him, he left here a Colony, and with the main of his people passed into Greece; where he planted the Country of Epirus, as hath there been said. Those which staid here being mistakingly called Rhodian (or called so by the Greeks, not looking with too curious eyes into their Antiquities, from the abundance of Roses here growing) making the best use of their Haven, and other the advantages of their situation, became so expert in maritime affairs, that by Florus they are styled Populus nauticus; and that not only in the way of Trade and Merchandize, but of power and government: holding for many years the command of these Seas, and prescribing Laws for the Reiglement of Navigation. Which being called the Rhodian Laws, became the general Rule for deciding marine causes, and ordering the affairs of Sea, in all the parts and Provinces of the Roman Empire: and so continued till supplanted in these Western parts by the Laws of Oleron. Fearful of falling under the Macedonians, they applied themselves unto the Romans, whom first they aided in their wars against Philip, the Father of Perseus; and afterwards in that also against Antiochus. Rewarded for this last service with Lycia and Caria, two of the Asian Provinces, which Antiochus was to leave on his composition; they became so faithfully affected to the State of Rome, that when all the other Islands of the Mediterranean and Egean Seas revolted to Mithridates King of Pontus, this only adhered unto the Romans. Proud either of their strength at Sea, or of those good offices, they began to take upon them as Mediators, and thought themselves fit men to advise their Masters. Grown troublesome by their frequent interpositions, and losing much of their esteem by such impertinencies, they began to grow jealous of the Romans, and incline to Perseus King of Macedon; whose Father they before opposed with their utmost power. A change which Paterculus expressed with some admiration. Rhodium ipsi fidelissimi antea Romanis, dubia jam fide promiores in Regis partes visi sunt, as his words there are. But yet they held for them against Mithridates, as before was said, and served their turn on all occasions, until insensibly they betrayed their liberty to the power of their friends; and of Confederates and Allies, became their Vassals. Made by Vespasian into a Province with the rest of the Isles, the Governour or President of that Province fixing here his residence, as the chief of those Islands; which gave the title of Metropolitan to the Bishop of Rhodes. Under that Empire it continued (or under that of Constantinople after the division) till the year 1124, when taken from the Grecians by the State of Venice; again recovered by the Greeks, in the time of their Emperour John Ducas, then residing at Nice. Won from the Grecians by the Turks, the Knights of St. John of Hierusalem, being utterly driven out of Asia, possessed themselves of it, by the favour of Emanuel the then Emperour, who aided them in the conquest, Anno 1308. Afterwards proving bad neighbours to the Turkish Tyrants, whom they ceased not to molest upon all occasions, they were many times in vain invaded; Mahomet the Great, famous for taking Constantinople, and the Empire of Trabzon, spending some time before their City, with both loss and shame. At the last Anno 1522, it was again besieged by Solyman the Magnificent, Liladamas Villerius being then great Master, who did as much in defence hereof as policy and puissance could extend unto. But multitude in the end prevailed, and upon Christmas day, the Turk entered Rhodes as Conquerors; though possibly he might have said, as Pyrrhus once said of a like Victory against the Romans: (that such another Victory would have quite undone him. Since that a Province of the Turks, by whom, and by some Jews banished out of Spain, the City of Rhodes is wholly inhabited: the Christians which are licenced to dwell in the Country, and have leave to trade there in the day time, not suffered upon pain of death to stay there all night. And so we pass from the Islands of the Asian Diocese, to the Isle of Cyprus, a near neighbour unto Anatolia; but no member of it: the rest of that Diocese, and those Seas, as 11 Pofidium, 12 Arcefius, 13 Bugiales, 14 Minyas, 15 Sirine, 16 Cest, and the rest, yielding but little matter of observation besides their names.

O F C Y P R U S.

CYPRUS is situate in the Syrian and Cilician Seas, extended in length from East to West two hundred miles, in breadth sixty; the whole compass reckoned five hundred and fifty. Distant about sixty miles from the rocky Shores of Cilicia in Asia Minor, and about an hundred from the main Land of Syria; towards which it shooteth itself out with a long sharp Promontory, extending heretofore to the main Land, from which rent in former time by a violent Earthquake, as is said by Pliny, and worn unto this narrowness by the continual working of the Sea upon it.

No place hath other changed his name, or at least had more names on the By than this. Called at first Cebin, or Cebinia, from Keim the son of Javan, who first planted it. 2 Cerastis, from the abundance of Promontories, thrusting like Horns into the Sea, (as the word intimates in the Greek.) 3 Amatubusa, 4 Paphia, 5 Salaminitia: These three last from the principal Towns in those parts hereof. 6 Macaria, from the fruitfulness and felicity of it. Besides these, it hath in some times had these By-names also; as, 7 Asperia, from the roughness of the Soil. 8 Collinitia, from the frequency of Hills and Mountains. 9 Erofa, from the Mines of Brass, which abound therein. 10 And finally, all those forgotten and laid by, it settled at last in the name of Cyprus. So called, say some, from the abundance of Cypress Trees, with which most plentifully provided; as others, from Cyprius a Greek word, signifying Concealed, on hidden, because sometimes concealed by the Surges from the eye of Sailors; but most improbably said by others to take name from Cyrus, who founded here the City of Aphrodisia; whereas indeed six hundred years before Cyrus his Birth, we find it by this name in Homer. More rightly Stephanus, who deriveth it, and Rumens the Greeks Κύπρος, from Cyprus daughter of Cinyras, one of the Kings hereof, living before the Trojan Wars: though in my mind the first comes nearest to the truth, the Cypress Tree not only growing here in so great abundance, but being anciently peculiar in a manner to this Island only.

But on what ground soever it was called Cyprus, certain I am it had the name of Cerastis upon very good reasons; no Island or Region that I know of (for the biggness of it) thrusting out so many sharp Promontories. For on the West there is, 1 The Promontory called Acamas, now Capo S. Pifano. 2 Drepanum, now Trepano and Melechia. 3 Zephyrum, or Caput Calidoni, now Punta Malota. On the South, 4 Pharum, now Capo Bianco. 5 Curias, or Cape della Catis. 6 Gader, or Capo Chiri. 7 Throni, or Capo Pila. On the East, 8 Pendulum, now Capo di Griego. 9 Clides, now Capo S. Andrea. And on the North, 10 Coronyon, now Capo Cornobiette; besides some others of less note. Some of the Poets give another reason of this name, as that Venus ofended with the People of Amatubus for sacrificing their Guests, should turn them into horned Cattel, Unde estiam nomen traxere Cerastis, as it is in Ovid, but that merely fabulous; somewhat of kin unto the Legend of Thomas Becket, and the Kemish-Long-sall. Yet so far we may joyn with Ovid, that the Island was not only called Cerastis, but that the People were also called Cerastis, of which there wants not proof from some other Authors; with which we need not trouble our selves, that name being altogether worn out of use; and no other but that of Cyprus given it in common Speech. Nor is it a matter of more strangeness, that Cyprus should be called so by the Grecians, from its abundance of Cypress Trees, anciently and originally peculiar to this Island, as before was noted: than that the same Grecians should give unto the neighbouring Island the name of Rhodes, from its great plenty of Roses; or to the neighbouring Continent the name of Phoenicia, from its great plenty of Palm-trees; the word so signifying in that Language.

It is situate under the fourth Climate, so that the longest day in Summer is no more than fourteen hours and a half; and for that cause the Air in Summer time exceeding hot and foultry: The Soil moistened with some few Brooks, meriting rather the name of Torrents than Rivers, which being generated for the most part by rain-water, are not seldom dried up by the heat of the Sun; inasmuch that in the Reign of Constantine the Great, this Island was for 36 years together almost utterly forsaken, no rain falling all that time. These inconveniences notwithstanding, it is stored with such plenty of all things, that without the help of any Foreign Nation, it is of itself able to build and rig a tall Ship from the Keel to the Top-sail, and so put it to Sea furnished with all things needful for a Voyage, or a Sea-fight. It also aboundeth in Wine, Oyl, Corn, Sugar, Cotton, Honey, Wool, Turpentine, and Alom, Verdegreece, all sorts of Metals, store of Salt, Grograins, and other Commodities, whereupon this Island was once called Macaria (i.e. Happy.) By reason of which wonderful affluence of all necessities, and that variety of Pleasures (even to sensuality) which the place afforded, it was anciently consecrated unto Venus, who is hence called Venus Cyprica, and Dea Cypr: Sic se diu potens Cypr in Horace; and in Ovid, Festa dies Veneris, tota celeberrima Cypro.

Venus Feasts hallowed through all Cyprus came, And Venus with her presence grac'd the same.

The People hereof are war-like, strong and nimble; of great civility and hospitality to their Neighbours, and love to Strangers of all Nations, Jews only excepted. For in the Empire of Trajan, the Jews inhabiting Egypt and the adjoining Countries, drew themselves together, and chose one Alexander for their Captain; under whose conduct they entred into this Island, and laid it desolate, killing in it 240000 Persons of all Sexes and Ages; not without much blood shed vanquished and slain by Lucius the Emperours Lieutenant. Since which time the Cypriots permit no Jew to enter into the Island; but come he hither voluntarily, or by force of Tempest, they lay hands on him, and lead him presently to Execution. A hated Nation, that neither innocence can protect, or equity relieve from that cruel custom.

The Women in former times much noted for their Unchastity, to which their worshipping of Venus was no small incentive; it being the custom of these Women to prostitute themselves on the Shores, to the passers by: their very Virgins not refusing to be handled there, before their Marriage; either to raise their Portions by the sale of their Bodies, or else to please their Goddess with such beastly Sacrifices. And if Volaterranus may be credited (as I think he may) the Ladies which attended on Queen Carlotte, when she came to Rome, to seek for aid against James the Bastard, who had dispossessed her of this Kingdom, shewed themselves little chaster than those ancient Cypriots. Somewhat more fortunate in the Men; Asclepiades, the Author of the Verse so named; 2 Xenophon, an old Poet; 3 Zeno, and 4 Apollonius, the Philosophers; 5 Epiphanius, the learned Bishop of Salamis; and 6 above all, Saint Barnabas, the dear Associate of Saint Paul, being all Natives of this Country.

The Christian Faith was first here planted by Saint Paul and Barnabas, as the very first fruits of their Apostleship, after they had been separated to the Work of the Ministry by the Imposition of hands, as appeareth Acts 13. v. 4. &c. The Church hereof, by reason of the Antiquity of it, and the honour of this joint Foundation, so privileged in the best Ages of Christianity, that the Archbishop of this Island had all Privileges of a Primate; consecrated by his own Suffragan Bishops and acting in all Sacred and Ecclesiastical Affairs, without dependance on, or relation to the See of Antioch, whereunto all other Bishops in the Eastern Dioecese were either subordinate or subject. Which Privilege being questioned in the Council of Ephesus, was by the Fathers there assembled, on a full hearing of the Cause, approved and ratified; confirmed by the Civil Sanction of the Emperour Justinian, whose Wife was a Native of this Island; and by the name of Jus Cyprium, the Privilege or Exemption of the Cyprian Church, transmitted to the Prelates of succeeding times. Which notwithstanding they continued in good correspondence with the Eastern Churches of the Greek Communion, and officiated all Divine Acts after the Rites and Forms thereof, till the Venetians became Lords of it, who brought in the Latin Service into some of their Churches, and appointed Bishops and other Ministers of the Papal party, for execution of the same. And for the Government of these Churches, they had at first fourteen Bishops and Archbishops; to gratifie Queen Alice, (who had a mind to enrich her friends with some of the Spoils of them) reduced by Innocent the third to four only, that is to say, the Archbishop of Nicosia, the Bishops of Famagusta, Paphos, and Amathus; but each See furnished with two Prelates, the one for the Greeks, the other for the Latins: of which the Bishops for the Latins have all the Lands, and Annual Revenues which of right belong to those Cathedrals; the Greek Bishops living upon Stipends levied on the Priests and Deacons of their Jurisdiction.

Rivers, as formerly was said, here are very few; and of those few, the principal are called Lucus and Lapithus; the first running towards the South, the last towards the North; both not seldom so dried up, that they leave their empty Channels without any water. Both also have their Source from the Hill Olympus (the highest Mountain of the Island) garnished with Trees and Fruits of all sorts; in compals about eighteen Leagues (which make four and fifty Italian miles) and at the end of every League a Monastery of Greek Monks, or Cloisters, and a Fountain of fresh water for the use of the House. Here are also two other little Rivers, the one called 3 Bodens, the other 4 Tolins; but of the same nature as the former.

By Ptolomy, or in his time, divided into four parts or Provinces; but since it fell into the hands of the Lusignian Family, distributed into twelve Counties or Castres; most of them called by the names of their principal Towns: viz. 1 Nicosia. 2 Famagusta. 3 Paphia. 4 Audima. 5 Limissa. 6 Masorum. 7 Salines. 8 Messoria. 9 Cruscorus. 10 Pentalia. 11 Capassus. 12 Cerines. The whole containing, besides these Cities and great Towns, 805 Villages or thereabouts, which they called Casales, whereof the one half anciently belonged unto the Crown, the other half divided betwixt the Lay Nobility, and the Ecclesiasticks; the Patrimony of these last being computed at 80000 Crowns of Annual Rents, besides Casualties, and the Vails of the Altar. But because the tracing out of these Castres will be very difficult (as a way which none have gone before me) I will adhere to the division made hereof in the time of Ptolomy, into the Provinces of 1 Paphia, 2 Amathus, 3 Lapethia, and 4 Salamina.

1 PAPHIA so called of Paphos the chief Town thereof, taketh up the West part of the Island; in which the Towns of most importance and observation are, 1 Paphos, on the Sea-side, by Pliny called Paleparphos, or old Paphos, Built, as some say, by Cyniras, the Father of Myrrha, and so named in memory of Paphos his Father; but, as others say, by Paphos, the son of Pygmalion, King of Phenicia and Cyprus: to which last Ovid doth agree, who speaking of Pygmalions Statue, turned into a Woman by the power of Venus (or rather of his beautiful Wife, fabled, for the surpassing whiteness of her skin, to be made of Ivory) he adds this of her,

She Paphos bare, from whom the name
Of Paphia to the Island came.

Here Venus had her so much celebrated Temple, hence the name of Paphia; and here her Volantes of both Sexes in their natural nakedness, did perform her Sacrifices. Both Town and Temple ruined by a fearful Earthquake; or as the Legends have it, by the prayers of St. Barnabas; the ruins of it still remaining. 2 Paphos Nova, or New Paphos, now called Baffo, five miles from the old, built by Agapenor, one of the Nephews of Lycurgus the Spartan Law-giver, after the Sack of Troy forced hither by a violent Tempest; consecrate to the same impure Goddess, and much frequented, but without injury to the other; those which here offered not thinking they had done her sufficient service, unless they went in a solemn manner of Procession, and paid their Vows also at the other. 3 Arifnos, situate betwixt both; built by, or called so in honour of Arifnos, daughter of Ptolomy the first King of Egypt, and Lord of Cyprus, of that House. 4 Trepantum, now called Trepans, under the Promontory so named, a well-traded Port, but miserably defaced by the Turks, when they took this Island. 5 Cornelia, one of the richest of the Island, by reason of the plenty of Sugar and Cotton-wool, growing thereabout. Built in the place of 6 Cithera, dedicated to Venus also, but differing from the Island of that name in the Aegean Sea, rather in pronunpronunciation than the purity of her oblations; the last syllable save one, in the name of that Island being short in verse, but this of Cyprus sounding long, as in this of Virgil:

Est Amathus, est celsa mihi Paphos, arque Cithera.
Cithera, Amathus divine,
And lofty Paphos are all mine.

2 On the South-East of Paphia lieth the Province or District of AMATHISIA, taking up the South-parts of the Island which look towards Egypt. Chief Towns hereof, 1 Amathus, giving name unto this division, then of most note, and much frequented for the annual sacrifices made unto Adonis the darling of Venus, who had here another of her Temples: the ruins of both hardly now discerned. Built, as some say, by Amasis, King of Egypt, when he conquered this Island; but as others say by some of the Amathites, descended from Anab one of the sons of Canaan. 2 Cetium, or Citium, (for I find it called by both names) the birth-place of Zeno the Stoick, hence called Kladus, or Citensis; and memorable for the death of Simon the Athenian General. A Town wherein the memory of Cittim, the son of Javan, is most anciently preserved. 3 Episcopia, one of the chief of all the Island, built on the place, or out of the decay of 4 Curias, not far from the Promontory of the same name, founded by the Argives, where Apollo had both a Grove and a Temple, by the name of Apollo Hyaler: his Altars in those times held so sacred, that who ever presumed to touch them, was thrown into the Sea from the Promontory or rocks adjoining. 5 Salinis, or Saline, so called from the rich Saltpit; one of the chief Towns of this part, and giving name to one of those twelve Castres, into which the whole is now divided.

3 LAPETHIA, the third part of the Island, lyeth on the North thereof, opposite to Cilicia in Asia Minor. Places of most importance in it, 1 Nicosia, the Regal City of the Kings, the See of the Archbishop, and the chief of the Island: anciently called Ledonstis, and Lentania; but those names long ago laid by. Situate in the midst of the Isle, and in a plain and champain Country abundantly fertile and delightful. Environed with a fair wall, so exactly round as if it had been drawn with a pair of Compasses; in circuit about five miles, and both for situation, numbers of people, and magnificent buildings of all sorts both publick and private, compared by some to the most beautiful City of Florence. Fortified by the Venetians, when in their possession, with new walls, deep ditches, and eleven strong Bulwarks, with three great Out-works, all of them built according to the Art of modern Fortification. But notwithstanding all these works, and the help of 250 pieces of Cannon planted on the walls, and about the City, it was by the Turks taken at the second or third assault, Sept. 9. Anno 1570. So evident a truth it is, that Fortifications are more strengthened by the gallantry and courage of the Defendants, than the Defendants are by their Fortifications. 2 Cerines, situate near the Sea, strong by Art and Nature, and furnished with all things necessary to endure a Siege; but yielded to the Turks by Alphonfus Palacius the unworthy Governour, terrified with the great slaughter made at the sack of Nicosia, before the Enemy came near it. At first called Cerania, and said to have been built by Cyrrus the great Persian King, when he first subdued the nine Kings hereof, and united the Island to that Crown; blest with a more temperate and wholesome air, than any other in the Country. 3 Tremis, the birth-place of Spiridion, a Bishop of the Primitive times, renowned for miracles; many of which reported by Sokomen, lib. 1. chap. 10, and other Ecclesiastical Writers. Wholly decayed, the ruine of it much contributing to the rise of Nicosia. 4 Lapithus (by Pliny called Lapero) on the banks of a small Riveret of that name, of so great note in former times, that it gave to this Division the name of Lapethia, in that part standeth the hill Olympus; (now the Mountain of the holy Cross) described before.

4 SALAMINE, the fourth and last Province of this Island, taketh up the whole East-parts hereof: So named from 1 Salamis, once the chief City of the Isle, and the See of the Primate, or Metropolitan hereof in the Primitive times. Destroyed by the Jews in the reign of Trajan, and re-built again; but being after that taken, sacked, and razed unto the ground by the Saracens, in the time of Heraclius, it never could again recover: the Metropolitan See after that subversion, being removed to Nicosia. It was sometimes, and by some Writers, called Constantia also, but that name could give it no more perpetuity than the other of Salamis. Memorable whilst it stood for the founder of it, being Tenar the Son of Telamon King of Salamis, an Isle of the Aegean Sea; banished his Country by his Father, and settled in this Island by the power of Belus, King of Phenicia: as also for a famous Temple sacred unto Jupiter, hence called Salaminus. Out of the ruins hereof arose, 2 Famagusta, now the prime City of these parts; built as is said by Celsa, the Father of St. Catharine; but that uncertain. Situate at the East end of the Island, in a plain and low ground betwixt two Promontories, the one called the Cape of St. Andrew, and the other Capo di Griego, or the head of Gracia. In compals not above two miles, in form four-square, but that the side towards the East stretcheth out more in length than the other three. On two parts beaten on with the Sea, the other parts towards the Land defended with a Ditch not above fifteen foot in breadth, an old stone wall, and certain Bulwarks. The Haven (opposite to Tripolis, a Town of Syria) openeth towards the South-east, defended from the injury of the Sea by two great Rocks, betwixt which the Sea cometh in at a narrow passage not above forty paces broad, but after opening wider and wider maketh a convenient Harbour, rather safe than large, assured both by the difficult entrance, and a chain crossed over it. The whole Town, when the Turks appeared before it, but meanly fortified; the works of it of the old fashion, generally decayed except one Bulwark, which was but according to the modern Arts of Fortification, with Palisades, Curtains, Casemates, and all other Additaments: most gallantly defended by Bragadine the noble General, to the wonder and envy of the Turks, who spent no less than 118000 great shot upon it, and at last yielded upon honourable terms, had they been as punctually performed: 3 Abrodium, so named of Venus, whom the Greeks called Abrodite, who had here another of her Temples. 4 Arifnos, built also by one of the Arifnos Queens of Egypt, there being two others of this name, and the same foundation, now called Lesore, and anciently renowned for the Groves of Jupiter. 5 Tamallus, of good note in the time of Strabo for rich mines of Brass, as afterwards for abundance of Verdegreece and Vitriol found plentifully in the fields adjoining. 6 Idalius, near a Mount of the same name, so called by accident. For Chalcenor the founder of it being told by the Oracle, that he should seat himself, and build a City, where he first saw the rising Sun: one of his followers, seeing the Sun begin to rise, cried out Idus Idus, that is to say, Behold the Sun. Which Omen taken by Chalcenor, he here built this City. But whether this were so, or not (as for my part I build not very much upon it) certain it is, that Venus had here another Temple, neighboured by the Idahan Groves, so memorized and chanted by the ancient Poets. So strong an influence had lust and sensuality on this wretched People, that every corner of the Island was decked with those brutish Sacrifices, which day by day were offered to that impure deity: though to say truth, it was no marvel if having made their Belly their God, they made in the next place their glory their shame.

The first Inhabitants of this Island were the posterity of Citium the son of Javan, and grand-son of Japhet: who having seen his brother Tarshish settled in Cilicia, (where his memory is still preserved in the City of Tarshu) planted himself and his retinue in this opposite Island. The City of Citium, as Prothomy, or Citium, as Pliny calleth it, one of the ancientest of the Island; taking name from him: which with the authority of Josephus, and others of the ancient Writers, put it out of question. But being this Island was too narrow to contain his numbers, and willing to seek further off for a larger dwelling, he left here so many of his followers as might serve in time to plant the Country; and with the rest passed into Macedon, where we have already spoken of him. Made tributary first to Amasis King of Egypt, from which distant about three or four days sailing. Subjected afterwards to the Phœnicians, a near neighbour to them, who being a Sea-faring people, made themselves Masters of the Sea-coasts and maritime places. Cinyras the Father of Myrrha, (by whom both Father and Grand-father to Adonis) is said to have been King of both. The like affirmed of Belus one of his Successors, who is said to have been the founder of the City of Citium, named so (if not rather repaired than new built by him,) with reference no doubt to Citium, the first Progenitor of this People. By the power and favour of this Belus, Tenecer, the son of Telamon, banished his Country, accompanied with many followers from Salamis, Athens, and Arcadia, was settled in the East parts hereof; where the City of Salamis, by him built, was his first Plantation. Yet so that the Phœnicians kept their former hold: it being evident in Story that Elulens one of the Successors of this Belus, (but a King of Tyre), and a Co-temporary with Salmandassar King of Assyria, passed over into Cyprus with a puissant Navy to reduce the Citians to obedience, who had then rebelled. The Island at first coming of Tenecer hither so infinitely overgrown with woods, that the people were not able to till the Island. Inasmuch, that notwithstanding the great waste made of them, both in building ships, and casting metals, a Law was made, that every one which would should sell them, and take as much ground in fealty for his own inheritance, as he could overcome and make fit for tillage. Encouraged herewith, the natural Cypriots, together with the Colonies of Grecians, Phœnicians, Egyptians, so belittled themselves, that at last they brought it unto Champan: parcelled out in succeeding times, amongst nine Kings, for so many Cyprus the great Perisan Monarch found at his coming hither. But Cyprus, though he did subdue all those petit Princes, yet he took not from them their Estates or Titles: contented with the conquest of it, and an annual tribute. For after this, in the time of Arsaxerxes Mnemon, we find Evagoras, and Nicoles, to whom Spartan inscribed two of his Orations, to be Kings hereof. And in the time of Alexander the Great, Citium it self (such was the honour born unto the Mother-City) had a King apart, not subject unto any other. The King whercof to invade himself with the Conquerour, gave to him a sword, maxilem Spartan, faith Plutarch, an admirable sword, both for colour and lightness, which he after used in all his fights. And after the death of Alexander, his great Commanders calling his estates amongst them, the Princes and People of this Island were in great distractions, not knowing to whom they might submit for their best advantage. But Prothomy, who had seized on Egypt for his part of the spoil, being strong in shipping, settled them by a personal visit; and fortifying some of the best pieces in it, assured the Country to himself. To him and his posterity it continued subject till the time of Ptolomy Antioch, the ninth King of this Line in our Account, who gave it for a portion to one of his Brethren: in whose time, the Romans, without any colour or pretence of quarrel, but only to enrich themselves with the spoil of the Island, sent Portius Cato to subdue it. And he at first assayed to get it with the Kings consent, offering him in the name of the Roman Senate, the Priest-hood of the Temple of Paphos, being a rich and gainful Office, and of high esteem among that people. But when Prothomy for fear of worse mischief had made away himself by poison, Cato without more ceremony takes possession of it. And because Ammianus Marcellinus the Historian, hath so significantly expressed this business, and withal described so punctually the Estate of this Island; we will add this discourse from him, though somewhat repeated which was said before. Cyprus insulam procul à Continente distantem, & portusum, &c. "The Isle of Cyprus, far distant from the Continent, and well stored with Harbours, is famous, besides many Municipal Towns, for two principal Cities, that is to say, Salamis, and Paphos; the one sacred to Jupiter, and the other to Venus. An Isle admirably fruitful, and with all things furnished, that without the help of any foreign Nation, it is able of itself to build and rig forth a ship, from the very keel unto the top-sail, and trim it with all tackle necessary for a present voyage. Nor do I shame to say, that with greater Avarice than Justice, the Romans did invade this Island, King Prothomy, our old Confederate and Ally, being unworthily proscribed, for no other reason, but that our Treasury was bare, our Exchequer empty. And he no sooner had prevented this dishonour by a quick and voluntary death, making away himself by poison, but the Island was forthwith made tributary, and the riches of it, Velut hostiles exuvie classis imposita & in urbem adducta per Catonem, as the spoils of some conquered enemy, were brought on Ship-board, and conveyed by Cato unto Rome. So far, and to this purpose he.

I know there is another cause alledged for the sending of Cato on this Errand, viz. that Clodius who was then Tribune, and sped the Edict, might have opportunity by his absence to revenge himself on Cicero, and some others of the opposite faction: but the main business was the money, as before was said; the prey amounting to 7000 Talents, which comes to two Millions, and one hundred thousand Crowns of Coin now current. Which money and moveables, amounting unto so vast a sum, he fearing to lose by Sea, divided it into many small portions, which he put into several Boxes, viz. in every Box two Talents and fifty Drachms. At the end of every Box he fastened a long rope with a piece of Cork; by which, floating above the water, the money, if by Shipwreck lost, might be espied again: which was not much unlike the buoys which Mariners fasten by long ropes to their Anchors, that they may be sooner found. We see by this, that the pretence of the Romans to this Country was very weak: Avaritia magis quam iustitia sumus affecti, are the words of Sextus Rufus also. But being made a Roman Province, it was in the division of the Empire assigned to the Constantinopolitan Emperours; under whom it suffered, as all other parts of the Empire did by the violent invasion of the Saracens, who spoiled and ransacked it in the time of Constance the second, destroying then the City of Salamis or Constantia. But that tempest being being overblown, they returned again unto that Empire, governed by a succession of Dukes, till the year 1184. At which time Andronicus Comnenus usurping the Greek Empire, compelled Isaacius Comnenus, one of the Blond Royal, to shift for himself: who seizing on this Island made himself King thereof, and ruling till the year 1191, when Richard the first of England, being denied the common courtesie of taking in fresh water, and seeing his Souldiers abused by the Cypriots, not only took the King Prisoner, but subdued the whole Island. And as Paterculus telleth us, that when Marcus Antonius had captivated Artamides King of Armenia, Catenis, sed ne quid honoris desset, auxit vinis; So did our Richard keep a Decorum towards this Prisoner, binding him not in bonds of Iron, but Silver. King Richard having thus possessed himself of this Country, sold it for ready money, (which for the managing of his intended wars against the Turks, he most needed) unto the Templars; and taking it, upon I know not what discontent, again from them, he bestowed it on Guy of Lusignan, the titular and miserable King of Hiernusalem: receiving in way of exchange, the title of that lost and shipwrecked Kingdom, with which title he and some of his Successors for a time were honoured.

In the posterity of this Guy, this Island continued free and absolute, till the year one thousand four hundred twenty three; when Melechella (or Melechassar) Sultan of Egypt, invaded this Country, took John King her of Prisoner, ransomed him for 150000 Sultanies, restored him to his Kingdom, and imposed on him and his Successors, the yearly tribute of 40000 Crowns. This John was father to another John, whose two children were Charlotte a legitimate Daughter, and James a bastard Son. James after the death of his father, dispossessed his sister Charlotte of the Crown, by the content and help of the Sultan of Egypt; and the better to strengthen himself against all opposition, he took to wife Catharine Cornari, daughter by adoption to the Venetian Senate: whom at his death he made his heir, if the child he went withal (having then none by her) should die without issue, as it did, not long after it was born; and the feeling the factious Nobility too head-strong to be bridled by a female authority, like a good child resigned her Crown and Scepter to the Venetian State, Anno 1473. These defended it against all claims, (paying only as tribute to the Egyptian, and after to the Turkish Sultans, the 40000 Crowns before mentioned) till the year 1570, when Mustapha, General of the Turks, wrested it from the Venetians, to the use of his Master Selimus the second, who pretended title to it as Lord of Egypt. The Governour of the Venetian Forces at the time of this unfortunate loss was Signior Bragadino, who as long as hope of succours, means of resistance, or possibility of prevailing continued, with incredible valour made good the Town of Ramagista, in whose defence consisted the welfare of the whole Island. At last he yielded it on honourable conditions, had they been as faithfully kept, as punctually agreed on. But Mustapha the Turkish General inviting to his Tent the principal men of worth in the Town, caused them all to be murdered: and as for Brigadin himself, he commanded his ears to be cut off, his body to be flayed alive, and his skin stuffed with straw, to be hanged at the main yard of his Gally. The chief of the prisoners and spoils were in two tall ships, and one Gallion sent unto Selimus; but he never saw them. For a Noble Cyprian Lady, destinated to the lust of the Grand Seignior, fired certain barrels of powder; by the violence whercof both the vessels and the booty in them, were in part burned, in part drowned. A famous and heroick and inferior unto none of the Roman Damsels, so much commended in their Stories, though more to be commended in a Roman than a Christian Lady.

Thus having summed up the affairs of this Island from the first plantation of it, till this last said conquest, I will lay down the succession of the Cyprian Kings of the Noble Lusignan Family, in this ensuing Catalogue of

The KINGS of CYP R U S.

- 1 Guy of Lusignan, the titular King of Hiernusalem, created in the Kingdom of Cyprus, by Richard the first of England.
- 2 Amricus, the brother of Guy.
- 3 Hugh, the son of Amricus.
- 4 Henry, the son of Hugh.
- 5 Hugh II. son of Henry.
- 6 Hugh III. son of Hugh the second.
- 7 John, son of Hugh the third.
- 8 Henry II. the brother of John.
- 9 Hugh IV. son of Guido, the younger brother of John, and Henry the second.
- 10 Peter, the son of Hugh the fourth.
- 11 Petrinus, the son of Peter.
- 12 James, younger brother of Peter, and Uncle to Petrinus.
- 13 Janus, the son of James, made Tributary by Melechassar, to the Kingdom of Egypt.
- 14 John II. the son of Janus.
- 15 Charlotte, sole daughter and heir of John, the second, first married to John the Prince of Portugal, and after to Lewis Prince of Savoy, out of her Estate and Kingdom, by
- 16 James II. the bastard son of John the second, who by a strong hand seized upon it, and by help of the Venetians kept it during life.
- 17 James III. born after the decease of his father, whom he survived not very long. After whose death, being the last of this Family, the Venetians possessed themselves of Cyprus: which they invaded with no better title, than the Romans had done in former times; not likely to be blest with a long fruition, of that which they had so unjustly got into their hands. But of that already.

And here is to be observed, that these Cyprian Kings retaining the title of Hiernusalem (towards which they sometimes cast an eye) bestowed upon their greatest Subjects, and deserving Servitors; both titles of honour and Offices of State, belonging anciently to that Kingdom. So that we find amongst them a Prince of Antioch, a Prince of Galilee, a Count of Tripoli, a Lord of Cesarea, and a Lord of Mount Tabor; a Seneschal of Hiernusalem, a Constable, Marshal, and High-Chamberlain of that Kingdom also. With better reason, though no doubt with as little profit, as the Pope gives Bishopricks and Archbishopricks in Greece, or Egypt. But those titular Offices are now quite extinct, though possibly some of the Titles of honour which were took from thence, may be still remaining.
